Contra. 1. The Iesuites instance is very ridiculous, and bewrayeth the nakednes of his cause, which he is faine to bolster out with such sillie answeres: Man resisting the law is not sinne it selfe, yet he a sinner: the question is of that, which formally is contrarie to the law. 2. That euery transgression of the law is sinne wee shew it vs: Sinne onely deserueth the eternall curse of God: for the proper wages & stipend of sin is death, Rom. 6. 23. and nothing is found worthe of death but sinne: but euery transgression of the lawe, falleth vnder Gods curse, Galath. 3. 10. Ergo, it is sinne. 3. Concupiscence is the law of sinne, therefore it is not sinne. Ans. Yea, but by this reason it is worse than sinne: As the law of God commanding things holie, iust, and good, is it selfe much more holie, righteous, and good, Rom. 7. 11. so the law of sinne prescribing that which is euill, vniust, wicked, is it selfe more vniust, euill, and wicked. If then concupiscence be not sinne, yet by your argument is worse than sinne, what haue you gained?

Argum. 3. Verse 18: Tw will is present with me, but I finde no means to performe that which is good: but he that performeth not that which is good, sinneth. Again, vers. 24: O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this bodie of death? that which maketh a man wretched, and bringeth death, is sinne: Ergo, concupiscence working these things, is sinne.

Belarm. 1. Wretchednes in Scripture is attributed to punishment rather then to the fault.

2. If a man performe not that good, which he cannot do, he is lesse good; but not euill: as not to coeet in the flesh, is not in mans power.

3. The Apostle speaketh not of euermlasting death, but of the miserie and mortalitie of the bodie: Bellarm. c. 11. Resp. ad 7. & 8. obi.

Contra. 1. Wretchednesse and miserie is the punishment it selfe, but issuing out from sinne: for 1. as the forgiveness of sinne maketh happie, Psal. 32. 1. so sinne maketh wretched. 2. And that which the Apostle would be deliuered from, made him wretched: but from Concupiscence, which he calleth the body of death, he desireth to be deliuered: Ergo his concupiscence made him wretched; and so consequently is properly sinne.

2. It is not in a mans power to do any good thing, but all our power is of God; it would follow then vpon this answer, that it is no sinne to leaue any good thing vndone: and further it is euident, that it is sinne to leaue that vndone, which is not in our power: as Iohn 16. 9. The spirit shall reprove the world of sinne, because they beleeue not in me: now to beleeue is not in mans power, but it is the worke of God, Iohn 6. 29.

3. S. Paul. 1. speaketh directly of condemnation, which is the second death, Rom. 3. 1. There is no condemnation to those, which are in Christ. 2. Though he should speake onely of outward miserie and mortalitie, they are the fruites of sinne, Rom. 5. 12. Death came in by sinne; therefore concupiscence bringing death is sinne.

Argum. 4. Rom. 8. 7. The wisdom of the flesh is enuie against God: Genes. 6. 5. The imaginations of the thoughts of mans heart are euill continually: Ergo, concupiscence is sinne.

Bellarm. 1. These places are vnderstood of actuall, not originall sinne. 2. And the Scripture thus describeth the wicked, in whom concupiscence remaineth and raigeth, resp. ad obi.

Contra. First, these places cannot be otherwise vnderstood, then of originall sinne. 1. The Apostle opposeth the wisdom of the flesh to the wisdom of the spirite, which he saith is life and peace, vers. 6. but the wisdom of the spirite is the inward sanctifying of the soule, and the renewing of the spirite, Ephes. 4. 23. Ergo, the wisdom of the flesh, is the inward secret corruption of the heart. 2. It is the same, which vers. 2. he calleth the law of sinne and death: as the wisdom of the spirite is there called the law of the spirite: but the law of sinne is concupiscence, Rom. 7. vers. 23. 3. Moses also speaketh of originall corruption, saying 1. the imagination of the thoughts of the heart: but there is no actuall sinne before the thoughts. 2. And Genes. 8. 21. the thoughts of mans heart are euill from his youth: but the infancie is no fitt age for actuall sinne. 3. Our Sauour also expoundeth this place, Matth. 15. 19. Out of the heart come euill thoughts: the fountain of euill thoughts is originall sinne.

Secondly, 1. Moses as he speaketh in this place especially of the inhabitants of the old world, Genes. 6. 5. he describeth the naturall state of all men in generall; that their thoughtes are euill. 2. S. Paul also sheweth this to be the condition euen of the children of God, that they were subject to thinke any thing of themselves which is good. 2. Cor. 3. 5. So that the same corruption remaineth euen in the regenerate, yet bridled and gouerned by grace. 3. That euen in the righteous and regenerate the sinne of concupiscence remaineth: these places following do manifestly shew.

Argum. 5. The Prophet David saith, 1. Create in me a new heart, Psal. 51. S. Paul saith, Ephes. 4. vers. 23. 2. Be renewed in the spirit of your mind, Coloss. 3. 3. Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleanness, &c. Ergo, the regenerate had neede still to be renewed, and cleansed from the old man: Ergo, the sinne of concupiscence still remaineth in the regenerate. 4. I. Iohn. 1. 9. If we say that we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues: the Apostle saith, If we say that we haue no sinne, shewing, that sinne that continually remaineth, which is originall sinne: for other sinnes are not alwaies in the regenerate, argum. Luther. Caluin.

Bellarmine answereth, First, to the 1. and 4. places; that they must be vnderstood of actuall sinnes, which the regenerate are dayly subiect vnto. 2. Secondly, there are some reliques of originall sin in the regenerate, in respect whereof, they had neede dayly to be renewed. 3. Thirdly, the regenerate must mortifie their earthly members, that they giue not consent therunto, and fall into fornication, vncleanness: which is all one with that, which the Apostle saith elsewhere, that sinne should not raigne in their mortall bodie, Rom. 6. 12. Bellarm. c. 11. lib. 5. resp. ad loc. 2. 8. 9. 12.

Contra. First, it is euident, that the Prophet David speaketh of originall sinne. 1. He said before, vers. 5. In sinne hath my mother conceived me: from the which he desireth to be purged, vers. 7. 2. The creation of the heart anew is expounded by S. Paul to be the putting off of the old man, and putting on the new, which after God is created in righteousness, Ephes. 4. 24. Now the Image of God, which the Prophet prayeth to be created in him, is defaced and deformed by originall concupiscence: therefore against that he directeth his prayer. 2. Those reliques of sinne in the regenerate, are eyther belonging to actuall or originall sinne; but in the spirit of the minde, there can be actuell sinne: Ergo, it is originall: and the Apostle expoundeth himselfe, what it is to be regenerate, &c. To cast off the old man which is corrupted through deccivable lustes, verſ. 12. What is the old man, but the originall deprauation and corruption of nature?

1. If the regenerate must mortifie their earthly members, that is their carnall concupiscence, then is not concupiscence dead or extinct in them, for then it need not be mortified: and what sinne is to be mortified in vs is euill and sinfull: that whereto we must be dead, is sinne, Rom. 6. 11. neither is there feare that the sinne of concupiscence should raigne in our mortall bodie, if it be not all there.

The Apostle speaketh not onely of actuell but of originall sinnes. 1. He saith, If we say we haue no sinne: and afterward verſ. 10. If we say we haue not sinned: there he pointeth at that sinne, which we alwayes haue in vs, which is none other but originall sinne, in the other place he speaketh of that sinne which hath been committed, noting actuell sinnes, wherein the regenerate continue not. 2. He meapeth such sinnes, wherein a man may be deceiued; and thinke hee hath none: but none of the regenerate are so grosse to thinke they haue no actuell sinne. 3. He speaketh of all sinnes, for the which Christ is our reconciliation cap. 2. 1. 2. If any man sinne, &c.: but Christ dyed, and so is our reconciliation by his death; not onely for actuell, but originall sinne: Ergo thus we see how frivolous and insufficient this Disputers answers are.

2dly, let Augustinus speake: Omnium malorum vultu caret, qui baptizatur; non omnibus malis: unde caret ignorantia mala. He that is baptized is cleared from the guilt of all euils or sinnes, but not from the euilles themselves: for shall we thinke that he is void of ignorance? Again hee saith: Dimittuntur in baptismo omnia peccata, & originaliter trahit, & ignoranter vel scilicet adiecta. All sinnes are forgiven in Baptisme, both originall, and sinnes committed ignorantly or wittingly. Originall sinne then is no otherwise taken away in Baptisme, then other Sinnes are: but the guilt of other sinnes is remitted in Baptisme, the blot or staine remaineth still: Ergo, originall sinne which in respect of the guilt onely: for neither it, nor any other sins shall be imputed to those, which are justified in Christ: but yet it is a sin still, as the rest are. Augustinus also dare call it a sin: Concupiscencia prior est ignorantia: Concupiscence is worse then ignorance: contr. Iulian. lib. 6. cap. 5. And in another place, Ignorantia in hijs, qui intelligere noluerunt, peccatum est, in hijs qui non potuerunt peccati: Ignorance in them that are able to learne and will not, is sinne; in those that cannot, punishment of sinne: Epistol. 105. If ignorance then be sin, concupiscence, which is worse then ignorance, is much more.

Ibid. cap. 6.

I will adde one other notable sentence out of this father: Hoc malum quod in nobis remanet, non substantia, sed substantia vitium; Dei gratia nos regenerante non est imputandum, Dei gratia iuuante fruendum, Dei gratia commorante sanandum: This euill, which remaineth in vs, being not a substance, but a vice of or in our substance or nature, by the grace of God regenerating vs shall not be imputed, by the grace of God helping vs is bridled, by the grace of God in the ende crowning vs shall be healed. First Augustinus calleth here concupiscence even in the regenerate, malum & vitium, a vice and an euill. And what difference, I pray you, betwene vice and sinne? Vitium, saith Beilarmus, est nomen habitus mali, peccatum operationis mala: Vice is the name of an euill habite, sin the name of the euill action. Vice and sin then are cofin germanes: and if concupiscence be a vice or a vicious habite, it is in the next doore to sin. Again, Augustinus finish downe a threefold change of concupiscence: it is not imputed, it is bridled, in the end it is healed: In the two first changes, though it be bridled, though it be not imputed; yet it ceaseth not to be sinne: but onely when it is healed, that is cleane taken away, which is not in this life, but when the time of our reward commeth: Ergo, it is sinne still in the regenerate, yet bridled in them, and not imputed.

Lib. 2. cont.

Caus. Milenitan. cap. 2. Propter hoc parvuli, qui nihil in seipsis peccatorum committere possunt, alio peccatorum remissionem veraciter baptizantur, ut in eis regeneratione mundetur, quod generatione contrarium: For this cause children, which haue as yet done no sinne in themselves, are truly Baptized for the remission of sinnes, that it may be purged by regeneration, which they tooke in their birth. If originall corruption be not properly a sinne, then children; who are as yet guiltie of no other sinne, should not be baptized for remission of sinnes.

Decret. par. 3. distict. 4. c. 2. In baptismo caro peccati enascatur, &c. In Baptisme the flesh or bodie of sinne is euacuate; not that concupiscence should wholly be consumed, sed ne obesse mortuo, quod deus nato: but that it be not hurtfull to him, that is dead vnto it, which was hurtfull to him in his birth. Their Master to the like effect, lib. 2. distict. 32. b. sheweth how originall sinne is taken away in Baptisme, extenuatione, & solutione reatus, by the extenuation of it, and taking away the guilt: originall sinne then remaineth still; but it is not hurtfull, nor imputed to the regenerate.

Augustinus also thus alleageth out of Hilarie, lib. 2. cont. Iulian. Apostolis licet, verbo fidei communitum de offa malitiam, per conditionem communis originis: Euen in the Apostles, though cleansed with the word of faith, there was not wanting malice or euilnes by the condition of the common originall or birth: Ergo, by this sentence euen in the Apostles, the euilnes or malice of concupiscence by nature remained.

17. Error.

THe Rhemists do not onely deny concupiscence in the regenerate to be sinne, but they affirme also that the motions of the flesh in a iust man, whereunto the minde consenteth not, cannot any whit defile the operations of the spirit, but make them often more meritorious, for the continuall combat that he hath with them: for it is plaine that the operations of the flesh and the spirit doe not concurre to make one act: Rhemist. annot. Rom. 7. sect. 10.

Ans. 1. The combat betwene the flesh, cannot make the operations of the spirit meritorious: first, we cannot merite at all by any good action wrought in vs, because it is not of our selves, but wholly of God: Thou I line, (saith the Apostle) not I now, but Christ lineeth in me: Galath. 2. 20. Secondly, the resistance of the flesh, is so farre from encreasing our reward, that it maketh our debt greater: for whose is the flesh? is it not ours? Who shall answer for that which is euil done in the flesh? shall not we? It is therefore our owne fault, that our flesh is rebellious, and therefore doe not wholly yeeld to the working of the spirit.

2. Though the operations of the flesh concur not with the spirit to make one act: yet the flesh concurrerh, or rather occurerh, and resisteth the spirit in every good act: and doth hinder the workes of the spirit from perfection, and so defile them.

The Protestants.

THe lust or concupiscence remaining, but not reigning in the regenerate, doth greatly hinder the good proceeding of the spirit in them.

Argum. 1. Concupiscence kept the Apostle from doing that good, which he desired: The good that I would, doe I not, Rom. 7. 19. Ergo, it was an hinderance to the working of the spirit.

Argum. 2. If concupiscence were any way profitable to goodnesse, it were a thing to be loved, not hated; to be desired, not wished to be taken away. But S. Paul hateth it: What I hate, Rom. 7. 15. and longeth till he be ridde from it: O wretched man, that I am, who shall deliuer me from the bodie of this death? vers. 24. Ergo, concupiscence is not good, nor any way helping vnto goodnes.

De Sanct. term. 41.

Augustine thus writeth of these smaller and lesse finnes: Quibus peccatis licet occidi animam non credamus, ita tamen eam veluti quibusdam postulis deformem faciunt, ut eam ad amplexum sponsi sui grandi confusione venire non permittant: By the which finnes, though the soule be not slaine, yet the face is deformed, as with pimples, that she dare not without great blushing draw neere to embrace her spouse. Let them tell me now, what great glorie is obtained, by this corruption in our members.

African. Concil. 2. cap. 2. Si quis soli Ada praenicationem suam non & eius propagini ascripserit, &c. anathema: If any man say that Adams transgression onely hurt himselfe, and not his posteritie and offspring, accursed be he. Originall sinne then is hurtfull to all men that come of Adam: Ergo, it is no helpe or furtherance.

Essepiens a graue writer among the Papists, alleageth out of S. Cyprian de temptationibus Christi, to this effect: Neminem libidinum morsus illatum euadere: That no man doth escape the biting of lust without hurt: According to that saying of Propertius lib. 2. Nec quisquam ex illo vulnere sanus abit: No man goeth away whole of that wound: in 2. epist. Timoth. cap. 2. And out of Augustine 4. Hypognosticonum: In omni homine libido mala est, &c. Lust or concupiscence is euil in every man: in 1. Time. 3. Wherefore originall sin is hurtfull to the regenerate. Can. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. There are certaine heretikes rehearsed among the rest, called Opbita, of the serpent, whom they did reuerence: saying, Ipsum in paradisum induxisse virtutis cognitionem: That the serpent brought into Paradise the knowledge of vertue: not much vnlike doe the Papists commend concupiscence, which is the serpents sting; saying, that it maketh the operations of iust men more meritorious.

THE FIFT PART, OF THE PLACE OR seat of concupiscence in the regenerate.

The Papists.

Bellarmino graunteth, that sometime flesh is taken in the Scripture for the whole man corrupted, both in bodie and soule: but then it is vnderstood onely of the wicked, and not of the godly: Bellarmino de stat. peccat. lib. 5. cap. 7. respons. ad argum. 2. caution. 6. And therefore he expoundeth that place of S. Paul, There dwelleth not in me that is, in my flesh, any good thing Rom. 7. of the bodie:

and hence would prove that concupiscence in the regenerate is no sinne; because it is in the cap. 10. respons. ad argum. 1. His opinion then is, that concupiscence in them remaineth one-ly in their bodie. And where S. Paul saith, I am carnall, he thus expoundeth it: Quia nondum spiri- tuali sumus habes: Because he had no spirituall bodie, such as he should have in the resurrection:
respons. ad idem. 6. So then in his opinion, the minde onely of the regenerate is renewed, not their bodie: he reasoneth thus. 1. S. Paul saith, in my minde I serve the law of God, in my flesh the law of sinne: Here the regenerate or renewed, is opposed or set against that part which is not renewed, namely the flesh, which shall be renewed in the resurrection: Belarm. cap. 7. respons. ad hanc. 1.
1. 10. First, that this place is to be understood of the minde regenerate, we grant: but thereby, the principall part, the whole regenerate man is expressed both in bodie and soule: so where S.
 Paul saith, Be renewed in the spirit of your minds, Ephel. 4. 23. he vnderstandeth a renovation of the whole new man: and put on the new man, saith he: And S. Peter speaking to the women, that the bid- ness of the heart should be vncorrupt: In the same place exhorteth them to sobernesse and modestie of apparell, which is outward in the bodie, 1. Pet. 3. 4. So in this place, by the minde, the Apostle vnderstandeth the whole new or regenerate man: Secondly, how could S. Paul, speaking of himself by flesh, vnderstande a body not regenerate: seeing the Apostle was a mortified man, and much exercised in the taming and beating downe of his bodie, 1. Cor. 9. 27? Thirdly, the bodies of the Saints shall be renewed, we grant, in the resurrection: which is called the regeneration, Mat. 19. 28. but it followeth not, they shall be regenerate then from all mortalitie & corruption: Ergo, they cannot now be renewed, and subdued from sinne: the soule also then shall bee cleansed and made pure, like the Angels, yet for all this, the soule while it is in the bodie, is daily renewed. As it is called the regeneration, so is it also the redemption of our bodies, Rom. 8. 23.
 hence then our redemption in body and soule, shall be perfectly accomplished: notwithstanding it is begun in this life.

The Protestants.

That concupiscence dwelling in the regenerate, remaineth both in their bodies & their soules, and that as their regeneration is of the whole man, both in bodie and soule: so there is some fleshly part in both, resisting against the spirit, which in the scripture is called flesh: thus we are persuaded.

argum. 1. Saint Paul saith, I am carnall, sold vnder sin, Rom. 7. vers. 14. if this should be meant of S. Pauls body: what could be said more of the body of an adulterer, murderer, glutton, or whose body else is giuen ouer to all wickednesse; then that it is sold vnder sin? If S. Paul then, when he saith, I am carnall, or, in my flesh I serue the law of sinne, ver. 25. doth vnderstand his body: is it not all one, as if he had said, he had giuen his members seruants to sin? to serue sin in the body, and to giue the members seruants to sinne, is all one: But neither S. Paul nor any other regenerate man is a seruant of sinne in his body: for, saith he, When ye were seruants of sinne, ye were far from righteousness, Rom. 6. 20. And as ye have giuen your members seruants to vncleannesse: hee speaketh of the time before their calling: therefore S. Paul speaketh not of his body.

Augustine writing of those words of the Apostle, It is no more I that do it, but sinne that dwelleth in me, saith thus: Quod ille dicere non potest, qui aut cordis consensione decernit, quod concupiscit, aut corporis membris perficit: which Saint Paul could not say, if either he had consented in his heart, to that wherunto his concupiscence led him, or by the ministry and seruice of his bodie had done it.
 The Apostle then did not giue the ministerie or seruice of his bodie to sinne.

Man hath sometime his denomination of the mind, but not of the bodie: S. Paul saith not, my body is carnall, but I am; and afterward, in me, that is, my flesh. Saint Pauls flesh is himselfe, but himselfe consisteth both of bodie and soule: Ergo, the flesh is in them both: see more of the exposition of this place, part. 3. 1. 1. question. argum. 2.

argum. 2. There is a most euident place for this purpose, Gal. 5. 17. the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh: The Apostle by flesh here vnderstandeth the corrupt part both of body and soule: for a little after, among the workes of the flesh, he nameth not onely sinnes of the bodie, as adulterie, vncleannesse, but the sinnes also of the soule, as hatred, emulation, heredities, ver. 20. And all this while the Apostle speaketh to and of the regenerate: these are contra- ries each to other, so that ye cannot do the same things ye would: this he writeth to the faithfull among the Galathians. So to the beleeuers among the Colossians, he saith, Mortifie your earthly members, for in them lieth the corruption of the flesh, and the deceit of the heart, which are in power of the world, of the flesh, and of the devil: which sins are as well in the minde as the body: wherefore they are not members only of the body, but of the old man vnregenerate both in soule and body:
 And thus, I trust, it appeareth, that the flesh, euen in the regenerate, doth comprehend the corruption remaining in them, both in soule and body.

Shall Augustine now speake: Hac est lex membrum omnium inserta mortalium, qua repugnat legi
mentis: cogitationum spina & tribuli in nobis germinare incipiunt: This is the law ingraft in the members of all mortall men, which rebelleth against the law of the mind or spirit: for the thornes and thistles of euill thoughts begin to bud in vs: de tempor. form. 47. Out of these words I reason thus: There concupiscence the law of the members is, where euill thoughts arise: but they are bred in the mind, not in the bodie: Ergo, concupiscence is as well in the mind as in the body.

Council. African. 2. cap. 2. Si quis dicit sibi. Ada. prauaricationem suam nocuisse, &c. non peccatum quod mors est anima per unum hominem in omne genus humanum transisse, &c. If any man say that Adams transgression onely hurt himselfe, and that sinne, which is the death of the soule, did not through one man come vnto all mankind, let him be accursed. Originall sinne then is the death of the soule: Ergo, it hath the place in the soule, where it worketh.

Origen saith, Hom. 8. Levitic. Audi Davidum dicentem, &c. Heare David say, I was conceived in iniquitie, shewing, that Quocumque anima ex carne nascitur, &c. That every soule is borne of the flesh, and is polluted with iniquitie: if the soule then be polluted with originall sinne, then it followeth, that it hath the place and seate in the soule.

The Master of the Sentences agreeth, Lib. 2. dist. 32. c. Nec caro corruptibilis animam peccatorem facit: The corruptible flesh did not make the soule sinfull, but the sinfull soule maketh the flesh corruptible: Lib. 3. dist. 17. b. Ipsius carnis concupiscentia causa, non est in anima sola, nec in carne sola. The cause of carnall concupiscence is not in the soule alone, or in the flesh alone, for it is made of them both, &c. Lib. 3. dist. 27. f. Caro non dicitur concupiscere, nisi quia anima carnaliter concupiscit, &c. The flesh is not said to lust, but because the soule doth carnally lust.

THE SIXTH PART, OF THE PUNISHMENT of originall sinne.

THe punishment due to originall sinne, is double, either temporall or eternall: first, of the eternall punishment, then of the temporall.

OF THE ETERNALL PUNISHMENT due to originall sinne.

The Papists.

Bellarmino affirmeth, that infants dying without Baptisme in originall sinne, are eternally punished; but their punishment is, damni, non sui sui, sine ignis sensibilibus, of losse onely because they are excluded from heauen, not of any smart or outward paine of fire: such as the damned suffer in hell. Concerning the first poynt, whether infants not being baptized, are damned; we have before intreated, in the twelfth Controversie; and the third question of the necessitie of Baptisme.

Yet thus much of it here, that the popish opinion, in holding all infants dying without Baptisme, to be in the state of damnation; is very cruell, and most vncharitable: whereby it both restraineth Gods power, as though he were not able to saue infants without the sacrament; and obscureth his mercie, and impugneth his iustice, in suffering so many, hauing not yet sinned in acte, to be lost.

Our opinion rather is this, agreeable to Scripture, and the rule of charitie: first, that although all infants in themselves, being borne with that masse of originall corruption, are subiect to damnation; yet that many of them are saued, both by the covenant made to their faithfull parents, both or either of them, and to their seede: and that both immediatly, if their next parents were beleeuers, and mediately sometime, when their former predecessors haue beleued, though their next progenitors are Infidels, (for Gods promise made to them that loue him, extendeth to a thousand generations, Exod. 20.) as also such as are not within the covenant; so many as God hath ordained to life, are saued by the free election of grace.

Secondly, as we denie not, but that if any infants so dying are damned, (which God best knoweth) he doth it most iustly: so christian charitie bindeth vs to hope and thinke the best of children dying in their infancie, and to presume that they are saued: seeing God preventeth them, least that they should be ouertaken of the wickednes of this life: for which cause Herach is said to haue been taken vp, Sapient. cap. 4.

But now to the second point, concerning the maner of the punishment of infants, Bellarmino reasoneth thus.

Argum. 1. We reade in the Apocalypse, As much as she glorified her selfe and liued in pleasure, so much giue you vnto her torment and sorrow, Chapter 18. verse 7. but infants neuer glorified themselves, or liued in pleasure; therefore they shall haue neither torment nor sorrowe, Bellarmino. de stat. peccat. lib. 6. cap. 4.

Answ. First, the Iesuite abuseth this place to signifie the torments of hell: it is a prophesie of the temporall the destruction of the second Babylon, which is the seat of Antichrist, and Rome by your hands, as we haue at large proued, in the fourth controuersie of the Pope: therefore the plagues are numbered which shall fall upon her for pride, ver. 8. Powre day shall come vpon her, death, famine, but famine I thinke, is none of the plagues in hell. But, secondly, if you will needs haue this place to be vnderstood of hell torments: what haue you gayned by it? Surely, by your owne confession, your Babylon and confuted antichristian kingdome is appointed to that place. Secondly, the argument followeth not: they that liue in pride or pleasure, shall be tormented in hell: Ergo, they that doe not liue in these finnes, shall not be tormented: for by this reason not only infants shall be excused, that are guiltie onely of originall sinne, but all other sinners, that offend not in the foresaid finnes.

The due and wages of originall sinne, is eternall death, which is the punishment both of body and soule in hell: And hell in the Scriptures is alwaies taken for a place of torment: if infants then dying before Baptisme are condemned to hell, as the Iesuite saith, they cannot here be exempted from torment.

Argum. 1. Christ shall say to the goates on the left hand, that is, to those that are condemned, Depart from me ye cursed into euermlasting fire, prepared for the diuill and his angels, Matth. 25. ver. 41. But of this number are infants which are condemned to hell: Ergo, they shall suffer torment in euermlasting fire. Belarmine saith, that the forme of iudgement is here prescribed whereby they shall be iudged which were of the Church, for they are not condemned because they had no faith, which is the cause of the condemnation of Infidels, and those which are out of the Church, but for want of good workes: wherefore this place appertineth not to children, that die without Baptisme, which were not of the Church, Belarm. cap. 5.

Contra. 1. The fayling or want of good workes, is cause of condemnation to all men, whether within the Church, or without, as S. Paul sheweth, Know you not that the vngiuerous shall not inherite kingdome of God, as fornicators, idolaters, adulterers: and he reckeneth vp other workes of the like and such saith he, were some of you, 1. Corinth. 6. 11. he saith not for want of faith, but of good workes, that before they beleeued, they were in state of damnation.

But to put this matter out of doubt: the text saith plainly, that in the day of iudgement all men shall be gathered before Christ, ver. 32. Ergo, all sortes of men, both within and without the Church: why is not the Iesuite ashamed then out of this number to exclude infants?

Argum. 2. Apocal. 20. 15. Whosoever was not found written in the booke of life, was cast into the lake of fire: Ergo, infants also that are condemned: and if they be in the lake of fire, how are they exempted?

Belarmine: They shall be cast, we graunt, into the lake of fire, that is, the place where fire is; but shall not be burnt of the fire, either because they shall be in a higher place, or that the fire shall haue powre onely detinendi, non vrendi, to keepe them as it were in holde, but not to burne or consume them.

Contra. Who seeth not what vaine and sophistical shifts this fellow useth to obscure the truth? but none of them can helpe him. First, the text saith, they shall be cast into the lake of fire, not in a place neere to, or higher then the fire, where they shall see but not feele it: but they shall haue their part in the lake, Apocal. 21. 8. And againe, It is sayd to burne with fire and brimstone, that is, to burne most hotely, and most fiercely, that whosoever is in it, must needs be burned and consumed therein. Secondly, the Iesuites answer here is contrarie to his doctrine elsewhere: for he saith that Limbus infantium, the dungeon of infants, is higher then Purgatorie: and that Purgatorie is betweene it and hell, so that hell fire cannot come vnto it, Belarm. de purgator. lib. 2. cap. 4. If it be so, as he imagineth, then cannot infants any way be cast into hell fire, seeing there is such a great space and distance betweene hell and their prison: wherefore if the Scripture be true, then Belarmine must be the lyer.

Augustine thus answereth Iulian the Pelagian, who objected, that if children be borne in the state of damnation, their parents, that are the cause of their birth, are no better then murderers of their owne children: Id melius deus (saith he) hominum creatori, quam genitoribus, nam quos profectus probat aeternis arduis proare non desinit: he might better obiect this vnto the creator of men, then to their begetters, for whom he forsaue should burne in euermlasting fire, he ceaseth not daylie to create more. Iulian. 5. 9. Children then, and whosoever are borne and die in the state of damnation, shall burne in euermlasting fire.

August. Mogentin. cap. 9. Primum hominum peccatum propagatione in omnes homines transiit &c. ut sit causa omnis hominis ira Dei, mortis & damnationis rei, &c. The sinne of the first men is by propagation passed vnto all men, so that all by nature are guiltie of Gods wrath, death, and damnation. Eternall condemnation then is the iust reward euen of originall sinne.

THE SECOND POYNT OF THE TEMPORALL punishment of originall sinne.

There are many evils and plagues which are laid vpon men in their minde, and all the parts thereof, the will, vnderstanding, and affections, and in their bodies, some externall calamities also of the life, which all are iust punishments of originall sinne: first in the vnderstanding there is great ignorance not onely in naturall things, but much more of heauenly and spirituall. Secondly, the foolishness and fatuities of the mind, the priuation or want of wit, which many children are borne withall, more then any beast in their kinde. Thirdly, the difficultie and great labour in attaining to knowledge and learning. Fourthly, the curiositie of the minde, and the desire that man hath to know things that are hid, and not belonging to him. Fifthly, the vanitie of the minde, which is occupied many times in foolish and idle thoughts: and such other defects there be in the minde.

Secondly, in the will and affections: first, there is phibantia, selfe-loue, whereby every man is addicted to himselfe. Secondly, the frowardnes of the will, in inclining to euill rather then good; chusing vice, rather then vertue. Thirdly, the carelesnes of men in following after heauenly things. Fourthly, the too great desire and coveting of earthly things. Fifthly, the inconstancie and mutabilitie of the will. Sixtly, discontentment, murmuring, and repining, no man contented with his owne estate. Seuenthly, the weakenes of our affections, in being soone prouoked to anger, enuie, reuenge. 8. Lastly, the concupiscence and lust of the affections, seeking to ouerrule reason.

Thirdly, in the bodie these infirmities are remaining: first, naturall defects and wants: as some are borne blinde, some deafe, some lame, &c. Secondly, the infinite diseases and sicknesses, which our bodies are subiect vnto. Thirdly, the difficult, hard and vnpleasant meanes in recouering our health. Fourthly, the great labour and toyle of the bodie for the preseruatiō thereof. Fifthly, the shortnes of our life, and the mortalitie of our bodies, with the continuall feare of death imminent, and hanging ouer our heads.

Fourthly, beside these, there are externall calamities without vs: first, by nature being the children of wrath, we are vnder the power of Sathan. Secondly, man is become by reason of his sinne, one an enemy, yea, as the Preacher saith, chap. 3. 18. a beast, to another. Thirdly, the vnreasonable creatures, whom man in his creation was made Lord of, are now become rebellious, & disobedient. Fourthly, the rest of Gods creatures, as the heauens, the elements, the earth are armed against vs: as when men are plagued with drouth, famine, pestilence, mildewe, lightning, and such like.

These and many more calamities sinne hath brought vs vnto, and they are iust punishments for our rebellion and disobedience against God: As Saint Paul saith, Tribulation and anguish, in- digitation and wrath, shall be vpon the soule of every one that doth euill, Rom. chap. 2. vers. 9. Augustine also thus writeth, Causa istorum malorum, qua nunc patimur, non est ob scelera suscepta in vita superior, ut philosophi putarunt, &c. The cause of these evils which men suffer, is not for the finnes done in another life, before the soule came into the bodie, as some Philosophers haue thought; there remaineth then nothing else, but that either God must be charged with iniquitie, or impotencie, as either not willing, or not able to make man righteous, or that it is a punishment of the first transgression: but because God is neither vniust nor impotent, we must needs confesse, that this grie-uous yoke should not be layde vpon the sonnes of Adam, but for originall sinne: Cyprian. Julian.
lib. 4. c. 16.

And thus farre we and our aduersaries are agreed: that, wherein we varie and disagree, is this poynť, as followeth.

The

The Papists.

There are three other effects, which we affirme to be the fruites of originall sinne, but Belarm. 30. Errors. denieth them. First, the losse of free will to doe good, which we say is vtterly decayed by Adam's transgression, which Belarmine gainesayeth. Secondly, the corruption of nature, which is such in the regenerate, that they cannot chuse but sinne: but the Iesuite affirmeth, that man by grace may receiue power to keepe the lawe. Thirdly, the third effect, as doubt, despayre, hatred of God and such like: The two first the Iesuite vtterly reiecteth, denying that there be any such effects at all; and herein referreth vs to the treatises of free will, and iustificatiō which follow: in those places we will also referue this matter. Concerning the third, he gaunteth, that such effects there be, yet not properly caused by originall sinne, Belarm. cap. 16.

Argum. These motions are in some that haue not originall sinne, as in diuels, and are not in others that haue: Ergo, they are not the proper effects of originall sinne, Belarm. ibid.

Ans. 1. As it followeth not, heat and light are proper to the Sunne, therefore not to the fire: for as the Sunne hath one kinde of heate and light, so the fire hath another: After the same manner, it is no good consequent, Lying and murder are proper to the diuell, Ioh. 8. 44. and so likewise despayre, distrust, hatred of God; and the rest: Ergo, they are not proper to men: for though these finnes in both beare the same name, yet are they not of the same nature, neither came they of one beginning: for these finnes in the damned spirits are alwaies actual, and in the highest degree springing from their proud and wilfull apostasie: but man was seduced and deceiued by Satan, and so transgressed; whose fall was neither so grieuous, as the apostasie of the Angels, nor his finnes either originall or actual so hainous.

There are some proper effects of originall sinne by the Iesuites owne confession, that are not to be found in children: as curiositie in the minde, whereby men are more readie to behold other mens finnes than their owne, Belarm. cap. 9. he maketh this the ninth wound of the vnderstanding: there is also malitia & perversitas, the frowardnes and malice of the will, which Belarmine maketh the fift wound or disease in the will of man, cap. 10. But these defects are not in children, because as yet they want such acts of the will and vnderstanding: wherefore either these are not proper effects of originall sinne, as the Iesuite affirmeth they are, or else there may be some fruites of this sinne, that are not actually or presently in children, which is most true, because they want such instruments and means, whereby those effects shew themselves. Therefore Belarmine's argument is not good: these motions of the minde, despayre, distrust, are not in children: Ergo, they are not proper fruites of originall corruption.

The Protestants.

That these euill motions of the minde, whereof wee speake, are the immediate and proper effects of originall sinne: it may thus appeare.

Argum. 1. Rebellion of the flesh against the spirit, is a proper fruit of originall concupiscence, Rom. 7. 3. But despayre, distrust, murmuring, and such like, are nothing else but rebellion of the flesh: Ergo.

Argum. 2. These euill motions that arise suddainly in the minde without consent of the will, doe spring immediately from originall sinne: for there is no euill in man, but hath its beginning either from the corruption of our nature, or by the consent of will; or from both: But these euill motions, despayre, distrust, &c. in the regenerate haue no consent of will: for Saint Paul saith, The euill which I would not, that doe I, Rom. chap. 7. verse 19. And Dauid did these things in hate, as we heard before: Ergo, they doe arise immediately from originall sinne.

Augustine saith: Operatur in nobis peccatum desideria illicita, quibus si nos obediunt (si si voluntas consensit) & nos operamur; si non obtemperamus, operatur in nobis peccatum: Sinne worketh in vs vnto lawfull desires; which if we obey by consenting vnto them, then doe we also worke together with sinne: but if we obey them not, it is sinne that worketh in vs, in Psalm. 118. concion. 2. Ergo, All vnto lawfull desires and motions wrought in vs without consent of the will, are the fruites and effects of originall sinne.

THE THIRD CONTROVERSIE, BEING THE NINETEENTH IN THE WHOLE, OF THE REPARATION AND RESTORING of man by Christ.

His Controversie hath foure parts: first, of our Predestination: Secondly, of our vocation, vnto the which belong the treatises of grace and free-will: Thirdly, of our iustification, and the fourth part is of sanctification, that is, of good workes that follow our iustification, as necessarie fruites thereof.

THE FIRST PART, OF PREDESTINATION.

This part is divided into foure questions: first, what predestination is. Secondly, who they are which be predestinate. Thirdly, the cause of predestination. Fourthly, of the certaintie, and assurance thereof.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE DEFINITION OF predestination.

xx. Error.

Bellarmino thus defineth predestination: Predestinatio est providentia Dei, &c. Predestination is a certaine providence, or foreknowledge of God, whereby certaine men elected, are by infallible meanes and wayes directed vnto life eternall, Bellarmino lib. 2. de grat. & liber. arb. cap. 9.

In this definition we finde a double fault: first, because Bellarmino defineth predestination to be foreknowledge or prescience. Secondly, for that he affirmeth it to be onely of the elect. But of this latter fault more shall be said in the next part. As for the first, Bellarmino maketh predestination to be a species, a kinde or part of Gods providence: and further saith, that predestination partly belongeth to the will of God, partly to his knowledge and vnderstanding, but most principally to his knowledge: Pro (saith he) predestinationis ratio & essentia consistit: Wherein consisteth the very essence of predestination. He reasoneth thus:

Argum. Saint Paul saith, God hath not cast away his people whom he knew before, Rom. 11. 1. The foundation of God remaineth sure, the Lord knoweth who are his, 2. Timoth. 2. 19. Bellarmino from hence he concludeth, that predestination is a foresight or foreknowledge of God, Bellarmino. ibid.

Ans. First, these places doe evidently proue, that God foresaw in his diuine providence those that should be saued: and that his prescience is certaine and infallible; but that predestination is the very prescience and foreknowledge of God, it is not hence proued. Secondly, Saint Paul himselfe doth distinguish them in the place alleaged, The foundation of God remaineth sure (saith he) and hath this seale; the Lord knoweth who are his. He calleth predestination, the foundation, and prescience the seale thereof: the foundation then, and the seale are not the same. Thirdly, we answer with Augustine: Aliquando predestinatio significatur nomine prescientia ut Rom. 11. non repulsi Deus populum suum quam presciuit: Sometime predestination is signified by the word prescience, as in the 11. to the Romanes, God hath not reiected his people whom he knew before, de pers. seu an lib. 2. cap. 19. In this place therefore prescience may be taken for predestination.

The Protestants.

That predestination is alwaies ioyned with the providence and prescience of God, we graunt: but that predestination properly issueth out from Gods will, being an act and effect thereof, and not of his knowledge, it may partly appeare by the name: for predestinare, doth properly signifie, to define and determine, which requireth rather the consent of the will, than light of vnderstanding. We therefore define it thus: Predestinatio est decretum Dei &c. Predestination is the decree of God, touching the saluation and condemnation of men: our arguments are these.

Argum. 1. If the prescience of God giue the essence, nature and kinde vnto predestination, as the Iesuite saith, then is it the cause thereof, and the other is the effect; but Gods prescience is not the cause of predestination: for he also confesseth, Homines gratis à Deo electos, ante omnem operum praevidentiam: That men are freely elected of God, before any foresight of their workes, cap. 10. Ergo, Gods prescience giueth not the essence and nature of predestination. And here by the way, note the Iesuites contrarie and repugnant sayings: election, he saith, goeth before prescience, and yet Gods knowledge is the cause of election: but how can the effect goe before the cause?

Argum. 2. Saint Paul speaketh evidently, that predestination proceedeth of Gods good will and pleasure, which is the onely cause thereof: He hath predestinate vs according to the good pleasure of his will, Ephes. 1. 5. and according to his good pleasure, which he had purposed in him, ver. 9. predestinate according to the purpose of him, which worketh all things according to the counsell of his owne will, ver. 11. These three words, beneplacitum voluntatis, propositum voluntatis, consilium voluntatis, the good pleasure of his will, the purpose of his will, the counsell of his will, haue no relation at all, to the knowledge or vnderstanding of God, but onely to his will. Saint Peter also putteth a manifest difference betwene prescience, and predestination, when he saith, that Christ was deliuered up according to the determinate counsell and foreknowledge of God, Act. 2. 23. the decree or determination is ioyned to his counsell or will, not to his foreknowledge.

Augustine, speaking of the free election of the children of God, saith thus: Sed diuina voluntatis, non humana fragilitatis meritum: Audi, qui omnia operatur secundum consilium voluntatis. Hypognost. artic. 16. But this is the gift or graunt of the diuine will, not a merit or desert of humane frailtie: hearken, what the Apostle saith, which worketh all things according to the counsell of his owne will. He maketh election a free worke of Gods will.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THOSE WHICH are predestinate, whether some are ordained to damna- tion, as other are elected vnto life.

Concerning this point, there are foure opinions: Some thought that all men in the end should be saued; yea the diuels & all: which error is attributed to Origen: whom with the rest of this opinion, Augustine confuteth at large, lib. 21. de ciuitate Dei, cap. 17. ad 24. Some other held, that God ordained grace and mercie for al, and was not any way the cause of the reprobation of men: This was the heresie of the Pelagians, euery where confuted by Augustine in his learned workes written against the Pelagians: and I am afraid it hath too many fauourites and friends in these daies. The third opinion is of the Papiſts, who denie not, but that reprobation doth proceede in some respect from the will, and decree of God, but that it is not so properly Gods act, as election is. The fourth opinion is ours, that predestination is both of the elect to saluation, and of the reprobate to damnation. Against two of these opinions, wee will deale briefly at this time: first, against the Papiſts, then against the error of the Pelagians.

THE FIRST PART, OF REPROBATION.

The Papiſts.

God intendeth no mans damnation, say they, directly, or absolutely, but in respect of their demerits, Rhemist. annot. Rom. 9. scil. 9. And againe, God is not the cause of any mans reprobation or damnation, ibid. scil. 1. Of the same opinion is Bellarmine, who, although he simply denieth not reprobation, as afterward we shall see: yet maketh God farre otherwise the author of it, then of election: yea he excludeth it out of the definition of predestination; which he defineth to be the prouidence of God onely to direct those that are elected, to eternall life, lib. 2. de grat. c. 9. Their arguments are these.

Argum. 1. Timoth. 2. 4. God would haue all men to be saued, and come to the knowledge of the truth. 1. Pet. 3. ver. 9. God would haue no man to perish, but would haue all men to come to repentance. Ezech. 18. ver. 23. God will not the death of a sinner: Ergo, the death and damnation of men, standeth not properly with the will of God.

Ans. 1. God is said not to will or desire the death of a sinner: not because in his secret counsell, he hath not decreed it at all, but because, God in their condemnation hath respect to his owne glorie, which is the chiefe and principall end both of election and reprobation: And God is so tender of his own honor & glorie, that in respect of it, he is said not to will or desire other things; he willeth not death or dānation, that is, not as the chiefe end of his will or purpose, but intendeth a further thing, than their damnation, that is, the setting forth of his owne glorie: as the Apostle saith, Rom. 9. 14. that God hath set vp Pharao to shew his power in him: So Augustine saith, Ita plene diuina praescientia in aliis manente iustitia, in aliis gratia proficiente completa est: So the fulnes of Gods prescience is accomplished, his iustice being shewed vpon some, and vpon others, grace and mercie: de Predest. lib. 1. cap. 13.

Yyy

2. God

cap. 103.

2. God is said not to will the death of any, because no man is to impute his damnation vnto God, because the wicked are iustly punished for their sinnes, without any respect had to the secret counsell of God: Gods eternall decree then, is not the next and immediate cause of damnation; but the sinnes of men: therefore he may truly say, God will not the death of a sinner, because he no waies willett sinne, which is the cause of their death. But as Augustine saith, Prædestinatio solum iudicium suum, quo unicuique prout gessit, retribuitur est: He hath predestinate only his iudgements, to giue to euery man, as he hath done: articul. fals. impos. 16.

3. Whereas Saint Paul saith, God would haue all men saved, &c. Augustine expoundeth it thus: Omnis homines, omne genus hominum intelligamus: By all men, we may vnderstand all sorts of men, not euery particular man. And this is very agreeable to the Apostles meaning, which a little before exhorted men to pray for Kings and Princes: and then he giueth this reason, because God would haue all men to be saved, that is, high and low, Kings and people, men of all sorts.

4. We must vnderstand these and the like places, not of the secret, but of the revealed will of God, who offereth vnto all the outward meanes of saluation: there is, voluntas medijs w<sup>ill</sup> leading, and, voluntas finis: the will of God concerning the end, & concerning the meanes leading to the end: So although God haue willed and determined euery mans end, some one way, some another, yet the externall meanes of saluation are denied to none. And that this is the Apostles meaning, that which followeth doth declare: God would haue all men come to the knowledge of the truth, &c. and to come to repentance, 2. Pet. 3. 9. Thus also Augustine expoundeth these words: Remota hac definitione, quam diuina scientia intra secretum iustitia sua continet, sincerissimè credendum est, &c. Setting apart the consideration of the secret counsell of God, it is sincerely to be beleued, that God would haue all men to be saved: that is, offering to all the outward meanes of saluation, as his word and Sacraments: concl. articul. fals. impos. articul. 2. To this purpose Saint Ambrose lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 1. Quamuis omnes dominus saluos fieri, &c. Although God would haue all men saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth: non tamen sibi dispensationum suarum abstulit potestatem, &c. yet hath he not taken away the power of his dispensation, that the order of his counsell should runne otherwise, than he in his secret iudgement had appointed.

5. Saint Ambrose also sheweth another way, how this is to be expounded, lib. 1. de una. Gent. cap. 3. Habet populus dei plenitudinem suam, &c. The people of God haue a certaine plenitude of fulnes, and in the elect there is a speciall kinde of vniuersalitie: like as when the Scripture speaketh of the wicked, En, qua de parte quadam dicuntur, &c. Those things, which are spoken but of a part, doe seeme to appertaine to all: as Philip. 2. All seeke their owne, &c. Videmus ergo pro parte hominum omnes homines nominari: We see then that for a part of men, all men are named. After the same manner may the Apostle be vnderstood, when he saith, God would haue all men to be saved.

6. Saint Ambrose also hath another exposition of this place: Vult Deus omnes saluos, sed credunt ad eum, &c. God would haue all to be saved; but if they come vnto him: non sic vult, & nolentes saluentur: he so would it not, as that they against their wills should be saved, &c. but all men are not willing to be saved: Ergo, God would not such to be saved: Ambros. in 1. Tim. 2. Among so many expositions of this place, there is none of them, that enforceth these words to signifie a generall decree and purpose in God to saue all.

The Protestants.

God as he hath made all men, so hath hee freely disposed of their end, according to the counsell of his owne will, ordaining some to be vessels of honour, and others to be vessels of wrath: And this notwithstanding standeth with the iustice of God, to saue some and reiect others: for he might iustly condemne all to eternall death. So Augustine saith, Nemo iniustitia Deum arguit, si sui indebitam donauerit gratiam, alteri reddiderit debitam penam: Let no man seeme to challenge Gods iustice, if hee giue vnto one grace vnderferued, and to another punishment due and deserued: de Prædest. lib. 1. 4.

Further, we say with Augustine epist. ad Hieronym. Nihil nos cogat deum credere vllum animarum sine culpa damnatorem: Nothing must compell vs to beleue, that God is a damner of soules, without their fault. Againe, we confesse with Augustine: Deus multis est causa standi, penini labendi: God is the cause of standing to many, of falling to none: Hypognos. cap. 13. Nemo per hoc quod saluum potest, aut necessitatem aut voluntatem intulit delinquendi, cap. 14. God, in that he cannot be deceived, hath not forced any either with a necessitie or will to sinne. We so then affirme the reprobation of the wicked, as that we thinke none ordained to condemnation, which they haue not iustly deserued by their sinne, and that God only hath decreed and willed their punishment, but not their sinne, that bringeth them vnto it.

Argum. 1. God hath made the wicked for the day of euill, Prouer. 16. 4. They were before of old ordained to this condemnation, Iud. 4. The Prophet Isai saith, Tophet, that is, hell is prepared of old, chapter 30. 33. And euertasting fire is said to be prepared for the diuell and his angels, March. 9. 1. &c. If hee prepared of old; then they were also prepared of old, that should be tormented in hell: for hell was not made for nought.

But of all other places this is most evident in the ninth to the Romanes: out of the which chapter, for this matter wee gather diuers arguments: First, the Apostle alleageth the example of Eſau, and Iacob, I haue loued Iacob, and hated Eſau: which was ſpoken before they were borne: Ergo, God in his eternall decree electeth ſome, and reiecteth others. It cannot be answered here, that this is onely to be vnderſtood of the temporall reiection of Eſau, and election of Iacob, concerning the promiſed land: for the Apoſtle throughout this chapter reaſoneth of Gods eternall election, and reprobation, as it appeareth by the example of Pharaoh: yea, and thus Bellarmin liberally confeſſeth: that the example of Eſau and Iacob iſto be applied vnto eternall election, and reprobation, lib. 2. de grad. cap. 10. But he hath another euſion, making a diſtinction betweene negative and poſitive damnation, which ſerueth not his turne here, as afterward ſhall be ſhewed.

We haue Auguſtines iudgement alſo of this matter: Et reprobi in Eſau demonſtrantur Iudei, De ſymbol. lib. 2. cap. 2. tom. 9. reprobati in Iacob apparent Chriſtiani: The reprobate Iewes are ſhewed in Eſau, and the elect Chriſtians appeare in Iacob. He vnderſtandeth this example of election, and reprobation.

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, that as the veſſels of mercie are prepared to glorie, ſo the veſſels of wrath are prepared to deſtruction: And that God hath as great right and power ouer his creature, as the Potter hath ouer the clay, to make of it a veſſell of honour or diſhonour.

Thirdly, verſ. 17. The Lord ſet vp Pharaoh, to ſhew his power in him, Pro. 16. 7 he Lord hath made diſtinction for himſelfe, and the wicked againſt the euill day: The damnation of the wicked then, doth as well ſerue the glorie of God, as the ſaluation of the elect: for God hath done both for his owne ſake: Ergo, both are the Lords proper acts, the one, as well as the other.

Auguſtine ſaith, Filius perditionis dictus eſt traditor Chriſti, perditioni predeſtinatus: The betrayer of Chriſt is called the childe of perdition, becauſe he was predeſtinate or ordained to perdition: Thom. in Ioh. 1. 107.

Again, he ſaith, Tenenda eſt incommenſurabile regula, impij in peccatis, antequam eſſent in mundo praeſcripti tantum, non praeſtinati; peccatum autem iſtud praeſtinatum: This rule wee muſt vndoubtedly hold, that the wicked were onely foreſeene or foreknowne of God in their ſins, not predeſtinate, becauſe their puniſhment was predeſtinate, Hypognoſt. artic. 6. So then God ordaineth not men to ſinne, but he ordaineth men to puniſhment for their ſinnes: yet are not the wicked to complaine, for they are juſtly forſaken of God, becauſe of their rebellion, and diſobediſence. Neither are the godly and faithfull by this doctrine to be diſcouraged: for as much as God hath not denied them the grace of his ſpirit; but hath giuen them faith and repentance, and ſtrength to walke before him in his feare: all which are pledges vnto them of their free election, and ſaluation in Chriſt.

We want not the teſtimonie of ſome of their owne writers for the reprobation of the wicked: Auguſtine ſen. lib. 13. diſtinct. 4. 8. Dicitur filij gehenna, non ex illa nati, ſed in illam preparati: They are called the children of hell, not becauſe they are borne of hell, but ordained, or prepared vnto it. lib. 1. diſt. 32. ſen. E. De reprobis, qui preparati ſunt non ad vitam, ſed mortem, queritur, &c. It may be asked concerning the reprobate, which are not prepared to life, but vnto death, whether it may be granted, that God did loue them from the beginning: we ſay then, that it muſt be granted onely of the elect, that God loued them from the beginning, &c. but of the not elected it muſt be ſimply granted, that God did hate, that is, reprobate them. A more evident teſtimonie we cannot haue.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE VNI- uerſalitie of the grace of God.

It was the error of the Pelagians, as Auguſtine noteth, that the grace of God was not onely in re-ſpect of the outward meanes, generally offered to all, but in Gods eternall decree and purpoſe ordained for all, if they would receiue it: for thus they affirmed: Quantum ad Deum, omnibus pa-
ram eſt vitam eternam, quia vult omnes ſalvos fieri: quantum ad arbitrij libertatem attinet, ab eis eam apprehendi, qui ſponte Deo crediderunt: On Gods behalfe, they ſay, life eternall is prepared for all, becauſe God will haue all men ſaued: and as for the freedom of the will, ſo many apprehend or hold of eternall life, as of their owne accord doe beleue in God. It followeth vpon this opinion, that Chriſt alſo dyed in the purpoſe and intention of God, for all men generally, and not for believers onely, ſuch as are ordained vnto life,

Bellarmin confuteth this error, and would make vs beleue that he himſelfe is farre from it: yet where he ſeemeth to affirme it in theſe words: Si ſanguis Chriſti datus eſſet omnibus pro quibus ſolus eſt datus eſſet omnibus omnino hominibus, etiam Turcis, Iudeis, Ethnicis, quibus ſanguis impij: ſan- guis enim ille pro omnibus fuſus eſt: If the blood of Chriſt ſhould be giuen to all, for whom it was ſhed,

shed, it should bee given generally to all men, Turkes, Jewes, Ethnikes, to all wicked men: for his blood was shed for all, Bellarmin. de Eucharist. lib. 4. cap. 25. This should seeme also to have been the iudgement of the elder Papiists: for Iohn Careless Martyr was charged by a popish Doctor, that he should hold, that Christ did not dye effectually for all men, For. pag. 192. It should appeare then, that he himselfe thought that the benefite of Christs death was ordained and purposed for all: and therefore that he dyed effectually for all.

There be at this day three sundrie opinions maintained by some concerning the vniuersalitie of grace: The first is, Christum sine ullo discrimine pro omnium hominum peccatis esse mortuum, & omnia hominum peccata non modo sufficienter verum etiam efficienter expiase, &c. That Christ hath dyed for all men, without any difference, and hath actually purged all mens sins, not onely sufficiently, but effectually: absque ullo fidei vel incredulitatis respectu, without any respect to their faith, or incredulitie: Huber. thes. 19. Againe, Omnes reprobos, & electos aequo per Christum saluatos fuisse credunt, sine non: That the reprobate as well as the elect are saued by Christ, whether they beleue or not, Huber. thes. 270. That Christ dyed as well for the damned and reprobate, as for Peter and Paul: Iacobus Andre. colloq. Mompelgartens. p. 548. yet are not the reprobate saued, because they despise this grace offered, and so are deprived of this reconciliation purchased by Christ, Huber. thes. 245.

The second opinion is, Omnes & singulos homines beneficio & gratia vniuersali summi patris esse per Christum seruatos: That all men, and every one by the vniuersall grace of God the father in Christ, are saued: yet not without respect had to their faith: but they say further, Fidem in Deum naturalem esse, omnibus inditam & innotam: That this faith in God is naturally given vnto all: se Paulus praefatio. So that in effect they affirme the same thing, which the other doe, that by naturall men are actually saued by Christs death, if they doe not afterward wilfully reiect this grace.

The third opinion is, Quod sit Dei propositum saluare omnes, & elegit eos & predestinavit aeternae, seruata tamen conditione: That it is Gods purpose, that all men should be saued, and that he hath elected and predestinate them to eternall life, the condition kept, that is, if they beleue: Hemming. de gratia vniuersal. p. 20. So also Sneecamus: Deum vniuersaliter omnium in Christo inferius assumpti humanum genus in reconciliationis fidei: That God hauing mercie vpon all, hath received whole mankind into the couenant of reconciliation: de Predestinat. 480. That is, as many as beleue: which gift to beleue they acknowledge to be of God, and the same not denied to any, but offered generally to all: and that it is in mans power to giue assent vnto grace offered, and to beleue: Voluntatem à Deo doctam, & motam à spiritu sancto posse se applicare ad gratiam, assensum Evangelio, credere: That the will being taught of God, and somewhat stirred of the spirit, may apply it selfe to grace, giue assent to the Gospell, beleue, &c. Hemming. de libero arbit.

These three opinions, though in some circumstances differing from themselves, as the first holdeth all men actually by nature to be saued by Christ, without any respect to their faith; the second by nature, not excluding faith; the third by grace and faith, which they say is offered of God, and apprehended of mans free will: yet all these herein agree, that Christ was not giuen of his father to dye for a certaine and definite number of the elect, which they denie, but vniuersally for all men in the world.

The first opinion, applying Christs death to all, as well vnbeleueers as beleueers, doth manifestly impugne the Scripture, which saith, God so loved the world, that he hath giuen his only begotten son, &c. that whosoever beleueth in him, should not perish, &c. Ioh. 3. 16.

The second, making faith a naturall gift, is contrarie also to the word: for that which is naturall is common to all: but all men haue not faith, 2. Thess. 3. 2.

The third, ascribing power to mans free will to receiue and apprehend grace offered, gaineth the truth which saith, Without me you can doe nothing. Ioh. 15. 5.

But leauing the seuerall absurdities of these opinions, wee will deale against them all in that wherein they agree, concerning the vniuersalitie of grace: and especially against the latter, which seemeth to be much approved euen of some of our owne countrey men, and alreadie hath gotten some patrones and defenders in our Church. Wherefore this matter being weightie in it selfe, and daungerous for feare of further infection, wee will not lightly passe ouer this place, but take some paines, first to answer the arguments vsed by the aduerser part, and then bring forth our owne.

Their arguments are of two sorts, either drawne directly from some places of Scripture, or from some shew and apparance of reason: of the first in the first place.

Argum. 1. First, they object such places of Scripture, where it is directly affirmed, that Christ died for all men.

1. God will that all men shall be saued, 1. Tim. 2. 4. and vers. 5. Christ gave himselfe a ransom for all men: Huber. thes. 70. Puck. ration. 83.

2. Christ died for all, 2. Cor. 5. vers. 15. Huber. thes. 87. Pucks. ration. 79.

The Lord would haue no man perishe, but would haue all men come to repentance: 2. Pet. 3. 9. Puck.
Hebr. 2. 9.

Christ gave himselfe for vs. all, Rom. 8. 32.

Christ did saile death for all men, Hebr. 2. 9.

Out of these and such like places of Scripture, they inferre and conclude, that Christs death is effectual to all, and that in the purpose of God he was giuen generally for all men.

Contra. First, to these places wee will answere in generall, and then in particular: that Christ died for all men, the Scripture so affirming, wee denie not: but because elsewhere the Scripture sheweth that Christ died for his sheepe, Ioh. chap. 10. for the Church, Ephes. chap. 1. He prayeth not for the world, Ioh. chap. 17. much lesse died for it: least now the Scripture should seeme to be contrary to it selfe, we must not take the letter, but follow the sense, where we finde mention made of the vniuersalitie of Christs death: Christs death therefore is said diuerly to be vniuersall, or to be giuen for all men.

The death of Christ, secundum sufficientiam, in respect of the sufficiencie and the fulnes of redemption thereof, hath satisfied for all men: but secundum efficientiam, it is efficacious and effectual onely to those, which were fore-ordained to life in Christ; thus Augustine distinguisheth: Quod ad magnitudinem & potentiam precij, sanguis Christi redemptio est totius mundi: quoniam tamen non omnes captiuitate eruti sunt, redemptionis proprietat band dubie penes illos est, qui membra sunt Christi. In respect of the greatnesse and price, the blood of Christ is the redemption of the whole world: but because all are not redeemed from captiuitie, the proper effect of redemption is onely wrought in the members of Christ, Tom. 7. ad articul. falso. impos.

Resp. 1. There is as great difference betweene sufficiencie, and efficacie, as betweene virtus, & potestas, or abilitie, and the worke: as a tree first is good, there is the sufficiencie; then it bringeth forth good fruit, which is the efficacie: the tree may be good, though it haue not alwaies good fruit: so there may be a kinde of sufficiencie without efficacie. Secondly, we say that the death of Christ is both sufficient and efficacious in it selfe, though it be not to those that perish for want of beleefe: and it is efficacious also to them in some sort, for through Christ they enioy what good thing soeuer they haue, though not after that singular manner, as it is to the faithfull: sic Iunius ad rom. 3. Puck. 19.

To this purpose Saint Ambrose lib. 3. de fide cap. 4. Ille quidem misericordia sua omnibus natus est, sed postea haereticorum fecit, ut non omnibus nasceretur, qui omnibus natus est: He in mercie was borne for all, but the vnfaithfulness of the heretikes is the cause, that he, which was borne to all, is not borne for all. Likewise, lib. 5. in Luc. c. 7. Si Christus pro omnibus mortuus est, pro nobis tamen specialiter passus est: Christ died for all, yet more specially he hath suffered for vs. What is this speciall suffering of Christ but his effectual dying onely for the elect?

August. sentent. lib. 3. dist. 20. li. c. Christus precium nostrae redemptionis obtulit pro omnibus quoniam ad sufficientiam, sed pro electis tantum, quantum ad efficientiam: Christ offered vp the price of our redemption for all in respect of the sufficiencie, but for the elect only as concerning the efficacie. This distinction is receiued by Thomas, Lyra, and the whole schoolemen: Esper. in 1. Tim. p. 36.

Christ is said to haue died for all, and that effectually, that is for all the elect: for as there is a vniuersalitie of the wicked, as the Apostle saith, All seeke their owne, and not that which is Iesus Christi, Philip. chap. 2. vers. 21. that is, all false teachers: so there is an vniuersalitie of the faithfull: as Christ saith, Iohn 12. When I am lift vp from the earth, I will draw all men vnto me, meaning all beleeuers: Omnes praedestinos ad salutem: All ordained to saluation, as Augustine expoundeth it, Tract. 53. Likewise Isai. 54. They shall be all taught of God: that is all the faithfull. So one saith, Et populus Dei suam habet plenitudinem, &c. in electis & praescitis sua quaedam censetur vniuersitas, ut de tota mundetur vniuersitas, & de omnibus hominibus omnes homines videantur assumpti: The people of God hath a certaine fulnes, and there is a kinde of vniuersalitie in the elect, that out of the whole world, a whole world, and from among all men, all men in some sort should be deliuered, Ambros. de vniuers. Gentium lib. 1. cap. 3.

3. Christ is said to haue dyed for all; and all men are said to bee redeemed by his death, because as many as are redeemed, doe obtaine redemption onely by Christ: so is that place to bee vnderstood, 1. Corinth. chap. 11. vers. 6. God worketh all in all, not euery man hath all gifts; but because, what good gift soeuer there is in any man, it cometh onely of God. So Augustine saith, Difficili est, omnes iustificari per Christum, non quia omnes iustificatur in Christo, sed qui iustificatur non aliter iustificatur, quam in Christo; sicut dicimus omnes homines intrare in domum per unam iannam, quia non intrant nisi per ipsam: It is said, many are iustified by Christ, not because all are iustified in Christ, but they that are iustified, are not otherwise iustified, than in Christ,

Christ, as we say, all men went into the house by that doore, because none went in, but by it: Aug. contra Iulian. lib. 6. cap. 12.

4. When the Scripture vseth in this case these generall termes, omnes, omnia, all men, all things, we must not vnderstand them vniuersally, as comprehending every particular, but indefinitely, as for omnes homines, all men, we vnderstand omnia hominum genera, all sorts of men: this is Augustine's rule also, tractat. in Ioban. 53. So it is said, that Christ healed omnem morbum, every disease, that is, every kinde of disease, Matth. 4. 23. Decimatis omne olus: You tiche all herbes, that is, every kinde, Luk. 11. 42. Omnis Iudea exibat: All Iudea went forth vnto Iohn, Mark. 15. that is, out of every part of Iudea.

5. Christ is said to haue dyed for all: in respect of the externall preaching of the Gospell, and common oblation of grace vnto all, which notwithstanding is not available or effectual in all: as in the Gospell the marriage feast was prepared for all; but all that were called, came not: For many are called (saith our Saviour) few chosen, Matth. 22. So the grace of God, ex peccato omnes committit, suos excitat singulariter, doth call all men from sinne generally, but his elect bestireth vp after a singular manner, and effectually.

Obiect. If God doe offer Christ outwardly to all, and yet all be not thereby called, hee should seeme to mocke and dissemble with men, Packs. ration. 57.

Respons. First, the calling of God in it selfe is effectual to all, if all had grace to lay hold of it: now, if God giue grace vnto some to obey their calling, and thereby to be conuerted, and not to others, we must not be inquisitiue to search, but leaue it vnto God, whose iudgements may be hid and secret, but they are alwaies most iust: for he hath mercie on whom he will. Secondly, though the calling of God worke not it proper and naturall effect in the incredulous, vnto their conuersion; yet it is effectual, more accidentario, accidentally, being made vnto them, through the hardness of their owne heart, the sauour of death vnto death. Thirdly, Saint Ambrose witnesseth for this distinction of generall and effectual calling: lib. 2. de vocat. Gentium cap. 8. Præter illum quædam gratiam parcius & occultius hominum corda pulsant, quæ excellentiore opere, largiore munere, potentioritate vocatio specialis exercitur, &c. Beside the generall grace more sparingly and secretly beeing vpon mens hearts, there is a speciall calling more excellent in working, of a larger gift, and more mightie in vertue.

THE PARTICVLAR ANSWERE TO the former places.

TO the first, that God would haue all men to be saued, we haue answered before, quest. of this Controversie, part. 1. and to this effect, that it cannot bee literally vnderstoode, that God would absolutely haue all men to be saued, for why then should not all be saued? For who hath resisted Gods will? Rom. 9. 19. Neither can it be answered here, as sometime by the old Pelagians, that Gods will is not fulfilled, because man will not: for this were to make men mightier than God. The meaning then of the place is this: first, that God offereth the externall meanes of saluation to all: which if they refuse, they are in fault themselves, God is not to be blamed. Secondly, the Apostle, as Augustine saith, by all men, vnderstandeth all sorts of men: as high and low, Kings, Princes, and the people, as it may appeare by that which goeth before in this place. Thirdly, in the same sense Christ is said to giue himselfe a raunsome for all men, that is, for all sorts of men, or for all the elect, or sufficiently for all in generall.

In the second place, 2. Cor. 5. 15. the Apostle sheweth, that howsoeuer the death of Christ is sufficient for all, yet it is effectual onely to the faithfull, to them, That from henceforth live not to themselves, but to him that dyed for them, vers. 15. and to such as are new creatures, vers. 17. But all are not new creatures in Christ, therefore for all and to all Christs death is not effectual.

In the third place S. Peter speaketh to the faithfull, whom he calleth vers. 1. beloved, and God is patient toward vs, saith he, vers. 9. and would haue no man perish: that is, none of vs, none of the faithfull and elect: Sic Innuius respons. ad ration. 90. And againe, The patience, long suffering, and humilitie of God, leadeth every man to repentance: Rom. 2. 4. But thou (saith the Apostle) after thine hardness, and heart that cannot repent, &c. They therefore which abuse and despise the patience of God, are themselves the cause of their destruction: God is not to be charged with it.

In the fourth place, Rom. 8. 32. the Apostle saying, Christ gave himselfe for vs all, meaneth the vniuersalitie of the faithfull and elect: whom he hath predestinate, called, iustified, vers. 30.

In the fift place, Heb. 2. 9. where the Apostle saith, that Christ did taste death for all men, he afterward expoundeth himselfe, vers. 10. saying, That Christ brought many children to glory such were sanctified, vers. 11. whom Christ vouchsafeth to call his brethren, vers. 12. and his children vers. 13. These are not vniuersally all men, but the faithfull and elect onely: Christ onely is the Prince of their saluation, whom he bringeth to glory, vers. 10.

Argum. 2. Their second generall argument is drawne from such places of Scripture, where mention is made of the whole world, in the benefit of redemption: as Iohn 1.29. Behold the lambe of God, that taketh away the sinne of the world: Iohn 6.51. The bread that I will give is my flesh, which I giue for the life of the world: Iohn 12.47. I came not to iudge the world, but to save the world: Cor. 5.19. God was in Christ, and reconciled the world to himselfe. These places are alleaged by Augustinus lib. de vniuersalitate gratie. Huberus lib. thes. 1. Puckina, ration. 60.91. to proue the vniuersalitye of the benefite of Christs death to all.

Ans. First, Christ is sayd to take away the sinnes of the world, in respect of the sufficiencie of his death, which is able to satisfie in it selfe, not onely for the sinnes of the world, but, as Thomas Aquinas saith, si plures mundi essent, si there were many worlds: yet is his death effectually onely to those that belecue, and are ordayned vnto life. Epistol. decret. Gay. Effusio inisti sanguinis Christi tam haussit precium, ut si vniuersas captiuorum in redemptorem suum crederet, nullum diaboli vincula moueret. The shedding of Christs righteous blood, was so rich to pay our rancome, that if all the sinners did beleue in their redeemer, none of them should be held in the diuels bonds. Secondly, the world in Scripture is not alwayes taken for the vniuersall companie of men both good and bad, but as it is sometime taken onely for the wicked, as Iohn 14.30. The prince of this world cometh, &c. And Iohn 17.14. The world hath hated them: so also doth it sometime signifie onely the elect companie disperfed ouer the world: as Iohn 17.23. That the world may know that thou hast sent me. And againe, vers. 25. The world hath not knowne thee, but I haue knowne thee, and these haue knowne thee whom thou hast sent me. So then there is a world that hath not knowne Christ, namely the wicked world: there is a world that hath knowne Christ, that is, the companie of the elect: so Abraham is called the heire of the world, Rom. 4.13. that is, the father of the faithfull, vers. 11. Augustinus writeth, Tract. in Iob. 53. Mundus appellatur in malis hominibus, qui toto terrarum orbe diffusi sunt: appellatur mundus in bonis, qui similiter toto terrarum orbe diffusi sunt: vnde dicit Apostolus, Deus in Christo mundum reconcilians sibi: The world is vnderstood of wicked men, that are disperfed ouer the world: the world also is named of good men, that are so likewise disperfed; as the Apostle saith, God was in Christ reconciling the world to himselfe. This world Christ came to saue, not to iudge, he gaue himselfe for the life of this world: this is the reconciled world, as Augustinus againe saith, Mundus damnatus quicquid prater Ecclesiam: mundus reconciliatus Ecclesia. The reconciled world is onely the Church: the damned world all those that are beside the Church.

Obi. But Saint Iohn saith, Christ is the propitiation for our sinnes, and not for our sinnes onely, but for the sinnes of the whole world: Christ then dyed not for the elect onely, (not for our sinnes onely, saith the Apostle) but for all in the world: and therefore hee saith the whole world: scilicet Huber. lib. 1.

Ans. First, Saint Iohn in saying (not for our sinnes onely, but, &c.) meaneth that Christ is not satisfied by his death, for our sinnes that now beleue, saith the Apostle, but for as many as shall beleue, while the world standeth: as our Sauour saith, I pray not for these alone, but for them also which shall beleue in me through their word: Iohn 17.21. Secondly, by the whole world the Apostle may here as well vnderstand the vniuersall companie of the faithfull, as he saith, That he whole world lyeth in wickednesse, 1. Iohn 5.19. meaning the wicked onely. Therefore Augustinus writeth well, Epistol. 48. Totus mundus in maligno positus est propter zizaniam, qua sunt per totum mundum, & Christus propitiatio est peccatorum totius mundi propter triticum, quod est per totum mundum: The whole world lyeth in euill, because of the tares throughout the whole world, and Christ is the propitiation of the sinnes of the whole world, because of the good wheat throughout the world.

Argum. 3. Their third generall argument is grounded vpon such places of Scripture, where the fall of mankind by Adam, and the redemption by Christ are compared together: as Rom. 5. vers. 12. As by the offence of one the fault came vpon all to their condemnation: so by the iustifying of one the benefite abounded towards all men, &c. And againe, 1. Cor. 15.22. As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made aliue: Christs redemption then is as generall, as Adams fall; vnlesse ye will say, that Adams sinne exceedeth the merite of Christ. But all are dead in Adam: Ergo, all are redeemed by Christ: Huber. Thef. 48. Sueran. de predest. pag. 486. 492. 494. & alibi.

Ans. 1. Augustinus exposition may here safely be admitted, that all men are said to be iustified by Christ, not that all men are actually iustified by him, but because all that are iustified, are not otherwise iustified, then by him: as all that are dead, are dead in Adam: August. de natur. & grat. cap. 40. And againe he saith, Sicut in Adam omnes, &c. as in Adam all die, &c. Sicut omnes qui moriuntur, non nisi in Adam moriuntur, &c. As all that die, do not die but in Adam; so all that are made aliue, are made aliue in Christ. August. Hieronym. So then as all that pertaine to Adam, in the first generation, are dead in Adam; so all that by regeneration and new birth are engraft into Christ, are made aliue by him. 2. The Apostle saith, that all they which are iustified by Christ, shall raigne in life by Christ, vers. 17. but all that are of Adam shall not inherite eternall life: Ergo, all are not vniuersally iustified by Christ, neither dyed Christ in that sense for all. 3. Neither doth it follow, that if more perish by Adam, then are redeemed by Christ, that the grace of Christ should be of lesse force, then the sinne of Adam. First, because they which haue no fruit in *Christ*s death, are deprived thereof through their owne vnbeleefe, not for want of any sufficiencie in the raunsome and price of redemption. Againe, though so many should be saued by Christ, as are dead in Adam, yet herein grace should be but equall to the sinne of Adam: as many for as many: But now the Apostle preferreth grace, not in respect of multitude or number of the redeemed, but in a double regard. First, Adams sin brought death, grace by Christ giueth life: now it is an easier thing for many to perish, then for one to be restored: Adam alone lost himselfe and all the world: but all mankind ioyned together cannot saue a soule: grace therefore is preferred in respect of the difficultie of the worke. In this sense the Apostle saith, Rom. 5. 17. If through the offence of one, death reigned; much more shall they, which receiue abundance of grace, reigne in life, &c. Secondly, the Apostle saith, The fault came of one offence to condemnation, verf. 16. that is, onely originall sinne, which we deriue from Adam, maketh vs guiltie of condemnation: but the gift is of many offences to iustification: in Christ not onely our originall, but actuell sinnes also are pardoned. This then is the preeminence of grace.

The other place, 1. Cor. 15. is either to be vnderstood of the resurrection, or rather of the life of the Saints in glorie: for the Apostle saith, all shall be made alive in Christ: not that they already are: And in this sense it maketh nothing for the vniuersalitie of grace. And if we vnderstand it of redemption purchased by Christ, by (all) here, the elect onely are signified, namely, they which are of Christ, as verf. 23. And so Ambrose vpon this place expoundeth it, vpon these words, 1. Corinth. 15. Sicut in Adam, &c. As in Adam all die: Sicut Adam peccans mortem inuenit, & omnes eius origine tenuit: ita Christus mortem vincens, omnibus qui sunt ex eius corpore vitam acquisit: As Adam sinning wrought death vpon all of his offspring; so Christ hath purchased life to all that are of his body: vel sicut, &c. or as in Adam all, both iust and vniust do die: so in Christ all, both beleeuers and vnbeleeuers shall rise, though vnto punishment.

Argum. 4. Their fourth argument out of Scripture, is from such places, which seeme to extend the benefites purchased by *Christ*s death generally to all.

First they vrge that place, Ioh. 1. 9. This is the true light, that lightneth euery man which cometh into the world: Ergo, the light of grace is common to all: Pucks. ration. 55.

Ans. First, this place must be vnderstood not of that singular and especiall light of grace, which is giuen onely to the elect, but of the light of nature, or common grace, which is infused into all: for what light he meaneth, is plainly shewed before, verf. 4. In it was life, and the life was the light of men: he speaketh of the naturall life and light, and that capacitie of reason, which is in all by nature. Secondly, if we should vnderstand the light of peculiar grace, then it would follow, that not onely grace is offered, but receiued of all: for this light is sayd verily and indeed to lighten all. Thirdly, Augustines exposition may here safely be receiued: illuminat omnes homines, i. omnis generis homines: He lighteneth all men, that is, all sorts of men: or thus, illuminat omnes hominem, quia nisi ab ipso nullus illuminatur: He lighteneth all men, because there is none lightened but by him: Enchirid. cap. 96.

Obiect. 2. Rom. 11. 32. God hath shewt vp all vnder vnbeleefe, that he might haue mercie vpon all: Mercie then is ordayned for all.

Ans. The meaning of the place is this, God will haue mercie vpon all, that is, both Iewes and Gentiles: for of them the Apostle entreateth throughout the whole chapter: Intelligitur (saith Augustine) de Iudeis & Gentilibus quos Deus predestinauit: It is to be vnderstood of those of the Iewes and Gentiles, whom God had predestinate: de ciuitate dei. lib. 21. cap. 18. & 24.

Obiect. 3. Coloss. 1. 20. It pleased God the Father, &c. by him to reconcile all things to himselfe, &c. both the things in earth, and the things in heauen, through the blood of his crosse: Ergo, Christ dyed for all: Pucks. 82.

Ans. First, if they will so strictly vrge this word, omnia, all things, Christ shall not onely be the redeemer of men, but of all things in the world. Secondly, this word therefore is to be restrained, according to the matter or subiect, wherof the Apostle entreateth: who hauing first set downe the worke of the creation, whereby all things visible and inuisible were created, verf. 16. he cometh then to the worke of redemption, which he extendeth not to all things visible, and inuisible, as he did the creation, but restraineth to the Church, wherof Christ is the head, verf. 18. which Church consisteth of two parts, of the Saints in heauen, and the Saints in earth, verf. 20. As the Apostle saith elsewhere: Of whom is named the whole familie in heauen, and in earth, Ephes. 3. 15. The benefite of redemption therefore belongeth onely to the Church and familie of the Saints.

Obiect. 4. Iohn 17. 2. Thou hast giuen him power ouer all flesh, that he should giue eternall life to all them that thou hast giuen him: Ergo, all flesh is reconciled vnto God by Christ: Huber. thes. 161.

Ans. First, it followeth not, Christ hath power ouer all flesh, therefore all flesh is reconciled by Christ: for he hath power ouer all creatures in heauen and earth, euen ouer bruite beasts, yet they they haue no part in this reconciliation. Secondly, it is one thing to haue power giuen ouer all men, another thing to haue men giuen vnto Christ out of the world, as Augustine saith: Potestas non quibus omnis hominibus accepta, et liberet, quos volueris; damnet, quos volueris: sed eis sibi esse datus o- ficio, quibus omnibus dei vitam aeternam. He hath receiued power ouer all men to deliuer whom he will, and to condemne whom he will: but they onely are giuen vnto him, to all whom he giueth eternal life: in Iohann. tractat. 1. r. 1. Thirdly, that not all men, but onely some in this sense are giuen vnto Christ, he himselfe witnesseth: I haue declared by name vnto the men, whom thou gauest me out of the world. All the world therefore was not giuen vnto Christ, but a certaine number chosen out of the world. And thus much of their objections out of Scripture: let vs now see some other of their arguments.

Argum. 2. Their second generall argument is drawne from those absurdities and inconueniencies, which do follow, as they imagine, vpon this doctrine, that God in his eternall counsell hath predestinate some vnto damnation, as he hath ordained others to life.

Obiect. 1. If God haue appointed some vnto damnation, and it is impossible that such should not sinne, neither can Gods sentence be altered: it should seeme then, that they are not in fault themselves, seeing they can no wayes escape the wrath of God: how then can it be auoided, but that God should be the author of sin? Sic Hubertus in thesb. Suetan. p. 483. & 500.

Ans. 1. I answer with Augustine: Qui deficiunt, non ex opere Dei, sed ex voluntate sua deficiunt, ut cadant, ut eadem, nec eiciuntur ut deserant; casus tamen ab eo, qui falli non potest, praesumitur. They which fall away, or sinne, do not fall away, by any thing that God doth or worketh, but of their owne will and voluntarie inclination; they are neither compelled to fall, nor cast off to that intent they should forsake God: but God, who cannot be deceived, onely foresaw they should fall. The fall of man therefore is voluntarie, and none the cause of it but himselfe: God foreseeeth (from whose eyes nothing can be hid) that sinne should be committed in the world: but hee de- uind it not, but onely foreordained the punishment of sinne: And although sin be euill, yet the punishment thereof, as it is appointed of God, is iust and good: Non ipsa ignis aeternus, qui crucia- torum est impius, malus est, habens modum et ordinem suum, sed cruciatus est damnatis malus, quorum pec- catus est delictus. Euerlasting fire, which shall torment the wicked, is not euill it selfe, being not without some measure, and order, but the torment is euill to the damned, to whose sinnes it is doe.

Let vs heare for this matter the testimonie of Suetanius a Patron also of vniuersall grace: Deum idcirco, aut iusto odio destinare, quos vult; & homines interea sponte, non coacti malefacere, &c. simul liberata non pigritia: These two sayings, for God to harden; and ordaine to be hated, whom he will; and for men notwithstanding to doe euill willingly, not of constraint, are not contrarie; but one seruing and subordinate to another. Nostra voluntates manens libera sub divina providentia: propria causa, non tolluntur media causa, sed potius stabiluntur. Our owne wills remaine free vnto Gods providence, the first cause doth not take away the second, but rather establisheth them: in deo de predestinat. pag. 622. His meaning is this, that though Gods will and decree be the first cause of all things, and so of the saluation, or damnation of men; yet are there second causes, whereby Gods will is effected: as the corrupt will of man is the cause of sinne, and sinne the cause of damnation. It is not Gods will, that any man should come to condemnation, who first willingly falling into sin, doth not iustly deserue the same. So then Gods decree is not the cause of sin, but the corruption onely of mans will. Thus haue we the testimonie of an aduersarie very cleare in our side.

S. Ambrosio also thus testifieth, lib. 2. de vocat. Gentium. c. 4. Aeterna Dei cognitio nulla nos urget neque peccandi, &c. The eternall knowledge of God, doth not vrge any necessitie to sinne, nei- ther doth iniquitie proceede from whence cometh equitie, &c. From the free will of men transgression first tooke beginning.

August. sentent. thus lib. 1. dist. 41. liter. E. Non reprobatio ita est causa mali, sicut predestinatio causa boni; obduratio ita facit hominem malum, sicut misericordia bonum. Reprobation is not so the cause of euill, as predestination is the cause of good: neither doth obduration so make a man euill, as mercie maketh him good.

Ans. 2. But if God would (they say) men might be preferued from sin: why should hee rather giue his grace to one, then to another? Augustine also very well answereth this matter: Cur illius retineat, illum autem non retineat, nec possibile est comprehendere, nec licitum inuestigare: But why he withholdeth some from sin, and not others, it is neither possible to comprehend, nor lawfull to enquire. The Apostle also may resolute vs herein, who sayeth, according as God spake to Moses, I will haue mercie vpon whom I will haue mercie, and will haue compassion vpon whom I will haue compassion: Rom. 9. 15. Other reason we must not be desirous to know, neither shall we be euer able to com- prehend.

Obiect. 2. But why should God saue some, and not others, seeing they are all his creatures and workmanship?

workmanship: how is not God vniust, or partiall in so doing, and an acceptor of persons? Succan. p. 480. de predestinat.

Answ. 1. Saint Paul herein doth satisfie them to the full: first he saith, Who art thou O man that pleadest against God? Rom. 9. 20. It is an vnreasonable thing, that the creatures should call the creator to account, or demanda a reason of his doings. Secondly, hee sheweth by the example of the potter, that God may with better right dispose of his creature, as it pleaseth him, than the potter maketh of one lump, vessels of honour and dishonour. Thirdly, the Apostle giueth a reason, which may content vs, why he electeth some, namely, to shew the riches of his mercie; and why he reiecteth others, namely, that his power may be knowne, ver. 22. Gods glorie then, which standeth partly in mercie, partly is seene in his iustice, cannot appeare to the full, but in the saluation of some, and damnation of others: he therefore that thinketh Gods dealing herein to be vniust, is an enemy to the glorie of God.

Answ. 2. Augustine hath a singular speech of this matter: Nemo (saith he) iustitia Deum arguit, si uni indebitam donauerit gratiam, alteri reddiderit debitum poenae: an audebit debitor creditorem iniquitatis arguere, si alteri donant, ab eo, quod debebat, exegerit? Let no man seeme to charge or accuse Gods iustice, if he giue grace to one vndue, and to another render punishment due and deserved: shall the debtor accuse the creditor of vniust dealing, if he forgue one his debt, and exact of thee that which thou owest? de predest. lib. 1. 4. Neither can God be charged with partialitie, or having respect of persons, in that of his free grace and mercie he saueh some, and leaueth the rest in their sinnes: he is said to respect persons, that for some qualitie or outward circumstance preferreth one before another: as the Iudge is said to respect the person, when hee heareth the rich and the great men, before the small and the poore, Deut. 1. 17. As Samuel being sent to annoynt one of Israhels sonnes, respected the outward comely person of the elder brethren: But with God there is no such respect of any such outward condition or qualitie. Act. 10. 35. God is no acceptor of persons, but in euery nation he that feareth God: that is, God respecteth not y person of men, that is, of what kindred or cuntry they are: So is it likewise taken, Rom. 2. 10. There is no respect of persons before God: that is, whether they be Iewes or Gentiles. It is not therefore of any thing in men themselves, that some are saued and not others, but of the free mercie of God: God seeth nothing in man, thereby to be moued to shew him mercie: therefore he respecteth no mans person: but all is of grace.

Obiect. 2. The person of man betokeneth not onely some externall qualitie, or outward respect in man, but the essence and substance of man also: As in the Trinitie, the name of person is taken substantially. Therefore if God be no acceptor of persons, one man cannot any waies be preferred before another: Succan. de predestinat. p. 480.

Answ. First, the person of God and the person of man, are not well compared together: for as much as there is nothing accidentall in God; but whatsoever, is belonging to his essence: but so is it not in man, in whom many things are accidentall, and subiect to change. Secondly, though the person in the Trinitie be substantiall, yet is it not all one with the substance of the Trinitie: for there is but one substance of the Trinitie; and if the person were the substance, then should there be but one person also, which were great heresie to affirme, and so are they overthrowne by their owne example. Thirdly, if they will so strictly exclude all respect of man on Gods behalfe: how cometh it to passe, that beleeuers are saued, all vnbeleeuers damned? vnlesse the respect of their faith make a difference between them, through the gracious and free acceptation of God. Wherefore God is sayd not to accept the persons of men no otherwise than I haue sayd, that is, not to regard any thing in man, or of man, whereby originally one man should haue a preeminence to another.

3. They are all Gods creatures, we graunt: but what then? must either all be saued, or should God refrain from creating those, whom he foresaw should fall? No, it is sufficient that God is not the cause of their fall. And if God in his prescience saw they should fall, and should for this cause desist from creating them, that they might not fall: then should the pretciencie of God be deceiued in foreseeing that to be, which shall never be. Augustine also doth very well touch this point: Creat homines secundum consilium bonae voluntatis suae, reparaturus in multis, quod ipse fecit, & perierunt, quod non fecit: God, according to the counsell of his good will, did create man, being to repayre in them that, which he had made, and to punish that, which he made not.

Obiect. 3. If it be so, that God hath cast lots ouer every man, and hath alreadie decreed concerning their saluation or damnation; then all exhortation and preaching; and all endeavour to liue a godly life, is in vaine: for, de vnoquoque scit, ut praeordinatus est, it shall befall euery man, as he is predestinate. So the Pelagians objected, de pers. sen. lib. 2. 15.

Answ. 1. The doctrine of predestination doth no more hinder godly endeavour and exhortation, than the doctrine of Gods prescience and foreknowledge: Sicut non deterremur (saith Augustine) a confutenda praescientia Dei, &c. As we are not terrified, or frayed from confessing Gods prescience because whether men liue well or euill, tales erant, quales praesent Deus, they shall be none other then God forelaw they should be: so, saith he, we ought not for this cause to be drigen from considering predestination, Augustinus ibid.

Augustinus also in another place putteth this example: As (saith he) though the Apostle con- fesse, that God worketh in vs both the will and the deeda, yet hee, ceaseth not euery where to ex- hort vs both to will and worke those things that please God. Our Saniour Christ also biddeth vs to beleeue in him: To beleeue in God, beleeue also in me. Iohn 14. Non timemus falsam gloriam. And De perseu- rant. lib. 1. cap. 14. which our Saniour saith, That no man can come vnto him, vnlesse his father draw him: for faith is the gift of God. So men notwithstanding ought to endeavour themselves to walke in holines before God, although they be predestinate to eternall life.

Christ also (saith Augustinus) teaching his Apostles to pray, further telleth them, that God knoweth what is needfull for vs, before we aske, and yet wee ought to pray notwithstanding. So although God forelaw and did predestinate the end of euery man, yet wee will exhort and stirre vp another to all holines of life, thereby to make sure our election, as Saint Peter saith, 1. Pet. 1. v. 10. 11.

I will also adioyne Master Philippus learned and godly answer: Some (saith he) for an ex- treme refuge in their euill doing runne to Gods predestination and election saying, If I be elec- ted of God to saluation, I shall be saued, whatsoeuer I doe: but such be great contempters of God and damnable blasphemers of Gods holie election, and cast themselves downe from the pinnacle of presumption, that God may preserue them by his Angels through predestination. Such may reckon themselves to be none of Gods elect children, that will do euill that good maye for: whose damnation the Apostle saith, is iust: Gods predestination ought with a simple- ce to be considered, to make vs more warily to walke, according to Gods word: for, thus is the end and fruit of our election, That we should be holie and blamelesse in his sight, Ephes. 1. Epist. ad Coloss. Christian. pag. 1832.

Cyprian hath an excellent saying, which may serue as a full answer to this obiection: as he is charged, Cauf. 23. qu. 4. c. 21. Obiuncti nequaquam possunt, quia predestinati non fuerunt. Those things cannot be obtained, which are not predestinate: but those things, which holie men effect by their prayer, were predestinate to be obtained by prayer: for predestination is so disposed of God, that they which are elected should come vnto it by labour. Wherefore predestination doth not take away the meanes, as prayer, instruction, exhortation, which tend vnto it.

Obiect. 4. To what end commanded Christ, that the Gospell should be preached to every crea- ture, if we were not Gods meaning that all men should come to the knowledge of the truth, and so be saved: otherwise the Lord should seeme to purpose one thing, and doe another? Sic Huber. in Aug.

Coors. First, God calleth all men generally by the preaching of the Gospell, neither is God to be blamed, if they obey not their calling, which in it selfe is sufficient, but they onely are in fault that refuse it: As Saint Ambrose well saith, In alijs prauulisse gratiam, in alijs resulisse naturam: That in some grace preuaileth, in some their owne nature rethiteth. He speaketh of those, to whom the Gospell is preached, lib. 2. de vocat. Gen. cap. 8. Secondly, it followeth not, that because the Gospell is preached to all, God hath decreed to saue all: for Christ commaunded his Apostles to preach vnto those the Gospell of peace, that should notwithstanding neither heare them nor receiue it, Matth. 10. 13. So Ezechiel is sent to a people, that will not heare, Ezech. 2. 5. And why may not the Gospell be preached in like sort to many that shall perish? Thirdly, the cause therefore why the Gospell is preached to all, and yet all are not ordained to be saued, are these two chiefly: first, because the elect and the reprobate are mixed together in earth, neither is it knowne vnto men, whether euery man appertaineth, therefore is the Gospell offered to all, that some might be saued. And it is more agreeable to Gods mercie, that euen the reprobate should haue the externall meanes of saluation offered vnto them for the elects sake among them, than that the elect should be defrauded thereof because of the other. Of this Augustinus writeth well: Corruptio medicinaliter mundum adhibenda est, ut mensi salus agrotantis incerta sit: ut si quis, qui corrumpitur, ad numerum predestina- torum pertinet, sit ei corruptio salubre medicamentum; si autem non pertinet, sit poenale iuramentum: de cor- rupt. gen. cap. 13. The medicine must be giuen to all, though it be vncertaine who shall haue their health: that if hee that is rebuked be of the predestinate, his chastisement shall be healthfull co- rreption; if not, it shall be a penall torment. So then the second reason is, that the wicked may be left inexcusable, when as the word of God is preached vnto them, and they regard it not.

Huberus here obiecteth, 1. bes. 304. If it be so, that the word of God be vnto some the fauour of death vnto death, it were better neuer to heare it, than that the hearing thereof should be to some to their condemnation.

Coors. 1. It is an absurd consequent, that the word should not be preached at all, because some profit not by it: by the same reason, because some in the Sacrament doe eate and drinke their their owne damnation, it might be inferred, that it were good for none to receive it: or becauſe ſome abuſe meate and drinke to gluttonie and drunkenneſſe, that therefore none ſhould eate or drinke. 2. That it were better for the wicked, neuer to haue knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, than after they haue knowne it to turne away, &c. as Saint Peter ſaith, 2. Epist. 2. 21. We graunt: but it followeth not, that it were better not to haue it knowne at all: It is better, that by the preaching of the Goſpell ſome ſhould be ſaued, though other be left without excuſe, than by not preaching, to helpe to excuſe vnbeleeuers, none ſhould be ſaued.

Obiect. 7. This obiection is not much differing from the former: Seeing that Baptiſme is offered to all: God and baptizet all nations, Matth. 28. ver. 19. grace alſo together with Baptiſme offered: for God would neuer haue invited all men to Baptiſme, if he would not impart vnto them that grace, which is ſealed by Baptiſme: See Heming. de vniuerſal. grat. pag. 75.

Contra. 1. That Baptiſme is available only to thoſe that beleeuẽ, the Scripture teſtifieth, Mar. 16. He that beleueth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaued: And to beleeuẽ is the worke of God, Ioh. 6. 29. And to them onely, that are ordained to euerlaſting life, is it giuen to beleeuẽ, A. 13. 48. Therefore to them onely is Baptiſme of efficacie. 2. As before we ſaid of the preaching of the Goſpel, ſo now of Baptiſme: that they are offered to all, that amongſt many, ſuch as are ordained to life, ſhould be ſaued: for it were not meete, that becauſe ſome are found abuſers and prophanes of the Sacraments, therefore they ſhould be denied to all. 3. If all in Baptiſme are verily partakers of grace, how are not all ſaued? If they anſwere, that through their owne negligence this grace is loſt, which is their onely anſwere here, Heming. pag. 75. they ſpeake contrarie to the Scripture, which teſtifieth, that whom God loueth, he loueth to the end, Ioh. 13. 1. And that the gift of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. But of this more God willing afterward.

Obiect. 8. The doctrine of predeſtination, ſay ſome, is a doctrine of deſpaire: for if it be ſo, that God hath decreed ſome to damnation from the beginning, what comfort now remaineth to thoſe that are in deſpaire, and diſtreſſe of conſcience, if we cannot aſſure them, that the mercie and grace of God is free for all men, and not denied to any?

Anſw. 1. The doctrine of predeſtination, is a true and ſound doctrine, yet not at all times, nor in the hearing of all perſons to be vttered: for ſo Saint Paul ſaith, That he gave vnto ſome will, not ſtrong meate, for they were not able to beare it, 1. Corin. 3. 2. The doctrine of predeſtination is ſtrong meate, and therefore not to be miniſtered to the weakẽ and bruſed conſcience. Hac vna ſcriptura ſacendi verum, (as Auguſtine ſaith) ne potiores faciamus, qui non intelligunt, dum volumus eos, qui intelligunt, facere doctiores: This is one cauſe of concealing the truth, leaſt we make them worke that vnderſtand not, while wee would teach thoſe, which are of better capacitie. He preſcribeth alſo the manner how predeſtination ſhould be taught and handled: namely, in the hearing of the faithfull, to entreate onely of election: But if any man be diſpoſed likewise to touch the other part of reprobation: Non de iſtis, qui in populo audiunt, dicendum eſt per ſecundam perſonam, ſed de illis, qui per tertiam. He muſt in no wiſe ſpeake in the ſecond perſon to thoſe that are preſent, but of others in their hearing in the third perſon, lib. 2. de perſeuer. cap. 23.

2. This doctrine notwithstanding, there is ſufficient place for comfort: If any man doubt of his ſaluation, wee muſt neither build vpon a falſe ground, to comfort them; as to beare them in hand, that God hath a purpoſe to ſaue all men: nor yet referre them to Gods eternall decree, which is too ſtrong meate for them in that weakẽ eſtate to beare: But as if a man ſhould denie that the fire is hot, or that the Sunne ſhineth, we would uſe no better argument, to perſwade him, than by experience of the effects, as how the fire burneth, and the Sunne giueth light: ſo in this caſe to aſſure a man of ſaluation, we would exhort him to uſe the ſecondarie meanes, as faith, repentance, to beleuẽ in Chriſt, and as the Apoſtle ſaith, to make his election ſure by good works: And by the experience of Gods mercie and goodnes, which he hath felt, to grow vp vnto the aſſurance of his fauour.

3. I will conclude with Auguſtine, who thinketh this doctrine of predeſtination to be a doctrine not of deſpayre and diſtruſt, but of comfort and confidence: Abſit à vobis idea deſperandi de vobis, quoniam ſpes vſtram in ipſo habere inbeamini, non in vobis: An verendum eſt, ne tam de ſe homo deſperet, quando ſpes eius ponenda demonſtratur in Deo? God forbid that you ſhould deſpayre of your ſelues, becauſe ye are willed to put your truſt in God, and not in your ſelues: Is it to be feared, leſt man ſhould then deſpayre of himſelfe, when hee is taught to place his hope and truſt in God? de perſeuer. lib. 2. cap. 23. For this the doctrine of predeſtination teacheth vs, that whatſoever is in vs, that is good, is neither of our ſelues, nor yet commeth vnto vs by chaunce, but is beſtowed vpon vs freely, as God in mercie in the beginning had appointed.

Huberus further obiectioneth thus: If it be ſo that Chriſt dyed not for all, but onely for ſome, then all comfort and conſolation is taken away: as if a man ſhould thus reaſon; Some men are elected to ſaluation in Chriſt, I am a man: Ergo, I ſhall be ſaued. This were a weakẽ argument of comfort, concluding onely vpon particulars, Huber. p. 20. 97.

Contra.

lib. 2. cap. 16.

1. If we should draw our comfort immediately from Gods eternal will and decree; our needs fall into the same straits of particularities: for it is certain, that the decree of all shall not be saved, but some must goe into everlasting paine, others to eternal life, as God in the beginning had decreed. Wherefore there must be a certaine number of elect, ordained to life. 2. To assure our salvation of our salvation before God, we must not immediately vnto Gods secret decree and counsell, as though by some extraordinarie speculation or revelation, we could attaine to the knowledge thereof: but we must iudge of our election by the fruits and effects thereof, as our faith, vocation, sanctification: and this Sacrament shall enlarge, pag. 466. Our argument then of comfort grounded upon the word of God, is this: Whosoever beleueth in Christ, shall be saved, I beleue in Christ: Ergo, I hope to be saved: So our comfort ariseth not from any particular, but from the vniuersall promises of God vnto all those which beleue. But in the assumption of this argument, two things may trouble vs: First, if Sathan shall tell vs, that wee beleue not, howe we may assure our selues of faith. The reason against this temptation is this: We must examine our faith by the fruits thereof, as 1. Ioh. 3. 19. *the works which he hath done, if he keep his commandments, his love is to be discerned though we be in our selues some contrarie motions of feare, doubtfullnes, and such like. But though our faith be imperfect, we must consider how Christ did succour and cherish the weak in faith, as in the case of him, Mai. 2. 14. that hee should not breake the bridle of the weak, nor quench the smoking flaxe, but we must pray continually with the Apostles, Lord increase our faith; and with him in the Gospel: Lord I beleue, helpe my vnbelefe, Mark. 9. The second thing that may trouble vs, is to know how we attaine to faith: for all haue not faith, as the Apostles saith, 1. Ioh. 5. 14. Our witness is, that we haue acknowledged faith, and all other gifts to come from God, not to be obtained by our owne power to beleue: and therefore by faithfull prayer to seeke for this precious gift as God shall please.*

Who seeth not then, but that this is a more sure and readie way vnto comfort, as wee haue heard then to heare men in hand, that God would haue all men to be saved, and that Christ should die for all? So their argument of comfort standeth thus: Christ dyed for all men for those that shall be saved. What comfort now can a troubled conscience craue by the death of Christ, seeing that notwithstanding hee may be damned, and that Christ hath done as much for him, that shall be damned, as for others? May not the distressed conscience say vnto such, What comforter are ye, and physicians of no value? Ioh. 1. 12. And thus farre of their arguments, and objections, that do maintaine the vniuersalitie of the grace of Gods blood: we will come by euident testimonies of scripture, & other effectuall reasons to establish and make knowne the truth.

THAT CHRIST DIED ONLY

for the elect.

Sentence then is this, that whereas all men were by nature the children of wrath, and like to perish in themselves, God from the rest hath according to his good pleasure, and loine, whom he hath appointed Christ Iesus to be their Mediatour and Redeemer. And here we are to consider, first the beginning of election: secondly, the progresse thereof vnto the end. The beginning is that God according to his good pleasure, elected his in Christ, before the foundation of the world, Ephes. 1. 4. The progresse, in that hee hath given these elect vnto Christ to be saved, and redeemed by him, Ephes. 1. 5. He hath predestinate vs to be adopted through Iesus Christ: The end is, that when hee hath predestinate, (that is the beginning) called, justified, (where is the progresse) glorified, Rom. 8. 30. he hath purposed to bring them to glorie: that is the end. That now Christ onely was giuen to dye for the companie of the elect: not that it is not sufficient for the whole world in it selfe, but because the efficacie and benefit of Christs death is onely applied by faith vnto the beleeuers: and faith onely is of the elect: That therefore Christ died onely for the elect, it remaineth now to be prooved. Our arguments we will distribute vnto three places, which will produce direct places of scripture for our purpose. Secondly, reasons grounded upon scripture. Thirdly, we will shew the absurditie of the aduersarie opinion.

First, our euident testimonies out of scripture are these: First, Ioh. 10. 11, Christ Iesus saith, I am the good sheepe keeper: the elect onely are his sheepe: Ergo. Secondly, Ioh. 10. 26, He that denieth the assumption: saying, that all men are Gods sheepe, and inheritance, who if after that they stray away from the Lords sheepfold, the fault is in themselves, Ioh. 10. 26. Curse. But our Sauiour speaketh of such sheepe, as do heare his voyce, and follow him, and they will not follow a stranger, ver. 4. They therefore that fall away, & follow any other, are not y sheepe of Christs fold: therefore for such sheepe onely he died, as finally are his: those are the elect onely. 3. Ioh. 11. 52. Christ died not for the nation onely, that is, of the Iewes, but for those which are gathered together in one the children of God: that were scattered. But the elect onely are the children of God.

also how he speaketh againe, namely, of these dispersed and scattered children, Ioh. 10. 16. Other sheepe I have also, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring. These are the predestinate, as Augustine saith: Ergo predestinati, nondum congregati. They were predestinate, though not yet gathered together: Augustinus serm. 90. de verbis Domini in Iohannem.

3. Ioh. 1. 11. Christ dyed onely for his friends; the elect onely, and such as shall be saved: namely are the friends of Christ. And if that place of the Apostle be objected, Rom. 7. Thou Christ didst die for us, when we were yet enemies: We answer with Bernards distinction, Serm. 10. de Psalm. Qui habitabat: Christus secundum tempus pro peccatis & inimicis mortuus est, secundum predestinationem autem pro fratribus & amicis: Christ according to the dispensation of time died for the wicked and his enemies: but in respect of his predestination, for his friends and brethren.

4. S. Paul testifieth, Ephes. 1. vers. 26. That Christ gave himselfe for his Church, that he might sanctifie it, &c. and hee is the Saviour of his bodie, vers. 13. But the elect onely, and such shall be saved, are members onely of his bodie: Ergo for such onely he dyed.

Contra. Huberus answereth, that the Church is here taken for the whole assemblie of believers, and vnbeleeuers, who all were sanctified and washed with the blood of Christ, but afterward are defiled againe by their vnbeleefe: Huber. ibid. 1. 58.

Ans. That Church which Christ sanctifieth, and cleanseth with his blood, he also glorifieth: to make it a glorious Church (saith the Apostle) without spot or wrinkle, vers. 27. Beleeue elect onely and predestinate vnto life shall be glorified: Ergo, they only are the true Church, and lively members of Christs bodie: Secondly, our reasons and arguments grounded vpon the word of God, are these, and such like which follow.

1. Christ dyed onely for those that should beleeue in him, Ioh. 3. 16. But it is not giuen to all to beleeue in Christ, except onely to the elect, which are ordained to life: Ergo for them onely Christ dyed. That faith is onely of the elect, it is thus proued: first, Matth. 13. 11. To you it is given to know the secrets of the kingdom; but to them it is not given. This knowledge then is not giuen to all. Contra. The meaning is, not that God in his eternall decree, had ordained knowledge vnto some, and denied it to others, but that the ministerie of the word being offered to all, some through their incredulitie refused the same, and so their hearts were iustly hardened: as the Apostle saith elsewhere, That they did put away from them the word of God, which is necessary should haue been first spoken vnto them, and so iudged them selves unworthy of euerslasting life, Act. 13. 46. The rest, which did not take their naturall gifts of hearing and vnderstanding, but willingly gaue care vnto Christ, had power to beleeue in Christ, and to continue therein: See Huber. ibid. 82. Sueton. p. 532. Ans. 1. That they which loue not the truth, are iustly giuen ouer of God to a reprobate sense, we grant, as Saint Paul sheweth, 2. Thess. 2. 10. Because they would not receive the love of the truth, God shall send them strong delusions, &c. 2. Yet men are not so the cause to themselves of their beleeefe, as they are of their incredulitie: but the cause and beginning is of God, as our Saviour testifieth, Matth. 11. 26. For so, O father, because thy good pleasure was such. The cause then why some vnderstand the mystrie of the kingdom, is not in their willingnes, but in the good pleasure of God: It is not a gift equally offered to all, which all may receiue, if they will; it is giuen to yon, saith Christ, it is not giuen to them.

To this purpose S. Ambrose: Qui vocantur dei auxilio diriguntur, qui non vocantur sua potestate resistunt. They that come are directed by Gods helpe; they which come not, by their owne power doe resist, lib. 2. de uocat. Gen. c. 9. And againe, Tales fuerunt, qui sunt attrahit, quales illi qui in sua diuinitate sunt relict, sed illi tribuit gratis stupenda quod uoluit, illi retribuit ueritas iusta, quod debuit. They were the same, that are drawne, which they were, that remained in their hardnes: but graue giueth vnto them, as God would; iustice rendereth to the other as they deserue. Wherefore though a man resisting the calling of grace, is the cause why hee beleeueth not, yet in them which obey their calling, it is of the grace of God that they beleeue.

Again, Christ saith, Ioh. 10. 26. You beleeue not, for you are not of my sheepe. It is not therefore giuen to all to beleeue in Christ, but to his sheepe onely, that is the elect, to whom hee giueth eternall life, vers. 28.

Thirdly, Act. 13. 48. As many as were ordained to eternall life, beleeued: To beleeue therefore is giuen onely to the elect, which are ordained vnto life.

Contra. Huberus thus expoundeth this place: they beleeued, which were ordained to life, that is, which followed the order appointed of God, whereby men should be saved, that is, by the preaching of the Gospell: for this, saith hee, is the ordinance of God, that they that beleeue the Gospell should be saved, Huber. ibid. 83.

Ans. 1. If this be the meaning, that they beleeued that were ordained, that is, followed Gods ordinance, which was to beleeue, it is all one to say, they beleeued, that beleeued; and so there should be a needlesse repetition of the same thing. 2. If we vnderstand it of faith and beleeefe, yet it includeth an act of the ordainer, and they passively are ordained to beleeue: whereupon it will ensue, that they onely beleueed that were ordained to beleue: for whereas they ascribe vnto man power to beleue; but this, to be ordained, is adiu in God, and passive in man, it cannot be understood simply of the act of beleue, but of the ordinance of God before going. 3. Though well ordaine the meanes, as the end, to the which the meanes doe leade; yet because the end is directly mentioned, namely, eternall life, wee are thereby directed to vnderstand the ordinance of the end, rather, or as well as of the meanes: so that this must be the sense, they that are ordained, that is, appointed of God to be saued eternally, beleueed: life eternall is the end, in Christ is the meane, the ordinance or foreappointment of God is the cause or beginning. Other not satisfiing themselves with the former exposition, haue found out a new: As many as loved, &c. that is, many of the Gentiles, according to the ordinance of God, beleueed. They vnderstand this word (qui quia as many, as) not of their particular persons, that beleueed, but of the distribution of euery kind & sort of men present: that is, in the Gentiles also as well as Iewes (as God had foreordained) beleueed: for it is not fitt to say they, that all in the citie of Antioche, which should be saued, were at this time conuerted, but some at one time, some at another. See Hemingius p. 3. & neuerius p. 17. First, they now are constrained to vse that distinction, which they will not allow vnto vs: whereas, wee interprete Saint Pauls saying, God would haue all men to be saued, of all sorts of men, vnto the same sense, and yet are drawn hereto, viz. it should be Iues. Secondly, yet the same is vied, non omnes, will heere beare that sense; then the word omnes, (as many; as) should be reade here, that the word (omnes) all; sometime in Scripture signifieth, not euery particular of euery kinde, as Luk. 11. 42. Decernatis omnes alas. You tithe euery herbe, that is, euery man and herbe. But wherefoeuer you shall reade, quisquis, quicquid, (as many; as) it includeth a particular, as Luk. 11. 22. Sed all this curi habi habet: Act. 2. 39. As many as the Lord God shall call: Act. 4. 34. As many as had labors; sed dicitur that is, euery one, and so must be taken here. Thirdly, it cannot be vnderstood here of euery kinde, that is, both Iewes and Gentiles: for they were all Gentiles that beleeued here, the Iewes openly resisted the Apostles. Fourthly, to this reason we answere: that it is not necessarie to restraine this speech, As many, as were ordained to be saued, to that present time: but as Saint Luke saith, Act. 2. 47. God added from day to day to the Church such as should be saued: so this may be spoken indefinitely, that by the preaching of the Gospel so many first and last beleueed, as should be saued. And yet if wee applie it to the present time, then, not to the whole citie, (for all the citie heard him not at once) we know nothing to the contrary, but that euery one of them that was saued in that assemblie, at that instant beleueed. The second argument out of Scripture is this: for whom Christ is a Redeemer, for them also he is an aduocate and aduocate: but hee is an aduocate onely for the elect, not for the reprobate: 19. I pray not for the world, but for those which thou hast given me: Ergo, Christ by his death onely redeemed the elect. 1. Huberus answereth, that Christ prayeth not for the world, that is, that the workes and labours of the wicked and unbelieuers should be approbued: yet saith he, Pro mundo orandum est: We must pray for the world, that it may be conuerted: Thes. 9. 13. Christ so farre forth prayeth not for the world, as he prayeth for his; but for his owne benefit, that they may be saued: ver. 2. 4. I will that they which thou hast given me, to be with me eternally: There fore in that kinde he prayeth not for the world, that it should be conuerted or saved; and therefore seeing the world hath no part in Christs mediation, and intercession, neither do they any benefit by his redemption. Christ prayeth onely for those, which were given him out of the world, ver. 6. 9. But all the world was not given vnto Christ to be saued: for how can the world be given out of the world? Again, Christ giueth glorie, that is, eternall life to those that are given him, ver. 22. but the whole world hath not eternall life, but those onely that are elected thereunto: Ergo, the world is not given Christ to be saued, neither doth he pray for the m. Though wee in charitie may pray for the conuersion of Turkes, Iewes, Infidels, out of the world: yet it followeth not that Christ did pray for the world: for hee knew who they were, that should be saued, and so doe not we, and therefore we are to hope the best, euen of those which are in the world. Origens thus expoundeth this place Joan. 9. in Leuitic. Non exorat Christus pro his, &c. pro illis qui sunt foris Domini: Christ prayeth not for them, &c. but onely for those which are the Lords lot or portion. Contra. 2. Hemingius answereth, that by the world here we must vnderstand the peruerse and obstinate companie of the Iewes, which had already wilfully refused grace offered vnto them, and so had committed sin against the holic Ghost, Mark. 3. for those Christ prayeth not, pag. 42. 7. 19. That Christ by the world vnderstandeth not onely the wicked of that time, but all vniuersally to the end of the world, it is thus shewed: As they are, which are given Christ, for whom he prayeth: so is the world to be vnderstande, for them which he prayeth not: but by those that are giuen him he vnderstandeth all beleeuers, not onely at that time, but to the end of the world, ver. 20, and 24. Therefore, by the world our Sauour meaneth all vnbeleeuers whatsoeuer, and not the obstinate onely of that time.

Contra 3. Sauimus de predestinat. p. 660. saith, that by the world Christ vnderstandeth those that doe contemne the benefite of Christs death, as Ioh. 15. 18. If the world hate you, it hated me before you and so they exclude themselves from grace offered in Christ, not that any simply are excluded before their vnbeliefe.

Ans. First, it is true, that there are none elected in the eternall counsell of God, but are ordained in time to beleue, nor none excluded, but doe afterwards by their owne malice and from their owne fault exclude themselves from beliefe: yet it is certaine, that the number and composition of beleuers is foreseene and preordained of God, and so consequently of the other also: as may thus appeare: Christ praying for those, that shall beleue in him, ver. 10. saith, ver. 12. I praye for them the glorie, &c. and ver. 24. I will, that they which thou hast giuen me, &c. They which as yet are not, but should beleue, are already giuen vnto Christ, and euen now glorified: whether in himselfe, but that they are preordained of God, which should beleue in Christ, and that they are already giuen vnto him, and glorified in the purpose of God? Secondly, wee will adioyne another testimonie of Augustine: Est mundus damnandus, de quo scriptum est, ne cum mundo hoc damnetur, 1. Cor. 12. pro ista mundo non rogat, neque enim quò sit predestinatus, ignorat: est mundus saluandus, de quo Apostolus, Deus erat in Christo mundum sibi reconcilians: pro isto mundo rogat, ut eum se trahat in se, Ioh. 12. There is a world of the damned, of the which it is written, that wee be not damned with the world: for this world Christ prayeth not: for he was not ignorant to whom and it was predestinate: There is a world of those that shall be saued, of the which the Apostle saith, God was in Christ reconciling the world, &c. for this world Christ prayeth, that it may beleue: Ergo for this world Christ onely dyed.

Our third argument is this: Christ onely dyed for those, to whom the benefite of his death verily, and indeede is applied, and which finde life by his death: Ioh. 17. 19. For their sakes sanctified my selfe (that is, to be an acceptable sacrifice vpon the crosse) that they also may be sanctified, and ver. 2. Christ giueth eternall life to all that were giuen him: But all the world is not sanctified, or regenerate by Christ, nor yet cometh to eternall life, but onely those that shall be saued: Thus Christ dyed not for the whole world, but for the elect onely, that shall be saued. Neither can it be answered, that Christ died for all, because all may, if they will, beleue; and so be saued: for Christ speaketh not of a power or possibilitie onely to be sanctified, and so saued, but of an actual sanctification, and saluation: they are verily sanctified, for whom Christ sanctifieth himselfe, and he giueth eternall life indeede to all them that are giuen him: wherefore seeing that all men are not sanctified, nor brought to eternall life, but such as are indeede ordained to saluation; it followeth, that for them onely Christ died.

Argum. 4. Christ died onely for those that are appointed to saluation, for the death of Christ is a subordinate meane for the saluation of those, whom God would haue saued: But all men in the world are not appointed to saluation; therefore Christ died not for all. It will be answered, that it is Gods will, that all men should be saued by Christ; with this condition, so that they beleue in him, and that God hath not made any speciall election and separation of some from the rest, which should be saued, but that indifferently all men are comprehended vnder Gods conditionall decree of election, that is, as many as shall beleue. If then we can proue out of the word of God, that Gods election vnto life is not conditionall, but absolute, in setting a certaine number apart, who onely should haue power to beleue, and so onely be saued by Christ, and none beside, then it will appeare manifestly, that for them Christ onely dyed.

1. Our first place to proue an absolute and particular election of some onely vnto life, is that Matth. 22. 14. Many are called, but few chosen: which place sheweth, that although the externall meanes of saluation be offered to many, yet not all of them, but some onely are elected and chosen vnto life.

Huberus answereth, that there is a generall election, and speciall: the generall election is of all, which are called to the kingdome of God, and outwardly professe obedience: the speciall election is of those which do obey their calling, and indeede perseuere and continue in the faith to the end, thos. 7. 34. So then his meaning is, that few are elected, not in respect of any election and separation made in the counsell and decree of God, but because some amongst many perseuere to the end.

Contra. First, there can be no such generall election: for what choise is there, when all indifferently are receiued? An election therefore implieth a receiuing of some, and a refusing of others: all therefore cannot be elected. This were also to confound vocation, and election: Many are called, but not many are chosen: to say therefore that many are chosen, where Christ saith, only

...were to contradict his words. Secondly, if the special election depend upon man's merit and continuance, not this rather upon the other; if some are said to be elected, because they persevere, and not rather to persevere because they are elected: then are men the cause of their election; and they chuse God first. But Christ saith contrarie, you have not chosen me, I have chosen you: and S. Iohn saith not that we loved God, but he loved us first. 1. Iohn. 4. 10. And also saith, he hath separated them: 2. Corint. 4. 7. It is God that electeth and separateth one from another, and distributeth vnto them his gifts. And again, in the parable, Mat. 20. 15. Is it full for me to doe as I will with mine owne? The election therefore of some dependeth not on man's owne will, but vpon the goodwill and pleasure of God.

The second place, Marth. 20. 23. The kingdom of God shall be given vnto them, for whom it is prepared by father: The kingdom of God then is not prepared for all, but for some. Saint Paul also saith, Rom. 9. 22. Thus there are vessels of wrath prepared to destruction, and vessels of mercie prepared to glorie: All therefore are not vessels of mercie, neither are all prepared to glorie. Answereth, pag. 602. that these places proue not any particular exception or restraint to certaine men prepared to glorie, or of others to destruction, but that generally and indifferently the kingdom of God is prepared for all that shall belecue, and they that belecue not, are reprobate by their owne incredulitie to destruction.

We also grant, that none but beleeuers are prepared to glorie: but we make beleefe a cause and effect of their election and preparation to glorie: so that the number of beleeuers is certaine before God, as certainly he hath decreed who shall be saued: for I aske, whence cometh it that wee haue faith? it is not of ourselues, but it is the gift of God, Ephes. 2. 9. And it is the gift of God to beleue, Ioh. 6. 29. If faith then be Gods gift, how is it that all haue not faith? but God giueth it not to all. And why is it not giuen to all? but that God in mercie hath chosen whom he purposeth to saue in Christ: And vnto these onely faith is giuen. If ye say, God giueth to all, but all receiue it not: then is Gods will resisted: for if he would haue all men beleue, and they will not; then doth the will of man frustrate Gods will.

Answereth, that all men are elected and adopted in Christ, 1. Ihes. 7. 48. And that God giueth, he conuerteth the heart, illuminateth, worketh effectually in all that are so elected, and maketh vessels of mercie, 1. Ihes. 8. 67. But yet so that the vessels of honour thus prepared of God, are made the vessels of dishonor, 1. Ihes. 9. 30. So the same vessels are prepared of God to honor, of some to dishonor and Sathan to destruction, 1. Ihes. 8. 70.

First, thus it shall come to passe, that the vessels of honor shall be prepared to destruction, which is contrarie to the text alleaged, That the kingdom of heauen shall be given vnto them, for whom it is prepared: But by his saying, they that are prepared for it shall not haue it. Secondly, by reasones also Satan is made stronger than God: for whom he prepareth to glorie, the other prepared to destruction. But Christ saith otherwise, none is able to pluck them out of mine hand, Ioh. 10. 28.

The third place: They onely are ordained to life, that are giuen to Christ: Ioh. 17. 3. Christ giueth eternall life to all, that are giuen him: but a certaine number taken out of the world, not the whole world is giuen to Christ, vers. 6, thou gauest them me out of the world, thine they were, &c. the number is certaine and definite before God, of them that shall be saued.

Answereth: First, Christ speaketh not here of eternall election, but of such as were giuen out of the world to be his Apostles, of which number Iudas was one, who was giuen vnto Christ, yet perished: but they that by eternall election are giuen vnto Christ, perish not, p. 72. 4.

Secondly, that Christ speaketh of those that were giuen him eternally, it is plaine: because, in Ioh. 17. 3, Christ giueth eternall life, vers. 2, he glorifieth them, vers. 2. 1, he will haue them to be where he is, vers. 4. But such are eternally elected. Secondly, though Iudas may be said in some sense to be giuen to Christ in respect of his Apostleship; yet was he not giuen as the rest of the Apostles: for of them Christ saith, that they kept his word, vers. 6, that he was glorified in them, vers. 10, they were not of the world, vers. 14. But Iudas neither kept Christs word, neither yet was Christ glorified in him; and he was of the world: therefore they were giuen eternally to Christ, though Iudas was not.

Sarcasms. Secondly, though wee vnderstand here eternall election, whereby some were giuen vnto Christ, yet it impleth not a speciall exception and choise of some persons, but that all indifferently were giuen vnto Christ, that should beleue in him, Sarcasms, lib. 1. c. 10. v. 10.

Contra. First, Christ saying, the men, which thou gauest me out of the world, assigneth some speciall persons, that were giuen vnto him, namely his Apostles, as it is cleere by the text: And if some particular persons were giuen vnto him, why may there not be a particular assignement, and cogitation also before God of the rest that are giuen vnto him? Secondly, where Christ saith, speaking of his Apostles, thine they were, and thou gauest them me, vers. 6, it sheweth an absolute election before God, without any respect of their faith: for first, Christ saith, they are thine, that is, by election; and then they are giuen to him, to know him, and beleue in him, vers. 8.

4. The fourth place: Philip. 2. 1. Who is written in the booke of life: Apocal. 17. 8. Which are not written in the booke of life from the foundation of the world: Therefore some were chosen in the beginning before God, some not elected.

Huberus answereth: that all are elected in Christ; and written in the booke of life; in such a condition, so that they beleue, and continue in faith: whereupon is counted to passe; those which beleue not, do lose their saluation; and so are not written in that booke; beinge cast out of it, 1 Ioh. 5. 17.

Pactius also answereth to the same effect, that none to be written in the booke of life, but be vnderstood positively, not priuatiuely; that is, they are written and declared thorough their continuance or contempt worthy of damnation: 1 Ioh. 9. 26.

5. Cow. 1. The text is: They are not written in the booke of life from the foundation of the world: The first overthroweth Huberus answer, that saith, they were written; but after raised our: for they were not written from the foundation of the world, but from the beginning, that is, newe.

6. Secondly, it meeteth with the other cauilt: for in that they were not written from the foundation, &c. it sheweth, that they were shut out of the booke of life, before their continuance in infidelitie appeared; and therefore their continuance which appeared in the world, could not be the cause of their names not writing in the booke of life; which was done before the foundation of the world: And thus much of our reasons and arguments deduced out of Scripture.

Lastly, that Christ died onely for the elect, this euidentie we haue of antiquitie: 1. Origen hom. 9. de uita, alleadged before, affirmeth, that Christ prayd onely, pro illis, qui sunt foris Dantes; for them, that are the Lords lot or portion: homil. 1. in Cantor. Ecclesiam catum omnium aduersus iudaeum: By the Church vnderstand the company of all Saines. If the Saines onely make the Church, and Christ dyed onely for his Church; Ephes. 5. 25; then consequently he dyed onely for the Saines.

2. S. Ambrose lib. 5. in Luc. c. 7. Christus pro omnibus mortuus, pro nobis tamen specialem passus: Christ dyed for all, but more specially suffered for vs. In 1. Cor. 15. Omnibus qui sunt ex terra uitam largitus fuit: He procured life to all of his body.

3. *S. Christ loved onely the elect as himselfe; and desired their saluation.

THE THIRD GENERALL ARGUMENT, AGAINST

the vniuersall and confused communitie of Redemption by Christ, drawn from the manifold inconueniences and absurdities, which necessarily ensue and follow vpon

this opinion.

Absurdum 1. First in affirming that Christ dyed vniuersally for all that should beleue, and not for any speciall elected sort, they consequently do hold, that God specially and particularly elected none vnto saluation, but onely in generall, and indifferently all that should beleue.

things in effect, they take away predestination, making it to be a confused and conditional decree of God to saue whomsoever: This we are then to proue, that Gods election is certaine and definite, and that he knoweth and decreeth the number of the chosen.

First, we reason thus, whatsoever God did foresee, that he was to do in the world, that also hee decreed and ordained: Some things he foreseeeth onely, namely, such things as are done in the world, and not by him; as euill and sinfull workes: but whatsoever God doth in the worlde, hee foreseeeth and decreed: as Augustine saith, Predestinatione ea Demerascierat, qua erat futurum, quibus autem potest, qua non est futurum: God in predestinating did foresee, that is, did both predestinate and foresee, whatsoever he was to doe in the world; but he onely foresaw the things that he was not to do, as all sinnes whatsoever, lib. 2. de perseverant. cap. 10. But God in the beginning did foresee the particular ende of every man in the world: The Lord knoweth who are his: 2. Tim. 2. v. 19. that is, he knoweth the definite and certaine number of the elect: as Augustine also witnesseth, Non temerè quicquam creat Deus, aut quid de illis boni operetur ignorat: God createth no man rashly, neither is ignorant to what good vse or purpose he hath made them, com. Iulian. lib. 5. cap. 3. God hath defined and decreed the particular number of such, as shall be saued.

For better prooffe of the proposition: first, we say further, that seeing the knowledge and power of God, are infinite, as he himselfe; and that the attributes of God, receiue neither magis vel minus more or lesse, his wil is not greater then his knowledge, nor this more ample then the other, then proper objects: hereupon it followeth, that seeing God by his knowledge knoweth all things, which are to be knowne, so by his wil he decreeth all things, that do fall vnder his decree, namely, such things as are good, and to his glory: such is the particular election of those, that are elect: Ergo, by him it is decreed. 2. Further, there can be but two kindes of things, which are vnder the compasse of Gods decree, either what he knoweth not or what he doth not; of the first there is none, because God knoweth all things; of the second, are all euill and sinfull workes, which God hath no part in: But the particular election of men, is neither vnkowne nor wrought by God, but both knowne of him and wrought by him: Ergo, also decreed. 3. The particular end of the elect dependeth either of some fatall necessitie, some accidentall chance, or of the will of man, or it standeth by Gods euerlasting decree: there can be assigned no other cause: Not the first, for that were to tie God vnto secondary causes, for such was the stoicall doctrine; not the second, for that were to ouerthrow Gods providence, by the which all things are ordered, and not by chance: not the third, which were to aduance the creature aboue his Creator: and Saint Paul saith, It is not of the willer, nor the runner, &c. Ergo, Gods speciall and definite decree must stand: As Augustine also concludeth: Certe hic, ubi nulla est fati immutabilitas, nulla potest traheretur, nulla persona dignitas, quid restat nisi misericordia & veritas profunditas: Certainly in this case, where neither things are governed by fatall necessitie, nor by rash vndiuided chance, what other cause remaineth then the profunditie of Gods mercy and truth? Com. Iulian. 6. cap. 5. Doubtlesly, it skilleth not, concerning the matter in hand, namely, the particular and personall election of those that shall be saued, whether wee vrge Gods prescience onely or predestination: for if God did onely foresee in particular, who, and how many, and of what condition, should hee be in Christ, and be saued; and that as God foresaw, so it must be, that the same, so many, no more, no more shall beleene, then God foresaw; then must the number of the elect and beleeuers be certaine, definite and determined, as if they yeelded to Gods decree herein: wherefore they must either doubt of Gods prescience, or confesse a certaine determination of the number of the elect.

Secondly, we haue direct places of Scripture for particular election, Ioh. 10. 3. Christ calleth his sheepe by name: they are all knowne particularly, and assigned to saluation as by name: The Apostles were personally elected of God, and giuen vnto Christ, Ioh. 17. 6. And as some of the elect be, so are the rest, for there is one condition of them all. Saint Paul speaking of certaine persons his fellow labourers, amongst whom hee nameth Clement, saith, Their names are written in the booke of life, Phil. 4. Ergo, they were specially and particularly elected. Further, the Scripture saith, that God calleth the starres of the skie by their names; how much more the sonnes of men; the children of saluation are particularly knowne vnto him: and if the haire of their head are numbred, much more themselves.

The Preacher also saith: I know, that whatsoever God shall doe, it shall be for ever: to it can no man add, and from it can none diminish: Eccles. 3. 14. But the election of such as shall be saued is one of Gods workes: Ergo, to it can no man adde, or take from it, and so consequently the number of the elect is certaine and determined: But if Gods election were left at large for all, then is it in mans power to adde vnto it, or take from it, as they are many, or few that apprehend and lay hold vpon their election.

Thirdly, we vrge that place of the Apostle, Roman. chap. 9. vers. 13. I haue loued Iacob, and hated Esau: which the Apostle referreth to the purpose of Gods free election before the children were borne, borne, or had either done good or euill, verſ. 11. Hence we conclude, that Gods election was generall and indefinite, but particular and perſonall.

First, it is here answered, that the particular perſons of Eſau and Jacob are not here vnderſtood, but that they are types of two people, the one of the Iſraelites, of whom Meſſiah ſhould come; the other of the Idumeans: that two people are here ſignified, their reaſons are theſe: Firſt, Gen. 24. 23. the Lord ſaith to Rebecca, two nations are in thy wombe: Secondly, the elder ſhall ſerue the younger, which was accompliſhed in their poſteritie, for Jacob in his owne perſon ſubmitted himſelfe to Eſau, Huber. theſ. 675. Sueran. p. 565. Thirdly, theſe words, Jacob haue I loued, and hated Eſau, were vttered by the Prophet Malachi, about 1400. yeares after the birth of the children, and therefore it cannot be, that the Prophet ſhould vnderſtand onely the perſons of Jacob and Eſau, that were dead ſo long before, Sueran. p. 566. Fourthly, becauſe S. Paul ſpeaking of Iſmael and Iſaac, Galath. 4. vſeth the word type or allegorie, in like maner Eſau and Jacob may be ſet forth for types in this place, Sueran. p. 533.

Contra. 1. To admit that in Jacob and Eſau two people are prefigured, yet it followeth, that their perſons are to be excluded: for whatſoeuer was foretolde of their poſteritie, it was ſaid and in part true in them: As where it was ſaid, Two nations are in thy wombe: Jacob and Eſau were not bare types of two nations, but the beginners and progenitors, and two nations were euen now in their loynes: The elder ſhall ſerue the younger: ſo Eſau ſolde vnto Jacob his birthright, and reſigned vnto him in his owne perſon the ſoueraignſhip. So in like maner, where God ſaith, Jacob haue I loued, and hated Eſau, Firſt, this diſtinction of loue and hatred appeared in Jacob and Eſau, and then in their poſteritie. Secondly, there are two ſorts of types, there is, typus hiſtoricus, ſeu factus, an hiſtoricall type which was done, typus poeticus ſeu fictus, a deuſed and inuented type. In types of the ſecond kinde, that which is prefigured is not neceſſarie to be firſt true in the type: as Chriſt for the ſuddainneſſe of his coming is compared to a theefe, though the type in all reſpects properly agree not vnto him: In types of the firſt kinde, firſt, the example muſt be true, then the thing exemplified: as 1. Corinth. 10. 11. the olde Iſraelites that were puniſhed for their fornication, are types and examples to admoniſh vs, that we commit not fornication as they did, and be puniſhed likewiſe with them. So Iſaac and Iſmael are ſet forth as types, Galath. 4. but firſt the thing exemplified by them is true in the types: As verſe 29. As thou be that was borne after the fleſh perſecuted him that was borne after the ſpirit, ſo it is now: after the ſame maner Jacob and Eſau are ſet forth as examples, the one of Gods loue, the other of his hatred: which firſt muſt agree to their owne perſons. Thirdly, Pharaoh is ſet forth an example of the ſame thing, whereof Eſau is commonly, of the hatred of God: the perſon therefore of Eſau can be no more exempted here, then the perſon of Pharaoh. And that both the perſons of Jacob and Eſau are to be vnderſtoode, it appeareth by theſe circumſtances: Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the conception of theſe children in their mother Rebecca, and of their birth: but Eſau and Jacob perſonally were thus conceived and borne, not the whole nations: ſecondly, vnto them this loue and hatred belongeth, that had yet neither done good, or euill: but this is ſpoken of the perſons of Eſau and Jacob verſe 11. Eſau alſo the other.

Secondly, it is answered, that this loue and hatred, are to be vnderſtood only of temporall bleſſings, becauſe Jacob was made heire of the promiſed land, and Eſau reſuſed; and in this reſpect the one was loued, the other hated, not that Eſau was eternally, but onely temporally reſuſed: Sueran. pag. 550. Huber. theſ. 697. their reaſons are theſe: firſt, *Jacob*s bleſſing pronounced by his father, Gen. 27. 28. is onely of temporall things, God giue thee the dewe of heauen, and the ſunne of the earth, &c. Secondly, Eſau is bleſſed as well as Jacob: But if Jacob only had been heire of the ſpirituall bleſſings, they ſhould haue been denied to Eſau.

Contra. 1. That Jacob and Eſau are ſet forth as examples in ſpirituall things, it appeareth by the ſcope of the place; for how agreeth it with the Apoſtles purpoſe, to bring in examples of temporall things? verſe 8. he bringeth in a diſtinction, of the children of the fleſh, and the children of promiſe; theſe hoping to be iuſtified by faith, and to be partakers of the promiſe in Chriſt, the other remaining ſtill in their carnall ignorance and ynbeliſe: of thoſe two kinds, he propoundeth Jacob and Eſau as examples, the one of the children of promiſe, the other of the children of the fleſh: As Eſau had the carnall prerogatiue, but Jacob was made heire by promiſe. And that Jacob and Eſau doe exemplifie theſe two generations, it is confeſſed by Hemſingius de gra. vuln. p. 33. and by Sueranus. p. 533. Secondly, that theſe examples doe ſhadow forth ſpirituall things, it thus further appeareth: the Apoſtle to the Hebrues ſaith, that by ſayth Iſaac bleſſed Jacob and Eſau concerning things to come, chap. 11. 20. but faith is ſeene in things ſpirituall not temporall, it is of things inviſible, not viſible, verſe 1. Againe, Eſau is called a prophane perſon, becauſe hee ſold his birthright, chap. 12. 16. It is not prophaneneneſſe to contemne things temporall, but ſpirituall. Saint Ambroſe doth take Jacob and Eſau for examples of Gods eternall election and reiection, in 9. ad Roman. vnum elegit preſcientia, alterum ſpreuit, Eſau 1. & Jacob. He did chuſe one in his preſcience, and and despised another. The Master of the Sentences doth set them forth as examples of eternall damnation and reprobation, lib. 3. dist. 32. 2. Thirdly, now as touching their reasons: first, Jacob is naturally blessed in things temporall, but in spirituall also: for he saith, Blessed be he that blefseth them, which are cursed by the world, the flesh, and the devill, for the sake of Christ, Gen. 27. 29. In the very selfe same words, wherein the promise of Christ is made to Abraham, Gen. 12. 3. so that this must needs be spirituall vnderstood: otherwise we shall obscure the most manifest promises of the Messiah, which were made to Abraham. Secondly, though Eſau haue a share with his brother in his temporals, yet hath he no part in spirituall blessing: Eſau also shall haue of the founteyne of the waters, and of the dewe of heauen: but not vnto him, as before vnto Jacob, Blessed be he that blefseth them, &c. Therefore the Apostle to the Hebrewes concerning this spirituall blessing saith, that when Eſau would haue inherited the blessing, he was reiecte: neither found he any place of repentance, though he sought it with teares, chap. 12. 16. that is, his father by no means would reuoke that blessing, which he had giuen to Jacob: Eſau therefore was not blessed in like sort as Jacob was.

Thirdly, it is answered: that these words, Jacob haue I loued, Eſau haue I hated, are to be vnderstood comparatively, not as though Eſau and his posteritie were absolutely reiecte of God: but God rather made choice of Jacob, of whose seede the promised Messiah should come, then of Eſau and his seede, Sueton. p. 568. Heming. p. 34. Their reasons are these: first, it is not necessarie to haue place in Scripture, where we reade of election and reiection, or reprobation, to reſerre it to eternall saluation or damnation, as Pſalm. 78. verſ. 67. 68. He refused the tabernacle of Iſſachar, and refused the tribe of Ephraim, but chose the tribe of Iuda, and mount Sion, which he loued: Because God chose Iuda, it followeth not that the other tribes were condemned: So in this place though in comparison of Jacob, Eſau be refused, yet is he not absolutely reiecte: Huber. lib. 72. 6.

First, we graunt that the loue and hatred here spoken of in the persons of Jacob and Eſau are comparatively to be vnderstood: that Eſau is sayd to be hated, not that God simpliciter hateth him, but because Jacob is elected, and the other pretermitted; the one chosen, the other neglected: yet comparatively, not in respect of any such temporall preeminence, but concerning eternall election, or pretermiſſion. Secondly, because election sometime implyeth a temporall preſeruation only in respect of some ſpeciall and peculiar benefite, and is not necessarily alwaies referred to eternall saluation; it is therefore to be interpreted according to the ſcope and circumstance of the place: as in the Pſalm alleaged, it is plaine, that the Pſalmiſt meaneth, that in respect of the ſanctuarie, which was placed at Jeruſalem, Iuda was elected, and Ephraim refused: So in this place the Apostle treating thorough the whole chapter, of the mercie of God vpon ſome, and his wrath vpon others, not in this or that respect, but ſimply, as they ſtand before God, would haue vs vnderſtand the inſtance of loue and hatred in the persons of Jacob and Eſau: So is Philoſtrophus brought in an example of eternall hatred and reiection: ſo the Apostle ſpeaketh of veſſels of wrath prepared to glorie, and veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction: ſo are we to vnderſtand the loue of Jacob and hatred of Eſau.

Secondly, that Eſau was eternally hated, or reiecte of God, it cannot be vnderſtoode of Eſau his posteritie: for then all his offspring ſhould haue been caſt awayes: which is not true, for Iob is ſayd to come of Eſau his ſtocke, Sueton. pag. 574. Neither is it true of Eſau his perſon: for if he had been eternally reiecte, to what end was he circumciſed? Sueton. p. 574. he liued alſo in his fathers houſe, who loued him, and he was obedient to his father: what reaſon had Iſaac to loue whom God hated? Huber. lib. 70. 9. Iſaac alſo is ſayd by faith to haue bleſſed Eſau: which his bleſſing had been in vaine, if Eſau had been eternally reiecte of God, Sueton. p. 588.

Laſtly. If in Eſau and Jacob, not their perſons onely, but their whole generations are to be conſidered, which if it be rightly vnderſtoode, we will not greatly gaineſay: yet it followeth not, that all of Jacobs carnall lineage ſhould be likewise loued, and Eſaus posteritie hated: for in Jacob we vnderſtand all the children of promiſe, though they be not of his carnall offspring; and in Eſau, all the children of the fleſh, though not deſcending of his ſtocke: So that in this ſenſe, as all they are not Iſrael, which are of Iſrael, as the Apostle ſaith, verſe 6. ſo all are not Eſau, that are of Eſau. And therefore Iob, though of Eſau after the fleſh, yet is the ſonne of Jacob by promiſe: And thus Hemingius expoundeth this place, de vniuerſ. grat. p. 33.

Concerning Eſau his perſon; how he ſtandeth before God, whether in the ſtate of ſaluation, or damnation, though we hold it the ſafeſt, to leaue him vnto God, before whom he ſtandeth, or ſilently; nor to affirme any thing raſhly without warrant: yet we may be bolde to proceede ſo far herein, as we haue the word of God to goe before vs. Firſt therefore their reaſons, which they bring in deſenſe of Eſau, are very inſufficient: for Eſaus outward and temporall circumciſion, cannot exempt him from this hatred, no more then Iſmael was priuiledged by his circumciſion: who notwithstanding was borne after the fleſh, and was a perſecutor of him that was borne after the ſpirit: Gal. 4. The Apostle himſelfe alſo diſtinguiſheth of circumciſion: that there is a circumciſion of the fleſh, and a circumciſion of the heart, Rom. 2. 28. The firſt Eſau had, the other he had not: for though though he had the signe of the covenant, yet the covenant it selfe he despised in selling his birth-right, Genes. 25. 34. As touching Eſau his obedience to his father, first, it was not such, as it ought to be; for then he would not haue married two wives of the daughters of the Hittites, to get his parents withall, Gen. 26. 34. 35. Secondly, that it was but in hypocrisie: as it may appeare, in that he purposed to slay his brother Jacob after his fathers death, Gen. 27. 41. which he would not haue done, if he had truly reuerenced his father: for he would haue loued his brother for his fathers sake. Again, when he vnderstood that his father gaue his sonne Jacob charge, not to marrie with the daughters of Canaan: Eſau like an hypocrite hauing already displeased his parents, in marrying with the daughters of Canaan, went and tooke to wife the daughter of Ismael, Genes. 28. 9. So that nothing els kept Eſau in some awe to his father, but onely a hope of some temporall blessing, Gen. 27. 41. But Isaac loued Eſau, would he loue him whom God hated: Isaac was a fatherly and in some sort a carnall loue: he loued him, for Ismael was his meate: Gen. 25. 28. Eſau was an active and valiant fellow, and a good hunter; therefore Isaac made account of him he loued Eſau onely as a father, but Jacob beside as a Prophet. 2. Isaac loued Eſau, as Ismael loued Ismael, and prayed, that he might liue in Gods sight, Genes. 27. 18. yet both of them were refused: so Simeon, being sent to annoynt Dauid King, liked other of his brethren before, whom God liked not: these holy Prophets and Patriarches were men, and had their naturall affections. Thirdly, what if Isaac did not see fully into the state of his children as yet: for he did but as in a cloude behold things to come: so much was not reuealed to him, as afterward to the Prophets, Jacob haue I loued, Eſau haue I hated, Malach. 1. 2. And more to the Apostles, who doubtless to call him a prophane person, Hebr. 12. 16. for as the Patriarches and Prophets liued neerer the times of our Sauour Christ, so were their reuelations more full, and their visions clearer.

Now whereas it is said, that Isaac by faith blessed Jacob and Eſau; this doth no whit prinde Eſau: for it was *Isaac*s faith, not *Eſau*s: and though he blessed both, yet not alike; for Jacob had both a spirituall and temporall blessing: Eſau had onely a temporall, the spirituall he could not obtaine, no not with teares. Thus whatsoeuer can be said for Eſau, is easily removed. Now againe him thus much may be alleaged out of Scripture: first, Eſau contemned his birth-right, Genes. 25. 34. and held it not so deare as a messe of pottage: wherefore the Scripture calleth him a prophane person, Hebr. 12. 16. this is first a fearefull signe of eternall damnation, to contemne and despise holy things: for such as make a mocke of Christ, Hebr. 6. 6. (as Eſau did that despised this birth-right in Christ) and despise the spirit of grace, Hebr. 10. 29. there remaineth nothing else, but a fearefull looking for of iudgement, verie 27. Secondly, Eſau hated Jacob, he is become a persecutor of the righteous, he hateth those, whom God loueth, Genes. chap. 27. verse 41. So Ismael persecuted Isaac, he that was borne after the flesh, him that was after the spirit, Galath. 4. verse 29. Thirdly, Eſau was disobedient to his parents, he married heathenish women, daughters of Infidels, to reare his parents withall: As the Apostle saith of the Gentiles, God gaue them ouer to a reprobate minde, in doe those things that were not conuenient: as being full of enuie, murder, (so was Eſau toward Jacob) disobedient to parents, so was he toward Isaac and Rebecca, Rom. 1. vers. 29. 30. Fourthly, Eſau expecteth, and wiseth his fathers death: the dayes of mourning for my father will come shortly as if he should haue said, I hope my father will not liue long: then will I slay my brother Jacob, Genes. 27. vers. 41. Thus enuie in Eſau bringeth forth murder: and this murderous heart continued toward Jacob twentie yeares: for so long serued Jacob in Labans house, Genes. 31. vers. 38. And after at his returne he sent a messenger to be reconciled to his brother Jacob, who came against him with foure hundred men with a purpose to haue slaine him, Genes. chap. 32. vers. 6. but that at the instance of *Jacob*s prayer, by the mightie power of God, (in whose hands the hearts of kings are to turne them, as the vessels vpon the waters, Prouerb. 21. vers. 1.) his heart was mollified, and his affection relented towards his brother, Genes. 33. Lastly, Saint Paul intreating of Gods eternall election, bringeth in the examples of Jacob and Eſau, the one loued, the other hated of God.

Thus by more euident coniecture, and likely arguments we are able to proue out of Scripture the finall reiection of Eſau, then they can shew the contrarie: And so consequently, notwithstanding all these humane deuises, we haue a most firme and euident testimonie for particular and personall election in this place, drawne from the example of Jacob and Eſau. And thus much of the first inconuenience that must needs ensue vpon this opinion concerning vniuersall grace, which ouerthroweth the foundation of Gods predestination: which they doe as it were hang in the ayre, affirming that it is nothing else but an vniuersall confused decree, as though God either did not know the particular ende of euery man, or knowing the same willed it not.

Now lastly, that God hath from the beginning made a particular and absolute election of some, and that Gods election is not generall and conditionall, it hath been the auncient doctrine of the Church.

1. Ambrose. 1. Timoth. 5. Electos Angelos dicit, quia sunt alij reprobi, non Dei Angelj, sed diaboli.

the faith elect Angels; because there are some reprobate, not the Angels of God, but of the world: as there be then among the Angels some elect, some reprobate, so is it among men; but the election and reprobation of Angels was particular and certaine; Ergo, so is the election and reprobation of men.

Against the words: Quoniam lib. 1. c. 7. Ad hanc discretionem istam, qua Deus alios eligit, alios non eligit. That discretion or separation, whereby God hath chosen some, and not chosen others, may doe ascribe to mans will. Et lib. 2. c. 8. Hac altitudine discretionis deum conurbabitur cor nostrum, by this depth of Gods separation or discerning of men our heart shall not be troubled, if wee fully beleue that Gods iudgement is iust. If there be then a separation, and chusing of some to Gods everlasting dectee; then are not all generally and conditionally elected fithis were make a separation, but a confusion of all together.

Saint Augustine to this purpose writeth very directly: Tract. 4. in Ioh. Est quidam populus preparatus ad iram dei, damnandus cum diabolo, &c. There is a certaine people prepared to the wrath of God to be condemned with the diuell.

Tract. 43. Illi mortis aeterna praedestinati respondebunt, &c. Those which were predestinate to everlasting death, answered, Thon hast a diuell.

Tract. 48. How said he to those, You are not of my sheepe, Quia elictas erat, & impiternum vitam preparatas, &c. Because hee saw that they were prepared to everlasting destruction, and condemned to eternall life by his blood. By these places it is euident what Augustine iudgements was, that Gods election was not indefinite or vncertaine, but that the end of euery man, whether to life or death, was determined and decreed in particular.

Magis scilicet lib. 1. diff. 43. E. Non vult Deus omnes homines iustificari, & tamen quis dubitas God will not iustifie all men, and yet who doubteth but he can. Lib. 1. diff. 2. b. f. Humana natura parte redempta est Mans nature is redeemed but in part. If all be not redeemed, then all are not elected. Lib. 1. diff. 32. a. Magis diligit rationalis creaturas, & de illis est amplius, quia sunt God loveth reasonable creatures more than vnreasonable; and among the reasonable, those which are the members of his onely begotten sonne. If all men be not loued alike, then they not all elected alike.

THE SECOND INCONVENIENCE THAT

followeth the opinion of vniuersall grace.

Hard. 2. The second inconuenience that issueth out of this doctrine of vniuersall election, is this, that Gods election ariseth ex praesumpta fide, from the foresight of their faith which shall be true: Huberus lib. 786. Deus electionem suam non absolute statuit, sed desinit eam in fide suo, ut praesent in eam, salui fiant: God hath not absolutely made any election, but he hath founded it in Christ, that they which beleue in him should be saued; they that beleue not, should be damned. So Hemmingius saith: Praescientia Dei regula est electionis & praedestinationis: The prescience of God is the rule of election and predestination, pag. 21. And againe, Non quia praesens & electi sunt praedestinati, sed quia credimus, praesent & electi ad vitam conferuntur: Wee doe not beleue, because we are foreseene and elected, but because wee beleue wee were foreseene and elected vnto life, pag. 27. Sacrae, though he seeme in words to confesse, that intrauit effugendi propositum non deprecatum that the eternall purpose of election depended not of the foresight of our faith or workes, pag. 461. yet he is driven by the streame of words to affirme as the rest doe, that fides continetur in Dei proposito, that faith is included in the purpose of Gods election, p. 463. and that God vniuersally ordained to saluation all that should beleue, pag. 460. They would ground this their opinion concerning the foresight of faith vpon these and such like places of Scripture, as Rom. 8. 29. Those which he knew before, he predestinated to be like the image of his sonne: Predestination then is grounded vpon the foreknowledge of God: Hemmingius de vniuersali. grat. pag. 29.

Contra. 1. We graunt with Augustine, that praedestinatio sine praescientia esse non potest, that predestination cannot be without prescience in God, lib. 1. de praedestinat. cap. 16. And thus are they ioyned together in this place: but it followeth not, that one is the cause of another. 2. The text maketh directly against them: for he saith not, whom he knew before should be like the image of his sonne he predestinate; but, whom he knew before he did predestinate to be like his sonne: so that this conformitie by faith vnto Christ is an effect and consequent of their predestination. 3. Though we admit the former reading, yet haue they gained nothing: for the conformitie to the image of Christ consisteth in being made partakers of Christs sufferings, whereof Saint Peter treateth, 1. Pet. 4. 13. vnlesse they therefore will affirme, that the foresight of mens afflictions is the cause of their election, and so ioyne in opinion with the old Pelagians, that grounded election vpon the foresight of good works, this place is not for their turne. 4. By the knowledge of God in scripture, the loue, liking, and approbation of God is such signifying, as Psal. 135. The Lord loveth the way of the just, that is, approveth it, Heb. 10. 24. Imitate good and reverend men, that is, love them: for in this place, whom he knew before (whom he loved and favoured) he predestinate.

Against they object that place, Ephes. 1. He hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world: that is, God hath chosen those whom he foresaw should be true in Christ; Heavenly secret, pag. 3. He hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, Heb. 8. 1. Heavenly secret, pag. 3.

Contra. 1. The Apostle meaneth not, that we were so chosen in Christ, that is, for the sake of our faith in him, but that Christ was appointed of God, as the foundation; by whom our election should be accomplished: as in the next ver. He hath predestinated us to be adopted through Christ: We were not first adopted in Christ, and then predestinate; but first predestinate, and then chosen in Christ, ver. 1. In whom we have obtained, where we were predestinate according to the purpose of him, &c. First, therefore there is the decree of election and predestination, grounded on the good pleasure of God, ver. 5. then followeth the accomplishment and execution of the decree by our adoption in Christ.

2. Augustine upon these words, He hath chosen us in him that we should be holy, groundeth a contrary argument: Nam elegit, quos futura sancti immutaret, sed elegit ut essent sancti, quos futura sancti immutaret, sed ut essent: Hee did not choose those whom hee saw should be unspotted, but hee chose them that they should be holy, not because they were holy, lib. 1. de predestinatione, c. 18. Sober faith, holiness, sanctification, are fruits and effects of election, not causes thereof.

3. Christ Iesus, or our faith in Christ foreseen, cannot be the cause of our predestination, being Christ himselfe, in respect of his office of redemption, and mediation, was predestinate and preordained of God: the same thing then cannot be the cause of predestination and the effect together; Christ Iesus as the head, with his bodie, which is the whole company of the elect, are the object of predestination, that is, those which were predestinated: Ergo he is not the cause, Augustine also saith, Christus praeclarissimum lumen est gratia predestinationis, qui, ut hoc esset, quibusdam suis, vel operum vel fidei meritis, natura humana, qua in illis est, comparavit sibi, ergo predestinationis unus est, ut caput nostrum esset, Rom. 1. 4. qui predestinatus est filius Dei, et nobis predestinatus sumus: Christ is a notable light of the grace of predestination, in whom his humane nature deserved not by the merit of his workes, or faith, to be joynted to his Godhead: As he therefore was predestinate to be our head, Rom. 1. 4. predestinate the Sonne of God (that is in respect of his office and humanitie) so are wee predestinate to be his members, that is, without respect to our faith or workes, onely according to the good pleasure of his will. And this shall be our first argument on the contrary side, against this respective election, and further we prove it thus.

Luk. 12. 31. It is your fathers pleasure to give you a kingdom: There is no other reason to be considered, why God hath elected his children, and appointed them a kingdom, but this: Complacuit patri, it was your fathers pleasure.

John 15. 16. You have not chosen me, but I have chosen you. Whereupon Augustine thus saith: Quod si autem ipsi prima et desiderii in eum, elegerunt eum, ipse non elegit eos: But if so be that they had believed in him, they chose him, he chose not them. Their onely answer here is, that this is to be understood not of their eternall, but temporall election to the office of their Apostleship.

Ans. To this also Augustine answereth: Elegit eos de mundo cum hic, ageret in carne, sed in eis in seipso ante mundi constitutionem: He chose them indeede out of the world when he lived in the flesh: but they were chosen in himselfe before the world was made, lib. 1. de predestinatione, cap. 17. Our Sauiour also saith, I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you goe and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit remaine: This sheweth that he speaketh of their eternall election to saluation.

Thirdly, we have a most direct place, Rom. 9. 11. where the Apostle saith, That before the children were borne, and had done either good or evil, the Lord pronounced of them, Jacob have I loved, Esau have I hated: Ergo, in Gods eternall election, which goeth before our birth, there is no respect had unto any thing that followeth after the birth, either faith, or workes: for the reason is general against both.

Ans. Suaenus answereth, that (these words) I have hated Esau, are as much, as adversum, I have decreed to hate, for God really and verily hateth none but for their sin, pag. 567. And therefore where the Scripture calleth Esau a prophane person, the formall cause is added, for selling his birthright, Heb. 12. 16. Suaenus, pag. 590.

Contra. 1. We graunt that no man is verily condemned (which is the reall reprobation) but for his owne sinne and wickednes: but here the Apostle speaketh of the decree it selfe, not of the execution; the decree is before all time, the execution of the decree followeth in the time appointed: the execution followeth after the birth, and after men have done good or evil. This therefore, which the Apostle speaketh of, which was determined before their birth, and before they had done any thing, is the absolute decree of God. Neither is that place to the Hebrues any thing like him: for there the Apostle speaketh not of any purpose or decree of God concerning Eſau, but of any euill done, as hee doth here; But onely of an act of prophaneſſe committed in his life. Although we admit his interpretation, I haue hated him is decreed to haue: yet wee muſt vnderſtand the decree ſtill: that although reall hatred be cauſed by their owne ſinne, yet hatred or loue is grounded onely vpon the will and purpoſe of God: as the Apoſtle ſaith, that the purpoſe of God might remaine free by him that calleth, verſ. 11. but if election ſhould be becauſe of faith, it ſhould ſtand as much by the called, as him that calleth.

lib. 1. cap. 15

That this therefore pronounced concerning Eſau and Iacob, is to be vnderſtood onely of Gods eternall decree and free purpoſe without the foreſight of faith, or workes, not of the execution of the decree, alene, or of them both together; as Succanus ſeemeth ſometime to affirme, pag. 47. thus it ſhall appeare by the opening of that which followeth.

Verſ. 12. The Apoſtle anſwereth an objection, Is there vnrightheouſneſſe thin with God? God forbid. Which objection ariſeth vpon the former examples: If God then doe elect one and reieſt another, neither of them hauing done either good or euill, but both being alike, how is hee not vnrightheous, in that he ordaineth not alike vnto thoſe that are in the ſame caſe? But if ſo that God elect ſome becauſe of their beleeſe, and reieſteth others for their vnbeleefe, there were no occasion to complaine of God as vnrightheous, or ſo to object, becauſe the cauſe of difference in Gods election is apparant, namely, the reſpect to their faith: and it is a iuſt and righteouſ thing, that God ſhould preferre beleeuers before vnbeleuers: therefore if election depended vpon any thing foreſight, and not abſolutely vpon the will and purpoſe of God, there could be no ſhew of vnrightheouſneſſe in God, nor any cauſe foreto object.

Hemingius maketh the meaning of the objection to be this: that God ſhould ſeeme to be vnrightheous, becauſe he doth not adopt and elect Iſmael and Eſau for his children for the merite of their workes, as well as Iſaac and Iacob. pag. 47.

Contra. The merite of faith is as well excluded as the merite of workes: and if God ſhould elect vpon the foreſight of faith, the ground of this objection is as well remoued, as if he did elect vpon the foreſight of workes: for then God ſhould ſee ſomewhat more in thoſe that are elected, than in the other, that is, their faith, and ſo they ſhould haue no colour to charge God with vnrightheouſneſſe: This appeareth alſo by the verſe following.

Verſ. 13. I will haue mercie on him, to whom I will ſhew mercie. And verſ. 18. He hath mercie on whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth: that is, ſaith Hemingius, God ſheweth mercie vpon thoſe that beleeue, who are ſaued onely by faith, through the mercie of God in Chriſt, and he reieſteth al that reſuſe to beleeue, and ſuffereth them to be hardened. Heming fol. 49. 1. Succan. 698. & alibi.

Contra. 1. Thus they applie theſe places onely to the execution of Gods decree, and vnderſtand them onely of that temporall difference, which God maketh in this world betweene beleeuers and vnbeleuers: whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of that difference, which God maketh in his eternall election: as may appeare by the examples of Iacob and Eſau, betweene whom there was a diſtinction made before they were borne: and to this end hee bringeth in the ſimilitude of the potter, verſ. 11. that as he hath power to make his veſſels not yet made, how he will; ſo God may appoint his creatures to ſuch purpoſes, as him pleaſeth, euen before they are: he hath not power to diſpoſe of them onely after they are made and borne. 2. If Gods mercie be decreed vpon the foreſight of faith, I aſke them, whence is this faith? Is it of themſelues that beleeue, or of God, or of both? if of man, then God hath not mercie on whom he will, but vpon whom man will: becauſe it is (ſay they) in mans power to beleeue; and if he will beleeue, then will God ſhew mercie, and not elſe. And againe, whereas they ſay, God would haue all men to beleeue, and ſo be ſaued; it followeth that God hath mercie vpon all, conditionally if they beleeue: but the Apoſtle ſaith contrarie, that hee hath mercie vpon ſome, not vpon all, and that hee withholdeth his mercie from others, whom in his iuſt iudgement he hardeneth. But if faith be of God, and none can haue it, vnleſſe he giue it, what other reaſon is there, that he giueth it not to all, but becauſe he hath not elected all?

Neither is God ſaid to harden ſome mens hearts onely by ſuffering them to be hardened, but in Auguſtine ſaith of Pharao: Deus indurauit per iuſtum iudicium, Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God hardened his heart by his iuſt iudgement, Pharao by his free will. And againe, where David ſaith, that God bade Semei curſe him, Auguſtine ſaith thus: Vtique non imbrutus dixit ei, ſed quod vniuſum propriis ſus vitiis in ſeipſum, in hoc peccatum iudicio ſuo iuſto & occulto intromiſit: He did not commaund him ſo to do, but becauſe by his iuſt and ſecret iudgement, he did incline his will of it ſelſe corrupt, and wicked, to this ſinne: de liber. arbit. cap. 20. & 23. God therefore onely permittech not as a looker on, but is an agent and a doer as a iuſt iudge, yet without ſinne.

Verſ. 16. It is not in him that willet or runneth, but in God that ſheweth mercie: that is (ſaith Hemingius) it is not in him that willet or runneth after the fleſh, but in him that willet and runneth by faith, which is grounded vpon the mercie of God; who of mere loue gaue his ſonne to be the redeemer of the world, pag. 48.

Contra. 1. The opposition here is not betweene man willing by nature, and man willing by faith, but betweene man willing or running, and God shewing mercie. If it be all one for man to will according to faith, and for God to shew mercie, then is it Gods grace and mercie, that some men haue faith: for if to will according to the flesh be one thing, and to will according to faith another, seeing all men are the same naturally and according to the flesh, whence is it then, that some men will regenerate by faith? is it not of the grace and mercie of God? Mercie therefore is first shewed, and then faith is giuen: the foresight then of faith is not the cause of grace and fauour. 2. It is Gods mercie you say, that Christ was giuen for the redemption of the world: but this is a common mercie, as ye hold, that Christ dyed for all men: is it not also a mercie of God to giue faith to beleue in Christ? If you affirme only that common mercie: then is it not true, which the Apostle saith, that God hath mercie only on some, and hardeneth others; but God is mercifull to all alike in offering Christ both to beleeuers & vnbeleuvers. And concerning faith, if it be not Gods mercie that we haue it, then Gods mercie in giuing Christ, is nothing without our owne mercie vpon our selues in beleeuing in Christ: yea our owne mercie shall exceede Gods mercie, in as much as beleuvers haue more mercie than vnbeleuvers. If it be of Gods mercie, that we haue faith, why is not this mercie shewed to all, but that it pleased not God to elect all, but to receive in fauour onely his chosen? These patrons of vniuersall and common grace, are neuer able, holding their opinion, to make all sound here.

Verf. 19. Thou wilt say vnto me, Why doth he yet complaine, who hath resisted his will? verf. 20. Who art thou o man, that pledest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power of the clay to make of the same lump one vessel to honour, another to dishonour? Hence we conclude, that even so in the beginning God had power by speciall election to appoint some vnto honour, pretermittting others and leauing them in dishonour, and this of his owne freewill and purpose, not hauing any respect at all vnto man.

Hemingsius answereth: That this similitude holdeth not in euery point, but is brought in by the Apostle to shew the power of God, that hee is able to punish the contemners of his word, and vpon their repentance to renew them againe, as the potter, &c. And so is it applied by Ieremie chap. 18: for otherwise simplie God maketh not the wicked, as the potter doth the base vessels: pag. 50. 30.

Contra. 1. The obiection here moued, Who hath resisted his will? standeth not with this interpretation, nor with Hemingsius opinion: for if God would haue all men to beleue, and so be saved, then is Gods will ouerthwarted, and his purpose is gainesaid, and his wil resisted, for he would haue all saved, and yet all are not saved. But the Apostle hauing set downe this principle, that God in the beginning elected whom he would, and left the rest, whom he would not receive to mercie: then this obiection is made, that seeing Gods will is performed in both, that whom hee would be saved; whom he would not, remaine as they were: why then should there be any complaint made of their disobedience? vnlesse therefore we make the Apostles scope to be this, the obiection hath no coherence at all with the precedent part.

2. This similitude we do not vrge in all points: for man is otherwise by creation, than a piece of clay, but so farre onely, as it is applied by the Apostle as we haue shewed. Ieremie vtieth the similitude somewhat to a diuers purpose, then the Apostle doth: for the Prophet setteth forth Gods power in the externall workes of his prouidence in the gouernment and administration of the world; as in the planting, and destroying of nations: the Apostle entreateth of the workes of Gods election, and predestination, verf. 11. That the purpose might stand according to election. Therefore Gods power is not here set forth toward those that are now contemners, or beleuvers, but before they were such.

3. As touching his reason: Though God make vessels to dishonour, that is, ordaine wicked men to punishment, yet he maketh them not wicked: they are wicked of their owne making, but the punishment due to their wickednes, which is eternall shame and dishonour, is made and ordained of God: as Prou. 16. 4. God made the wicked against the euill day.

Verf. 22. What if God to shew his power, &c. the vessels of wrath prepared to destruction, and to declare the riches of his glorie vpon the vessels of mercie, which he hath prepared to glorie? Ergo, from the beginning some were prepared to glorie, some to destruction.

Succaneus saith, That none absolutely before God are appointed to be vessels of honour or dishonour, but conditionally in Christ, pag. 686. that is, as they should beleue or not beleue in him. Huberus saith, That God indeede prepareth the vessels of mercie, giuing them faith, and illumination, but they are made the vessels of wrath of themselves, and by Satan. And therefore the Apostle chaungeth the phrased, saying, that God prepareth the vessels of mercie, but the other are prepared: Thes. 868. 869. 870.

Contra. 1. The vessels of honor and dishonour are simplie, not conditionally formed: else the Apostles speech were impertinent, verf. 20. Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou

But now if they were formed onely conditionally, which condition is performed by the former, but by the thing formed; then are they formed by themselves: but the Apostle saith they are formed of God: all condition then on their part is excluded. 2. Again, as the matter of the same lampe maketh vessels of honour, or dishonour, so God doth ordaine men of the same masse and condition in themselves, some to honour, some to dishonour: but now if God should respect the faith of some, and the vnbeleefe of others, and so according to this fore-ordaine them, they should not be one lumpe, or of one mould, but diuers.

To Hubertus wee answered: first, if God prepare the vessels of mercie, and worke effectually in them, one of these two must needs be graunted; that God either prepareth all men generally for the vessels of mercie, and they afterward are made by themselves the vessels of wrath, (which seemeth to be his opinion) then is the will of God resisted. If they say Gods will is conditionall, if they beleue, yet this helpeth them not: for God giueth faith to all (as he saith) and so would haue all to beleue: seeing then all doe not beleue, Gods will is gainesaid, and ouerruled: Or else if God prepare some and not others, by giuing faith and grace, whereof cometh this difference, but that God hath sorted out some from the rest by his eternall election?

Hubertus seemeth to note a myserie, in that the Apostle speaking of the vessels of wrath, useth another word, and in the passiue voyce, saying, vessels fitted or composed to destruction: but of the other he speaketh actuely, which God hath prepared, for destruction. Ifirst, for the change of the voyce which he objecteth, it is nothing: for is it not al one to say, which he prepared, or which are prepared of him? And Matth. 25. ver. 34. 41. Both the kingdome of God, and euilng fire are said passiuely to be prepared of God. And for the word, both that which is here pronounced of the vessels of mercie, is used in the Scripture of the preparation to destruction, Matth. 25. 41. And on the contrarie, the other word applied to the vessels of wrath, is attributed to the faithfull, 1. Corin. 1. 10. Be ye knit together, 2. Corin. 13. 14. and he speaketh to those which are sanctified in Christ, and Saints by calling, ver. 2. 3. So that here the Apostle speaketh not, how men by their owne wickednesse are fitted to damnation, but how they stand in the decrees of God, how they are vnder the hands of the potter: the reddition of the similitude must answer to the proposition: the potter maketh himselfe both kinde of vessels, he maketh not the one, and the other maketh it selfe: so Gods decreeth both concerning the elect and reprobate.

Therefore we opened the true sense of this chapter, and freed it from the corrupt glosses of the contrary minded: And so haue we a most cleere testimonie of the Apostle, for Gods free and gracious election, without any foresight of faith or any thing else in vs. And thus Augustinus expoundeth it: Apostolus non solum fratres, sed geminos, nec geminos solum, sed uno concubitu fusos in vtero ut nati sunt, vi. quoniam in vtero nati, aut aliquid operis, nulla esse poterant inuenta meritoria, prout esset parentum merita: quia diuerso tempore nati, non potuerunt: itaque apostolus eos vasa misericordie vocat, ut in eorum quibus essent, secundum misericordiam dei esse cognoscerent: De predestinatione. lib. 2. c. 22. The Apostle doth compare together not brethren onely, but twinnes borne at one birth: that because in those which were not yet borne, neither as yet had done any thing, there shall be no difference of merite, and their parents merites were alike, which might haue been as diuines vnlike: the Apostle therefore calleth them vessels of mercie, that they might acknowledge all, whatsoever they had, to be of mercie.

Thus Ambrose in Tit. 3. vpon these words of the Apostle, Secundum misericordiam suam, &c. According to his mercie he saued vs: Hoc bonum quod in Christianis florere cernimus, a radice diuinae misericordiae, &c. This goodnesse, which epish flourish in Christians, doth arise of the roote of the diuine mercie, or love, for God by his mercie hath saued vs in Christ.

Augustinus de voca. Gen. lib. 1. c. 22. Non omnis Israel reprobatus, nec omnis electus, sed pars pars caritatis dei, et gratiae, per quam sibi illuminatio gratuita reformatur. All Israel was not reprobated, nor all elected, but part through their voluntarie blindness is turned aside, part by gracious illumination is reformed.

Augustinus de sermone ad Romanos. Non ait: Apostolus elegit nos, &c. cum essetis sancti, sed ut essetis. The Apostle saith not he hath chosen vs, when we were holie, &c. but that we should be holie.

Thus Augustinus thought in the end of the grace of freenes of election, though hee had bene warned of another minde, that God though hee elected not by the foresight of works, yet, Non solum per quam sibi ordinem praestaret, ipsum eligeret. Yet hee elected their faith, that is, Non solum per quam sibi ordinem praestaret, ipsum eligeret. This fortetune was Augustinus opinion, which he afterward retracted: Sed non tam diligenter quaesierunt, quae fuerant, nec viderunt, quae fuerant. But yet I had not diligently searched, or found out, what to thinke of the election of graces.

Augustinus therefore being better reformed in iudgement thus writeth: Electio gratiae non solum per opera, sed solum per opera, &c. quia omnia opera bona incipiunt. The electiue of grace doth not onely preuent, or goe before mens workes, but before faith, where all good workes begin.

So I wish that they, which thinke now, as Augustine sometime did, would not be ashamed with Augustine to correct their erroneous opinion. It was counted in time past Semipelagianisme, to ascribe election to the foresight of faith. Bellarmine a patroner of poperie yet abhorreth this opinion, and proueth at large, Nuliam esse causam in nobis predestinationis: That there is no cause in vs of our predestination, neither that God hath elected vs vpon the foresight of our works: propter bonum vsum liberi arbitrii, aut gratie: or for the good vsing of freewill, or grace: Liberi de grat & liber. arbit. cap. 10. Is it not therefore a shame for Protestants, even in a popish error to be more stiffe and resolute, then a popish professor? And thus much of this second absurditie: We will be shorter in the rest.

THE THIRD INCONVENIENCE or Absurditie.

A Bford. 3. The patrones of vniuersall grace, who affirme that God conditionally hath appointed all men to saluation, if they will beleue, and that he would haue all men to beleue: Hemings de vniuersal. grat. pag. 58. And that if all beleue not, it is not for any defect of grace, but through their owne fault: Succan. de liber. arbit. pag. 408. They thus holding are driuen to conclude, that to beleue, man hath power of himselfe, by his freewill: for God offereth grace and faith to all, and it is in mans power to receiue, or refuse it.

Hemings further deliuereth his opinion thus: That faith is both the gift of God, because it wrought by his holy spirit in those that desire it; it is also of mans free will, because it is in the will of man to give or withhold his consent to and from the calling of God: And yet (saith he) this will whereby he beleueth, is also Gods gift, because it appertaineth to free will, which was giuen in the creation: so there are foure things, which concurre vnto faith, to heare the Gospell, to consent vnto it, to desire grace offered, and to beleue God, which promisseth: all these are voluntary in man: De vniuers. grat. pag. 57. So he concludeth, that faith is partly the gift of God, because he giueth his word, and inwardly moueth the heart, partly the worke of man, because man, volens credit, beleueth willingly, being once moued of the spirit, a bonitate obiecti, by the goodnesse of the obiect: pag. 56. So his opinion is, That the will of man is not onely passive, but also active in the conuersion of man: de libero arbit. pag. 118. And as God worketh by teaching, inspiring, mouing: so man worketh by willing, consenting, endeavouring: pag. 120. lin. 1.2. So the beginning and occasion of faith is of God, but the act and perfection of faith, in man.

Yet Hemings much forgetting himselfe, alloweth that saying of Augustine: Liberi arbitrii velle, tandem bene velle, gratia Dei est: That it is in our free will, to will but well to will, is of grace, De liber. arbit. pag. 98. And that of Bernard also he alloweth: Deus est auctor salutis, liberum arbitrium tantum capax, nec dat illam nisi Deus, nec capere valet nisi liberum arbitrium: God is the author onely and worker of saluation, free will is onely capable, none giueth but God, nor nothing is capable of it, but free will: pag. 120. Thus he confesseth with these fathers, that mans free will is meere passie in diuine things, and onely receiue, worketh nothing. And further he confesseth, That a man regenerate and taught of God, may will thus is good, by his free will, which he hath of grace: pag. 114. lin. 17. Here he saith, that free will to good is of grace: and thus he is contrary to himselfe.

Succanus likewise runneth in a maze, and confoundeth himselfe: One while hee saith, That grace and mans will worke together: and that men may resist God, and of their owne motion may offend vnto him, Quantum ad ipsam naturalem volendi actionem in operatione inditam attinet: hinc vniuersall action of the will, as it was giuen in the creation: De liber. arbit. pag. 1405. Yet with the same breath hee saith, that mans will is no efficient, or working cause of his conuersion, but onely a principall subiect, wherein the spirit of God worketh: And that in spirituall actions, as in faith, regeneration, A man regenerate neither vnderstandeth, nor is able to do wth will any thing: pag. 398. And that the whole benefite of our conuersion, in the beginning, midst, and end, is neither begun nor finished by our strength, but is onely of grace: pag. 405. Thus they speake and write contrary things, and blow hot and cold with one breath: But for all this, they cannot thus shuffle vp the matter, but we further vrge them thus.

Contra. They that affirme that God offereth grace and faith equally to all, and that God would haue all men to beleue, and if they beleue not, it is not for want of grace, but for the fault in onely in themselves: do consequently hold, that to beleue is either wholly or in part in mans power. The first, to affirme that faith is in mans power wholly without the gift of God, is Pelagianisme, and maketh man the author of his owne saluation. Yet to holdeth Peterson, one of the patrones of this opinion: but Hemings and Succanus, or other vniuersall men, are not yet so prode. Their opinion is then, that faith is partly of God, partly of man, that consenteth vnto the calling of God by his freewill. Against the which opinion we haue the decree of the 2. Synodus Constant. can. 5. Si quis sentiat augmentum, non est initium fidei, ipsum credulitatis affectum est. If any man say, that increase, so the beginning of faith, likewise the very inward disposition to beleue, wherebeleue in him, that iustifieth the vngodly, is not giuen vs by grace, and the inspiration of the holy Ghost, which conuerteth our will from infidelitie to faith, but that it is naturally in vs, is common to the Apostle, who saith, We trust that he which hath begun this worke in you, will finish it vntill the day of the Lord. This decree maketh both against those, that affirme faith to be naturally in vs, as Pockius, as also against them which ascribe either the beginning of faith to the increase, or the disposition to freewill, and not all to grace, as Hemingsius. The absurditie of which opinion, we further declare thus.

If it be in mans power to beleue, whether do you vnderstand man regenerate, or vnregenerate: Man vnregenerate is not able to beleue, for the naturall man perceiueth not the things of the spirit of God, 1. Cor. 2. 14. And this is partly confessed by Hemingsius and Succavus, as wee haue seene before. If man must first be regenerate before he can beleue, how cometh it to passe, differing an equall measure of faith, and grace is offered on Gods behalfe vnto all, that all men are not regenerate? You will say, some are regenerate by grace: But why do some apprehend the power of regeneration more then other? there is no power yet in their will, because it is vnregenerate: must it not then be needes confessed, that God giueth a greater measure of grace to some, than to he hath elected, then to other? And this the Apostle notably prooueth, where he saith: God bestoweth of all men, especially of those which beleue, 1. Timoth. 4. 10. But if God for his parte offer grace no more to beleueurs, then vnbeleueurs, but in that they accept of grace offered themselues, how is he after a more especial sort the Sauour of beleueurs, more then of others? This place inferreth of necessity a more speciall grace and fauour of God toward them that beleue.

That all cannot haue faith, but such as are ordained and elected thereunto: these Scriptures are our warrant: Iohn 10. 26. Ye beleue not, for ye are not of my sheepe: Iohn. 12. 39. They could not beleue, because God had blinded their eyes: Act. 13. 48. As many as were ordained to eternall life, be-leued. Their answers to these places wee haue seene before, that wee neede not to repeat them again.

That faith and euery good gift, the beginning, perfection and end, is onely of God, thus is testified in the word of God: It is not of him that willet, or runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy Rom. 9. 16. It is God that worketh both the will and the deed, Phil. 2. 13. Without me you can do na-thing, Iohn 15. 5. No man can come vnto me, except my father draw him, Iohn 6. 44. Hemingsius answereth, that God draweth, by setting before vs the promises of eternall life, and by ministring so excellent an object: pag. 57. But after this manner God (you say) draweth all men: and such drawing may resist, for all that are as thus drawne by this common grace, follow not: But they that are borne of God, as here our Sauour speaketh, must needes come vnto Christ, vers. 37. All that the father giueth me, shall come to me.

To conclude this place, these patrones of common grace do fall into a flat point of Pelagianisme, whose assertion was this: Vitam eternam omnibus paratam esse, quantum ad Deum, quantum ad hominem libertatem, ab eis eam apprehendi, qui sponte Deo crediderunt: That life eternall, on Gods behalf prepared for all, and as for the libertie of freewill, they lay hold of eternall life, that of themselues beleue God: In epistol. Prosper ad Augustinum. This did the old Pelagians hold, this do the new vniuersalists affirme.

Now to requite vs againe, for this charge, they accuse vs of Manicheisme, the Manichees tooke away the vse of free-will altogether, and affirmed all things to bee done of necessitie, and consequently made God the author of sinne: to this opinion they say, we come neere.

Contra. We defie the monstrous sect of the Manichees and all Manicheisme. First we affirme, all things to be done of absolute necessitie: for though God haue decreed the ende of euery thing, yet this no more bringeth a stoicall and fatall necessitie, then to say that God hath foreseene all things (which they themselues affirme) for whether God onely foreseeth, or beside predestination, things cannot otherwise fall out, then hee hath foreseene or appointed: yet it followeth not, that the yoke of absolute necessitie is therefore layd vpon vs: for neither Gods prescience nor predestination taketh away second meanes and causes, as the libertie of mans will, and such like, but rather establisheth them: for as God did foreknow and ordaine things to be done, so he willed and decreed, and foresaw the meanes whereby they should be done.

1. We make not God the author of sinne, though he haue not elected all: for the not elected, being left to themselues by the corruption of their owne will, fall into sinne, which God foresaw, but hee willed not, but the punishment of sinne, he decreed before, and in his time will see executed.

2. Neither do we take away freewill: which we say is the beginning and fountaine of sinne in man: so man hath a freewill, that is without constraint to do euill. And in good things wee exclude not the will of man: but man (we say) willet, and by grace his will is reformed to will that that is good: So grace worketh, the wil of man is wrought: Man then hath a wil in good things, but altogether passiu: yet God otherwise worketh in man, then in brute beastes, for they haue no will

will or vnderstanding at all, man hath, though corrupted. Hence are all those precepts, and exhortations in Scripture, not that man of his owne accord is able to receiue them: but God speaketh to men as a reasonable creature, that naturally doth will, and vnderstand, that they should be stirred vp by such exhortations, to seeke for further grace at Gods hand, to reforme and regenerate their wilts to the obedience of his holy precepts. Thus then it appeareth, that wee are no Manichees. Other obiections concerning freewill, because they are common to the Papists, and these new freewill men (which differ not much in this matter) I will referue to the treatise of freewill, which followeth. And yet, what said I? that they much differ not? Nay, of the two these vniuersall freemen are more erroneous concerning this point of freewill, than the Papists.

1. The Papists make a distinction of sufficient and effectuall grace on Gods behalfe, Belou. lib. 1. de grat. cap. 2. But these Vniuersalists say that, on Gods behalfe, like effectuall grace is given to all, but their freewill maketh the difference, whereby some beleeuing, make this common grace to themselves more effectuall: So they ascribe more to freewill, namely, to make grace effectuall, than the Papists doe. 2. The Papists say, we haue freewill (yet ayded and assisted by God) to doe good workes: these Vniuersalists say, wee haue freewill to beleue, which is a greater gift, than to doe good workes, which are a necessarie consequent of faith. 3. The Papists say, that the first grace whereby we are iustified, that is the beginning of iustification, is merely of grace both in the giuer and receiver: these Vniuersalists say, that God indeede offereth grace, by mouing, and stirring the heart, but man by his freewill giueth consent to his calling: so that the beginning of their calling is but free in behalfe of the caller, but it is of themselves, that they are effectually called. And thus much of this third inconuenience.

That it is not in a mans power to beleue, Saint Ambrose thus further witnesseth, in 4. ad Gal. vpon these words of the Apostle: Seeing ye know God, or rather are knowne of God: Cum enim hi nos quærent Deum, adducant eos ad suam gratiam: For when they did not seeke God, hee called them to his grace. Lib. 1. de vocat. Gentium cap. 9. Licet in se homini bonum nolle, tamen nisi donatum huius boni, bonum velle: illud contraxit natura per culpam, hoc recipit natura per gratiam: Although it be in man to will that is good, yet he cannot will that is good, vnlesse it be giuen him.

THE FOVRTH INCONVENIENCE

or absurditie.

Absurd. 4. Another consequent of their opinion is, that as it is in mans power to beleue, and obey his effectuall calling, so may he resist it if he will. So Hemingsius pag. 117. lib. 17. libellus of man being moued by the word of God, and the holy Ghost, may both obey and resist the same. The same is affirmed by Succanus de libero arbitrio pag. 405. for they say, that the cause why all beleue not that are called, is not at all for any want of grace on Gods behalfe, but it is onely in themselves, that refuse grace offered: Succan. pag. 919.

Argum. Our Saviour saith, O Ierusalem, &c. how often would I haue gathered thy children together, &c. and thou wouldest not? Math. 23. Wherefore if they would, they might haue been saved: it is therefore in mans power to resist his vocation: se Heming. pag. 117.

Contra. 1. True it is, that it is not for any defect or want of grace on Gods behalfe, that many being called, beleue not, but the defect is in themselves: there is no defect properly in God: his calling is sufficient vnto all; but that it is effectuall to some and not to others, it cometh of their owne corruption, and euilnes of nature, which God taketh away and healeth in whom he pleaseth, and suffereth the rest to remaine in their hardnes of heart.

2. There is a sufficient calling for all, when God offereth the externall meanes of saluation, whereby all might come to saluation, if they had grace to apprehend: this calling may be resisted by men, whom God iustly leaueth to themselves. There is also an effectuall calling, when as God worketh inwardly by the efficacie of his spirit, and draweth his elect, of vnwilling making them willing, to obey their calling: and thus are the elected onely called, and this calling cannot be resisted. So saith our Saviour, Many are called, namely, sufficiently on Gods behalfe, but few are chosen, that is, effectually called, as the elect onely are: The first calling was offered to Ierusalem.

Here it will be obiected: first, This generall calling of God, if it be not effectuall to all, how is not God to be charged with the perishing of those, to whom it is not effectuall?

Ans. God in no wise is chargeable therewith: for Gods calling in it selfe is sufficient to all, it is for want of grace in themselves, that it is not effectuall to them.

Obiect. 2. But why doth not God by the powerfull operation of grace, make it effectuall to all as to some? is he not now partiall?

Ans. God is a debter to none: but whereas all by nature haue made themselves the seruants of sinne, if God in his iustice should leaue them all to themselves, he were not therefore to be iudged vnjust

But now seeing hee of his infinite mercie saueh some, and giueth them his grace, it is not possible in him, who findeth nothing in man to be respected, but a work of his mere grace and will: for, as the Apostle saith, hee hath mercie on whom hee will, and whom hee will hee harden.

That Gods effectuall and gracious calling of election cannot be resisted, thus the Scripture witnesseth: Rom. 9. 19. No man hath resisted Gods will: But as the Psalmist saith, Whosoever is called by the name of the Lord, shall be saved and called. Whom it pleased God therefore to saue, and call by his name, they shall be saved and called.

Job. 6. 37. All that my father giueth me, shall come vnto me. And vet. 43. Every man that hath heard, shall be learned of the father, & cometh vnto me: Now that God saueh any man against his will, but, as Augustine saith, Ex volentibus volentes facit: Of vnwilling he maketh them willing. Augustine also writeth notably of this matter: Non potest efficiere misericordia Dei esse in hominis potestate frustra ille miseratur, si homo nolit: quia si vellet etiam reluctantium misereri, posset ita vocare, quando illis aptum esset, &c. Illi ergo electi, qui sic vocati, et vocantem non resistant: Ceteri non electi, quia non consenti, quantumuis vocati: ad Simplician. lib. 1. quest. 2. It cannot bee in mans power to frustrate the efficacy of Gods mercie, if man will not: for if God also would haue mercie of those, that resist against his mercie, he could also call them, as it were meete for them: They therefore are elected of God, who are so called, that they refuse not their calling: the rest are not elected, which are called, but obey not. And thus much also of this inconuenience, that if man may frustrate Gods effectuall calling, that God shall not haue mercie, vnlesse man will; then is the will of man stronger and of greater power, than Gods will is.

Lastly, concerning these three points: first, that there is a generall calling which is sufficient to all, and beside that a speciall calling effectuall only in some. Secondly, that the generall calling by the hardnes of mans heart may be made frustrate. Thirdly, that the effectuall calling of God can be resisted. Saint Ambrose doth thus witness euidently.

First, he saith, lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. 2. Credimus secundum scripturas, &c. We beleue according to the Scriptures, that Gods prouidence was neuer wanting to the vniuersall companie of men: quod interceptum sibi populum specialibus ad pietatem direxerit institutis, &c. which prouidence of God did yet giue speciall directions vnto godlinesse to his people, which hee had excepted from the rest.

For the second he thus testifieth: Si quis non credit in Christum, generali beneficio ipse se fraudat, ut si quicunque fenestris radiis solis excludat: If any man beleue not in Christ, he doth defraud himself, as if a man should shut the windowes to keepe out the Sunne-beames: lib. 2. cap. 2.

Thirdly, lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. cap. 10. Nihil obistere diuina gratia potest, quo minus id, quod voluerit imparet: Nothing can resist the diuine grace, that it should not fulfill whatsoever it would. And againe, cap. 9. Quantumlibet impiorum malignitas accusetur resistens gratia, &c. Although the malignity of the wicked be accused, as resisting grace; shall it be thought, that they deserued grace, upon whom it was conferred, or that grace, which subdued whom she would, could not conuert them, which remaine vnconquered? they which were called, were the same, which they are that remaine in their hardnes of heart: sed illis tribuitur gratia stupenda, quod voluit; illis terribilis veritas inquit, quod debuit: but grace gaue vnto them, what she would; and iustice rendred to the other, what she due.

Augustine also thus witnesseth: Volenti saluum facere nullum hominum resistit arbitrium: Mans will is not able to resist God, being willing, or purposed to saue: De corrupt. & grat. cap. 14. ibid. Non obstantem voluntati Dei voluntates humanas resistere non posse: It is not to be doubted, but that mans will cannot resist Gods will.

THE FIFT ABSVRDITIE.

Absurd. 5. These patrones of vniuersall and conditionall election and grace, which affirme that men are no otherwise elected, but with condition if they beleue, and so long are they assured, as they continue in faith, doe consequently also hold, that men may both lose their election, and lose their faith: and of the vessels of honour, if they fall from faith, become vessels of dishonour: Heming. pag. 30. And they which are written in the booke of life may be rased out of it: Huber. lib. 7. 57. The same also is maintained by Succentus, that the elect may finally fall away from Christ: pag. 976.

Arg. 1. That election may be lost, they would thus proue it out of Scripture: Exod. 32. 32. Moyses ait vnto God: If thou wilt not pardon them, rase me out of the booke which thou hast written: The Lord answered, Huiusmodi finem habet I put out of my booke. Neither Moses would haue asked an impossible thing, neither would God haue so answered, if that they could not be rased out of the booke of life that are written there: Huber. lib. 7. 66.

Ans. 1. Moses being carried away with an extraordinarie zeale of Gods glory, and love to the people, forgetting himselfe and his owne estate, wisheth, that himselfe should perish, rather then the people: yet it followeth not, that he could perish: For after the same maner S. Paul wisheth the like zeale wisheth he were accursed, so the Jewes might be saved, Rom. 9. 3. yet the Apostle was sure that he could not perish, nor be separated from the love of God, Rom. 8. 38. And he knew there was a crowne of glorie laide vp for him, 2. Tim. 4. 8. No such thing therefore can be inferred vpon these extraordinarie examples of zeale. 2. But the Lord answering Moses, saith, he will put out, &c. though Moses might be carried away in zeale so to speake, yet the Lord speaketh aduisedly. Ans. 2. First, the Lord applieth his speech vnto Moses infirmities at this time, and by way of concession, saith vnto him, that if it were so, that some were to be put out of his booke, yet Moses should not, but they rather that sinned. Again, it is a metaphoricall speech, for God hath indeede no such booke, such putting in or putting out: but by writing in that booke, the decree of saluation is signified; by not writing or blotting out, the decree of damnation: God will put them out that sinne, that is, hath decreed their iust damnation: for otherwise to speake properly they were neuer written in the booke of life, Apoca. 17. 8. Here we haue a direct testimony, that such as are lost, were neuer written in the booke of life; how dare then any man wrest the Scripture to a contrary sense, and so make it speake contrary things? Or as Augustine interpreteth, Non sic accipere debemus. quod quenuquam Deus scribat in libro vite & deleat illum, si homo dixit, quod scripsit, scripsit; Deus quenuquam scripsit, & delet? quomodo ergo ibi delentur? hoc dictum est secundum cornu, quia ibi se scriptos putabant: We must not so take it, as though God writeth any in the booke of life, and blotteth them out again: for if a man said, what I haue written, I haue written (so Pliny said concerning the inscription of the Crosse) doth God write any, and blot out againe? how are they then blotted out? It is so said in respect of their hope, because they thought they were written there.

They also obiekt that place, 1. Cor. 9. 27. I beate downe my bodie, least, &c. I my selfe should be a reprobate: Ergo, the elect may become a reprobate: Puck. rat. 77.

Ans. 1. That Paul was assured he could not be a reprobate, we haue shewed before, for he knew that there was a crowne of righteousness laid vp for him. 2. It is not then to be referred to the person of Paul, as though he feared any reprobation before God, but to his ministerie, least, if he should doe himselfe otherwise then he preached to others, his ministerie should be disgiured, and reproved.

Argum. 2. Now that faith also may be lost, they shew it thus: 1. Corin. 8. 11. Through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish for whom Christ dyed: Ergo, a man may lose his faith and hope: Heming. pag. 24.

Ans. 1. None can finally or eternally perish, whom Christ hath redeemed by his death; for Christ cannot lose any thing of that which is giuen him, Ioh. 6. 39. 17. 12. 2. Therefore the Apostle here by perishing vnderstandeth not a finall destruction, but a shaking or weakning of their faith, which verse 12. he calleth a wounding of their conscience: now it is one thing to wound, another to slay: that this is the meaning, it may appeare by comparing this place with the like, Rom. 14. 15. Destroy not him with thy meate for whom Christ dyed: where the same word is used, as destruere, destroy not: that is, thy brother is grieved, vers. 15. he stumbleth, is offended, or made weake, vers. 21. And againe, vers. 20. Destroy not the worke of God for meates sake: the word is, destruere: so then, destruere, and destruere, destroy not, with the Apostle are all one: and to build vp is contrarie to destroy, as they are opposed, Gal. 2. 18. If I build again the thing, that are destroyed: So then, as to build vp and edifie our brother, is nothing else but to instruct and confirme his faith, so to destroy, is not to perish his person, but to empaire his faith. 3. Or thus we may read, Through thy knowledge thy weak brother shall perish: that is, as much as in thee lyeth, by thy means thy weak brother might perish, not that simplic or absolutely he doth perish. 4. Lastly, S. Paul speaketh not here of the eternall purpose of God, in them for whom he hath giuen Christ to die, but that, as he himselfe giueth the rule, None hopeth all things, 1. Cor. 13. 7. so we should thinke none other of our weak brother that beleueth, but that Christ dyed for him: And that the Apostle thus speaketh, not in respect of Gods secret decree in the death of Christ, but of that hope and opinion, that we ought one to haue of another, it appeareth, Rom. 14. 4. where the Apostle speaking of Gods secret decree, saith, Every man standeth, or falleth to his owne master: euery man standeth not, but some stand, some fall: But in respect of the iudgement and charitable opinion of men, he saith, vers. 3. God hath receiued him: vers. 4. He shall be established: for God is able to make him stand: yet in the same verse, he saith, before God he standeth, or falleth: but in the iudgement of men, euery beleuer standeth, is established, and receiued: and so consequently for him Christ dyed, vers. 15.

Contra. Now on the contrarie side, that both our election is sure before God, neither that the faith of the elect, though it may faile, and empayre, yet cannot utterly be lost, thus we are assured by the euident testimonie of Scripture.

Argum. 1. Rom. 11. 29. The gifts and calling of God, are without repentance: Ioh. 13. 1. Whom God loveth he loveth to the end: Ioh. 10. 29. My father is greater then all, and none is able to take them out of my fathers hand: Ergo, the elect cannot perish.

Augustinus pag. 65. answereth, that no man by violence can plucke the elect from God; yet willingly may fall away: Succensus also graunteth, that on Gods behalfe our election is sure and unmoveable, but not on mens behalfe, vnlesse they continue, and hold fast their faith to the end: pag. 976.

Contra. 1. The text is, My father is stronger then all: he is then stronger then our selues, that neither willingly nor vnwillingly the elect cannot depart from God: For I giue vnto them eternall life with Christ, and they shall neuer perishe: Iohn 10. vers. 28. They can in no wise perish, neither by force, nor by voluntarie declining from God: Ierem. 32. 40. I will put my feare into their hearts, that they shall neuer depart from me: Iosh. 2. 19. I will marrie thee for ever vnto me in righteousnesse.

That Gods election is absolutely sure both on his owne behalfe, and on their part that are elected: our Sauour testifieth, Iohn 6. 39. This is my fathers will, that of all which he hath giuen me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it vp at the last day. All that are elected, shall be assuredly raised vp to eternall life: And God, to such as he hath chosen, will giue grace to continue. They therefore that finally fall away, were not elected in the beginning: And that faith, which some haue made shipwracke of, 1. Timoth. 1. 19. is not the iustifying faith of the elect, but a temporarie, or historical faith. Mens falling away from faith then, cannot make Gods election voyd: as the Apostle saith, Shall their vnbelief make the faith of God without effect? Rom. 3. 3.

We notwithstanding confesse, that Gods election standeth fast, and is immutable in them that are elected, not by their owne strength, but by the grace and gift of God, for of our selues we are weak and changeable, readie to fall away, but that we stand by grace, as Ambrose saith, de uocat. gentium. c. 9. Si defecit erat fides tanti Apostoli, nisi pro eo Christus uideret, merat et propheta mirabilis, &c. If the faith of so great an Apostle should haue fayled, if Christ had not stood for him, there was mutabilitie in him, for the vnchangeable firmenes of the minde is not to be found in re.

Obi. If they, whom the Apostle speaketh of, made shipwracke onely of a temporarie faith, and not a faith in shew, or imagined, then they lost nothing: And is it a sinne worthe of eternall punishment, to lose the image onely, and shew of faith? Againe, where S. Paul sayth, In the latter times some shall depart from the faith: they may as well here also vnderstand, a dissembled and imagined faith: Huber. thes. 2. 47.

Ans. First, though those, which the Apostle speaketh of, had not a true iustifying faith, and therefore could not make shipwracke of that which they had not, yet had they more then a bare image of faith: for they had a forme of knowledge, and the profession of the truth. Men also in shipwracke may be lightened, taste of the heavenly gift, be partakers of some gifts of the holy Ghost, taste of the word of God, and of the powers of the world to come: Hebr. 6. 4, 5. And these things not in shew onely, but in their kinde and measure in some sort indeed, for it is but a taste (as the Apostle saith) as it were a full draught: and yet for all this they haue not a iustifying faith, which if they had, they could not finally fall away. Therefore though they haue but an image or shew of the truly iustifying faith, which they indeed haue not, but seeme onely to haue, Luk. 8. 18. yet a kind of such they haue indeed, which they make shipwracke of. Secondly, the Apostle here vnderstandeth not a right iustifying faith, which worketh alwaies by loue, Galath. 5. 6. and is ioynd with a good conscience, Rom. 5. 1. 1. Timoth. 1. 19. But these first had put away a good conscience, and then made shipwracke of their faith. To this purpose S. Ambrose lib. 2. de uocat. Gentium c. 1. Optatus erat perdere miserum fidem, qui non exercebat charitatem: He was worthe to loose an vnprofitable faith, which did not exercise charitie: such a fruitlesse faith then may be lost. Thirdly, faith in the place alleged, the Apostle vnderstandeth the forme of true doctrine, as it appereth by the opposit member, they shall depart from the faith, that is, from the doctrine of the truth, and giue heede to the doctrine of diuels: So in this place Hymenaeus maketh shipwracke of faith, that is, concerning the truth hath erred, 2. Timoth. 2. 18. And the Apostle sheweth wherein he erred, saying, the resurrection is past already. Thus by making shipwracke of faith, the Apostle vnderstandeth, the leauing of the truth, and falling into error. Fourthly, and for this Apostata from the truth, they deserved eternall punishment, without their repentance: although the Apostle speake not here of eternall damnation, but faith onely he had deliuered them to Satan, that he excommunicated them, for their amendment, to learne not to blasphemize: as he decreed concerning the incestuous young man, 1. Corinth. 5. 5. who notwithstanding afterward repented, and was restored.

Argum. 2. 2. Timoth. 1. 19. The foundation of Gods remission is sure, the Lord knoweth who are his. We then thus reason: Gods prescience cannot be deceived: but God foresawe in the beginning not onely in generall, but in particular, who should be saved: Ergo, the same, and no other shall be

be ſaued : therefore none of the elect can periſh. So Auguſtine writeth : Horum, qui electi ſunt, ſiquiſſiam perit, fallitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia non fallitur Deus : Item ſi quiſſiam periret, nemo vitio vincitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia nulla re vincitur Deus : If any of the elect ſhould periſh, God is deceiued, but none of them periſheth, becauſe God is not deceiued : if any of them periſh, God is overcome by the infirmities of man ; but nothing can overcome God : therefore none of them periſheth. This argument drawne from the definite certaintie of Gods preſcience, hath not yet been answered by any of theſe Vniuerſaliſts : neither ſhall they euer be able to answer it.

Obiect. Doe we not ſee by experience, that many which beleeued, fall away ; how is not faith then loſt, and election withall ? We anſwere with Auguſtine : Firſt, they that finally fall away, neuer were endued with a right faith, nor elected of God : Quibusdam filijs ſuis Deus non deſeruit rantiā, quia non ſunt de illis predeſtinatis, qui verū ſunt filij promiſſionis : Vnto ſome, which appeared to be Gods children, God giueth not grace to perſeuer, becauſe they are not of the number of the predeſtinate, which are the true children of promiſe. Secondly, but concerning the elect he ſaith : Horum fides aut omnino non deſecit, aut ſi deſecit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur : Their faith either faileth not at all ; or if it doe, it is reſtored before their life be ended : Lib. de corrup. & grat. cap. 7. 8.

Saint Ambroſe alſo ſaith, in 8. ad Roman. Qui credere videntur & non permanent in fide, a Deo electi negantur : They which ſeeme to beleue, and continue not in faith, are not elected of God : Eſt qui ad tempus eligitur, ſicut Saul & Iudas, non de preſcientia, ſed de preſenti iuſtitia : there is, one is choſen for a time, as Saul and Iudas, not of preſcience, but according to their preſent iuſtice.

Obiect. If then the elect cannot finally periſh, nor be deprived of their faith, to what end are all thoſe admonitions in Scripture, Let him that ſtandeth take heed leaſt he fall : to him that ſitteth ſaith will I giue a crowne &c. Succurrit to this answereth well, that theſe exhortations doe here ſeemes to preferue our faith, and doe ſtirre vp in vs a care of godlines, whereby we may receiue in aſſurance daily of our election : pag. 470. for though our election be alwaies ſure before God, yet is it not otherwiſe aſſured to vs, but by the effects and workes of our calling, 2. Pet. 1. 10. And though our ſaluation be certainly decreed before God, yet is it by meanes, ſuch as he hath appointed, accompliſhed toward vs. As Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth, lib. 2. de vocat. gent. cap. 10. Quamuis quod ſtatuit Deus, nulla poſſit ratione non fieri, ſtudia tamen non tolluntur arandi, nec per ſollicitudinis propoſitum liberi arbitrij deuotio relaxatur : Although that which God appointeth cannot be but done, yet the ſtudie or deſire of prayer is not taken away, nor the deuotion of mans ſoule releaſed by election.

And for the certaintie of election he further thus teſtiſeth : Lib. 2. de vocat. gent. c. 9. Sunt milia infidelium in hac ſorte numeratus, ita nullus piorum ab hac ſorte diſcretus : de plenitudine propoſitionum corporis Chriſti, preſcientia Dei, qua falli non poteſt nihil perdit, &c. As no vnbeleuer is numbred in this lotte, ſo none of the godlie is ſeparated from it ; for the preſcience of God, which cannot be deceiued, doth looſe nothing of the fulneſſe of the members of Chriſt.

Hierome Epist. ad Pammach. & Ocean. rehearſeth this to be one of the errors of Origen : that in the ende after diuers worldes, Idipſum ſortis Gabrielem, quod diabolum ; Paulum, quod Cuiusdam Gabrielem ſhall be the ſame, that the diuell ; and Paul, that Cuiusdam : Huberus hath the like ſaying, as I haue ſhewed before, that Paul and Peter were no more elected, then Iudas.

And thus much of this inconuenience, which they are driven to confeſſe, namely, that election and faith may be loſt : whereupon follow many abſurdities, as we haue ſcene : Firſt, that by this meanes the preſcience and foreknowledge of God may be deceiued, if election, which is both foreſaw and decreed, may be altered. Secondly, Gods purpoſe of ſaluation is by many manerſe ouerthrowne : that if he hold not, neither doth the decree holde. Thirdly, it breedeth vncertaintie of ſaluation, and ſo deſpayre : for by this meanes the ſtrength of our hope is ſtayed vpon mans freewill : a miſerable hold for a diſtreſſed conſcience to ſtay vpon. Fourthly, the Vniuerſaliſts herein are more erroneous then the Papiſts : for they confeſſe an absolute and determinate certaintie of our election before God, though they deny a full perſuaſion and aſſurance thereof vnto men : but theſe deny both : Let vs now finiſh the reſt.

THE SIXTH INCONVENIENCE

Aſſurd 6. In ſaying that God onely purpoſed to ſaue thoſe that ſhould beleue, and to condemne all vnbeleuers, they conſequently affirme, that, Incredulitas ſi unica cauſa condemnationis that incredulitie is the onely cauſe of condemnation : Huber. theſ. 187. And ſo they conuincate other ſinnes, as Proculus : In ſimplice ignoracione, aut incredulitate, nullum eſt ſcelus : In ſimple ignorance and vnbeleefe, there is no ſinne, ration. 56. And againe, Exiſtentiā peccati originis, minimum æternæ mortis placet : That no man is puniſhed eternally for originall ſinne : ration. 13. That and other miseries of this life, are onely the punishment of originall sinne: namque Sheweth also saith, that the originall corruption of mans nature, is not the foundation of reall reprobation, but the contempt of the grace of God: His reason is, because every man should be relected, because there remaineth originall corruption in all: De praedest. cap. 655.

Cur. 1. That simple ignorance or incredulitie excuseth not, S. Paul sheweth, Rom. 2. 12. They are as have sinned without the lawe, shall perishe without the lawe. And verse 14. They having not the lawe, are a lawe to themselves. Here the Gentiles are not accused of wilfull contempt of grace, but of simple ignorance, yet are they worthe of condemnation. Secondly, that originall sinne in it selfe deserueth eternall death, it is at large declared by the apostle, Rom. 5. 12. By one man sinne entered into the world, and death by sinne. And afterward sheweth what death, The fault came of one offence to condemnation, verse 16. Thirdly, that originall sinne is not the ground or cause of reall reprobation, and actuall condemnation, in part true, in part false: It is true, because by the mercie of God it is not imputed to those which are saved by Christ, as no other finnes are: It is false, first, because, though originall sinne be not imputed by grace, yet in it selfe it hath sufficient matter of condemnation: againe, it is the ground of all actuall sinne; and sinne is the ground or cause of damnation: thirdly, vnto the ground of reprobation, as vnto such children of infidels, as are not saved by election of grace.

Now concerning wilfull incredulitie, and contempt of grace, that it is not the only cause of reprobation, I will briefly shew by these two arguments, ab incommode, which follow. It will follow vpon this opinion, that all those nations of the Gentiles, which had no knowledge of God, were freed from damnation, because the Gospell was not preached vnto them, Act. 14. 16. In times past God suffered the Gentiles to walke in their own wayes, verse 17: he notwithstanding left not himselfe without witness, in that he gaue them rayne from heauen, &c. They had no witness but the testimonie of the creatures: the word they had not, Act. 17. 30. The time of this ignorance God regarded not: Seeing therefore that grace was not offered them, they could not bee contempters of grace, and so consequently by their opinion, were free from damnation.

Now goeth about here rather to make an answer, then indeed answereth: All these nations which were strangers from Israel, and from the promise, in the beginning contemned the promise of redemption offered, and refused the promise, and therefore were worthe relected: De praedest. cap. 665.

Let it be graunted, that all nations at the first despised the promise (yet shall he neuer be able to proue, that in the time of the lawe, grace was vniuersally offered to all people) how can their posteritie after them be counted contempters of grace, which they neuer heard of? The punishment of finnes, though they may be the cause of temporall punishment vpon the children, yet can they not, in the iustice of God, be the ground of their eternall relection. And as for their originall corruption, it is confessed already, that it cannot be the foundation of reall reprobation. To this obiection therefore we expect a more sufficient answer.

The obiection is strongly vrged and enforced by Saint Ambrose: lib. 1. de vocat. gent. cap. 5. Libertas pars hominum parte peruenit, &c. Part of mankind is deliuered, the rest perisheth; and it will ascribe this to the wils of men, that grace neglected the euill, and did chuse the good: Infinitis innumerabilibus causa popularum: The condition of innumerable people will gainsay vs, vpon whom for many ages no light of heauenly doctrine did shine: neither can we say, that their posteritie was better, of whom it is said, the people, that sate in darkenes, saw great light. As Ambrose concludeth, that the Gentiles were not called for their merites, because they sate in darkenes, and had no heauenly light: so it may be inferred, that they could not contemne or despise that light which did not shine vnto them.

Secondly we object, concerning the infants both of the faithfull and infidels, that if vnbeleefe only exclude from election, then are they not excluded, for they are not capable of faith, and therefore cannot despise faith and grace. To this obiection diuers answers haue been deuised, but none of them sufficient.

First it may be, and is answered of some, that infants are iudged according to the foresight of their beleefe or vnbeleefe, if they had lined.

Cur. 2. Augustine confuteth this, by that place of S. Paul. 2. Cor. 5. 10. That every man shall be rewarded according to the things done in the bodie: he saith not, which were foreseene, should be done, but which were verely done. Againe, Christ vpbraiding the vnthankfull cities that saw his miracles, and repented not, saith, If the great works which have been done in them had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they had repented, &c. By this reason Tyre and Sidon should not haue been iudged, because of the foresight of their repentance.

De praedest. nat. Sancto. cap. 12.

Secondly, It may be ſayd, that infants dying, though they be not ſaued, becauſe they haue no faith, yet are they not damned, but they ſhall haue a certaine kinde of beatitude, though not in the kingdome of heauen.

Contra. But this alſo is ouerthrowne by S. Paul, Rom. 9. where he ſheweth, that by conſent ſince death came vpon all to condemnation: and therefore children, if they be not ſaued, are neceſſarily damned. This alſo is confuted by Auguſtine lib. de bon. perfeccion. cap. 12.

Thirdly, Succanus answereth concerning the children of the faithfull, that they are all ſaued, and belong vnto the promiſe, Gen. 17. 7. I will be thy God, as I ſee thee: S. Paul ſaith, 1. Cor. 7. 14. p. 667. As for the children of infidels, he leaueth them vnto God, who may deal with them (he ſaith) extraordinarily, and further he deſigneth not their ſtate.

Contra. 1. Concerning the children of the faithfull that dye in their infancy, we affirme that they all by nature are ſubiect to eternall damnation, and if God adiudge any of them to eternall damnation he doth it juſtly: which we leaue vnto Gods ſecret iudgement: yet we are bound rather to iudge, that the infants, whom God calleth to himſelfe, and ſo prevent the curſe of death, are ſaued, becauſe they are vnder the covenant. And here we vnderſtand not onely the children to be vnder the covenant, whoſe immediate parents were beleeuers, but if any of their predeceſſors in former times beleeued, for the promiſe of grace is made to a thouſand generations, Exod. 26. But whereas Succanus holdeth all the children of the faithfull, both thoſe that dye, and they that remaine, that they are elected; whereas we ſee, that many righteous mens children fall away from God: how can it be? vnleſſe they will affirme, that men may fall away from election, which how abſurd it is, we haue ſhewed before. Again, though the children of the faithfull be ſaued by the covenant of grace, yet are they not by faith: faith then alone is not the obiect of election, as they affirme.

2. Concerning Infidels children, it is ſtrange that Succanus ſo much forgetteth himſelfe, as to ſend vs to Gods extraordinarie and ſecret working; whereas he telleth vs, I am ſure about hundred times in his booke, De predeſtinatione; that God dealeth not with vs in the manner of predeſtination, Secundum abſolutam ſuam, aut extraordinarium potentiam, according to his extraordinarie power, pag. 677. aut occulta ſua voluntate, or after his ſecret will, ſed ex lege ſui ſeruitutis ſecundum ſcripturam patefacti, pag. 633. but after the lawe of his covenant ſet forth in Scripture: What meaneth he then in the predeſtination of infidels children to ſend vs to Gods extraordinarie will, and ſecret will? he ſhould haue ſhewed vs ſomewhat revealed in Scripture.

But to helpe him a little: we affirme, that euen children of Infidels, whom it pleaſeth God ordinarily to be elected: firſt, ſuch children of Infidels, whoſe immediate parents were vnbeleuers, but their former anceſtors were faithfull, may be ſaued by the covenant of grace, which endureth a thouſand generations: the reſt that are ſaued, whoſe progenitors were altogether Infidels, are ſaued by Gods ſecret election: vnto the which Succanus is faine to flye for the reſolution of this queſtion. And thus much alſo of this inconuenience.

Saint Ambroſe thus enforceth this obiection concerning infants: Lib. 1. de vocat. Gen. cap. 1. Reſpice ad vniuerſalem multitudinem paruulorum, &c. Look vnto the vniuerſall multitude of little ones, which all before the viſe of vnderſtanding and freewill, ſome goe vnto eternall happineſſe being regenerate, others to perpetuall miſerie being not borne againe: If you conſider their originall ſtate, they are all guiltie: if you ſeek for innocencie, they are all without fault: non inuenit, quod deſeruit humane iuſtitia, ſed habet, quod eligat inenarrabilis gratia: Humane iuſtice can find nothing, to diſcriminate or make difference, but the vnſpeakable grace findeth ſomewhat to elect. The election of children is grounded onely vpon the grace of God, here is no foreſight, or reſpect had vnto faith.

THE SEVENTH INCONVENIENCE.

A Bſurd. 7. If it were ſo, that God elected ſo many, as he foreſaw ſhould beleeu, and vpon this foreſight cauſed the Goſpell to be preached vnto them, and that God reiected thoſe whom he foreſawe would not beleue, and therefore ſuffered them to abide in ignorance ſtill, there were no myſterie or ſecret at all in our faith, why God hath choſen ſome, and reſuſed others: for election is apparant, becauſe ſome beleue, and others doe not. But Saint Paul acknowledgeth here a great & vnſearchable myſterie, that ſeeing al are ſhut vp in vnbeleife, and ſo are in the ſame common caſe, yet God hath mercie onely on whom he will. Whereupon the Apoſtle in admiration of this great ſecret, crieth out, O the deepnes of the riches of the wiſedome and knowledge of God! how vnſearchable are his iudgements, and his wayes paſt finding out? Rom. 11. 33. To this place our aduerſaries anſwered diuerſly.

Fiſt Puckinus ſaith, that the Apoſtle crieth not out in admiration, as not finding a ſolution concerning the queſtion, why ſome were choſen, others reſuſed: for it had been a thing vnworthy ſo great an Apoſtle, ſo to leaue his diſputation imperfekt: but it is rather, laudingly diſcuſſed in this doubt, that the cause why some are refused, is their diffidence onely and distrust, he giueth thanks to God for the finding out of this solution, from whose wisdom hee had learned

1. The Apostle bringeth no such solution here, as he dreameth of, as though the cause were in the beleefe or vnbefe of men, why God had mercie on some, and not on others: nay rather the contrarie appeareth, because the Apostle saith, All men are shut up in vnbefe: they are all equally like, none in themselves more worthy of fauour then other: And therefore all as acri-bution to Gods mercie: but mercie is free, and therefore not caused by any desert of faith, or work.

2. The Apostle falleth into an admiration, the manner of his speech declared: and he plainly teacheth this doctrine farre to exceede all humane reach: Gods wayes (he saith) are vnsearchable in finding out: Is not this equaller therefore ashamed, to confesse that doctrine to be easie and plain, which the Apostle calleth deepe, profound, and vnsearchable? 3. Neither doth the As-tropher haue his disposition imperfect, but it is perfect and absolute: (If we vnderstand such perfection, as man in this life may attaine vnto) for otherwise if the knowledge of the greatest Prophetes Apostles in this life be compared with the reuelations of the life to come, it is imperfect in part, and prophesie in part, when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be dissolved. 1. Cor. 13. 9, 10. Neither doth Saint Paul commit any thing vnworthie his Apostleship in setting himselfe to the depth of Gods iudgements: but here sheweth himselfe an example to others, which hee teacheth others, That we men presume to vnderstand above that which is meete to

Apostle to be ignorant of some part of Gods counsell, no more, then where else he saith, he heard was secret in Gods counsell? 4. In another place he saith, that we men presume to vnderstand above that which is meete to he will, and refusing as it pleaseth him, are vnsearchable, they scorne and deride both vs and our faith. But we hold this in religion to be a great absurditie, to measure diuine mysteries by humane wit, and by reason to vnderstand that which is by faith to be beleeued, Thus farre of the absurditie, and strange conclusions, which the patrons of vniuersall sauing grace doe maintaine.

That God hath created men without any particular knowledge or determination of their

That God electeth vpon the foresight and foreknowledge of faith.

That it is partly in mans power by the strength of his freewill to beleeu.

That a man may resist the effectuall calling of God.

That the elect may become reprobates, and so lose both their election and faith.

That contempt of grace is the onely cause of reprobation, whereas many nations neuer had grace offered, and so could not contemne it: and infants beside are not capable of faith, which therefore they cannot despise.

They affirme the doctrine of Predestination to be easie and plaine, and within the compasse of mans vnderstanding: All these inconueniences they are forced to graunt, who affirme that Christ died effectually for all men vniuersally, and not for those onely whom he ordayned to life.

To these we may adioyne other absurdities: first, that if Christ died for all, and yet all be not saved by Christ, it followeth, that Christ for some dyed in vaine: this Huberus willingly granteth, lib. 1. c. 13. But the Scripture saith, that Christ loseth nothing of all, that is giuen him, Iohn 6. 39. Inall that he gaue himselfe for, are giuen vnto him. Secondly, that the efficacy of Christs death may be made frustrate by man: confessed by Huberus thes. 1. 1. 24. denied by Saint Paul, shall their disobedience make the faith of God without effect Rom. 3. 3. Thirdly, that in respect of Christ there is no difference betwene the reprobate and the elect, seeing he died effectually for both, graunted by Huberus pag. 11. 27. denied by the Apostle, God is the Saviour of all men (for he sauech both men and beasts being the preferuer of that which he hath made) specially of those that beleene, 1. Tim. 4. 10. Ergo, God hath done somewhat more specially for beleeuers as their Redeemer, then for other men, as their Creator.

I will then conclude this place with that saying of Augustine, Quomodo istis dixit, non esset ex misericordia? quia videbat eos ad sempiternum exitium preparatos, non ad vitam eternam sui sanguinis participatos: How did our Saviour say vnto some, you are not of my sheepe? because he saw, they were prepared to euermlasting destruction, not appoynted to life eternall by the price of his blood: Tractas. in Iohann. 48. Here Augustine testifieth two things, both that the wicked and vnbeleuers are ordayned to euermlasting death, and that the blood of Christ was onely shed for the him of saluation.

lastly, I will adioyne the seale of this doctrine, that is the testimonie of the holy martyrs: Iohann Caristo thus professeth his faith, I beleue that Christ did effectually dye for all those that effectually beleue, and repent, and for none other, Fax. pag. 192. col. 1.

Thus haue I sufficiently (I trust) maintained this auncient truth concerning the efficacy and benefit of Christs death ordained onely for the elect: wherein (I doubt not) but that they which are somewhat wauering, and not yet settled in iudgement, may soone be reloued, if on the one side they doe consider the substantiall groundes, and euident demonstration of the truth, and on the other the weakenes of their proofes, the diuersitie of opinion in themselves, and the necessary consequence of so many absurdities, that follow vpon the opinion of vniuersall or common grace. Wherefore I wonder, that some heretofore thoroughly perswaded of the truth, should now begin to stagger in opinion: to whom may be applyed that saying of the Apostle, I marvell that ye are so soone removed away to another Gospel, Galath. 1. 6. Again, Who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth, to whom Iesus Christ was before described in your sights? Galath. 3. vers. 1. Wherefore the death of Christ being so euidently described vnto vs in Scripture, to appertaine onely to the elect: let vs therein rest, and leauing all other strange and new opinions, which may disturbe our peace, and distract simple mindes, let vs from henceforth follow the truth in love: which God graunt.

THE THIRD QUESTION, OF THE cause of Predestination.

The Papists.

Our aduersaries are not all of one opinion concerning this matter. The Rhemists affirme, 24. Error. that God doth neither elect nor reprobate any, but in respect of their workes either good or euill: Concerning election thus they write, Christ doth not appoyne any by his absolute and eternall edict, so be partakers of the fruite of his redemption, without any respect or condition of their owne

workes, obedience or free will. Rhom. 9. 11. 12. Concerning reprobation also, thus they say: God doth not hate any man, but for sinne, or the foresight thereof, Rom. 9. 11.

Bellarmino is of a contrarie iudgement to the Rhemists, so well they agree together: for he confesseth that the election of Gods Children dependeth onely of the gracious will of God without any respect to their workes: he graunteth, electi esse gratis, ante omnem operum praesumptionem, that they are elected freely, before any foresight of their workes, lib. 2. de grat. cap. 10. And he doth not onely affirme it, but proueth it by many arguments, and at large confuteth the contrarie opinion. But for reprobation, his sentence is this, Partim ad saluti Dei voluntatem, partim ad peccata praesumpta referendum esse: That is partly to be referred to the will of God, partly to the foresight of sinne: not wholly to either, but in part to both. cap. 16.

And further he explaineth his mind thus: there is, saith he, reprobatio negativa, a negative reprobation; as thus, God hath no will or purpose to saue the wicked: There is also reprobatio positiva, a positive reprobation, as when God doth ordaine some, not onely not to be saued, but to be condemned: the first act of reprobation dependeth onely of the will of God, without any respect had vnto men: the second is caused by the foresight of sinne. ibid.

And here we doe not much mislike the Iesuites opinion in this matter as agreeable to ours, and not much differing from the truth, as euen now shall be seene: so that in this place we haue no great cause to contend with Bellarmino: but our whole busines is with the Rhemists.

First, for their sentence concerning election, that it ariseth onely from the foresight of our workes, they reason thus, the Apostle saith, He is made the author of salvation, to all that obey him Heb. 5. 9. They are not elected we see, without condition of obedience: To the same purpose also is alleged by some that place of the Apostle, 1. Tim. 2. 20. In a great house, &c. and some vessels are for honour, some for dishonour; if any man purge himselfe from these, he shall be a vessel of honour here we see, that by free will and good workes a man is made a vessel of honour.

Ans. First, God in deede electeth all that shall be saued, not with any condition on their own behalfe, but on his owne behalfe, for vnto them, whom he chuseth he will giue grace to obey, will to beleue, and power to doe that he appointeth.

Secondly, good workes are the effects and fruites that follow Predestination, Rom. 8. 10. whom he hath predestinate he hath called, whom he hath called, he hath iustificed, &c. Therefore they can be no cause of election.

Thirdly, a better answer cannot be found, then that which Bellarmino maketh: the Apostle saith not, that a man by purging himselfe from vice is made a vessel of honour, but onely, placatus is, or shall be: that is, is knowne so to be, for our faith and obedience are no cause why the Lord is elected vs: but they are meanes certifiatorie, and infallible arguments to assure vs of our election: as S. Peter saith, Make your election sure, &c. Epist. 1. 10.

Argum. 2. Rom. 8. 29. Those which he know before, he predestinate to be made like to the image of his sonne, &c. Ergo, Gods prescience is the cause of predestination.

Ans. First, God in deede doth know in his prescience all those, which are predestinate to life: for how can they be predestinate, if they be not knowne. Secondly, the Apostle saith not, he knew them before to be like, &c. but he did predestinate them to be like his sonne: this conformation then is an effect of their Predestination, not a cause. Thirdly, Gods prescience here may be taken for the knowledge of approbation: as Iohn 10. Christ is said to know his sheepe, then to loue them, approue them: So Psalm. 1. God is said to know the way of the righteous.

Argum. 3. Matth. 20. Call the labourers and give them their reward, Ergo, heaven is ordained for mens good workes.

Ans. First, this place sheweth that good workes are the way vnto heaven, wherein we must walke; but not, that the decree of life hath respect to good workes: There is difference then betwene the decree of predestination, and the execution thereof: good workes goe before the possession of heaven, but not before the decree and ordination.

Secondly, S. Ambrose out of this place frameth a contrary argument, prouing thereby, that election is altogether of grace without any respect to workes, Lib. 1. de vocat. gentium. c. 3. Huius undecimas utromissis in vineam, &c. They which were sent into the vineyard at the eleventh houre, by the diuine indulgence were made equall to the labourers of the whole day, not paying the price of their labour; but shewing the riches of his goodnes to those, whom he choole without workes. Let vs now see on the other side, what they can say concerning reprobation.

Argum. 1. The Apostle saith, Wrath and indignation shall be upon the soule of every man, that doth euill Rom. 2. 9. therefore the reprobation of the wicked hath relation to their euill workes.

Ans. S. Paul speaketh not in this place of the decree of reprobation made against the wicked, but of the execution rather of that decree: the euill workes then of wicked men, are not the onely cause of their reiection, which is an absolute acte of Gods owne will, yet are they a iust cause of their damnation: that although wrath and indignation be decreed against them from the beginning,

fore they haue worthwhile deference of the damnation decreed against them.

First, there is great difference between damnation in se, and the decree or sentence of damnation: God indeed condemneth none without their desert; for there is no man which is damned in hell but by his evil life before worthily deserved it: and it is most true, which his faith: Bonus est Deus, iustus est Deus, potest aliquis sine bonis meritis liberari, quia bonus est, non potest quinquam sine malis meritis damnari quia iustus est: God is good, and God is iust, he may free a man without any good workes of his, because he is good; but he cannot condemne any man without his euill deserts, because he is iust. etiam. Tullius 3. c. 8. Secondly, but as for the decree and sentence of condemnation, it is no vniuersall thing for God, as it pleaseth him to dispose of his creature, whether to honour, or dishonour: as the potter hath right and power to make of the same drayfells either to honorable, or vile vses, Rom. 9. 21.

The Protestants. That the election of the faithfull proceedeth onely from the mercifull and gracious will of Arum. 1. That which is the effect of our election, cannot be the cause thereof: but good will is the fruites and effects of our election: Ergo. This is proved by: Saint Pauls God first chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy: Ephes. 1. 4. upon the which Augustine writeth vs, Elegit nos ut essemus sancti, non quia fueri eramus, sed ut essemus, & secundum voluntatem suam, non nostram, quia bona esse non possit, nisi ipse secundum liberam voluntatem suam boni fieret, jubens uteretur: He hath chosen vs, saith the Apostle, that we should be holy, not because we should be holy, but to the end we might be holy, and according to his good pleasure, not after our owne will, which could not be good vnlesse he according to his good will should first vs to make it good. So then our holines and obedience is a fruit and effect of our election, not a cause thereof, neither is there any freewill or good disposition in man, till God make it good.

12. The Apostle saith, Our election, is not of the willer, or of the runner, but of God that elects. Rom. 9. 16. Ergo, the mercie of God is the only ground of our election: for if our faith or works should be for any such end or purpose foreseene, it should be of the willer, and man which the Apostle denieth. Augustine also saith: Quia per gratiam liberamur, non uisus meritis nostris, sed uisus misericordia nominamur: Because they are saved or delivered by grace, they are not called by their owne merites, but vessels of grace, de uero gratis lib. 1. c. 5. Yeachie Rhetorike saith against themselves, that Gods meere mercie is keen in the elect: Rom. 9. scilicet. Ergo, election is a worke of Gods meere mercie: there is then no respect at all had to our works, for it were not of Gods meere and sole mercie.

Matth. 23. Luke 12. It is your Fathers pleasure to give you a Kingdome: Iohn 15. You haue not chosen what I desire for you but if men be chosen for their good works; then they should chioose God self. Rom. 8. 14. I haue referred or left to my selfe some thousand, yet the faith not, they are referred but hauee referred: to then saith the Apottle, there is a remanent through the election of grace if of me, then not of works.

Likewise Rom. 9. 11. the Apostle propoundeth the examples of Isaac and Eſau, of whom it was ſaid, I have loved, Eſau have I hated, before they were borne, and before they had done good or euill, the purpoſe of God might remaine according to election, not by works: Ergo, Gods election is not upon the ſight of any mans works.

There are examples of temporal, not spiritual blessings, and laetitia and Esse signify two people, the Apostle speaketh not of the election or reprobation of any in particular.

considering glory: verſ. 53. That he might ſhow the riches of his glory upon the ſervants of mercy, preparing glory. 2. So likewise he entreath of particular election; and reprobation; every appear by the example of Pharaoh, who is brought in as an inſtance of particular reiection.

Argum. 4. Bel'mine that mightily impugneth this opinion, wth diuers effectfull reasons out of Scripture, to proue election to proceed onely of grace: I will brieflie reapeate them.

1. None can be faued without faith: but faith is the gift of God: Ergo, election is sine free of God. It will be answered, that faith is not giuen to all; because all will not receive it, but they which do obey their calling (for God calleth all, and giueth all sufficient helpe to beleue, if they will) are foreseene that they will beleue, and so predestinate. Contra. Though God do offer vnto all generall and sufficient means of their calling, yet none can beleue, vntilse God shall be saved; but perseverance is the free gift of God, of grace, not of works: nor yet given to all: Iohn 13. 17. If ye know these things, blessed are ye, if ye do them: I speak not of you, but of them whom I have chosen: Ergo, election vnto life is of grace.

Without the gift of perseverance, none can be saved, Matt. 10. He that endures to the end shall be saved.

3. Infants dying, some are saved, some condemned, having done yet neither good nor bad: Ergo, election is not of works: it will be answered, that Infants are predestinate according to the foresight of their works, which they should have done, if they had lived: and beside, Infants are not condemned to hell, but have a place of rest appointed for them, though they be not saved. Contra. 1. The Apostle saith, Every man must receyue according to the things done in the flesh, 2. Cor. 5. 10. not foreseene to be done. 2. Againe S. Paul sheweth, that death and condemnation are the reward of originall sinne, Rom. 5. 12. vnto which Infants are subiect being borne in originall sinne: if then they are not saved, they are condemned.

4. Christ as he was man was freely predestinate to be the Sonne of God Rom. 1. 4. man Christ could not deserue by any workes to be the Sonne of God: Ergo, his members also are freely predestinate.

5. If men were elected by the foresight of their works, then it should be no mysterie nor matter of admiration as the Apostle maketh it, Rom. 11. 33. for the reason is evident, why God electeth some and not others, namely because of their workes that are foreseene. Belarmus de grad. cap. 12.

Secondly, concerning the decree of reprobation, our sentence is this: first, that as eternal damnation is from the beginning ordained for the elect, so eternall destruction is decreed for the reprobate: for we cannot but affirme, that God both our first Creator, and last Iudge, did bestow life and appoint the end of every creature. Secondly, God doth reiect the wicked two wayes, first, in his eternall counsell, and falls, by the execution of his counsell and decree, which shall be in their actiual damnation: his counsell or decree of reiection is also twofold, it is either preteritionis, the absolute decree in passing by or not choosing some, but leaving them in their owne nature: And this is called reprobation in two respects: first, by way of comparison, he that is not loued or lesse loued, is said to be hated, as Gen. 29. 31. Israhel is said to despise Rachel, that is, he loued her not as he did Rachel: and Deut. 21. 15. if a man haue two wives, the other hated &c. that is, not so much loued: secondly, it is so called because of the antecedent, because reprobation and damnation followeth vpon the decree of preterition. Thom. decretum ex prescientia, the decree of reprobation issuing out of Gods prescience and foreknowledge: who as he did foresee in the beginning the obstinacie and wickednesse of men, so he ordained in his iustice the same to be punished: as a Iudge foreknowing and vnderstanding the wickednesse of a malefactor, may iustly with himselfe ordaine his punishment, before he hath brought forth in open iudgement. From hence wee obserue these three things: first, the difference betwene those two decrees: the decree of preterition or omission is not the efficient cause of damnation, but onely an antecedent or forerunner to it: the proper cause of damnation is the sinne of the creature: the external or accidental cause is the iustice of God, that must either wise chuse, but punish sinne: but the decree of prescience, according to the foresight of their sinnes, that are reiectod, doth ordaine and procure vnto them most iustly eternal damnation. Summa Doui decretis, & ordinant efficiuntur ut iustis iudex: God as a iust Iudge, is the efficient cause by his decree of the punishment, sum. respons. ad ration. 72. Secondly, we must note the difference betwene the decree of election and reprobation: for men are elected without any foresight of their workes, but they are not reiectod without respect to their workes: God did both sinne and ordayne both the godly life and glorious saluation of the elect, as the proper cause of their both; but as for the sinnes of the reprobate, God foresaw them onely: their guilt and deserved punishment, he both foresaw, and did ordaine: so that, causa perditionis ab hominibus interna, scilicet a Deo externa est: the cause of mens perdition is inward in themselves, the cause of their saluation is external from God; sum. respons. ad ration. 16. Thirdly, the decree of preterition, that is, of not choosing some, which Belarmus calleth negative reprobation, is a free act of Gods will, without respect had to the creature; but the decree according to Gods foreknowledge, hath relation vnto their workes: so that the decree of reprobation, as it dependeth not absolutely altogether vpon Gods will, without respect had vnto the sinne and rebellion of the reprobate, so neither doth it spring onely from the foresight of sinne, as the Reuocists affirme, that God doth not reprobate any but for sinne.

Argum. The Lord saith, I haue lotted Israhel and hated Esaú, before that the children were borne, or had done either good or euill, Rom. 9. vers. 11. As God loued Israhel, so he hated Esaú: but he loued Israhel freely, without respect to his good workes: Ergo, Esaú was hated, that is, not loued or chosen of God, without any foresight of his euill workes. This place then is as strong to proue the free and voluntary act of reprobation, as it is for free election.

Augustinus putteth the case of two twinnes: Quorum unus assumitur, alium relinquimus, desuper est electus,

One of them is received, the other forsaken, their end is farre vnlike, yet the works of them both are the same. Two Infantes die in their Infancie, before Baptisme, and so as the Papists hold, is damned; another after Baptisme, and is saued: the works of them both are alike: if therefore their predestination should depend of the foresight of their works good or euill, they should both haue the same end.

As we see it to be in children, so saith Augustine in lib. 1. de ciuitate dei. in uoluntate seruimus quod uolunt. We neede not to doubt, but that God euen so dealeth with men of greater yeeres: before he concludeth: Inuestigabili ergo est Dei misericordia, quacumque uult miseretur, nullumque propter merita, & inuestigabili ueritas, quacumque uult obdurat. eius praedictio non meritis, sed eum ex seipso seruatur, plerumque conuincitur. Therefore vnsearchable is the mercie of God, whereby hee mercie on whom he will, no merites of his going afore: and vnsearchable is his truth, whereby hee hardeneth whom he will, his deserts going before, but the very same with him, vpon whom hee hath mercy, de personarum lib. 2. cap. 1. 1. It remaineth then, that neither election, nor reprobation are decreed, because of mens works: that are foreseene, but do proceede from the free will and Counsell of God.

Lastly, I will adde one other reason out of Augustine, to shut vp this place withall: Si hominibus quod creatum primitus constat ex nihilo, non cum debita morte & peccati origine nasceretur, & immortale creator dampnaret in eternum non uultis demerere uoluit interire, quia omnipotenti Creatori deum non facili fieri If that mankind, which in the beginning God created of nothing, were not by nature subiect both to sin, and death, and yet the almighty Creator would condemne some to lasting destruction, who would say vnto him, Lord why hast thou done so? His opinion is, that though there were no matter of condemnation naturally in man, yet God by the right of his Creatorship, might dispose of his creature as hee thought best, whether vnto death or life: therefore the decree of reprobation is not caused onely by the foresight of mens works: but immediately from the eternall will and counsell of God.

Lastly, that election is onely of grace, S. Ambrose is a notable witness, lib. 1. de uoc. gentium. Speaking of Infantes, of whom some are saued and elected, others refused, he thus concludeth: Non meritis, quod differunt humana iusticia: sed habet, quod eligat incommutabilis gratia Humane iusticia finde nothing whereby to discern them, but vnspcakable grace findeth how to elect: againe, Omnes hominum cuiuslibet generis creatus percipienda gratia uoluntas Dei est, quoniam ratio electionis abscondita est, &c. The cause of receiuing grace vnto all men, of what condition, is the will of God, with whom the reason of election is hidde and secret, their moe beginning from that grace, which they receiued without merites.

De predest. lib. 1. cap. 16.

Datur uita uoluptu laborum, unde quisque mercedem accipiat, secundum suum laborem, &c. Right before any labour, whereby according to their labour every man shall receiue reward, lib. 1. c. 3. Tales fuerunt, qui sunt attriti, &c. They which are called, are the same, that which remaine in their hardnesse: His tribuit gratia stupenda quod uoluit, istis rationibus ueritas dei debet: ut iudicium Dei magis inuestigabile sit in electione gratia, quam in retributione iustitiae One giuech to them, as she would; Justice rendereth to the other, that which is due: that the iudgement of God should be more vnsearchable in the election of grace, then in the retribution of iustice.

Secondly, that actuall reprobation is decreed to none without their deserts: that although election cannot be merited, yet that damnation is deserued, the same father thus witnesseth, lib. 1. de uoc. gentium. Nec damnati iusti est quoniam, nec iusti iusti uerax est arrogancia: si uultis deus non uult se puniri, uel ille afferat meritis se gratiam, &c. Neyther can the damned iustly complaine, nor iustified truly boast; if either he say he hath not deserued punishment, or the other, that he hath deserued grace: cap. 9. Cum illos propria nequitia demergat ad pandum istos Dei gratia perdat Seeing their wickednesse doth cast them downe into paine, and grace bringeth the other to glorie.

Lib. 1. de ciuitate dei as he is alleaged, cap. 23. qu. 4. c. 24. Nec de iudicio Dei querimus, quid deserit meritis, & misericordia eius gratia delinquit, quia laborat non meritis liberari Neyther do we complaine of the iudgement of God, whereby he forsaketh those that deserued to be forsaken; and we give thanks to his mercie, whereby he deliuereth those, which deserued not to be deliuered.

Thus we conclude, that actuall reprobation is not decreed to any, nor excepted without respect to their deserts; yet the electing of some, and the not electing of others dependeth onely of the absolute will and purpose of God, as I haue shewed.

tion of saluation, to be confident of Gods grace and saluation, and fidet demoniorum, not Apostolom the faith of diuels, not of Apostles, Rhemist. 1. Corin. 9. scil. 9. So the Tridentine Councell callath certitudinem remissionis peccatorum, vnam, & ab omni putato remotam fiduciam, the certaintie of remission of finnes, a vaine and faithlesse perswasion. And therefore euery man, De gratia firmi- lond, & timere potest, may stand in doubt, and be afraide, whether he be in the state of grace, scil. 6.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul saith: I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby iustified: Paul did not assure himselfe, whether he were iustified, Rhemist.

Ans. Paul was most sure of Gods grace, and his iustification through faith, Rom. 8. 38. He is persuaded that nothing can separate him from the loue of God in Christ: but hee doth acknowledge, that he is not iustified by his faithfull labours in the Gospell, or any other works of his owne, although he were cleere in conscience.

Argum. 2. Philip. 2. 12. Workes your saluation with feare and trembling: Ergo, men must not be secure of their saluation.

Ans. We doe not teach men to walke securely, or presume of their election, but wee protest vnto them, that seeing men are predestinate vnto good workes, that vlesse they be carefull to lead an holie life, they cannot assure themselves to haue part in predestination: yet wee teach men notwithstanding, assuredly to beleene the promises of God made to all those that beleene, to be saved. And this confidence doth very well agree with the feare of God. See these arguments answered more at large in the second part of iustification, quest. 2. argum. 3. and 4. Then as Pro- per well saith: sentent. 6. ad capitul. Gallor. Gratia non abolet arbitrium, sed adolet: Grace doth not abolish mans will and endeouour, but cherish it. So predestination doth not make men more secure, but more carefull.

The Protestants.

Our securitie of saluation is no vaine presumption, but an assurance vpon the word of God, that through faith in God, and walking in that way which God hath appointed vs, wee shall vndoubtedly come in the end to eternall life.

Argum. 1. As our election is certaine, sure, and vndoubted before God: so it is the Lords pleasure, that euery Christian while hee liueth, may and ought in himselfe to be assured thereof by a lucky faith: as Saint Peter teacheth vs to labour and giue our diligence to make our calling and election sure, 2. Pet. 1. 10.

Argum. 2. Rom. 8. 38. Saint Paul saith, I am sure, that neither death nor life, &c. shall separate vs from the loue of God in Christ Iesus: Ergo, the Apostle was certaine of his saluation.
Rhemist. First, the Apostle speaketh onely in generall: as if he should haue said, So many as are called, cannot certainly perish.

Ans. It is false, for the Apostle pronounceth particularly of himselfe: as more plainly, 2. Ti- moth. 4. 8. From henceforth there is laid vp for me a crowne of righteousness.

Rhemist. Secondly, Saint Paul might haue this perswasion by some especiall reuelation.

Ans. The ground of the Apostles perswasion is none other, but that which is common to all the faithfull, the loue of God in Christ. And so Augustine interpreteth this place, writing thus: Isti, De corrept. & grat. cap. 7. quos iam sunt ad Timotheum, &c. These, of whom the Apostle speaketh, are signified in another place to Timothy, 2. 2. 19. The foundation of God remaineth sure, the Lord knoweth who are his:
By this assurance and confidence is common, though not in the like measure to all faithfull Christians. So the Apostle saith, 2. Tim. 4. 8. that there was a crowne of righteoufnesse laid vp not onely for him, but for all those which loue his appearing.

Beard also telleth vs, what this reuelation is: Hoc non fit, nisi reuelante spiritu per fidem homini a- strum dei propositum super sua salute futura: qua sane reuelatio non est aliud, quam infusio gratia spiri- tuali, per quam facta carnis mortificatur: This is not brought to passe, but by the spirit of God reuealing vnto a man by faith, the eternall purpose of God concerning his saluation: which reuelation is nothing else but the spirituall infusion of grace, whereby the deedes of the flesh are mortified, &c. Epistol. 108. So then a man by reuelation of the spirit commeth to the knowledge of his saluation: but not by any speciall or extraordinarie reuelation, but that which is by faith, and worketh mortification, which is common to all the faithfull. See more of this, part. 1. of Iustification, quest. 2.

Augustine also saith: Quia non secundum merita nostra sed illius misericordiam firma est promissio, ve- ni deus cum erepitatione predicare, unde non potest dubitare: Because the promise remaineth stedfast, not by our workes, but his mercie: we must not with trembling and fearefulness pronounce that, whereof we cannot doubt. No maruile then if Papists doubt of their saluation, because their confidence is built vpon their workes: but if they would with the faithfull of God, renounce their owne workes, and be content to submit themselves to the faith of Christ, they would not thinke it so straunge a thing, for Christians to haue a full and stedfast perswasion of their saluation.

Bernard alſo ſaith : Pignus ſalutis donat ſpiritus, reddens teſtimonium ſpiritus tuo quid ſilius Dei ſis : qui certiffima ſigna prædeſtinationis tua cordi tuo imprimat & oſtendat ſerm. 2. in die Pentecoſt. The holie ſpirit giueth vs a pledge of our ſaluation, giuing teſtimonie to thy ſpirit, that thou art the ſonne of God: which doth imprint, and ſhew to thy heart moſt ſure ſignes of thy predeſtination. If a man may haue ſure ſignes of his predeſtination, how is hee not ſure and certaine of his predeſtination?

Saint Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth de obit. Theodoſ. Fidelis Deus, qua ſeruis ſemel præparat, non ſubtrahit, &c. God is faithfull, what he once prepareth for his ſeruants he taketh not away: if our faith remaine, the promiſe alſo holdeth: See O man the grace of God toward thee, in terris quateris, & in celo poſſides: thou art ſhaken, or toſt in earth, and haſt a poſſeſſion in heauen, let thy heart be where thy poſſeſſion is.

See this truth ſealed by the holie Martyrs: Maſter Tyndal ſaith thus: Chriſt is thine, and all his deedes are thy deedes: neither canſt thou be damned, except Chriſt be damned with thee: neither can Chriſt be ſaued, except he be ſaued with thee: Fox pag. 1248.

Maſter Bradford: Know for a certaine, that as the diuell goeth about nothing ſo much, as to bring you in doubt, whether you be Gods child: ſo what ſoener ſhall moue you to admit that dubitation, be aſſured, the ſame to come of the diuell: Fox pag. 1640.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROVERſIE, of the grace and gifts of God.

The ſeueral questions handled in this part, are theſe: firſt, whether the grace of God, whereby we are made acceptable vnto him, be a qualitie inherent in vs. Secondly, of the diſtinction of ſufficient and effectual grace, and wherein the efficacie of grace conſiſteth. Thirdly, of the diſtinction of grace operantis, cooperantis, helping and working grace.

THE FIRST QUESTION, WHETHER Grace be a qualitie inherent.

The Papiſts.

37. Error.

The Ieſuite ſetteth downe this diſtinction of grace: There is gratia gratis data, & gratia gratum faciens: Grace freely giuen, and they are ſuch ſpiritual gifts of wiſedome, knowledge, vncrance, and ſuch like, which are giuen rather for the benefit of others: there is alſo grace, whereby we are made acceptable vnto God, the grace of iuſtification; which grace Bellarmine defendeth to be, qualitatem per modum habitus in homine permanentem, a qualitie, in manner of an habite, reſiſt and permanent in man, de grat. lib. 1. cap. 3.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the diſobedience of one ſhall many be made righteous, Rom. 5. 19. But wee are made ſinners, not by the imputation of Adams vnrighteouſnes, but by ſinne inherent, and permanent in vs: Ergo, we are iuſtified, not by the imputation of the righteouſnes of Chriſt, but by iuſtice or righteouſnes inherent in vs, Bellarm. cap. 4.

Anſw. Firſt, I marueile that the Ieſuite hath ſo ſoone forgotten himſelfe: for before he denied, that originall ſinne is a politie qualitie in man: lib. 5. de amiſſ. grat. cap. 15. Here he affirmeth the contrarie, that it is a qualitie or habite inherent in vs, which is all one, as if he had ſaid, it is a politie qualitie: for what is it to be inherent, or permanent in vs, but the ſame, which he calleth politie? Secondly, Saint Paul in this place compareth the things themſelues together, that as by Adam we are made ſinners, ſo we are iuſtified by Chriſt: not the manner how they are done. This note of ſimilitude then, ſo by the diſobedience of one man, doth not inferre a likenes or equalitie in euery reſpect, but wherein they are compared. The Ieſuite therefore can no more gather vpon this (ſo) as hee doth, that our righteouſnes by Chriſt muſt be inherent, as our ſinne by Adam is, then that naturally we ſhould be iuſt by Chriſt, as we are euill naturally by Adam: or that vniuerſally all men ſhould be ſaued by Chriſt, as all are dead in Adam: or that Chriſt ſhould free vs from the mortalitie of bodie, as Adams ſinne hath made vs ſubiect to death, and corruption. As this (ſo) doth not enforce a neceſſitie of theſe things, ſo neither of that inſtance, which the Ieſuite vrgeth. Thirdly, that the Ieſuite may more fully vnderſtand our minde, even in this point alſo, in ſome ſort, the ſimilitude may hold: for as in originall ſinne there are two things, the guilt of Adams ſin, which though it were not by vs actually committed, yet is ours by propagation, and the corruption or deprauation of nature, which is the fruit of Adams diſobedience, verily and really graft in vs: ſo in our iuſtification are two things; firſt, the imputation of the righteouſnes of Chriſt, which answereth to the propagation of Adams ſinne, and the effects or fruits of this righteouſnes, that is, holines and ſanctification; which is an imperfect iuſtice inherent in vs: yet not by this, but by Chriſts

Christ's justice imputed, are we made iust before God: as by the propagation of Adam's sinne wee are properly made sinners, Roin. 5. 12. The corruption of our nature being the fruite and effect, or punishment rather of Adam's disobedience in his posteritie.

Prop. 2. Our Saviour saith, Iohn. 7. 38. He that believeth, out of his belly shall flow rivers of waters. The Apostle saith, Roin. 5. 5. The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, &c. 1. Iohn 3. 20. Ye have an ointment from him that is holie, &c. 1. Iohn 3. 9. His seeds remaineth in him. This fontaine, ointment, &c., what is it else, but an habite of grace inherent, whereby wee are made acceptable to God? Beilarm. cap. 2.

Ans. In those places the Scripture speaketh not of the first grace of iustification, whereby we are accepted before God, but of the second grace of sanctification, whereby we are approved vnto him, which is a consequent of our iustification by faith: as Iohn. 7. 19. This spake he of the spirit, which should be come in him should receive. And Roin. 5. 1. We are first iustified by faith in Christ, then the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, vers. 5. So then the fontaine, ointment, &c., is in the regenerate, doth signifie their spirituall state and strength wrought in them by the iustification of faith: so that they are first iustified by faith, and then these graces are conferred and bestowed vpon them.

The Protestants.

That grace whereby we are iustified, and made acceptable before God, is not a qualitie inherent or dwelling in vs, but we are made iust by the imputation of the righteousness of Christ: that righteousness which is in vs, is imperfect, and not able to iustifie vs before God.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul saith, He hath made him to be sinne for vs, that knew no sinne, that wee should be made the righteousness of God in him, 2. Cor. 5. 21. Out of this place this argument may be drawne: As our sinnes were made Christs, so is his righteousness made ours: but our sinnes were not habitually inherent in him, but onely imputed: Ergo, his righteousness, and the grace whereby wee are iustified, is not inherent in vs, but imputed onely.

Ans. 1. If wee are iustified by faith onely, then this iustifying grace is by imputation onely, not inherent in vs: but faith onely iustifieth: Ergo. The proposition is thus proved: Faith iustifieth either formally and actually as a qualitie inherent, or instrumentally or passively, as it apprehendeth the iustice of Christ: but it doth not iustifie, as it is a qualitie or grace wrought in vs, for the Apostle saith, not of works, Ephes. 2. 9. Therefore faith, as a worke in vs iustifieth not: for then other spirituall graces, as loue, hope, should iustifie as well as faith: if faith then onely iustifie instrumentally, as it apprehendeth Christ, then doth the proposition follow, that the grace, whereby wee are iustified, is not inherent in vs, but in Christ apprehended.

That faith onely iustifieth, the Apostle evidently propoeth, Roin. 3. 28. We conclude that a man is iustified by faith without the workes of the law. And if they answer, that the workes of the lawe are here excluded, not the workes of grace: Saint Paul elsewhere doth also exclude such workes: By what are ye saved through faith, not of workes, &c. And afterward hee sheweth what workes: Every man's workes, which God hath ordained vs to walke in: these are workes of grace. But of this matter wee shall entreate (God willing) more at large, when we come to handle that waightie controverisie of iustification by faith. Other arguments also for this matter which wee have in hand, wee will bring forth in the question of inherente iustice.

We will conclude here with that sentence of Augustine: Iustitia sit, sed ex gratia sit. A Deo sit, non a se: sacerdos sit, inquit, sed induitur iustitia: vestis accipitur, non cum capillis nascitur, pecora de se iustificantur: Let there be righteousness, but let it be of grace, let it be of God, let it not be thine owne: Let thy Priests (saith the Psalmist) be clothed with righteousness: cloathing is received outwardly, it groweth not in vs, as our haire, nor as the sheepe are clothed of their owne: De corp. & anim. Jer. 13. So then iustifying grace is no more ours or inherent in vs, than the vesture or garment, which wee are clothed with, which is not in vs, but onely adhereth, and is applied to vs.

We want not here the testimony of some of their owne writers, as Albertus Pighius thus teacheth, lib. 5. de lib. arbitrio. In seculis imaginantur gratiam dei qualidam aliquam incrementum animae. In the schooles they thinke that the grace of God is a qualitie created in the soule, either by nature with the habite of charitie, or diuerse from it: qua commentitia uniuersa existimo, &c. which I thinke all to be but fained, and to haue no warrant or authoritie from the Scriptures.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE DISTINCTION or difference of sufficient and effectuall grace.

The Papists.

Beilarmus thus distinguisheth them: gratia sufficiens, sufficient grace, is when God doth so call and stirre vp a man, ayding and assisting him by his direction and protection, and working together together with him, that the man thus called, hath power to will that which is good, but yet in deede willeth it not: gratia operatur, effectuall grace is that, whereby a man so ayded, assisted, and called, doth will indeed and performe that which is good, lib. 1. de grat. cap. 2. This then is the Iohannes opinion, that Gods internall vocation, and his speciall grace inwardly working, is not to all effectuall, but sufficient onely: being sufficient for their conuersion, but yet not in deede effecting it.

Argum. The Lord saith thus by the Prophet Isay: What could I haue done any more to my vineyard, that I haue not done vnto it? I looked that it should bring forth grapes, & it bringeth forth wild grapes, Isay 5.4. The like place we haue Matth. 23.37. O Ierusalem, Ierusalem, which killest, &c. how often would I haue gathered thy children together, as the Henne, &c. and thou wouldst not: These had grace necessarie and sufficient to their conuersion, for the Lord saith, What could I haue done more, and I would haue gathered them together: yet were they not conuerted: this grace then, whereby they were called, was sufficient: yet not effectuall, Bedam. cap. 11.

Answ. These places alleaged are not vnderstoode, of the internall calling, or of grace inwardly working, but onely of the externall calling, and oblation of grace, and the supplie of all necessarie outward meanes to saluation. As the Prophet Isay speaketh of hedging the vineyard, casting out the stones, planting it with the best plants, setting vp a watch tower: that is, they had the watchmen the Prophets, also the best plants, the true worship and seruice of God, they had the law and the Prophets, and all stones, that is externall impediments, which might hinder them, were removed: So our Sauiour saith, that he would haue gathered them together by his preaching, and by the voice of the Gospell, as the Henne by her clocking doth call her chickens, but they refused, and resisted, as they likewise squired the Prophets, and other messengers of God, for vnto them.

We graunt then, that the externall meanes of saluation in themselves may be and are sufficient to all, but effectuall onely to those, to whome God giueth his especiall grace: and in this sense we doe not much mislike this distinction: but we deny any such difference of the internall grace, whereby God calleth, stirreth vp, assisteth, moueth, directeth the hearts of men: this grace cannot be sufficient in any, but it must needes also be effectuall. Yet here we desire not to be mistaken, but further doe enlarge our meaning thus: First, we denie not altogether this distinction of sufficiencie and efficacie: it hath place in the externall calling, and common grace offered to all, which is sufficient to many, but effectuall onely to the elect: but not in the inward spirituall calling. Secondly, we graunt a diuers measure of inward grace in the effectuall calling of the elect, and admit some degree in their spirituall calling, which though it be not alike effectuall in all, they are so called, yet is it effectuall. Thirdly, we confesse, that somewhat may be inwardly wrought by Gods spiritue even in hypocrites: but we affirme, that no inward temporarie gift wrought in them is sufficient to their saluation: for hereupon it would follow, that they might resist their inward powerfull, sufficient calling, and that the absence of their owne will onely maketh it without effect: that therefore there is no such powerfull inward working grace sufficient onely, but that the same is effectuall also, we shew it thus.

The Protestants.

Argum. 1. The Prophet David saith, I will runne the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart, Psalm. 119.32. Draw me, and we will runne after thee, Cantic. 1.1. And S. Paul saith, Whom he hath predestinate, he hath called, whom he hath called, he hath iustificed, Rom. 8.30. All these places proue that the internall calling of God is alwaies effectuall: After drawing and enlarging the heart, followeth running, after vocation, immediately ensueth iustification.

Argum. 2. The grace of God is not in vaine in any: as S. Paul saith, His grace that mannes, was not in vaine, 1. Corinth. 15.70. But if so that the grace of God inwardly mouing and calling men, should fayle in the effect, then should it be in vaine: Ergo, it is effectuall in all the children of God, in whom it so worketh.

Let Augustine speake: Lex extra hominem scripta ut eum terrificet, gratia in homine est, ut eum in seculum iustificet: The lawe is written without man to terrifie him, grace is within man inwardly to iustifie him, de spir. & liter. cap. 17. As terror then outwardly followeth the knowledge of the Lawe, so iustification alwaies followeth grace inwardly working: it is therefore alwaies effectuall where it is sufficient, speaking of the inward and spirituall calling. Also in another place he saith: Quando Deus docet, sic docet, ut scienda sciamus, aperiendo veritatem, sic docet, ut facienda faciamus, inspirando iuauitatem: When God teacheth, he so teacheth, that things which are to be knowne we doe know, God opening the trueth to vs, and althings which are to be done, we doe, by inspiring a desire into vs, Psalm. 118. con. 17. Gods inward teaching then by his holy spiritue is alwaies effectuall in his children, and in none of them it is sufficient, but together also effectuall.

Magister sent. 1. lib. 1. dist. 17. litter. K. thus testifieth, Spiritus sanctus non solum scilicet non habent, verum etiam habent non in cassum permittitur, non habent quidem, ut habeatur, habuit, ut amplius habeatur. The

The holy spirit is not given in vaine neyther to him, that hath it not; nor to him, that hath: to him that hath not, that he may haue him, to him that hath him, that he may haue him in greater measure: Wherefore the inward calling of the spirit is alwayes effectuall.

AN APPENDIX OR SECOND PART OF THIS question, wherein the efficacie of grace consisteth:

The Papists.

Bermaine dare not attribute the efficacie of grace onely to free will; that this should be the cause, why that grace in some worketh effectually, in some others it doth not, because some giue their free assent vnto grace working in them, other withhold it: for then (saith he) it should rest in mans power, whether Grace should be effectually or not: Neither doth he thinke, that God onely is the cause of this efficacie; by drawing and framing our willes to consent to his grace: but this efficacie, he saith, partly dependeth of Gods inward perswasion, partly of the free assent of the will. Denz (saith the Iesuite) quos efficaciter trahere decreuit, ad assensum addibet, quos ut trahere incipit, in seculo eorum God doth vse that perswasion to those, whom he purposeth effectually to call, which he knoweth best to fit their humour, and which it is most like they will agree vnto, Belarmin cap. 12. So thus in the Iesuites opinion, God is not a drawer, or worker of mans will, but a mouer, and perswader onely.

Argum. If God should not onely moue and perswade men by his spirit; but also produce and worke in them the very act of willing: then should there be no freewill in man to doe any thing; and so no action in man should be voluntarie, but of necessitie and constraint, because man is not left to himselfe, to giue his assent freely; but his will is determined of God, Belarmin lib. 1.

Ans. First, it is no absurditie at all, to say that in man by nature there remaineth no freewill at all, to that which is good: for our Sauour saith, Without me you can doe nothing, Iohn 15. 5. but our consent or will vnto good is somewhat, therefore of our selues without Christ we cannot doe it. Augustine saith, Cum de libera hominis voluntate loquimur, de illa scilicet, in qua homo factus est, loquimur: When we speake of mans freewill, we meane that, wherein man was created; denique cap. 57. He graunteth no other freewill to good; but that, which was once in Adam, and is now vtterly lost. But of this more, by Gods grace, in the question of Freewill.

Secondly, although God onely doth conuert and incline the will of man to goodnes, yet for all this man worketh willingly, not of necessitie or constraint: for our Sauour saith, If the Sonne make you free, ye shall be free indeede, Iohn 8. 36. God of vs willing maketh vs willing. And here we refuse not the distinction of their owne gloss; Caus. 23. qd. 2. c. 24. There are two kinds of necessitie: Simplex una, altera condicionalis: A simple necessitie, as it is necessarie that men be mortall; conditionall, as when I see a man walke; it is necessarie he should walke; not necessarie by the nature of the thing, for simple it is not necessarie to walke, but in respect of the condition, because I see him or know him to walke: so in respect of Gods knowledge, and working grace, there is a conditionall necessitie, but no simple or absolute necessitie in these things themselves, which yet doe retain their owne libertie; Thus farre, and to this purpose the Gloss.

The Protestants.

God onely is the cause, that his grace worketh effectually, and is not in vaine in vs; neither doth he onely moue and perswade, but actually worketh the assent and inclination of the will. It is God that worketh in vs, the will and he deede, Philip. 1. 13. God worketh in vs more then to moue or perswade: Dens operatur in nobis velle: God worketh in vs so will, which doth the will, but produces in vs the act of willing: To bring forth the very act of willing, which the Iesuites denyeth, cap. 12. So the Scripture saith, that God opened the heart of Ephraim; but for attended to these things that Paul saith, Act. 16. 14. To open the heart, is more then to moue; for the heart doth betokeneth rather an actual operation, and inclination of it. Further, those places which are alleged to proue that the efficacie of grace doth not depend wholly vpon the assent of our will, do likewise shew, that mans will herein worketh not at all; but the whole worke in making grace effectually, is to be ascribed to the spirit of God: as Iohn 6. 43. Every man that hath heard hath learned of the Father, cometh to me, Psalm 94. 12. Beatus homo, quoniam non indiget, ut doceatur the man, whom thou teachest O Lord. 1. Cor. 14. 7. Who separateth thee, who hath benediction but not vnto him. These texts doe as well proue that no part of the diuine worke is to be ascribed to mans will, as that the whole is not: for if Gods teaching onely cause vs to come vnto him, and make vs blessed, if God onely separate vs, &c. then it is of Gods spirit onely, that grace worketh in vs effectually.

Cccc

Argum. 2. We will desire no better prooffe, then the Iesuites owne confession: who being pressed with that place, Iohn 6. Every one that hath heard, and learned of my father, commeth unto me, verse 45. thus answereth, Infalibitatis effectus, non habet pro causa studium discipuli, sed excellentiam magistri, sicut allegat dominus ibidem prophetiam Isaia, erunt omnes doctores Dei: The infallibilitie or certaintie of the effect, consisteth not of the desire and studie of him that is taught, as the cause thereof, but of the excellencie of the teacher, as in the same place our Lord Christ alleageth the Prophecie of Isay, They shall be all taught of God, Iohn 6. 45. Bellarmin. cap. 12. And againe he saith: Si eadem motione accepta unus credit, aliter non credit, longe maiorem habuit Dei gratiam, is qui credit, quam qui non credit: If by one, and the selfe same motion inwardly received, one man beleeveth, another doth not, surely he that beleeveth hath a greater grace of God, then he which beleeveth not: id. grad. lib. 1. cap. 13. respons. ad obiecl. 3. Here Bellarmine ascribeth the efficacie of grace, to the excellencie of the teacher, and to the greatnes of grace, which some have, and others have not: It is then of God onely, nothing of our selues, that grace worketh effectually in vs. Augustin. de ciuitate Dei. lib. 18. cap. 12. Augustin. also saith: Alia est causa iam credentis in Deo, alia non credentis, qui enim non credit, verum lumen videre non potest, nisi Deus prius in corde eius spiritus suo illuxerit: atque ipse non est voluntarius, aut currentis, sed miserentis Dei: There is another reason of him, that beleeveth in God, and of him, that beleeveth not: for hee that beleeveth not, cannot see the true light, vntill God first doe lighten his heart with his spirit: and so it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercie: cont. Pelagian. art. 3. The cause then of beleefe, is onely the illumination of Gods spirit: for if any thing were to bee ascribed to man, it should not be wholly of him that sheweth mercie, but somewhat also of the willer, and the runner, which the Apostle denieth. 1 Cor. 12. 3. non est gloria nostra, sed dei, qui operatur in vobis.

Concil. Atrani. 2. can. 2. Si quis sine gratia Dei, credentibus, volentibus, desiderantibus, suadentibus misericordiam dicit conferri, non autem diuinitus per inspirationem spiritus in nobis fieri, raptus a Platone qui dicit, quid habes, quod non accepisti? If any man say that mercie is conferred vpon those that beleefe, desire, studie, &c. of themselves without the grace of God, and not rather wrought in vs by the inspiration of the spirit, resisteth the Apostle which saith, what hast thou, which thou hast not receiued? It is the inward inspiration then of God, not our voluntarie consenting, that grace is effected in vs.

Their owne decrees also thus testifie: Part. 3. dist. 42. 154. Qui dixerit gratiam Dei, qua iustificamur, &c. Hee that saith, that the grace of God, wherewith wee are justified by Iesus Christ, is onely of force to forgive vs our finnes, not that we should not commit them afterward, let him be accursed. If it be the grace of God, that both taketh away our sinnes already done, and keepeth vs from committing the like, what is left vnto mans will? Id. c. 155. Qui dixerit, &c. Hee that saith the grace of God doth helpe onely to reueale vnto vs the will of God, whereby wee knowe what to desire, and what to shunne, and that thereby we are not enabled to do that wee knowe, let him be accursed. Grace then doth not onely moue or perswade, or reueale vnto the will what is to be done, but giueth power to do it.

of Grace into gratiam operantem, & cooperantem, vel adiutantem:
grace-working, and grace-helping.

30. Error.

Bellarmin. thus doth define and distinguish them: Gratia operans est, qua facit ut volumus: It is the working grace, which maketh vs to will; that which is good: Gratia cooperans, qua facit ut quod volumus, impleamus: Helping grace, or grace working together with vs, is that, which causeth vs to fulfill, for doe that, which wee will or desire: Bellarmin. cap. 3. This then is his winde, that God onely worketh the beginning of euery good action; that is, the consent of the will: but the accomplishment of the action is not onely of God, but he worketh together with man. 1 Cor. 12. 3. non est gloria nostra, sed dei, qui operatur in vobis.

Illustration. The Iesuite would illustrate his matter by this similitude: As if it were expedient for a man to saile into the East countries, and yet hee is vnwilling, his friend cometh, and perswadeth with him, and prouideth things needfull for the navigation, as money, victuals, and such like: though his friend may say, I onely was the cause; that hee tooke the navigation in hand, yet can hee not say, that I onely caried or conueyed him vnto that place, but helped him onely: So saith hee, God onely worketh the beginning of any action by perswading the will, but hee is helping onely and assistant to man in the finishing thereof, lib. 1. de grat. cap. 13.

Answ. First, this similitude is very insufficient, and the things here compared are altogether vnlike:

vnlike: for what presumption is it, to match the doing of man with the power of God? First, man draweth onely by perswasion, he hath no power ouer an others heart: but God is greater then our heart, he doth not onely applie perswasion to it, but bendeth and turneth it: as Augustine also saith, Deus magis habet in potestate hominum voluntates, quam ipsi suas: God hath greater power ouer the willes of men, then they haue themselves. Secondly, all the helpes that man prouideth, or ministreth for any action, are externall: But God is ayding and assisting euery where by his power, and worketh mightily in the inward man. We see then the insufficiencie of this similitude.

De concept. & grat. cap. 14.

Ans. 2. Though it were a fit and meete comparison, yet we know that similitudes proue not, no more doth this: it needeth not therefore any large confutation.

The Protestants.

THis distinction of grace, that it should be sometime the principall, chiefe, and onely working cause in man, and another while but ayding, and assisting onely, and that man should bee ioyned with God as a fellow worker in any good action, wee holde it to bee a blasphemous doctrine: that the will of man worketh together with grace, as it is, causa physica, a naturall cause of such actions as are wrought by man, not respecting the qualitie and goodnes of them, but the worke onely, we deny not: but the grace of God onely is, causa moralis, the morall cause of euery good action. As they are but actions and operations, so they proceede from the will of man: but as they are good or commendable, they are the workes onely of grace.

Argum. God worketh the will and the deede, Philip. 2. 13. As he worketh the will, so also he worketh the deede; the will of God alone worketh: Ergo. Again, That God may be all in all, saith the Apostle, 1. Corinth. 15. 28. But God should not bee all in all in euery good action, if man should be ioyned as a fellow worker. S. Iames saith, Every good and perfect gift is from above: 1. 17. therefore no good gift, or worke is from below, that is of man, either in part, or in whole. Our Saviour Christ saith, Sine me nihil potestis facere: Without me, you can doe nothing: of the which words Augustine writeth thus: Non ait sine me difficile potestis facere, aut sine me nihil potestis perficere, sed ne facere quidem: Hee saith not, without me you can hardlie doe any thing, or without mee, you cannot finish any thing, but you are not able to doe it at all: cont. 2. Epistol. Pelag. lib. 2. cap. 8.

But if so that in any good action God should worke part, and man part; then might man worke somewhat, that is his part, without Gods helpe: And if God doe but helpe to worke, what is that else, but to giue power more easilie onely to worke; as though man, without that helpe, yet more hardly and difficultlie of himselfe might doe it: But all this is contrarie to that saying of our Saviour, Without me you can doe nothing.

Saint Ambrose here hath an excellent testimonie, Epist. 84. Gratia Dei tota repellitur, nisi tota recipitur, &c. The grace of God is wholly refused, if it bee not wholly received: and as hee is no full man which in any one poynt dissenteth from the catholike veritie; Sic extra gratiam est infirmus, qui aliquid de eius plenitudine differtur: So hee is without grace, which doth deny any thing of the fulnes thereof: Grace then worketh fullie, and not in part onely.

De decr. pars. 2. distinct. 4. c. 156. Quicumque dixeris, &c. Whosoever saith, that the grace of iustification is giuen, that, what we are bid to doe by freewill, Facilius impleamus per gratiam, we should doe more easilie by grace; let him bee accursed. If Gods grace doe but helpe to worke, what doth it else but onely make vs more easilie to worke, which this canon condemneth.

The Master of sentences maketh both these, the working grace and helping grace, all one grace and gift, Lib. 2. dist. 26. Ier. 1. I then reason thus: if it be all one grace, it worketh alwaies alike: but it worketh alone in preparing the will; as the Master alleageth out of Augustine: Per solam gratiam, qua est in fide Christi posita, preparatur voluntas, &c. The will is prepared by grace alone, which consisteth in the faith of Christ: Ibid. dist. 26. Ier. d. Ergo, it also worketh alone in helping and assisting the will. Therefore both the first worke in preparing the will, and the second in enabling the will, is onely of grace.

THE THIRD PART OF THIS CON-

trouersie of freewill.

THe severall questions are these. First, of the nature, condition and qualitie of freewill. Secondly, of the power of freewill. First, in naturall things. Secondly, in morall duties. Thirdly, in spirituall.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE NATURE and definition of freewill.

Bellarmine defineth freewill after this manner: Est libera potestas unum præ alijs eligendi, vel respuendi, intelligenti naturæ attributa, &c. It is a free or absolute power, to chuse, or refuse one thing before another, giuen of God vnto a reasonable and vnderstanding nature, or creature.
We milike these poyntes in this definition: first, concerning the power of freewill, as well in chusing, as refusing: secondly, of the object of freewill, that it is naturally, as it is now to be found in man, inclined as well to good as euill: thirdly, concerning the qualitie and condition of freewill, that it is actiue, and not passiue: fourthly, of the subiect of freewill. Of these in their order.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE POW- er of freewill.

The Papists.

31. Error.

There is, duplex libertas, a double kinde of libertie: libertas à necessitate, a libertie or freedome from necessitie, as when it is in our power to will, or not to will, indifferently to chuse, or refuse this or that, as to walke, to sitte, to goe, none of all these being necessary, but subiect to our will and choice: libertas à coactione, a freedome from coaction, or constraint, is when, that we doe is of necessitie, and we cannot chuse but doe it, yet we doe it willingly. As a man cannot chuse but sinne, yet he sinneth voluntarily, he is noe constrained thereunto: Bellarmine affirmeth, that in the freewill of man, there must be a freedome not onely from coaction, but from necessitie:
lib. 3. de grat. cap. 4.

Argum. Eccle. 15. 14. God made man from the beginning, and left him in the hand of his counsell, he hath set water and fire before thee, stretch out thy hand, to which thou wilt: before man is life and death, good and euill, what him liketh, shall be giuen him: Ergo, the freedome of mans will, is not onely not constrained, but hath no necessitie, seeing it is in his power, to chuse or refuse what him liketh, Bellarmin. cap. 5.

Answ. 1. We graunt such a free will to haue been giuen to man in his creation, but is now lost by his fall: as Augustine saith: Lex in Paradiso non poneretur seruanda, nisi liber esset eam tam uolquam uolle seruare, sed sicut per se lapsus est, non continuo per se, i. propriam voluntatem, resurgens post.
A law should not haue bin giuen man in Paradise to keepe, vnlesse he had been free, eyther to wil, or nil to keepe it: but as man did fall of himselfe, so he cannot rise of himselfe, that is, by his owne

2. You must presse vs with more waightie authorities, then those out of Apocryphal scriptures, such as the booke of Ecclesiasticus is, if you would winne any credite to your cause: for the authoritie of such bookes bindeth vs not.

Whereas Bellarmine alleageth diuers Fathers to proue the libertie of free will, not onely from coaction and constraint, but from necessitie, eyther to good or euill: they are so to be vnderstood, that they eyther speake of the state of man in his perfection, or of the will of man, as it is by regeneration of grace, not by corruption of nature, or els by necessitie vnderstand coaction and compulsion, as Augustine saith, Liberum hominis arbitrium ab omni necessitatis vinculo vindicamus, &c.
Wee do redeeme mans will from all bond of necessitie: that is, as he expoundeth it, sub suo sollarum, &c. We place no mans birth vnder the fatall destinie of the starres, lib. 2. cont. Enim. c. 5.
By necessitie he vnderstandeth a fatall destinie and compulsion: from such necessitie we also free the will of man.

The Protestants.

A freedome of will from necessitie we graunt to haue been in our first parents, whereby it was in their power, to haue chosen eyther the good, or the euill way: But since that by Adams transgression the whole power of nature was shaken, and all the gifts and graces of creation decayed; there remaineth no freenes of will vnto good in man, but onely a voluntary promptnesse and inclination to euill without constraint.

Argum. This haue I found, saith the Preacher, That God hath made man righteous, but hee hath sought many inuentions. Eccle. 7. 31. I know, saith Saint Paul, that in me, that is, my flesh, dwelleth no good thing, Rom. 7. 18. These places proue, that, howsoeuer it was with man in his creation, now by nature there remaineth no good thing in him: and therefore no inclination to that which is good.

We are not able, saith the Apostle, to thinke any thing of our selues, but our abilitie or sufficiency is of God, 2. Cor. 3. 5. Vpon the which wordes Augustine writeth thus, Non idonei sumus cogitare aliquid
(dici)

Bernard thus writeth: Nemo putet ideo dictum liberum arbitrium, &c. Let no man thinke it is called free will, because it hath equall power to good and euill; for then neither God, which cannot be euill, nor the diuell, which cannot be good, should haue free will: but therefore it is called free, because none can be good or euill, nisi volens, but willingly, lib. de liber. arbit.

S. Ambrose also is an euident witness: lib. 1. de uocat. Gen. c. 9. Licet in sit homini bonum uelle, tamen nisi donatum, non habet bonum uelle: Although it be in mans power to will that is good; yet hee cannot will that is good, vnlesse it be giuen him: the one he hath by corruption of nature, the other he receiueh by the operation of grace. Again, Non in potestate nostra est cor nostrum & nostra cogitationes: Our heart and our thoughtes are not in our owne power: de fug. secul. c. 1. Voluntas mutabilis, quia non ab immutabili voluntate regitur, tanto citius propinquat iniquitati, quanto acius intendit ad bonum: The mutable wil, vnlesse it be gouerned of the immutable will, doth so much nearer approach to iniquitie, as it worketh more intendedly: Cui committitur aliquid, quam dimittitur: For a manto be committed to his will, is all one, as to be dimitted or forsaken: Nihil in suis viribus habet, nisi periculi facilitatem: Mans will hath nothing of it owne power, but the facilitie of daungers: de uocat. Gen. lib. 1. c. 3. Then it followeth, that the will of man, by nature cannot choose, but to do euill: What is this else but a necessitie not of coaction, but of deprauation?

Bernard yet speaketh more euidently: Serm. 81. in Cantic. Anima, malo libera necessitate & ancilla iustitiae libera; ancilla propter necessitatem, libera propter voluntatem, &c. The soule is by an vnhappy free necessitie, both bond and free; bond because of necessitie, (it cannot otherwise choose) free, because it is voluntary.

Petr. Lombard lib. 2. dist. 25. liter. e. Liberum videtur dici arbitrium, quia sine coactione & necessitate videtur appetere, &c. It seemeth that free will is so called, because without coaction and necessitie it doth desire, &c. He taketh coaction and necessitie for all one, and so affirmeth the will to be free from coaction; which wee also graunt.

Thomas 1. part. qn. 81. art. 2. ad 3. saith, Per peccatum perissa libertatem gratia, non libertatem naturae, quae est à coactione: By sinne the libertie of grace is lost, not the libertie of nature, which is from coaction.

Alphons. de castro lib. 9. Libertas, quae opponitur necessitati, seu, ut verius dicam, coactioni: That is libertie, which is opposed against necessitie, or more truely coaction. These popish writers seeme to affirme a libertie onely in the will from coaction and compulsion.

THE SECOND PART, OF the obiect of Free will.

The Papists.

Bellarmine saith, Voluntatis proprium & priuatum obiectum bonum est, siue aliquid apprehensum sub ratione boni, that the proper and principall obiect of the will of man, is that which is good, or that appeareth, or is so taken to be: and so he determineth, Per arbitrium non expedit mala, sed bona: That by free will not euill things, but good are desired, lib. de grat. 3. cap. 12.

Argum. The inclination of the will vnto his obiect is naturall; and therefore God is the author thereof: If God be the author, then it is good: the will of man then is not naturall enclined to euill, for so the inclination thereof should be euill, which God hath made, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. That naturall power which God hath giuen to men; generally to will, to thinke, to desire, to hate, to loue, must needs be good, because it is of God; but the execution of this power in the abuse thereof, by willing and chusing euill, and refusing and hating good, ariseth of the corruption of our nature, and is euill; neither is God to be charged with it. We distinguish then betwene the naturall gift, and the vse thereof, betwene the nature of man, as it was created of God, and the corruption thereof: to haue power to will, is a naturall gift giuen of God; but to will that is euill, is an abuse of that power, caused in vs by the corruption of our nature.

Argum. 2. The obiect of the appetite or desire, is that, which is desireable; but that which is good, is onely appetible or desireable: Ergo, onely bonum, that which is good is the obiect of the will or desire, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. 1. The proposition is partly true, partly false: for if by (desireable) that is vnderstood which ought to be desired in right, it is false; if that which is (de facto) desired, we graunt it. Secondly, for the assumption; if it be vnderstood of that which is naturally good; so it is true, that by the instinct of nature, euery creature desireth that, which maketh for the conseruation thereof; but this is not to the point in question: But if he meane that which is morally, and verily, and truly good, the assumption is false; for that which is good in this sense is not onely, nor yet at all by nature desired.

The Protestants.

That man by freewill may chuse things naturally good, as for the preservation of his life, and maintenance of his ciuill estate, and shun the contrarie, that is, things hurtfull vnto his life, we doe easily grant; seeing it is a general gift of nature, euen bestowed vpon vnreasonable creatures, to discern what is good, and what hurtfull vnto them: and in this sense wee denie not, but that the proper object of the will, namely in naturall and ciuill matters, is to couet good, or at the least, which appeare so to be: But yet concerning things morally good, that is, vertuous and godly acts, the will of man hath no inclination thereunto naturally, but is prone to euill onely: Neither is the will deceiued in taking vice for vertue, and following euill, in the name of good. Some indeede may pretend some naturall or ciuill good, as profit, or pleasure, but not that which is morally, that is verily & truly good: As he that stealeth, is perswaded it is for his profit, which is a ciuill good; but he cannot think, that therein he doth iustly, which is the morall good. An adulterer propoundeth to himselfe pleasure in that sinne: but he doth not so much as imagine, that hee can be chaste in committing adulterie, which is the morall vertue. Wherefore wee doubt not to conclude, both that mans freewill naturally hath no inclination to that which is truly good. And againe, Malum iam sub ratione mali, proprium obiectum voluntatis esse: That euill, that is, sinne, euen as it sinne, is the proper object of the will, by reason of the corruption of nature.

Argum. 1. That the wicked are naturally inclined to euill, euen as it is euill, the Scripture teacheth vs: It is a pastime to a foole to doe wickedly, Prou. 10. 23. A foole maketh a mocke of sin, Prou. 14. 9. The wicked person is not deceiued in taking vice for vertue, but doth naturally as verily loue vice, as by grace the righteous embraceth vertue: Wee vnto them (saith the Prophet) that speak good of euill, and euill of good, which put darknes for light, and light for darknes, Isai. 5. 20. The Prophet cryeth not out against those, which sinne of ignorance and simplicitie, taking euill for good: but against such, which doe sinne of malice, and willingly and wittingly commend euill, euen because it is euill, and hate that is good, for the goodnes sake; Which draw iniquitie with cordes of vanitie, if they were seduced by error in taking one thing for another, they should be led themselves, and drawne into sinne: but now the Prophet saith, They doe hale and draw sin to themselves, as with cart-ropes.

Argum. 2. Augustine in his booke of Confessions, is not ashamed to confesse how that he was accustomed to steale apples in his childhood and yonger yeeares, when as he both might haue had better at home, and hauing stolen them, he cast them to the hogges: so that (saith hee) whereas theeues, adulterers, and the like, doe propound to themselves in their euill doing, some end or other: Ego nihil hic amari prater furtum: I loued nothing else but theft it selfe, lib. confess. 2. cap. 4. For Augustine neither did it for pleasure, for he had better fruite at home; nor for profit, for hee cast them to the swine. Wherefore sinne, euen as it is sinne, is naturally the object of the will.

Likewise the diuell loueth euill because it is euill: the wicked hate and detest God, who is good: Ergo, the will may both desire that which is euill, and hate and detest that which is good.

1. Bellarmino answereth: First, Augustine in his theft loued the sinne, but vnder the shew of some delectable good, because hee reioyced to deceiue his neighbour with the rest of his companions.
2. Secondly, the diuell loueth our sinne, but vnder the shew of some good to himselfe, thinking it profitable to himselfe, that many perish.
3. Thirdly, the wicked hate God, but vnder the shew or colour of euill, because they hold him a seuerer iudge, Bellarmino. cap. 12. respo. ad 2. 4. argum.

1. Contra. First, Augustine saith, Nihil amari: I loued nothing but the theft it selfe. He could best expresse his owne meaning, wherefore hee simply loued and desired that which was euill: if hee made a sport to deceiue his neighbours, this was no morall good thing, but a carnall and sensuall delight onely: and so wee denie not, but euen in sinne there is a shew of sensuall delight and pleasure, but not of any morall or true vertue.
2. Secondly: First, the diuell procureth our euill, not for hope of any ease to himselfe, for hee is past all hope of ease or release, but to doe vs hurt. It is said, that death came into the world by the enuie of the diuell vnto vs, Wisd. 2. 24. not through selfeloue to himselfe. Secondly, this were to extenuate the malice of Sathan, as though he sought not our destruction so much to doe vs hurt, as to benefit himselfe. Thirdly, this good which Sathan is said to ayme at, is not any morall good, or true vertue, but a malicious and Sathanicall delight. Fourthly, but if in our euill Sathan pretend good, what good can he imagine in his owne desperate sinne? The Scripture saith, he is a lyar, and the father thereof, Ioh. 8. 44. Then as the father in his childe, so he delighteth in sin as his owne, and desireth it, euen as it is euill.
3. Thirdly: first, the wickedest man, that liueth, is by nature perswaded, that God is good, and therefore cannot hate him, as euill: but their wicked nature abhorreth God, as good. So the Scripture ture saith, that the iust man is an abomination to the wicked, Prou. 29. 27. he hateth him for his vertue sake: And the Lord himselfe thus saith to the wicked: Is thine eye euill, because I am good? Mat. 20. vers. 15. Here goodnes is selfe is hated of the wicked.

Saint Ambrose saith: Homo nisi donatus non habet bonum velle: Man cannot desire that is good, vnlesse it be giuen him: de vocat. Gent. lib. 2. cap. 9. Nulla species cuiusquam virtutis occurrat, quia sine dono diuinae gratiae, &c. There is no shew of any vertue occurrent, which is desired without the gift of the diuine grace, ibid. Therefore morall goodnes is not the proper object of the will by nature.

Peter Lombard: Est libertas non vera, &c. There is a libertie not good to doe euill, when reason dissenteth from the will, iudging that not to be done, which the will desireth: lib. 2. dist. 25. liter. k. How can that seeme good to the will, which reason iudgeth to be euill?

Guilielm. Ockam (one of their schoolemen) affirmeth with vs, that the wil may be carried to desire euill, sub ratione mali, as it is euill: in lib. 3. senten. qu. 13. dist. 3.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE END IT SELFE

be the object of the will, and whence the will is moued to desire the end.

The Papists.

First, Bellarmino affirmeth, that the end, as eternall life, is not properly the object of the will, but the meanes tending to the end. His best reason is out of Aristotle his Ethikes lib. 3. cap. 2. No man consulteth to be happie, but of the meanes how he may be happie.

Secondly, the loue or desire to the end (he saith) is a naturall act of the will, not infused or inspired of God, but naturally imprinted in the will. His reason is this, because if this desire be an act of the will, then it must proceede actiuelly: but if it should be inspired or added beside the naturall inclination, it should be passiue: Bellarmino lib. 3. de grat. cap. 14.

The Protestants.

First, 1. We say that the end is the first and chiefest thing in the desire and intention: 2. There is difference between the desire and deliberation, between will and counsell. Consultation of the meanes to effect that which the will intendeth, or desireth: and so your Philosophy to bee vnderstoode. 3. The Scripture testifieth with vs: Saint Paul saith, I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, Philip. 1. 23. which is best of all. What is the end, but that, which is best of all, to be with Christ, which here is the object of the Apostles desire? Your owne Scripture also saith, Ecclesiastic. 15. 14. Before man is life and death, good and euill, what him liketh shall be giuen him. Life and death are set before man, as the object of his will: which are the very ends themselves. 4. Wereade in the Gospell, how Thomas said vnto our Sauour, Ioh. 14. 5. Ye know not whither I go, how then can we know the way? We see then, that first the end is to be knowne and desired, and then the way. Our Sauour answereth, I am the way, the truth, and the life: whereby is signified, that Christ is to be desired, not onely as the way, but as the end, which is life. As Ambrose vpon these words, Sequimur te Domine, sed vs sequamur accersi, &c. We follow thee Lord, but fetch vs, that wee may follow thee: no man doth ascend without thee, thou art the way, the truth, the life, the possibilitie, saith, reward: de bon. mort. c. 12. Christ then is to be followed, as the way and the life, as both the truth, and faith, and reward.

Secondly, 1. The will is actiue in respect of his proper object: but it is passiue, as it is moued and stirred of God. 2. The Scripture is euident, that the desire of comming to, and being with Christ, both of the way and end, is not naturall, but aboue nature, from God. Iohn 6. 44. No man cometh to me, vnlesse the father draw him: The loue of Christs appearing is rewarded with a crowne of glorie, 2. Tim. 4. 8. but no naturall gift is so rewarded. 3. Saint Ambrose: Nulla species cuiusquam virtutis occurrat, quia sine dono diuinae gratiae habetur: There is no shew of any vertue, which is had or desired without the gift of the heauenly grace: Erge, the end, which is saluation, which is not without a shew of vertue, is not desired without grace. 4. Capreolus (one of their schoolemen) thinketh, that this desire of the will is wrought onely by God, and is altogether passiue in that respect: in 2. sent. dist. 24. qu. 1.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE QUALITIE AND

condition of freewill, whether it be actiue or passiue.

The Papists.

Bellarmino affirmeth, that the will of man is neither passiue onely, nor partly actiue, and partly passiue: sed simpliciter & absolute actiuum: but simply and absolutely actiue. Of the same opinion are diuers of the Schoolemen, as Thomas Aquinas, Scotus, Henricus, Capreolus, Errarius, as they are cited and alleaged by Bellarmino, lib. 3. de grat. cap. 10.

Argum. If freewill should be passive, and not active, that is, if it be not a perpetuall agent and working cause, but should it selfe suffer, and receive, and be wrought vpon by other causes: then can it not be free, for it is not in the power of the patient, or of that which suffereth, to doe this, or that, but in the power of the agent, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. First, wee graunt, that in what things soever the will of man naturally is free, there it worketh freely, and so actively, as namely in all euill actions: But vnto good things, it hath naturally no freedom at all, but is made free onely by grace: and therefore we denie, that in this case, it is either free by nature, or of any active power. Secondly, not onely grace worketh vpon the will of man, but naturally also the vnderstanding moueth the will actively, vnlesse (contrarie to nature) the will rebell against the reason and vnderstanding.

The Protestants.

THe will of man we cannot absolutely determine to be either active or passive in working: for as the object of the will is, and the thing that is willed, so is the will it selfe affected: for in euery thing which is willed, or desired, wee are to respect two things: the generall power of willing and desiring, without any respect vnto good, or euill; and the qualitie of the object, the goodness, or euilnes thereof. If we consider the generall power, whereby we thinke, wee will, we desire this, or that; so is the will of man free and active, whether it be good or euill, that is so willed: if we respect the qualitie of the object, as if it be euill, which is desired, here also is the will of man both free, and active: But if it be good, the will is onely passive: it hath no naturall inclination vnto good things, vnlesse it be drawne by the spirit of God working in vs. So then, velle in nobis est, to will is in our owne power, bene uelle à Deo, to will as we should, is of God.

Argum. Iohn 8. 36. If the Sonne make you free, then are you free indeed. Philip. 2. 13. It is God, which worketh in you both the will, and the doede. The will of man then in good things worketh not, but is wrought; it maketh not it selfe free, but is made free: Ergo, it is not in this case active, but onely passive, receiuing power from another cause.

Augustine saith: Voluntas humana non libertate consequitur gratiam, sed gratia potius libertatem: The will of man doth not by the freedome thereof obtaine grace, but by grace obtaineth freedome: de corruptione & grat. cap. 8. The freedome then of the will, is the worke and effect of grace: Ergo, it is passive, for the effect, or the thing wrought or caused, doth suffer in respect of the efficient and working cause.

Petrus Lombard compareth freewill to the ground, grace vnto raine: Terra mentis nostra, libero arbitrio voluntatis, infunditur pluuia diuina benedictionis: The raine of the heauenly blessing is infused into the ground of the minde, that is, freewill: But the earth in respect of the raine that falleth, is passive, and not active.

Esperien. in 2. ad Timoth. p. 40. b. Passiva promissi expectatio hominum est: The passive expectation of the promise is of men. Faith then, which is the act of the will and vnderstanding, is passive.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE VNDER- standing or intelligence doe worke actively vpon the will of man.

36. Error.

Bellarmino to maintaine his owne conceits, that the will of man is onely active, not passive, do doubteth not to denie, voluntatem moueri à ratione, that the will is moued by reason: or that the intelligent part doth actum voluntatis effectiue producere, produce and effect the act of the will: lib. 3. de grat. cap. 10.

Argum. The intelligent part worketh necessarily, or is a necessary cause, then it would follow, that to will is necessarie, not free, if the vnderstanding moue the will necessarily, as it doth: Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. First, the vnderstanding doth not alwaies worke necessarily: for the will and desire many times rebelleth against reason, and is not alwaies moued or perswaded by the vnderstanding. Secondly, though it should worke necessarily, yet the will may retaine the freedome still: for not necessitie, but coaction and compulsion take away libertie: as grace worketh necessarily vpon the will, that is, surely effectually, yet grace taketh not away freewill.

The Protestants.

That the vnderstanding or intelligent part moueth the will of man actively, it is euident.

Argum. That which is the life of man is the agent and active worker in mans will: for all actions proceede from the life: but the reason and vnderstanding is the life, because it is the light: for the life is the light of man, Iohn 1. 9. Ergo:

Again, that wherein Gods image properly consisteth, is the chiefe agent and mouer: but the image

Image of God is in the minde the seate of knowledge: and the renewing of the minde is in knowledge after the image of him, that created him, Coloss. 3. 10. Ergo, the vnderstanding is the mouer of the will.

Augustine resembleth the vnderstanding to the man, the will to the woman: Mulier dicitur mater vniuersum, id est, animalis pars est mater recte factorum, cum conuersa fuerit ad mentem: The woman is said to be the mother of all liuing, that is, the naturall or sensuall part, is the mother of all good acts, being conuerted to the soule: lib. 2. de Genes. cap. 21. The minde then worketh actiuelly vpon the will, which is the sensuall part.

Diuers of the Schoolemen hold the will to be passiue in respect of the vnderstanding that moueth it, though it be actiue in respect of the object which is wished or desired: see Gabriel in 2. sent. dist. 25. qu. vnic. Petrus Paludan in 4. sent. dist. 40. qu. 3.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE subject of freewill.

The Papists.

Bellarmino affirmeth, that freewill is incident onely to reasonable creatures, which no man denieth, and hee confesseth that there is freewill in God and in the Angels: and to this purpose allegeth these places, Psalm. 135. 6. Whatsoever pleased the Lord, that did he in heauen and earth. Ephel. 1. 11. Which worketh all things, according to the counsell of his owne will: cap. 16. Hence hee concludeth, that the will of God is most free not onely from coaction and compulsion, but from all kind of necessitie: and hee blameth Bucer and Caluin for ascribing a necessitie to the will or works of God: lib. 3. de grat. cap. 15. 16.

Answ. First, wee willingly affirme, that Gods will worketh most freely, that is, without any constraint, and this out of these places is concluded, but not that Gods will is free from all necessitie: for it is necessary that God should not will any thing that is euill. Secondly, Bellarmino alloweth Lombards Definition of freewill: Liberum est ad utrumlibet: It is free to either part, cap. 5. And in the same place he proueth, that it is not sufficient for the will to be free from coaction, but from necessitie also: then it must follow in their sense, that Gods will must be free to either part, both to good and euill, which were blasphemie to affirme.

The Protestants.

We neither tie God to a fatall necessitie, as the Heathen Philosophers did: neither doe wee affirme, as hee slandereth Caluin to say, that God can doe no more, than he doth: for as Isaiah saith, he could of stones raise up children to Abraham, Matth. 3. Neither doe wee denie, that God hath a freewill, but not such a freewill as the Papists define: which is free to either part, free both from coaction, and from all necessitie: free to good and euill.

Argum. That which is impossible to God is necessarie, It is impossible for God to lye, Hebr. 6. 18. Ergo, it is necessarie that he should not lye. That which God doth not, neither can doe, hee willet not: God tempteth no man to euill, Iain. 1. 13. he neither doth nor can: Ergo, his will here is not liberum ad utrumlibet, free vnto each part. From this necessitie of not willing or doing euill, Gods will then is not free. Wherefore let them chuse which they will, that either God hath no freewill, or that freewill is not free from necessitie, though it be from compulsion or coaction.

Augustine saith, Si illa definitur necessitas, &c. If we define that to be necessitie, as when wee say it is necessarie, that this thing should be so, we neede not feare least this necessitie should take away the freedome of will: for neither doe we put Gods foreknowledge vnder necessitie, when we say, it is necessarie God should know all things afore: lib. 5. de ciuitat. Dei cap. 10. Augustine denieth not, but that there is a kinde of necessitie in God: a necessitie determined, not constrained: implied, not enforced. So the fathers, when they exclude necessitie from God, they meane a fatall and prescribed or naturall necessitie, not otherwise: as Gregor. Nyssen. lib. de fat. cap. vli. Omnipotens neque natura necessitate, neque legis prescriptio operatur: The Omnipotent worketh neither by necessitie of nature, nor prescript of law. Ambr. Operatur pro libero voluntatis arbitrio, non pro necessitate obsequio: He worketh according to the freedome of will, not thraldome of necessitie.

Pet. Lombard, in the same sense saith: Deus non necessitate, sed libera voluntate omnia facit, &c. God not of necessitie, but of his freewill worketh all things. By necessitie hee vnderstandeth coactionem. Liberum arbitrium dicitur, quia sine coactione & necessitate: It is called freewill, because without coaction and necessitie it willet: lib. 2. dist. 25. Wherefore seeing God truly hath freewill, and the elect Angels haue freewill: as in the same place Lombard. Multo liberius erit arbitrium, quod non potest ferri peccata: Will shall be much more free, when it cannot serue sinne: It followeth, that necessitie onely, where no coaction or compulsion is, doth not take away the libertie and freedome of the will.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE power of freewill.

THere are three kinde of humane actions: Some are naturall, and ciuill, as to walke, to sit, to lye, to plant, to make warre & such like: Some are moral, such are the actions which appertaine to vertue, or vice; as to giue almes, to liue chastly, contrarie to the which are these, to steale, to commit adulterie; with the like: Some are diuine and supernaturall, as to belecue, to hope, to loue, &c. This question then hath according to this diuision three parts: first, of the power of freewill in naturall and ciuill actions: secondly, in morall: thirdly, in diuine and supernaturall.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE POWER of freewill in naturall things.

This part of the question is diuided into other particulars: as first, whether the deitie and power of God may be knowne by the light of nature. Secondly, whether man haue freewill in naturall things.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER THE GOD- head may be knowne by the light of nature.

The Papists.

Bellarmino not contented with Caluine his iudgement of this matter, who graunteth that by the light of nature generally the Godhead may be knowne, addeth further, Verum & vnum deum naturaliter posse cognosci, & non solum deum in communi, &c. That the true and onely God naturally may be knowne, and not onely after a common and generall manner. And likewise hee saith yet furthermore, that to this naturall knowledge and demonstration of God, a man may nullo labor assentiri, giue his assent without any labour, and neede not, auxilio gratia speciali, any speciall helpe or assistance of grace thereunto, Bellarmino lib. 4. de grat. cap. 2.

Argum. S. Paul saith, that the Gentiles even by the light of nature might haue groped after God, and found him, Act. 17. 28. The knowledge of God is so easie, and readie at hand, to be found even in the creatures, as a thing that may be groped, and felt. Also the same Apostle saith, that the invisible things of God, as his power, eternitie, are scene by the creation of the world: Ergo, God is knowne by his creatures, to be iust, good, almightie, &c. Bellarmino ibid.

Answ. These places proue a generall and confused knowledge of God by the creatures, which we graunt, but such a particular, and manifest light of knowledge, which the Iesuite strueth for, they proue not: they might (saith the Apostle) haue groped after God: but men vse to grope and feeble in the night, and in the darke: and this naturall light serueth onely to make men without excuse. Rom. 1. 20. Ad hoc, saith the Apostle, ut sint ipsi inexcusabiles: It cannot bring them to any cleere, or perfect knowledge of God. So we reade in the booke of Iob: All men see it, and behold it a farre off. Iob. 36. 25. that is, the light of nature is but a dimme and obscure light, as when a man beholdeth a thing a farre off.

The Protestants.

Imarueile much, that the Iesuite heré dealeth against vs, as enemies to the light of nature; seeing they themselves, if they be constant in their doctrine, and agree in iudgement one with another, in this matter haue been more strait-laced, than we. This question is at large discoursed betwene P. Harding, and that reuerend learned father Bishop Iewel: who hauing affirmed, That men, euen by the light of nature, though they are not able to be led thereby to the perfection of faith, yet may discern ofentimes betwene truth and falsehood in religion. Harding thereupon openeth his mouth wide, and crieth aloud, This is his heathenish heart, what could Porphyrie, or Iulian, or Celsus say more?

But Bishop Iewel in defence of the light of nature, allegeth that place of the Apostle, Rom. 1. 20. which the Iesuite obiected, How that the power of God is knowne by the creatures: And the Heaebn, that haue not the law, yet by nature know the things, that pertaine to the law. Rom. 2. 14. Hee also citeth the testimonie of Hierome to the same purpose: Homo naturaliter potest scire de Deo, & quod sit, & quod iustus sit: Man may naturally know of God, both that he is, and that he is iust.

This then is our opinion, that by the light of nature it may be knowne, both that God is, and that he is almightie, iust, eternall, &c. For otherwise he should not be knowne to be God: See the iudgement of Beza. annot. Rom. 1. 20. With what face then can the Iesuite open his mouth against vs, as though we condemned the light of nature, and knowledge of the creatures?

But such a naturall knowledge, that is, a particular, speciall, manifest, direct knowledge of God, which which the Iesuite vrgeth, we cannot approue, nor yet that a man, without speciall grace, can giue his assent vnto such naturall knowledge, and come to know his Creator thereby.

Argum. 1. First, that the light of nature is not so full, cleare, and perfect, that it is able to bring vs to the true knowledge of God, we learne out of the Scripture: Our Sauour Christ saith, No man cometh to the Father but by me. Iohn chap. 14. vers. 6. The true knowledge of God is not revealed vnto vs, but by Christ: the light of nature leadeth vs not to Christ, therefore not to the true knowledge of God.

Argum. 2. Secondly, that man of himselfe, without Gods speciall gift, cannot make vse of this naturall knowledge of God, and subscribe to the same, and giue assent in his heart, it is cleare also out of the word of God: he was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not, Ioh. 1. 10.

Belarmine answereth: 1. This place is vnderstood of the sonne of God the second person of the Trinitie: which mysterie of the Trinitie, we graunt, cannot be knowne by the light of nature, Belarm. cap. 3.

Contra. The Euangelist speaketh here of the creation of the world: The world was made by him and yet they knew not their Creator: this notwithstanding is a point of naturall knowledge, to confesse God to be the Creator and Gouvernour of the world: for the power of God is seene by the creation of the world. Rom. 1. 20.

Belarm. 2. The light appeared in darknesse, that is, the wisdom of God is seene even in the senseless creatures, as in trees and stones, which are called darknesse, because they want reason: and therefore it is true of these creatures, that they comprehended not the light.

Contra. The Euangelist in very direct termes speaketh of that light of nature, which is in men, vers. 4. The life was the light of men, and this is the true light, that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world. vers. 9. The Iesuite then doth shamefully abuse this place; in applying it vnto unreasonable creatures.

Belarm. 3. Last of all, the Iesuite thus playeth the interpreter, by the darknesse we vnderstand, Homines ignorantissimos, & peccatissimos, sinfull and ignorant men, which perceiued not this light; not because they could not, but because they would not.

Contra. Neither can this exposition hold: for the Euangelist sheweth the condition of all men, when they are by nature, euen full of darknesse and ignorance, as it may appeare by comparing the next verse: This is the light, that lighteneth every man: he meaneth then not some, but all: Secondly, he saith, that they could not comprehend, noteth a want of power, not of will: as to comprehend, sheweth a presence of abilitie or power: That ye may be able to comprehend. Ephes. chap. 3. vers. 18. or possitis scire the apostle, that ye may know; ut velitis, that you will. Lastly, we graunt also that it is true, volunt non comprehendere, they would not comprehend: but that is not all: for the Euangelist declareth two things, wherein the miserable state of man by nature is seene; both that men are unable though they would to comprehend, and unwilling though they could, to receive the light: for the first, he saith, non comprehendebant: They comprehended not; that is, they could not, vers. 1. and for the other, non receperunt, they receiued not; that is, they would not, vers. 11. As not to comprehend sheweth a defect of power; so not to receiue, importeth a want of will. Thus, notwithstanding this snare and miste, which the Iesuite rayseth, this place remaineth cleere both against the sufficiency of naturall light in it selfe, and the voluntary assenting thereunto on mans behalfe.

Augustine thus writeth vpon these wordes in the Gospell: No man knoweth the Sonne, but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father, but the Sonne, and he to whom the Sonne will reueale him. Mat. then 11. 27. Which must not be so vnderstood, as though no man knew the Sonne but the Father; but the Father was both knowne of the Sonne, and of those to whom the Sonne reuealeth him; because it is not sayd of the Father concerning his Sonne, To whom the Father will reueale him: it is said of the Sonne, concerning the Father, To whom the Sonne shall reueale him: then it followeth, Sic potius dictum est, ut intelligamus, & patrem & ipsum filium per filium reuelari, quia ipse est vnica vera lumen: But it is set downe in this manner, that we should vnderstand, that both the Father and the Sonne are reuealed by the Sonne, because he is the light of our mindes: Augustinus serm. 48. We see then that God is knowne onely by Christ, he is shadowed forth in the creatures, rather then knowne: And that Christ is that naturall light whereby every man is lightened coming into the world; that is, the light of nature; is to small vse or purpose; but to those that receiue grace by Christ.

Effraim, a learned popish writer, vrgeth that place of S. Paul to this purpose; 1. Timoth. 3. 7. The Lord giue thee vnderstanding in all things: In omnibus humanis rebus scilicet, maximis & minimis: In all humane matters great and small. And he further thus alleageth out of Doctantius; Falsum iudicare sapientia est, sed humana, &c. To vnderstand that is false, is a point of wisdom, but humane; beyond this degree man cannot proceed: to know the truth is a point of diuine wisdom, to the which a man cannot attaine of himſelfe, vnleſſe he be taught. The Philoſophers attained that which was the higheſt point of humane wiſedome, to vndeſtand, what God was not, but yet attained not to ſay, what God was: ex citat. Eſſene comment in 2. Timoth. p. 26. liter. f. Wherefore the knowledge of nature concerning God, is obſcure, doubtfull, imperfect, not able to giue direction to the mind, without inſtinct of grace.

THE SECOND POINT, WHETHER MAN HAVE freewill in ciuill and naturall things.

The Papiſts.

39. Error.

This the Ieſuite affirmeth, and it is the common opinion of that ſide, that in naturall and ciuill actions man hath a free and abſolute will, whether to good or euill, they reaſon thus:

Argum. 1. It is in mans power to do ſome things, which he doth not, and againe to leaue ſome things vndone in ciuill matters, which he doth: Ergo, there is freewill in ſuch things: God ſaith to Salomon, Because thou haſt asked wiſedome, and haſt not asked long life, &c. 1. King. 3. 11. So Peter ſaith to Ananias, After it was ſold, was it not in thine owne power? Act. 5. 4. Here we ſee Salomon might haue done that which hee did not, that is, asked riches, and long life, and not wiſedome: and Ananias might haue left that vndone which hee did, as to haue ſold his poſſeſſions, and to bring the money to the Apoſtles: Beſides Job. 4. de grat. cap. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, though in ciuill indifferent matters to will and purpoſe, be in mans power, yet to doe or not to doe, to execute what he hath purpoſed, is not ſo in his power: for the Wiſeman maketh a maniſeſt difference betweene theſe two: The thoughts of the heart are in man, but the ſecrets of the tongue is of God Psalm. 16. 1. Man purpoſeth, but God diſpoſeth.

Secondly, it was not in Salomons power of himſelfe to aſke wiſedome of God, rather then any other thing: but his will and deſire was thereto directed of God: for if the Lord put into Salomons minde to aſke, who ſaid vnto Salomon, appearing to him in a dreame, Aske what I ſhall giue thee, 1. King. 3. 5. much more was it inſpired into him, what he ſhould aſke. And concerning the other example: for a man to ſell or not to ſell, being a meepe ciuill and indifferent action, it is freely in his power: but to ſell to good and godly vſes, to helpe the neceſſitie of others, as the brethren did in the Apoſtles time, was in them a worke of grace: All that beleened were in one place, and had all things common Act. 2. verſ. 44. They were beleeuers that did ſo, faith wrought it in them. And againe, Act. 4. verſ. 33. Great grace was vpon them all, neither was there any among them that lacked. It was a worke of grace, then, that men ſold their lands, to relieue the wants of others.

Argum. 2. The Scripture giueth vnto man free election and choiſe of things, which cannot be without freewill. Firſt, Joſh. 24. 15. Chuſe you this day whom ye will ſerue. Secondly, 1. Sam. 24. 12. I offer thee three things, vnto thee, chuſe of them, which I ſhall doe vnto thee. Thirdly, Matth. 19. If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandments. Luk. 19. if any man will follow me let him denie himſelfe.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. The people had not power of themſelues to chuſe the way of the Lord: but God had firſt choſen them. Deut. 4. 37. Because he loued the fathers he choſe their ſeede: and here the people anſwere, We will ſerue the Lord, for he is our God, verſ. 18. Firſt, hee was their God in chooſing them, and giuing grace, and then they choſe the Lord. Secondly, this place otherwiſe would enforce an abſolute election in diuine matters, and not in ciuill onely, which were a groſſe error: for this choiſe of the people was of the ſeruice and religion of God.

2. Secondly, Dauids will is directed by faith to make choiſe to fall into Gods hands: ſerue (ſaith he) his mercies are great, verſ. 14. His faith and confidence in Gods mercies directeth his choiſe.

3. Thirdly, 1. Thoſe places are vnproperly alleaged to prooue freewill in ciuill matters: to enter into life, and ſo follow Chriſt, are not ciuill, but ſpirituell and diuine: will hee then conlude that a man hath power of himſelfe to follow Chriſt, and enter into heauen? blaſphemous is the mouth, that ſo affirmeth. 2. Why the precepts of Scripture are thus ſet forth vnto man, Saint Ambroſe excellently ſheweth: Non ob aliud vngquam datur preceptum, niſi ut queratur precipientis auxilium; vocis decentium, litera paginarum, Deo ſeruiunt, non carnis eius virtute eui ſeruiunt: & quando id quod iubetur ab obediens perſecutur, tunc effectus diuini operis declaratur: The precept is giuen, that the helpe of the precept giuer may be ſought; the voyce of the teacher, the letters of Scripture doe miniſter vnto God; neither doe they want his vertue, whom they ſerue: and when that is fulfilled, which is commaunded, the operation of the diuine worke is declared, epiſt. 84. The precepts then of Scripture proue not a freewill in man, but onely ſtirre vs vp to ſecke for his helpe to performe the precept, that giueth it.

Argum. 3. Here a great troupe of both Greeke and Latine fathers is brought in for the prooue of freewill. I anſwere; firſt, it is certaine that ſome of the Greeke fathers aſcribed too much to freewill, more I thinke than the Papiſts dare acknowledge: as in the Homilie vnder Chryſoſtomes haue vpon the ſtorie of Zacharias: In ſe eſt ut poſſis quia in ſe eſt ut velis, &c. It is in thy ſelfe to be able to doe, because it is in thee to will to doe. If it be in vs, what neede grace? Secondly, the fathers extoll freewill, trauing to deale with the contrarie heresie of the Manichees, who imputed sin vnto nature, and not to mans will. Thirdly, the fathers affirming freewill, either speake of the state of man in his first creation: as Basil alleaged saith, Summa voluntatis adepti vitam, &c. The soule having obtained a voluntarie life, was created according to the image of God. Or else they meane the freedom of will by grace: as Epiphanius baref. 16. Libertatem voluntatis arbitrii nobis Deus, &c. God hath giuen vnto vs a freewill, saying, If ye will obey and heare ye shall eate the good things of the land. This libertie or freedom, as I shewed before out of Ambrase, is brought in vs by grace. Or lastly, they speake of a libertie of will free from compulsion or violence, as Chrysostome seru. 2. Isaia: Demon dicit, Non est in te, quod extendas manum, sed necessitate & vi id agis. The diuill saith, It is not in thee to extend thy hand, but thou doest it of necessitie and force. And S. Hierome di. 16. Jerem. Libertatem homini seruatur arbitrium, ne ex praesentia eius, quasi ex necessitate cogatur, &c. Mans freewill is reserved, so that he is not constrained as of necessitie by Gods praesentie to doe this or that. In any of these three senses if the fathers be vnderstood, according to their owne meane, we doe willingly consent: that man in his creation had freewill; that by grace now also mans will is made freeand; that by nature mans will is free from compulsion or constraint.

The Protestants.

WE here dissent from our aduersaries in two points: First, wee graunt, that in ciuill matters, being in themselves indifferent, there is a freewill in man; as to eate, to labour, to sit, to goe, to plant, to build: but to doe any of these to any good, or godly end, as to labour, thereby to auoid stealing, to goe vnto prayer, to build houses for poore people onely of charitie, without quinion of merit, these godly actions are not of our selues, but wrought in vs by the spirit.

Secondly, wee affirme, that although in such things mens thoughts or deuises, are free; yet so are not their actions: it is not as free for men to doe, or not to doe, as to will, or not to will.

Argum. 1. The heart of man purposeth his way, but the Lord dash direct his steps, Prou. 16. 8. Many haue set in mans heart, but the counsell of the Lord shall stand, Prou. 19. verf. 21. I know, that the way of man is not in himselfe, neither is it in man to direct his steps, Ier. 18. 23. S. Iames also reproceth them which say, to morrow I will goe into the citie: Ye ought to say, if the Lorde will, I will doe this or that, Iam. 4. 14. By these places we gather, that it is not in mans power to doe what himselfe wilketh, or purposeth, and therefore he hath not a free and absolute will in these things.

Ans. It is one thing to haue liberam electionem, a free choise of things, another to haue liberam executionem, freely to execute that which a man wilketh: these places shew, that man hath not power freely to execute his will: his will or purpose may be free notwithstanding in it selfe, Bel. 1. 11.

Contra. The Iesuite hath made here an answer contrarie to himselfe: for before hee thus defined liberum hominem, a freeman, or a man of freewill, qui pro arbitrio facit, vel non facit, which doth or not doth, this or that, according to his owne pleasure, cap. 7. argum. 2. But here forgetting what he said before, he limiteth freewill within the compasse of the minde and purpose, not extending it to the action or execution: saying to this effect, that the purpose of man is free; but to accomplish or execute his purpose he hath not free or absolute power: which is the very same, that wee affirmed before: that howsoeuer mens thoughtes in mere ciuill and naturall things are left vnto them free, yet so are not their actions.

Argum. 2. May. 26. 12. Thou hast wrought all our workes for vs, Rom. 11. 36. Of him, through him, and by him are all things, 1. Corin. 12. 6. God worketh all in all: Ergo, the disposition of the will is of God.

Bel. Mans freewill, and Gods grace doe worke together: like as without the light a man cannot see, yet the light being present, it is in a mans power to open his eyes and see, or to shut his eyes and not see: so the grace of God presupposed, yet it is in mans will to chuse or refuse: Bel. 1. 11. 2.

Contra. First, this glosse is contrarie to the text: for if God worke all our workes for vs, if hee worke all in all, then our will worketh nothing: how worketh God all, if hee worke not all, but with a fellow helper? Secondly, the reason is not alike betweene the gifts of nature, and the gifts of grace: for the power to see, to heare, is once giuen in the nature of man; and to the execution thereof, there neede no speciall direction, but the generall assistance of Gods prouidence: but in the workes of grace, as in the disposing of the will to good, the speciall assistance of Gods spirit is necessarie: a man may shut his eyes against the light, but a man cannot shut his heart against the effectuall working of grace. Thirdly, this was the heresie of the Pelagians: Ira dei gratiam potius, quam per singula opera eius vitamur iustitie: They did so affirme the grace of God, that wee neede not for euery worke Gods assistance: but referred themselves to freewill; which was once giuen them. Their sentence was this, that it was the grace and gift of God, that they had freewill: but after this gift once giuen, the execution and disposition of it was in themselves: Hieron. epist. ad

contr. Pelag.

Cicero, Bellarmine seemeth not to be farre off from this heresie, that matcheth the naturall faculties of the sense, and the spirituall disposition of the will together: as though a general assistance of Gods power and providence sufficed to the one, as well as to the other.

Lastly, Augustine saith: Estimur quidem liberum esse in omnibus hominibus arbitrium, habens quidem iudicium rationis, non per quod sit idem quod ad Deum pertinet, sine Deo aut inchoare, aut perficere: sed tantum in operibus vite presentis, tam bonis quam malis; bonis dico, quia homo natura oritur, ut velle manducare, laborare, domum fabricare, &c. We confesse a kind of freewill to be in all men, which hath the iudgement of reason, not by the which it is fit either to begin, or to finish without Gods helpe, things appertaining to God, but only in the works of this life present, both good and evil; such good things I meane, as have a naturall or ciuill goodnes, as to will or purpose to eate, to labour, to build an house. With this testimonie, both these points are confirmed, which we haue now already sufficiently proued out of Scripture. First, Augustine graunteth a freewill in naturall things, so farre onely as they are naturall or ciuill good, not as they are referred vnto God or any godly worke. Secondly, the execution of these naturall actions he doth not attribute to mans freewill, but the purpose onely and desire, as velle laborare, manducare, to will to labour, to will to eate, and so of the rest.

Saint Hierome epist. ad Cicero, sheweth what the power of mans will is in naturall things: the Pelagian objected thus: Si voluere curuare digitum, stare, sedere, &c. semper mihi dei auxilium necessarium est: If I will bow my finger, stand, sit, &c. is the helpe of God alwaies necessarie? He answereth thus: Ande ingratus, imo sacrilegus, Apostolum predicantem: Hear thou vngratefull man, &c. the Apostle thus preaching, Whether we eate or drinke, or what soeuer we doe, alse let all be done to the glorie of God. So then euen in these ciuill workes Gods assistance is necessarie.

Ambrose also thus testifieth, epist. 84. Quasi homo auxilium dei in quadam actionum suarum parte, in quadam non eget, &c. As though man needed Gods helpe in some part of his actions, in some not: or that there were any time, or moment, wherein it were not pernicious and hurtfull to him, if the spirit of God were wanting: Ergo, euen in the direction of ciuill actions the presence of the spirit is necessarie, if in no action, nor any time he can be wanting.

AN APPENDIX, AS TOVCHING THE NAME and difference of freewill before mans fall and after.

The Papists.

40. Error.

First, concerning the name of freewill, Bellarmino greatly complaineth, that some haue very boldly chaunged the name of freewill, calling it seruum arbitrium, bond will: his reason is, because the fathers haue alwaies vsed the name of freewill in the defence of the faith: but it is not like, that the Church would haue vsed it, if it had been an offensive and ynfit name, Bellarmino 4. cap. 6.

41. Error.

Secondly, hee doubteth not to affirme, Post lapsum hominem esse libert arbitrij, si suis ante lapsum: That man hath freewill after the fall, as well as he had it before. His reason is this, because the providence of God is alleged by Caluinus to be the onely impediment of freewill: but Gods providence was as well before mans fall as after: Bellarmino 4. cap. 8. argum. 6. Thus in Bellarmino opinion, man hath freewill as well after his fall, as before.

The Protestants.

First, 1. That the name of freewill was very much vsed of ancient time by the fathers we grant, for they had to deale with the wicked Manichees, & other heretikes, who made the beginning of sin in the euilnes of nature, not in the corruption of mans will; therefore against this they maintained the name and nature of freewill so long this name had not only a tolerable, but a necessary vse: but now seeing it is abused to signifie an aptnes and libertie in mans will by nature to doe good, we may deale with it, as Hezekiah did with the brazen Serpent, which though it had a good beginning, yet because in proceesse of time it was abused to superstition, hee caused it to be broken downe. By the same example we may leaue and chaunge the vse of this name of freewill.

2. The Scripture doth call mans will, and man himselfe by nature bond, and speaketh of no freedom or libertie but by grace: Rom. 6. 20. Ye were the seruants of sinne: Serui peccati: What is this else but to say, seruum arbitrium, your will was bond, or seruant to sinne.

3. Concil. Arausican. 2. c. 13. Quod amissum est, &c. That which is lost cannot be restored, but by him, that first gaue it, as the truth saith: Isaie Some make you free, ye are free indeed, Ioh. 8. 36. The Scripture acknowledgeth no libertie of the will but by grace: wherefore the name of freewill by nature, is contrarie both to the sense and phrase of Scripture, and in that vnderstanding may be refrained, and discontinued.

Secondly, 1. That man after his fall enioyeth freewill as he did before, is contrarie to the Scripture: Ecclesiast. 7. 31. God hath made man righteous, but he hath added many iniquities. And the image of God, after the which man was created, whereof his holie and freewill was a part, is by Adams fall decayed, and renewed in Christ, Coloss. 3. 18.

2. Neither doth Caluins or any other say, that Gods prescience or providence is an hindrance to the libertie of mans will: but we confesse with Ambrose: Eterna dei, & semper tranquilla cognitio nulla nos urget necessitate precandi, nec inde manas iniquitas, unde infusio: Gods eternall and stayed knowledge, doth not vrge vs with any necessitie to sinne, neither doth iniquitie proceede from whence iustice commeth, lib. 2. de vocat. Gen. cap. 10. It is not then Gods prescience, but mans own corruption; that hath spoyled him of the libertie of will giuen in the creation: that which God foreknoweth, must necessarily come to passe, for otherwise it should not haue been foreknowne: but his foreknowledge is not the cause thereof.

3. That Adams freewill by his fall is lost, and that man hath not the same libertie of will before and after his fall, it is plentifully testified, by Councels and Fathers. Arausican. 2. c. 8. Librum arbitrium per peccatum primi hominis infirmatum & lesam: Freewill by the sinne of the first man is weakened and wounded. Can. 25. Per peccatum primi hominis ita inclinatum & attenuatum fuit lib. arbitrium: Freewill is so attenuate and degenerate by the sinne of the first man, that no man can loue God, or beleue in God, as hee ought, vnlesse grace preuent him. S. Ambrose in Luc. 19. Prodigum viuendo luxuriose consumpsit omnia ornamenta natura: The prodigall childe by liuing riotously hath consumed all the ornaments of nature. Peter Lombard. rehearseth this sentence out of Augustine, and giueth consent to it: Lib. arbitrium mali preceptum hominis, & se perdidit & ipsam. Man vsing euill freewill, hath lost both it and himselfe: lib. 2. Ait. 25. Ier. H. Wherefore Bellarmine most absurdly insinuateth, that man after his fall may haue freewill as well as before.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE POWER OF the minde naturally in morall duties.

First, of the vnderstanding and knowledge, which man hath by nature of these things: secondly, of the power of his will.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER MAN NATU- rally doth vnderstand what is true or false good, or euill, in morall duties.

The Papists.

The Iesuite affirmeth, that a man by his naturall strength may know, vnderstand and iudge, aliquid verū morale, what is true, at sometimes, in morall duties, and to be followed, and y not only generally, but in particular, as when and how to do iustly, how to giue almes: And further he addeth, Actio voluntatis ei vero conformis, erit actio virtutis: That if the will do follow the vnderstanding, in this naturall iudgement of the truth, it will bring forth a vertuous action. This then is his opinion, y naturallly the mind of mā vnderstandeth, which are true vertuous actions, lib. 5. de grat.

Argum. 1. The Apostle saith, When they knew God, they did not glorifie him as God, Rom. 1. 21. Ex the Gentiles had the knowledge of God naturallly by the creatures, and might thereby haue been preserued from idolatrie, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. First, a knowledge of the Creator by the creatures, we graunt, but an obscure, imperfect, a generall and confused knowledge onely, seruing to make men inexcusable, as the Apostle saith, ver. 20. but not able to bring them to the right worship of God, as the Iesuite supposeth: for the Gospell onely, as S. Paul defineth, is the power of God to saluation: that is, the only effectuall meanes to bring vs to know God vnto saluation. This naturall knowledge of God, though the Gentiles had consented to it, could neuer of it selfe haue brought forth a vertuous act.

2. Bellarmine confesseth himselfe, that a man cannot beleue in God, sine speciali gratia auxilio, Bellarmine a. without speciall assistance of grace: lib. 6. cap. 1. nor yet so much as thinke, much lesse doe of him, gaint himselfe any thing, quod ad pietatem pertinet, which belongeth to godlines, cap. 3. lib. 5. respons. ad arg. 1. but so to know God, as thereby to be able to abstaine from Idolatrie, belongeth to godlines, and is a fruit issuing from beleefe: therefore it is not in mans power: And yet the contrary is here affirmed by the Iesuite, Potuisse Gentiles per cognitionem vnius Dei ex creaturis acceptam abstinere a cultu idolorum: That the Gentiles by the naturall knowledge of God in the creatures, might haue abstained from the worship of Images.

Arg. 2. The Gentiles which haue not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law, they hauing not the Law, are a Law to themselves, which shew the effect of the Law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, &c. Rom. 2. 14. 15. Here the Apostle sheweth, that the Gentiles, hauing not the Law written, yet by the naturall light of reason did know some things, which appertained to honest liuing, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans.

Ans. First, wee denie not, as wee haue already declared, but that the Gentiles naturally had some knowledge of right, and wrong, of good and euill; and did naturally such things: but this knowledge and practise of theirs was farre from bringing forth any vertuous action, or good acceptable worke (which is the thing the Iesuite should haue prooued) because they had no faith, without the which it is not possible to doe any acceptable worke, Hebr. 11. vers. 6.

Secondly, this place as well sheweth, that the Gentiles had power naturally as well to doe, as to know such things: but it is impossible to performe the workes of the law naturally, as Bellarmin himselfe sheweth: Non posse sola natura viribus adimpleri precepta moralia omnia, secundum substantiam operis: That by the power only of nature, the morall precepts cannot be kept, as touching the substantiall, that is, the externall worke, cap. 5. Ergo, neither the knowledge of morall precepts is obtained onely by the instinct of nature.

The Protestants.

A Light of nature wee acknowledge, whereby naturally men, after a darke and obscure manner, may vnderstand, in morall actions, some resemblance and likelihood of equitie and truth: And the Gentiles directed by these naturall principles, were able to provide by their lawes against adulterie, murder, theft, and such notorious dishonestie of life: But that there is any such naturall distinct or effectual power or knowledge in man, whereby he is able to bring forth any good or vertuous act, we hold it as a great vntruth.

Argum. 1. The Apostle saith, We are not sufficient of our selues to thinke any thing, but our sufficiency is of God, 1. Cor. 3. 5. Therefore it is not in mans power naturally to thinke or conceiue that which is good.

Ans. Saint Paul speaketh of such thoughts as concerne godlines, and appertaine to life eternall, which we graunt, are not in mans power: not of morall duties, Bellarmin. cap. 3.

Contra. 1. Saint Paul vnderstandeth all good thoughts whatsoever are in man, that they are of God: for elsewhere he saith, that every thought must be brought into captiuitie to the obedience of Christ, 2. Cor. 10. 5. But if man had any good thought of himselfe, what neede it be subdued to the obedience of Christ? In saying (every thought) hee sheweth, that without Christ, all our thoughts and motions are rebellious.

2. As though morall duties doe not appertaine also to godlines of life: as the Apostle saith, Godlines is great gain, if a man be content, &c. Contentment of minde, and auoiding of couetousnes, which the Apostle treateth of here, is a morall vertue, yet Saint Paul calleth it godlines.

3. What if we graunt, that godly workes, and morall duties are two distinct things: yet they are both of God: for every good giuing is from above, 1. 17. And Paul among the fruits of the spirit, reckoneth vp goodnesse as well as faith, Galath. 5. vers. 22. that is, the goodnesse and honestie of life, in thought, will or deede, is as well wrought in vs by the spirit, as faith in religion.

Argum. 2. The imaginations of the thoughts of mens hearts, are only euill continually, Gen. 6. 5. Ergo, man hath by nature no good thoughts.

Contra. 1. If it had been written in generall termes thus; the thoughts of mans heart are euill, the Iesuites answer would haue seemed more probable: but seeing the Scripture saith, they are onely euill, and that continually, they cannot be partly good and partly euill, or good at one time, and euill at another, but wholly and onely euill, and alwaies. Wherefore if this scripture be true, then is his answer false, and impertinent to this place.

2. We haue other testimonies of scripture, that doe witnesse with this text, which wee haue alleadged: God hath made man righteous, but they haue sought many inuentions. Eccles. 7. 31. All righteousness then is of God, the inuentions which man followeth are vaine. The Gospell saith, The light shineth in darknes, and the darknes comprehended it not, 1. 5. The trueth is the light, the minde of man by nature is darknes: if the minde naturally vnderstandeth the trueth, then should darknes comprehend the light.

Lastly, the Psalme saith, There is none, that would vnderstand and seeke God, Psal. 14. 2. Ergo, man hath no vnderstanding of good things by nature.

Augustine saith: Nemo recte sapit, recte intelligit, nisi acceperit spiritum sapientia & intellectus: No man can vnderstand aright, or truly be wise, vnlesse he haue receiued the spirit of wisdom, and vnderstanding, Epist. 105. Therefore true and right vnderstanding is not ingraft by nature, but wrought by grace.

S. Ambrose, serm. 10. in Psal. 119. vpon these wordes, Giue me vnderstanding, that I may learne thy commandments: Si propheta intellectum sibi dari postulat, quis iam arrogans, qui proficitur in sua potestate esse intelligentiam, &c. If the Prophet desire vnderstanding to be giuen him, who is so arrogant, as to professe that intelligence or vnderstanding is in his owne power?

Pet. Lombard. Residit dicitur homo naturaliter velle bonum, quia in rella & bona voluntate conditus est; A man is well said naturally to will that is good, because he was created in a good and right will; the naturall will and knowledge of that is good, he referreth to the state of man in creation, not to his present condition of corruption.

Many of the Schoolemen are of this iudgement, that no morall trueth can be knowne of humane vnderstanding now in the state of nature corrupted, without Gods speciall helpe: scilicet Gregorius. Ariminensis, in 2. sen. dist. 26. qu. 1. art. 1. conclus. 2. Capreol. in 2. distinct. 28. qu. vnic. artic. 3. Gassius. Cassalium, lib. 1. de quadrupar. institutis, c. 32. So that for this trueth we want not euidence from our adversaries themselves.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE POWER OF FREE-will in morall dueties, two Questions.

THE FIRST QUESTION, WHETHER A MAN without faith and speciall helpe from God may performe any thing morally good, if no temptation assault him.

The Papists.

Bellarmino doubteth not so to affirme that a man naturally without faith, both with speciall assistance from God, and without it, can performe some morall good werke, if no temptation be: for a man by nature alone without Gods helpe cannot resist temptation. c. 9.

Argum. 1. God doth reward morall workes done without faith; as the Egyptian Midwives are rewarded for sauing the male children of the Hebrewes, Exod. 1. 21. 2. Nabuchadnezzar is recompensed for his seruice done vnto God, in the besieging and ouerthrow of Tyrus, Ezech. 29. vers. 20. I haue giuen him the land of Egypt for his labour, because he wrought for me. 3. Dan. 4. 24. Reuerent thy sinnes by mercie to the poore: Here the almes of an Infidell doth auert the temporall punishment: Ergo, it was a good worke. 4. Rom. 2. 14. The Gentiles hauing not the Law, do by nature the things contayned in the law: the Gentiles by the light of nature did the workes of the law: Ergo, without faith, some morall workes of the law may be performed, Bellarmino. lib. 5. de grat. c. 9.

Ans. First, 1. They were not the Egyptian Midwives, but the Midwives of the Hebrew women, vers. 15. Bellarmino therefore is herein grossly deceived. 2. This worke of theirs was not without faith, vers. 21. They feared God: wherefore it is impertinently alleaged, for the probation of inmorall good workes without faith.

Secondly, 1. It may wel be, that Nabuchadnezzar went against Tyrus, by the secret instinct of God, as Necho king of Egypt, (whom Iosias vnadvisedly went against) going vp against Carchonius, was commanded of God to make haste, 2. Chron. 35. 21. Then this example is vnfitly alleaged for morall workes done by nature. 2. It followeth not, that because hee wrought for God, that it was a good seruice: so Sathan did execute Gods will vpon Iob, and the Iewes in putting Christ to death, yet neyther I trust did well. 3. Neyer doth the temporall reward proue it to be a good worke: seeing that the wicked are temporally recompensed without desert, with raine and Sunshine, Matth. 5. 45. and Ahab by his temporarie and worldly repentance deferred Gods wrath, 1. King. 21. 9. but it was no good worke, being but a worldly sorrow, rising rather from the feare of Gods iudgments vpon his house, then from the detestation of sinne: and worldly sorrow (saith the Apostle) can send death, 2. Cor. 7. 10. that is, helpeth not to saluation, but tendeth rather vnto perishing. 4. Such a seruice, such a reward; a bloodie seruice in sackling of Tyre, is rewarded with a bloodie victorie in ouercomming Egypt. 5. Augustine saith, Non officij sed finibus virtutis à vitijs discernenda sunt, si enim non propter hoc facit homo bonum, &c. Vertue is to be discerned from vice, not by the officious act, but by the vertuous end: if then a man doth good not for that end he should, he sinneth, cont. Iulian. 43. Therefore vnlesse it can be proued, that Nabuchadnezzar sacked Tyrus for obedience to Gods will, not for reuenge of his owne malice, or of an ambitious desire to enlarge his kingdome, it was no good worke.

Thirdly, 1. the text is to be read, breake off, not redeeme, for so is the hebraic word pro parach taken, Genes. 27. 40. where Isaack saith to Esau, Thou shalt breake his yoke from thy necke. 2. We confesse, that in the Infidels, their almes, and such like good woorkes in shew, were much better then their manifest sinnes, and that to breake off such sinnes, by such workes, it was commendable; yet it followeth not, that they were good. 3. These almes deedes, in that Daniel by the spirit of God gaue this counsell, should also haue proceeded, not from his naturall inclination, but from the instinct of the spirit: as Augustine well saith, Colligitur ipsa bona opera, qua faciunt, non ipsorum esse, sed illius, qui bene vultur malis, ipsorum esse peccata, quibus bona male faciunt: It is gathered, that good workes, which Infidels do, are not theirs, but his, which well vseth that, which is euill, but the the ſinne is theirs, whereby they do good things euill, cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 3. 4. Hee ſaith againe, Nec miſericordia ſemper eſt bona, propter quam meruit Saul à Domino miſericordie damnari: Neyther is mercie or almes alwayes good, for the which Saul deſerued of the mercifull Lord to be damned, ibid. 5. The auerting of a temporall puniſhment, doth not proue it ſimply to be good: as Auguſtine ſaith, Cui non datur ſemper viuere, quid prodeſt bene viuere? What doth it profite a man to liue well, if he liue not euer? in Iohan. 45. Wherefore theſe temporall workes profited not infidels, and conſequently were not good, becauſe they auayled not to euerlaſting life.

4. Fourthly, 1. Some of the fathers expound that place of the Apoſtle, of ſuch of the Gentiles as were conuerted to the faith: As Origen, Si videris Gentes ad Ieſum venire & credere ei, &c. If thou ſeeſt the Gentiles come vnto Chriſt and beleue in him, and fulfill the worke of the law, &c. doubt not to ſay that Ieſus hath written the law in theſe ſtones, hom. 9. in Ieſum. So alſo Auguſtine anſwereth the Pelagians; they are ſaid to do the things of the law, Quia ex Gentibus uenerunt ad Euangelium: Becauſe they came from among the Gentiles to the Goſpell, cont. Iulian. 4. 3. But I do not greatly vrge this interpretation. 2. We ſay, that they among the Gentiles, that followed the light of nature, wanted not ſome ſpeciall helpe, though they had not faith, which helpe others among them had not: So S. Ambroſe ſaith, Quod illuminante gratia innouerunt, obſcurati ſuperbia perdidierunt: That which they found by illuminating grace, they loſt by blind pride, de uita. Gent. lib. 2. c. 2. The better fort then among them, had a certaine meſure of illumination, which all had not, which they by the pride of their heartes corrupted. 3. But our more full anſwere is this, that it followeth not, becauſe the Gentiles did by nature ſome thinges agreeable to the law, as appertaining to iuſtice, temperance, mercie, therefore their workes were good: they did thinges that had a ſhew of goodneſſe, but not with a good minde: they were not then good workes, no more then the almes, faſting, prayer of the Pharifees, were good workes; which were not done of conſcience, but for the praiſe of men: and as Auguſtine ſaith, Tolerabilis in die iudicii punientur, &c. They ſhall be more eaſily puniſhed in the day of iudgement, becauſe naturally, they did the thinges of the law: cont. Iulian. lib. 4. c. 3. And this is that the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 2. 15. Their thoughts accusing one another or excuſing: not excuſing from the whole puniſhment, but in making their puniſhment leſſe or more eaſie, as Auguſtine expoundeth.

That a man without faith and grace, by the inſtinct of nature onely, cannot do any thing that is good before God, whether he be aſſaulted by any ſpeciall temptation or not: it is thine euident out of Scripture.

1. Argum. 1. Pro. 15. 8. The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord. 2. Gen. 6. 5. The imaginations of the thoughtes of mans heart are onely euill continually. 3. Pſal. 13. 3. All are gone out of the way, there is none that doth good, nor not one.
2. 4. Ierem. 17. 9. The heart is wicked and deceitfull aboue all thinges.
3. 5. Math. 7. 18. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit: but every man by nature is corrupt tree. Likewise Luke 6. 45.
4. 6. Iohn 3. 6. That which is borne of the fleſh is fleſh.
5. 7. Iohn 15. 5. Without me ye can doe nothing.
6. 8. Rom. 14. 23. Whatſoever is not of faith, is ſinne.
7. 9. Hebr. 11. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.
8. 10. Tit. 1. 15. To the unbeleeuing nothing is pure. 1. Iohn 2. 16. All that is in the world, is the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, the pride of life. All theſe places do ſtrongly conclude, that man by nature without fayth, is apt to doe nothing but euill: I will examine Bellarmines anſwer to theſe Scriptures.

1. 1. Bellarmin. The argument followeth not, The ſacrifices of the wicked are an abomination: Ergo, their morall workes: For there is great difference betweene the one and the other. Sacrifices muſt be offered with a pure conſcience, and to this end, to pleaſe God; but to morall workes neyther is required: not the puritie of conſcience; neyther in their almes is there any other end, but to helpe the needie: Bellarmin. c. 10. reſp. ad loc. 1.

Contra. 1. Betweene ſacrifices and almes deedes, there is no difference in this behalfe, for the Apoſtle calleth distribution to the poore a Sacrifice, Hebr. 13. 16. 2. Hee ſaith, To do good and diſtribute forget not, for with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed: wherefore ſuch almes deedes as God is not pleaſed with, as was the almes of the Pharifees, are no good workes: for, if they do good, they are acceptable to God. 3. Neyther can the worke be good, where the conſcience is defiled: as S. Paul ſheweth, Tit. 1. 15. that nothing is pure to vnbeleeuers, becauſe their conſcience is defiled.

2. 2. Bellarmin. The meaning of the place is, that the moſt part of their thoughts were euill, not all: for it followeth, verſ. 9. that Noe was a juſt and vpriight man, reſp. ad loc. 2.

Contra. 1. The text is, all the imaginations of mans heart are euill; how then is he not aſhamed to to contradict Scripture, and say, not all. 2. This place may be expounded by that, Psal. 14. 3. There is none that doth good, no not one: Here I trust there is no exception of any, as they are by nature. 3. No was iust, but not by nature, ver. 8. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord: he was by nature the same that others, but changed by grace. 4. So notwithstanding this, all the imaginations of mans heart are euill by nature, as it is so expounded, c. 8. 21. Mans thoughtes are euill from his youth.

3. Bellarmin. This place concludeth not, that there is no man that doth any good morall worke; but none, that is iust: for one or two good workes make not a iust man, that hath many sinnes beside, respons. ad loc. 3.

Contra. 1. The words are very direct, there is none that doth good, and with a repetition, no not one: doth he not most impiously now contradict Scripture, in saying, Yes, some do good by nature? 2. If they be not iust nor righteous, how can they bring forth any righteous or good worke; for an euill or corrupt tree cannot send forth any good fruite, Matth. 3. 18. 3. S. Paul is the best expounder of this place, Rom. 3. 12. they are become altogether vnprofitable, quia iniqui sunt; if they bee wholly or altogether vnprofitable, how can they bring forth any good or profitable worke?

4. Bellar. Mans heart is said to be euill or wicked, not because it can do no good morall worke, but for that it is the fountaine and originall of euill: as Christ saith, Matth. 15. 19. Out of the heart come euill thoughtes, murders, &c. respons. ad argum. 6.

Contra. 1. If the heart be the fountaine of euill, it can bring forth no good: Iob. 14. 4. Who can bring a cleane thing out of filthinesse, no not one: Iam. 3. 12. The same fountaine cannot bring forth bitter water and sweete: but if mans heart being the fountaine of euill, as he confesseth, should worke any good thing, the same fountaine, contrary to the Apostle, should send out bitter and sweet water. 2. In the same place our Sauour sayth, these are the thinges which defile a man: if then an euill heart defile a man, how can that be cleane which cometh from him? Our Sauour sayth againe, Cleanse first the inside of the cup; that the outside may be cleane, Matth. 23. 26. The inside is the heart, the outside are the workes, which cannot be cleane, as long as the heart is vncleane: and the heart is not cleansed or purified, but by faith, Act. 15. 9.

5. Bellar. 1. Christs meaning is, not that an euill tree can bring forth no good fruite at all, but for the most part and ordinarily it bringeth forth euill fruite. 2. The euill tree is the euilnesse of nature, the good tree is the goodnesse of nature: When a naturall man doth good, it is not of the concupiscence or corruption of nature, which is the euill tree, but ex bona natura, of the goodnesse of nature, which is the good tree. 3. An euill tree can bring forth no good fruit, that is, an euill man can doe no good worke meritorious of life and saluation, Bellar. resp. ad arg. 7.

Contra. First, Christs meaning is that an euill tree, that is an euill man, can bring forth no good fruit at all: First, Mat. 12. 33. Make the tree good, and his fruit good: the tree then must first be made good, before the fruit can be good. Secondly, How can ye speake good thinges (saith Christ) when ye are euill ver. 34. If an euill man can speake any good thinges, our Sauour had not reasoned well. Thirdly, Luk. 6. 44. Neither of thornes gather men figs, nor of bushes grapes: Like as then a thorne doth not ordinarily, but not at all bring forth figs, nor a bush grapes: so an euill heart cannot moue any thing that is good. Fourthly, thus Augustine expoundeth: When Iulian the Pelagian, had propounded this example, whether it be sinne in an Infidell to clothe the naked? Augustine answereth thus: Primum hoc male facit, vel bene? &c. Whether doth he this well, or euill? If you say euill, you cannot denie, but he sinneth: if well, then an euill tree bringeth forth good fruit: cons. l. 4. c. 3. In Augustines iudgement then an euill tree cannot bring forth any good fruit at all.

Secondly, 1. It is a most grosse answer and contrarie to Scripture, that a mans will or heart by nature is both a good and euill tree: for the good tree is expounded to be the good treasure of the heart, Matth. 12. 35. And Saint Paul saith, that this good treasure, which we carrie in earthen vessels, is the light of his knowledge of God in Christ, 2. Cor. 4. 6. Say if you dare also that this treasure of knowledge is in man by nature. 2. That the good tree is not by nature, but planted by grace, the Scripture euery where testifieth, Matth. 15. 13. Euery plant, which God hath not planted, shall be rooted out. God pulleth not vp good trees, but he pulleth vp whatsoever is not planted by grace: for that is Gods planting: Ergo, the plant of nature is not a good plant. Iohn 15. 5. You are cleane, that is, good branches by the word, Ergo, not by nature: ver. 16. I haue ordained, that ye goe and bring forth fruit: Ergo, they are not fo ordained by nature.

Thirdly, no good worke is meritorious of life and saluation, yet euery good worke is rewarded euiltingly: Matth. 10. 42. He that giueth a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple, shall not lose his reward. Ioh. 15. 16. I haue ordained, that you goe and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit remaine: The fruit then that remaineth not, and shall not be rewarded of Christ, is no good fruit.

6. Bellarmin, a naturall man, doth not alwaies in euery worke obey the flesh, but he may doe something of his naturall propension to good, not of his vicious concupiscence: resp. ad arg. 8.

Contra. First, whatsoeuer is in man, is either of the flesh, or of the spirit, the carnall part or regenerate: I aske then, whether a naturall man can worke by the spirite? I thinke they are not so absurd: for then, if a man be by nature borne of the spirite, regeneration or second birth were not necessary, contrary to our Sauour, Iohn 3.3. Except a man be borne againe, &c. Then it followeth, that a naturall man working by the flesh, doth nothing but that which is carnall and euill: for the flesh lusteth against the spirit, the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrarie one to the other, Galat. 5. vers. 17. but good is not contrarie to good: therefore of the flesh there is nothing good. 2. S. Paul saith, that in the flesh there dwelleth nothing that is good, Rom. 7. 18. and euery man doth eyther sow to his flesh, or sow to the spirite: but hee that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reape corruption, Galat. 6. 8. a naturall man cannot sow to the spirite; therefore sowing onely to the flesh, he reapeth nothing but corruption.

7. 7. Ballar. Without Christ we can do no good worke tending to saluation; but morall good workes we can, respons. ad loc. 9.

Contra. This answer S. Paul quite ouerthroweth, in the place euen now alleaged, Galat. 6. 8. He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reape corruption; but that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reape life everlasting. The workes then of nature, if they be of the spirite, are tending to euelsing life; if of the flesh, they are tending to corruption: but a good worke is not a corrupt worke or tending to corruption; therefore the workes of the flesh, are no good workes: neither are there any good fruites, which remaine not vnto life, Iohn. 15. 16.

8. 8. Ballarm. The Apostle by faith, vnderstandeth not here that faith, whereby wee beleue in Christ, but a perswasion of the conscience, whereby wee are perswaded a thing to be lawfull, resp. ad argum. 10.

Contra. Augustine answereth; for after this manner the Pelagians objected, Si hoc de cibus intelligendum putes, &c. If you thinke this is to be vnderstood of meates: yet the Apostle by this general sentence, would proue this speciall sinne concerning meates, as it is elsewhere written, without faith it is impossible to please God, Hebr. 11. 6. cont. Iulian. 4. 3.

9. 9. Ballarm. Without faith it is impossible to please God to eternall saluation; but yet the goodnesse of mans nature, and the workes proceeding from it, doe also please God, respons. ad argum. 15.

Contra. 1. He is contrarie to himselfe, for he gaunted before, respons. ad 1. argum. that the sacrifice and other morall workes of a naturall man; Deo non placeant, do not please God, and yet here hee saith; God by them may be pleased. 2. That God is not any way pleased with vs, without Christ, the Scripture is euident, Rom. 5. 9. We shall be saved from wrath by him; Ephes. 2. 2. We are by nature the children of wrath. Can the children of wrath please God? 3. If he speake of the naturall goodnesse of the creature, as it is created of God, I answer with Augustine, that if in this sense man is good: so the diuell also, as he is an Angell, is good, and consequently doth please God.

10. 10. Ballarm. 1. The Apostle speaketh of meates, which are vnclane to those that haue an vnclane conscience, and are not wel perswaded of them. 2. Or if it be taken generally, then thus is the sense, that all the workes of Infidels are vnclane, namely, such which proceede from their infidelitie. 3. S. Iohn speaketh of man, not as he is Gods creature, but as he is a sinner and louer of the world; for in man as he is Gods creature, there be many good things, as his will, vnderstanding, respons. ad loc. 14. 16.

Contra. 1. The Apostle speaketh generally of all the workes of infidels, vers. 16. They are abominable, disobedient, to euery good worke reprobate. 2. All the workes of Infidels must needs proceede from their infidelitie; seeing their mindes and consciences are defiled, which is the reason the Apostle giueth, that nothing is pure vnto the impure. 3. We speake not of the substance of nature and naturall faculties, which are good as created of God, not onely in men, but in diuels; therefore this answer is not to the purpose: the Apostles argument is very firme and strong: That euery man is eyther a louer of the worlde, or a louer of God; a naturall man, cannot loue God, which is the fruite of the spirit, Galat. 5. 22. and hee that loueth the worlde, loueth that which is in it, and nothing else, as the concupiscence of the eye, of the flesh, the pride of life: Ergo, a naturall man, neyther loueth, nor followeth any thing els. Thus notwithstanding all these popish glosses, and hereticall shifts, the truth confirmed by Scripture remaineth, that a man by nature hath no inclination to good, neyther without faith can performe any thing acceptable to God.

Augustines iudgement, I haue dispersedly shewed in these severall answeres: S. Ambrose thus testifieth vpon these words, Act. 3. 16. Faith which is by him, hath giuen vnto this man, integritatem, perfite health: Totum ergo, sup. palam per cooperatores gratia, sup. oculis per subministratum spiritum, &c. The whole therefore, whether outwardly by the fellow-worker of grace, or secretly by the ministration of the spirite, he begetteth, encreaseth, finisheth, whose husbandrie and building we are; de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. c. 8. If Christ then worke all in vs by faith, then nature is able to worke no good thing at all.

Hierom. dialog. 3. aduers. Pelagian. vpon these wordes, I am the vine: Like as the braunches doe wither, being cut off from the roote: Ita omnis fortitudo marcescit, si à dei auxilio deseratur: So all mans strength withereth and petislieth, if it be forsaken of Gods helpe: Ergo, nature (without Gods helpe) can doe nothing.

Their owne Canons thus testifie: Caus. 1. qu. 1. c. 26. Vbi Christus non est fundamentum, nullum boni operis est superadificium: Where Christ is not the foundation, there is no building of any good worke.

Pei. Lombard. agreeeth: Qua sine fide sunt, bona non sunt, quia omne bonum placet Deo: Things done without faith are not good, because euery good thing pleaseth God: but without faith God is not pleased, lib. 2. diff. 4. 1. dist. A.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE POWER of freewill in morall duties.

The Papists.

MAn, euen as it now standeth with him in the state of corruption, hath freewill in morall duties, to chuse the good, and refuse the euill, that is, to embrace vertue, and eschue vice, Belarm. lib. 5. cap. 14. Wee will first examine their arguments, whereby they vrge certaine absurdities and impossibilities, which would follow, as they think, if there should be no freewill, and then we will answer their allegations out of Scripture.

Argum. 1. Sinne is either necessarie or voluntarie: if the first, it cannot be auoided, and so consequently is no sinne: if the second, it may be auoided: Ergo, man hath freewill, he may auoide sin if he will, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Ans. This was the very same obiection, which the Pelagians, and freewill-men vrged Augustine withall many yeeres agoe: Si peccata cauere non possunt, peccata non sunt: If sinnes cannot be auoided, they are no sinnes. And againe Iniuste iudicantur homines, si ea non faciunt, qua iubentur impossibilia: Men should be vniustly condemned, if they doe not these things which are commaunded being impossible. To this obiection, we neede no better answer, than Augustine himselfe maketh.

1. Possibile & facile praeceptum fuit Adamo datum, ex quo contempto omnes ex eo peccatum traxerunt: Adam receiued both an easie and possible commaundement, by the contempt and disobedience whereof, all men are become sinners: cont. Iulian. 3. 18. And againe he saith, Arbitrij libertas semel data est homini, sed quia peccauit voluntas, sequuta est peccantem, peccatum habendi necessitas: Man had once freewill giuen him, but because he sinned willingly, there followed as a reward of his sinne, a necessitie of sinning, cont. Celestinum de perfect. iustit. Augustine therefore teacheth vs to denie this consequent: Sinne is necessarie: Ergo, it is no sinne. Because that this necessitie of sinne is not by creation, but commeth by the corruption of nature, and proceedeth from Adams voluntarie transgression.

2. Potest cauere peccatum, potest resisti, sed opitulante illo, qui non potest falli: Sinne may be resisted, it may be auoyded, but by his helpe and assistance, who cannot be deceiued. Duobus modis cauere corpus malum, ut non accidas, & si acciderit, cito sanetur: sic ut non accidas peccatum cauemus dicendo, ne nos inferas in tentationem; ut cito sanetur, dicimus, dimitte nobis: Two waies we take heede of the bodily diseases, that neither we fall into them; and if we doe, eftsoune to be healed: so that we fall not into sinne, we take heede in saying, leade vs not into temptation; that we may be healed from our sinne, we pray, forgie vs our sinnes, &c. de natur. grat. cap. 67. Thus also we learne out of Augustine to deny this other consequent, sinne may be auoided: Ergo, we haue freewill: for sinne is shunned by grace working in vs, not by our owne power.

3. A third consequent also in this argument fayleth: Sinne is voluntarie, therefore it is not necessarie; say they, it may be auoided. It followeth not: for our will is free, not a necessitate, from necessitie, but a coactione, from constraint or compulsion: Men sinne voluntarie, that is, willingly of their owne accorde, not so voluntarily as that they may chuse whether they will sinne or no.

4. The diuels and damned spirites cannot but doe euill, and wickedly, it is therefore in them of necessitie, yet they doe verily and truly sinne: It is then no good consequent, if men doe euill of necessitie, they in so doing sinne not, because they can no otherwise chuse. To this Belarmine answereth, that it is true in generall, that the diuels doe euill necessarily; it is false in particular, because all the euill which they doe, they doe not of necessitie: for it is in their power not to doe many things which they doe, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Contra. First, if it be not true in particular, that diuels doe euill of necessitie, neither is it true of men, for they haue greater power to leaue some sinne vndone, which they doe, then the euill spirits haue, because their nature is not so corrupt, neither are they so voyde of all goodnes, as the diuels are. Secondly, if it be true but in generall, that the diuell sinneth of necessitie, and yet properly sayd to sinne, it is sufficient for our purpose; for then that proposition is not true in generall, Si necessarium est, non est peccatum. If it be necessarie, it is no sinne: for it may be necessarie in generall saith the Iesuite, and yet shall be sinne.

Bellarmine further would make vs beleene, that in defending of freewill they are farre off notwithstanding from the heresie of the Pelagians: I pray you let vs see how?

The Pelagians affirmed, that a man by freewill might, vitare omnia peccata, auoide and chuse all sinnes: but they holde; vitari posse singula peccata, non omnia, that not all sinnes, but that euery sinne may be auoied.

Contra. I pray you, what great difference is there now betweene these two? The Pelagians say, that all sinnes in all men by freewill may be auoied: the Papiests holde, that euery sinne in euery man, may by freewill be auoied? Euery man hath not all sinnes, but euery man hath some sinnes: which some notwithstanding to him, that hath no more, are all his sinnes. If euery man then may by his freewill take heede of euery his owne sinnes, then of all his sinnes: for if there bee any one sinne, which it is not in his power to eschew, by the Iesuities rule, it is no sinne. Therefore vntill the Iesuite can better discharge himselfe, we must needes tell him, that there is not one haire breadth betweene the Pelagian and popish heresie about freewill.

Argum. 2. If there were not in man freewill, there should be no place left for reward or punishment: for if a man doe euill of necessitie, he deserueth no punishment, and if he doe well willingly, he is worthe no reward: Bellarmin. cap. 15.

Answ. The very same obiection was moued to Augustine: Vbi necessitas, ibi non est culpa: Where there is necessitie, there is no crowne, or reward. He answereth: 1. In recte faciendis nullum est vinculum necessitatis, quia libertas est charitatis, qua diffusa est in cordibus nostris per spiritum sanctum: In well doing there is no bond of necessitie, because freedome or libertie cometh of loue, which is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost: August. de natur. grat. cap. 67. that is, God of vnwilling maketh vs willing, and inspireth a loue and desire of good things into our hearts: and thus the reward is giuen to those that worke willingly, yet of grace. 2. Also punishment is due vnto sinne, though men by nature cannot chuse but sinne: the Apostle sheweth the reason: By one man sinne entred into the world, and death by sinne, Rom. 5. 12. Adams sinne was voluntarie, and therefore worthe of punishment: the same sinne, with death, the reward thereof, Adam hath propagated to his posteritie: so that wee are both partakers of the sinne, and the punishment.

Argum. 3. If there be no freewill, then all men should either be good or euill; and if they be good, none should be better then other; if they be euill, none should be worse then other: whereof then is this difference that some are good, some euill; and some are euill in the meane, some in the extreame, but from the libertie of mans will. Gods election is not the cause: for without freewill election maketh none good? for then infants and mad men might be good by election without freewill, Bellarmin. c. 16.

Answ. First, the difference and separation of men, the Apostle sheweth to proceede onely from God, and not from the will of man, 1. Cor. 4. 7. Who separateth thee, what hast thou, which thou hast not receiued? Secondly, it is true that election requireth freewill to make men good: but then will is first made free by grace; as Ambros. Verum volentium nulla est, ipsa gratia hoc agit, vt in ea, quae vocat primam sibi famulam preparat voluntatem: Indeeue vertue in those that are vnwilling there is none, but grace first of all maketh the will an obedient seruant in them which are called: Ab. 2. de vocat. gent. c. 9. Thirdly, and in that infants hauing no freewill yet are saued by election, it sheweth, that not freewill maketh the difference, but election. Fourthly, the cause then why some are good, some euill, is because all haue not grace, the reason why some are better then others, is, that all haue not the same measure of grace, as Ambrose excellently saith, Prater illam generalem gratiam parcius & occultius hominum corda pulsantem, excellentiore opere, largiore munere, potentiore virtute vocatio specialis exeritur: Beside that generall calling, more sparingly beating vpon mens hearts, the speciall calling sheweth it selfe by a more excellent operation, a larger gift, a stronger power, lib. 2. de vocat. gent. c. 8. There is then a generall calling and a speciall, a more excellent worke of the spirite, and a lesse excellent, a larger gift, and a smaller: as is the difference of the grace that worketh, so is the difference in them vpon whom it worketh. Now let vs see what places of Scripture they obiect against vs.

Argum. 1. The lawe saith, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine: Honor thy father and mother, &c. and many other precepts there are in the word of God, which were giuen in vaine, if man had not freewill to chuse or refuse them: Bellarmin. cap. 18.

Answ. First, the precepts of the law are not giuen in vaine, though it lye not in mans power to keepe them: for the vse and end of the law is as a Schoolemaster to bring vs to Christ, Galat. 3. vers. 24. Solus Augustinus saith, Ad hoc lex precepit ista, ut cum in his implendis homo deficeret, non se exaltaret superbia timenda, sed ad gratiam confugiat fatigatus: For this cause did the law commaund these things, that man seeing himselfe to faile in the fulfilling thereof, should haue no cause to swell in pride, but being wearied in himselfe, to flye to grace for succour: cont. Celest. de perfect. instit. Secondly, againe he saith, Nemo gratis innatur, ne sine causa voluntati eius inbeatur: Man is assisted by grace, lest his will should be commaunded in vaine. Man hath not freewill of himselfe, but is enabled by grace to doe that is commaunded.

De grat. & libet. arbit. c. 6.

Argum. 2. The Scripture offereth diuers promises vnder certaine conditions: as Isay. 1. 19. If ye consent and obey, ye shall eat the good things of the land. Match. 19. If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandments. If it be in our power to performe these conditions, then haue we freewill: if not, to what end are they propounded? Bellarmin. cap. 19.

Ans. First, if these conditions be possible, then it is possible to keepe the commandments, which the Apostle denieth: for therefore is euery one that is of the workes of the lawe vnder the curse, because they cannot keepe it, Galath. 3. 10. Secondly, by this argument, a mans freewill is sufficient to performe these conditions without grace: for if man cannot performe them of himselfe, the same question remaineth, why they are propounded to him, that cannot keepe them. Thirdly, Augustine sheweth the reason of these conditionall precepts: Ps. effect ubi homo se infirmum agnoscit. That man might therein behold himselfe, and know which way to turne himselfe, quare gratularetur, quid precaretur, for what to giue thanks, and what to pray for, or begge, epist. ad Hieronymum. These are sufficient causes of these precepts, that man may see his owne infirmitie and weakenes, and pray for grace to assist him, and giue thanks for the same receiued. Fourthly, againe, whereas the Pelagians objected this very place vrged, Isay. 1. 19. Saint Augustine maketh this answer: Non ob aliud superbis data ista precepta sunt, quam ut in suis viribus deficientes in quibus confidebant, liberationem requirerent: These precepts were for no other cause given to the proude Iewes, then that failing in their owne strength, wherein they trusted, they should seeke for an helper or deliuerer, cont. Celest. de perfect. instit.

Argum. 3. The Lord said to Cain: For as much as his desire shall be subiect, and thou shalt rule over him, Genes. 4. 7. This the Iesuite saith must bee vnderstoode of sinne, that it should be in his power, and if hee would, hee might subdue and overcome it: Ergo, there is freewill in man, cap. 22. Bellarm.

Ans. First, this place cannot in any good sense be applied to sinne, but is more fitly and properly referred to Abel, ouer whom the Lord giueth vnto Cain the dominion of the birthright: for first, the text is, his desire, &c. which very improperly should be spoken of sinne, which is a thing desired, it hath no desire: secondly, because this promise made to Cain (if we vnderstand it of sin) was neuer accomplished, Thou shalt rule over it: and so God should be found vntrue of his promise. Secondly, if we should admit the Iesuities exposition, that the Lord here meaneth sin, Augustines interpretation commeth neerer the truth, who readeth thus: Ad te conuersio eius, i. nulli de tribus peccatis, quam sibi & tum quisque dominatur peccato, cum id sibi non defendendo propius, sed puniendo subiecit: The conuersion, or the turning thereof, shall be towards thee: that is let him attribute his sinne to none else, but to himselfe: and then euery man ruleth ouer sinne, when he doth not preferre it, by defending it, but by repentance doth bring it vnder: De ciuitate Dei lib. 13. cap. 7.

Argum. 4. Euerie where in the Scripture God complaineth of the stubbornnes and wickednes of men: Ierom. 32. 23. They obeyed not thy voyce, nor hearkened to thy law. Match. 23. 37. How often would I haue gathered thy children together, and thou wouldst not? Act. 7. 51. O ye of vncircumcised hearts and eares. If it be in a mans power not to sinne, then hath he freewill: if it be not, God complaineth in vaine, seeing man cannot otherwise chuse. 2. Again, Deuter. 30. 14. This commandment is not hid from thee; neither farre off, it is in thy mouth and in thy heart to doe it: Ergo, man hath freewill to keepe Gods commaundements, Bellarmin. lib. 3. de grat. cap. 20.

Ans. First, God iustly complaineth of the wickednes of men, because, though it be not in their power to beleue without grace, yet it is in their power to resist grace: as Ambrose saith, Qui veniunt de iustis diriguntur; qui non veniunt, sua potestate reuoluntur: They that come, are directed by Gods helpe; they that come not, resist by their owne power, lib. 2. de vocat. Genes. cap. 9. Secondly, though now Adams posteritie be yoked with a necessarie bondage of sinne, yet in him that first transgressed it was voluntarie, and therefore they are iustly blamed. So Bernard saith, serm. 81. in Cantic. Nescio quo modo ipsa sibi voluntas in deterius mutata necessitatem faciat, &c. I cannot tell how it commeth to passe, that the will being corrupted by sinne, doth make a necessitie to it selfe, that neither necessitie, seeing it is voluntarie, can excuse the will, nor the will being enticed, can exclude necessitie. And Saint Augustine saith, Conuenientiss. est, ut malum meritum prioris effectus natura sequentis, &c. It is most conuenient, that the euill merit of the first should be the nature part of the next: de liber. arbit. lib. 3. cap. 20. So there is a voluntarie necessitie wherewith a mans freewill is enwrapped: and therefore is iustly blamed. Thirdly, Saint Paul expoundeth that place in Deuter. of the worde of faith, Rom. 10. 8. This is the word of faith, which we preache. If then obedience of the law be by faith, it is of grace, and not of mans freewill.

1. Argum. 5. First, Deuter. 30. 19. I haue set before you life and death, therefore chuse life, &c. Ios. 24. 15. Chuse you this day whom ye will serue. Secondly, 2. Cor. 9. 7. As every man purposeth in his heart, so let him giue not grudgingly, or as of necessitie: Almes then proceedeth from a mans freewill. Thirdly, 1. Corin. 7. 37. He that standeth firme in his heart, that he hath no neede, but hath power over his will, and hath so decreed in his heart, that hee will keepe his virginity, &c. Ergo, it is in a mans power to keepe his virginity, Beilarme. cap. 23.

Ans. First, this choise and election was not in their owne power: 1. but as the Apostles poundeth this place, the word is in thy heart, that is the word of faith, Rom. 10. 8. By the word of faith then they made this choise. 2. The people also answer, God forbid, farre be it from vs, that we should forsake the Lord, vers. 16. which is a secret inuocation, and calling for grace to be directed in their choise. 3. If Abrahams seruant praieeth to be directed to make a good choise of a wife for his masters sonne, Genes. 24. how much more haue wee neede to be directed by grace in the heavenly choise? 4. How else should that Scripture be true: It is not in man to direct his way, Iere. 10. vers. 23. if the choise were in a mans freewill.

Secondly, almes must proceede from a willing and cheerefull heart: but it is God which first maketh the heart willing by his grace: as the Apostle sheweth in the same place, vers. 8. God is able to make all grace abound towards you: Vers. 25. Thanks be vnto God for his vnspeakable gift: which he expoundeth, vers. 13. to be their liberall distribution.

This very answer S. Augustine made to the Pelagians, vrging that place to Philemon, vers. 14. That it be not as it were of necessitie, but willingly: Quasi aliter sit voluntarium, &c. As though it is otherwise become willing, or voluntarie, but that God both worke in vs the will and deede, according to his good pleasure: cons. Celestin. de perfect. iustic.

Thirdly, 1. The place is not to be vnderstood of keeping or not keeping a mans virginity: but the Apostle giueth a rule for parents when to keep their virgines and daughters vnmarried, when to bestow them in marriage. Thus Augustine expoundeth this place, shewing that it is vsuall in the scripture to take a virgin for virginity, 57. quasi super Numer. So also Theophylact. Primasius. Sedulius, with others, expound it; as Esperus sheweth, de claud. matrim. cap. 7.

2. The circumstance of the place giueth this sense: first, If it be vncome that his virginity be the flower of her age, 36. this should be improperly spoken of a mans virginity, which is not limited to the flower of age. Secondly, the Syriake translation readeth, Si non traderit eam viro, If hee hath not giuen her to a husband: But how can a mans virginity be giuen to a husband? Thirdly, the Arabian translation, vers. 37. readeth in stead of virgine daughter, to put all out of doubt.

3. If it should be so vnderstood of a mans virginity, it maketh more against freewill, than for it: for every man hath his proper gift, vers. 7. and here his will dependeth vpon his owne neede, necessitie: vers. 36. If neede so require let them be married: vers. 37. If hee hath no neede, but hath power over his owne will, he may keepe his virginity. So then, whether it be referred to the neede of his virginity, that is daughter, or to his owne necessitie, his will is not absolutely to dispose, but as occasion and neede is. This text then is improperly alleaged for freewill.

4. Thus also Augustine answereth the Pelagians, obiecing the very same place, 1. Cor. 7. 36. Quod vult faciat, Let him doe what hee will, 1. Quasi pro magno habendum sit velle nubere, &c. As though it were so great a matter to haue a will to marrie, where the question is of the assistance of the diuine mercie. 2. Aut prodest aliquid velle, &c. Or as though it profited any thing here to will, vnto lesse God by his providence, whereby he gouerneth all things, do ioyne the man and the woman: cons. Celestin. de perfect. iustic.

Lastly, Beilarme heapeth vp a great companie of fathers as witnesses for freewill: to whom I make this generall answer: First, that some of them are counterfeit authors, as Clement, alleged: c. 25. 3. Secondly, some had their notable errors, as Origen, Tertullian. Thirdly, some were led with the error of their time, as Chrysostome, and some other Greeke fathers, which attributed too much to mans freewill. And hercof Esperus a learned Papiist doth well admonish vs: Hic opus ubique Graeci dicit in dictionibus causis legendis: Heere and almost euery where the Greekes of freewill must be cautiously read, that it is no marueile, that in their catalogues of heresie Poligam is not reckoned. Fourthly, some of them extoll freewill, hauing to deale with the contrarie heresie of the Manichees, who altogether tooke away the vse of mans will, imputing sin to the necessitie of nature. Thus Augustine is to be taken in his bookes against the Manichees: as he confesse himselfe lib. 1. retract. that in his booke against Adamantius, he affirmed, In hominibus esse potestate. That it is in mans power to chaunge his will: whereas (saith he) this power is of God. So Hierome excuseth himself for enueying so much against marriage in his booke against Iovinian, claud. off. presbiteri

 write, another for instruction; one thing to teach a learner, another to confute a gainfayer, apolog.
ad Pammach. Fifthly, some haue retracted afterward, which before they had written of freewill: as Augustine retracted that saying in his booke ad Simplician. Quamuis sit in vniuersis potentia ut velint, non tamen vs possit. Though it be in euery mans power to will, yet not to doe, or be able: for (saith he) the will also must be prepared of God, lib. 2. retracted. Sixtly, the rest of the fathers speake of freewill: first, either as it was giuen to Adam in the creation. Secondly, or as it is made free by grace. Thirdly, or as it is free onely from compulsion and constraint; all which we graunt.

The Protestants.

That man hath no freewill of himselfe in morall duties, to chuse the good, and refuse the euill; to embrace vertue, and decline from vice, but as he is wholly directed and gouerned by the spirit of God: and that not only the beginning of our calling is of God, but that the drawing and inclining of the will and consent thereunto, is a worke also of the spirit: thus we make it euident by the word of God.

Argum. 1. Psalm. 119. 36. Incline mine heart vnto thy testimonies, and not to vanities: Ergo, it is God that inclineth the heart.

Ans. 1. God inclineth the heart, by inward perswasion, and inuiking, so that notwithstanding it is left in the power of the will to consent vnto Gods calling: Bellarmin. cap. 29. respons. ad 10.

Contra. 1. The Prophet David in the same place saith, Deduc me in semita: Leade me in the path of thy commaundments, vers. 35. And our Sauour saith, that his father must draw vs, or else we cannot come vnto him, Iohn 6. 44. These phrases of Scripture, to incline, to leade, to draw, doe signifie a more forcible and powerfull calling, than is found in the bare act of perswading, inuiking, alluring, &c. 2. If God should onely call vs by perswasion, he should haue no greater power in mouing vnto good, then Sathan hath in tempting to euill: for Sathan also dealeth by perswasion: Suadere & sollicitare potest diabolus, cogere non potest, non extorquet a nobis consensum, sed
petit: The diuell doth sollicite and perswade, he cannot constrain vs, he doth not extort or wring from vs our consent, but craueth it: August. homil. 12. 3. If God onely moue the heart by entising and alluring it, not by an actuall drawing and enforcing, then man should haue greater power ouer his will, than God hath: for many times the will of man without perswasion, of it voluntarie motion is inclined to euill; but God is greater than the heart. And Augustine saith, Deum magis habet in sua potestate hominum voluntates, quam ipsius: God hath greater power ouer the wils of men, then they haue themselues: de corrupt. & grat. cap. 14. Ergo, God worketh otherwise in the will than by perswasion.

Ans. 2. God indeede doth worke in vs by his grace to giue our consent to his calling: Sed
he facit adiuvando infirmitatem, non tollendo libertatem: But in thus doing, he helpeth our infirmie, he taketh not away our freedome or libertie, Bellarmin. ibid. So his opinion is, that grace and our freewill worke together.

Contra. 1. One of the Iesuities answers ouerthroweth the other: for before he said, Inclinat Deus
corda nostra non regendo, sed suadendo: God inclineth the heart, not by enforcing it, but by perswading: but here he saith, Quid aliud facit Deus, cum nos inclinat, quam operari ut consentiamus? What else doth God, what he inclineth vs, then so worke, that we giue our consent? To worke then and to doe, is more than to moue and perswade. 2. Our Sauour Christ saith, Without me you can doe nothing: as a braunch cut off from the stocke withereth, and is altogether fruitlesse, Iohn 15. 5, 6.
 And Saint Paul saith, That in his flesh dwelleth no good thing, Rom. 7. 18. that is, in the naturall man:
 Ergo, there is no good motion in the wil of it selfe, but all goodnes is wrought in vs wholly by grace:
 it is not then partly of our selues, and partly of grace. So Augustine saith, Laborant homines inuenire in voluntate, quid boni sit nostrum, quod non sit ex Deo; quod quomodo inueniri possit ignore: Men doe labour to finde some goodnes in the will, chat should be of our selues, and not of God: but I am altogether ignorant how any such thing should be found: lib. 1. cont. Pelag. cap. 18.

Argum. 2. The seruants of sinne are not free, but by nature we are all the seruants of sinne, Rom. 6. 17.
 Ergo, we are not free, and so consequently by nature haue no freewill.

Bellarmin: The seruice of sinne is contrarie to the libertie from sinne, but it taketh not away the libertie of nature, but that notwithstanding a man by his freewill, assisted by Gods helpe, may shake off the seruitude of sinne, respons. ad 4. testim. cap. 29.

Ans. 1. Neither doe wee conclude from this place, that the libertie of nature is taken away from freewill: for as your Master distinguisheth, there is libertas gratia a peccato, libertas natura a necessitate: lib. 2. dist. 23. q. 9. There is a libertie of grace from sinne, and a libertie of nature from ne-cessitie, coaction or constraint. Wee graunt that mans will worketh freely, that is without constraint, but not freely, that is without sinne.

2. That mans will is a seruant to sinne the Apostle sheweth, vers. 19, because all our members were servants to iniquitie : if all, then the will also, which is a member and facultie of the soule. And verſ. 20. When ye were ſervants to ſinne, ye were freed from righteousnes: If then the mans will by nature be ſinfull and ſo voide of righteousnes, how can it have any inclination at all vnto it?

3. If the will cannot riſe from ſinne vnleſſe it be ayded by grace, then is it not free. A priſoner, though he be not fettered, yet if the priſon doores be ſhut, ſo that he cannot come forth, vnleſſe the doores be opened, is notwithstanding a priſoner ſtill.

Argum. 3. Ioh. 15. 3. As the branch cannot beare fruite of it ſelfe, vnleſſe it abide in the vine, neither can ye, except ye abide in me: Ergo, without the grace of Chriſt mans will can doe nothing.

Bellarmin. This place ſheweth the neceſſitie of grace, that mans will can doe nothing without it, but it excludeth not freewill, reſponſ. ad argum. 3.

Anſw. Firſt, if the branch can bring forth no fruit at all without the vine, nor mans will do nothing without Chriſt, as he ſaith, verſ. 5. Without me ye can doe nothing: then the whole aſſuſie of our will is of grace. Secondly, the branch indeede is as a trunke, wherein the iuyce of the vine runneth; it hath of it ſelfe rine and barke, but no life or growth without the ſap of the ſtocke: ſo man hath power by nature to will, to moue, to affect, deſire, but a diſpoſition to goodnes it hath none at all without grace. This place taketh not away the naturall power of mans will, but the aſſuſie there of vnto goodneſſe it vtterly excludeth.

Argum. 4. Saint Paul ſaith, What haſt thou that thou haſt not receiued? 1. Corinth. 4. 7. Wee haue then no good thing of our ſelues: Ergo, neither haue wee any freewill or inclination to that is good.

Anſw. Habemus dono Dei liberum arbitrium, ſed hoc dono accepto Domini ſumus actionum, &c. Wee haue freewill by the gift of God, and hauing receiued this gift, then we work freely, and are Lords and commanders of our actions: Bellarmin. ibid. reſp. ad ſextum teſtimon.

Contra. The Ieſuites anſwere in effect is this, that to haue a deſire and inclination to good things, is of God, becauſe freewill, from whence cometh this deſire, is the gift of God: ſo that this receiuing, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, hee would haue referred to the creation, when God beſtowed this gift of freewill generally vpon all: This anſwere is eaſily ouerthrowne: firſt, S. Paul ſpeaketh of ſuch gifts as are receiued by grace, and not ſuch as were beſtowed in the creation: for the benefits of creation are generall, and indifferently diſtributed to all: but the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch graces, as were diuerſly beſtowed vpon men, wherein one excelled another, one ſuſe- led againſt another, verſ. 6. one was diſcerned, that is, preferred before another. Therefore the Apoſtle cannot vnderſtand the gift of freewill, as it was conferred vpon all in the creation, but as it is giuen vnto ſome by grace.

Secondly, the Pelagians did expound this place alſo, euen as the Ieſuite doth, de bonis natura, of the gifts of nature: to whom Auguſtine conſuteth thus: Nunquid per hac dona communia homines diſcernuntur ab hominibus? Men are not ſeparated or diſcerned one from another by theſe common gifts of nature: but the Apoſtle ſaith, Whom he ſeparated thee? Again, Non dicit Apoſtolus, qui potes habere, quod non accepisti, ut poſſis habere, ſed nunquid habes? poſſibilitas habendi fide non diſcernit, &c. The Apoſtle ſaith not, what canſt thou haue, which thou diſt not receiue a poſſibilitie by nature to haue? but what haſt thou alreadie? for it is not the poſſibilitie to haue faith, or any other grace, which doth diſcerne men, but the hauing of faith it ſelfe: de predeſtinat. lib. 1. cap. 5. This place then cannot bee vnderſtoode of the poſſibilitie of freewill, which ſhould bee in euery man by nature: but of thoſe good things that are really and actually in vs: all which wee doe receiue of God.

Thirdly, the Ieſuite is driuen to borrow an anſwere from the old heretikes the Pelagians: for thus they ſaid: Non contra gratiam diſputo, (inquit Pelagianus) quia liberum arbitrium defendo: ſeuim hominem creauit Deus, & illi liberum arbitrium donauit, quicquid homo poteſt de libero arbitrio, cuius gratia debetur, niſi eius, qui eum condidit cum libero arbitrio? I doe not reaſon againſt grace (ſaith the Pelagian) while I defend freewill: for if God created man, and gaue him freewill, whatſoeuer a man is able to do by his freewill, to whoſe grace is he indebted, but to his, who made him with freewill. The very ſame anſwere doth the Ieſuite giue vs here, that whatſoeuer a man doth by vertue of his freewill, it is by the gift of God, becauſe freewill is his gift. Et nos iſtam, qua conditi ſumus, quamque hoc nomine appellatam minime legimus, ſamen quia gratis data eſt, gratiam ſatemur, ſed oſtendimus maiorem eſſe iſtam, qua Chriſtiani ſumus: And we alſo doe acknowledge the grace of creation, whereby we were made, becauſe it is freely giuen, though we finde it no where called by the name of grace, but yet there is a greater grace, and more properly ſo called, by the which grace we are made Chriſtians: Auguſt. de verbis Apoſtol. ſerm. 11.

Celeſtin. epiſt. de decretal. 1. cap. 9. Ita Deus in cordibus hominum, atque in ipſo libero operatur arbitrio, ut ſancta cogitatio, pium conſilium omniſq; motus bona voluntatis ex Deo ſit, quia per illum aliquid boni poſſumus, ſine quo nihil poſſumus: quod igitur tempus interuenit, in quo eius non operamur auxilio: So God worketh in the hearts of men, and in freewill, that euery holie thought, godly counſell, good mo- tion tion of the will is of God : so by him wee are able to doe some good, without whom wee can nothing : there can be therefore no time, when we stand not in neede of his helpe.

Further, Saint Augustine thus testifieth : Liberrimum arbitrium & ad malum & bonum nos habere confidendum est. &c. We must confesse that we haue freewill both to good, and euill : but in doing of euill euery man is free from righteousness, and the seruant of sinne; but in doing of good no man is free, vnlesse he be freed by him, that said, If the sonne make you free, then are you free indeed, lib. de corrupt. & grat. cap. 1.

Again, Voluntas humana non libertate consequitur gratiam, sed gratia potius libertatem : Mans will by libertie obtaineth not grace, but by grace libertie or freedome, cap. 8. Ergo, the libertie of the will is wholly of grace.

To this purpose, Augustine fitly compareth liberum arbitrium iumento, gratiam sessori : freewill to the beast, grace to the rider : like as the beast is guided by the riders hand to goe straight in the way, sic liberum arbitrium gratia regimine regitur : so freewill is directed by grace, Sec. cons. Pelagian. artic. 3. Like as the rider then giueth all the direction and regiment to the beast ; which indeede goeth, and trauaileth, but cannot goe right in the way without the rider : so mans will hath no inclination to the right way, without the illumination of grace.

Bernard vseth this similitude : Quis cum ad ignem venerit algens, &c. Like as a man comming frozen and cold to the fire, doubteth not, but he had his heate from the fire : sic spiritus in nobis operatur omnia : so the spirit worketh all in vs : in die Pentecost. serm. 1. Like as then there is no heate but from the fire, when a man is starke with colde; so there is no goodnesse in mans will, but from grace.

Saint Ambrose, vpon these words, 1. Corinth. 2. 12. We haue receined, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit of God, that wee might know the things that are giuen vs of God : Vnde si quis est, qui aliqua excellens habere bona, quorum non deus largitor est, &c. If therefore there be any man, which thinketh he hath any good thing, whereof God is not the giuer, but himselfe the author, he hath not the spirit of God, but of the world, epist. 84. The Papiists then haue not the spirit of God, who ascribe part of the good worke vnto grace, part vnto freewill, but not all vnto grace.

Saint Hierome vpon these words, Iohn 6. No man can come vnto me, except my father draw him : Qui trahitur, non sponte currit, &c. He that is drawne, doth not runne of himselfe, sed aut tardus, aut inuitus adducitur, but is brought either slowly, or vnwillingly : lib. 3. aduers. Pelagian. Mans will then hath no aptnes or inclination of it selfe at all to come vnto God.

Peter Lombard, out of Augustine alleageth, Institiam in homine Deus solus operatur : God onely worketh vertue and righteousness in man, lib. 2. distinct. 28. a. Ibid. iter. d. It is in mans power to change his will to the better : sed ea potestas nulla est, nisi a Deo deitur : but that is no power at all; vnlesse it be giuen of God : Ergo, in mans will, without grace, there is no power at all.

Lastly, this doctrine, that man hath no freewill by nature to doe that which is good, hath been sealed by the blood of Martyrs : Richard Woodman Martyr, against mans freewill, alleadged these places of Scripture : Euery good gift commeth from aboue, Iam. 1. 17. Of his owne will begate he vs: Ibid. vers. 18. It is God which worketh in vs the will and the deeeds, Philip. 2. 13. Ergo, mans owne will in good things is little worth, Fox pag. 1995. For this truth, agreeable to the Scripture, suffered also Thomas Spicer, Iohn Dery, Edmund Poole, because they affirmed no mortall man to haue freewill in himselfe to doe good or euill : Fox pag. 1912. articul. 7.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE POWER OF freewill in diuine and supernaturall things.

HERE wee are to handle these two seuerall poynts : first, whether the strength of freewill be vtterlie lost by the transgression of Adam. Secondly, what power it hath in spirituall matters.

The Papiists.

FREEWILL, they say, is not vtterlie extinguished, but onely abated in strength, and attenuated : 45. Error.

Bellarmin. de grat. lib. 5. cap. 30. Concil. Tridentin. sess. 6. cap. 1.

Further, Bellarmin thus explaneth his minde, that Adams freewill in two things was stronger than ours : first, Adam was free not onely in the very act of willing, but in the execution also, so are not wee : for though we haue libertie to will, yet wee are hindred by the corruption of nature from executing our will. Secondly, wee haue neede of Gods speciall assistance against temptation, so had not Adam, but was able by the strength of his freewill, without further helpe, to resist temptation, lib. 5. de grat. cap. 27. So his opinion is, that in the act of willing good or euill, we are as free as Adam was.

Argum. The Rhemists gather by the parable of the man in the Gospell, that fell among theeues, and was left for halfe dead, Luk. 10. vers. 30. that neither vnderstanding, nor freewill, nor other powers of the soule, are vtterly extinguished and taken away, but onely wounded by the sinne of Adam.

Ans. 1. It is but a feeble collection, and of small force, which they do draw from this allegoric: for allegories and similitudes doe not hold in all things, but wherein onely they are compared: for our Sauour Christ alleaged not this parable to any such end, but onely to shew, that we ought to doe good vnto all, and that they are our neighbours which doe vs good, though they be strangers and vnkowne vnto vs.

2. We denie not, that the powers of the soule, yea and freewill also in substance remaine still, but that the propertie and qualitie of them is extinguished, that they haue now no naturall inclination vnto good. Augustine saith well of this matter: Semper est in nobis voluntas libera, sed non est semper bona: gratia autem Dei semper est bona, & per hanc fit, vt homo sit bona voluntatis, qui prius fuit mala: There is alwaies in vs freewill, but it is not alwaies good: but the grace of God is alwaies good, and by this grace it commeth to passe, that man, who had before an euill will, hath now a good will: de grat. & liber. arbit. cap. 15.

The Protestants.

That the strength of freewill in good things is vtterly decayed in man, not wounded and maimed onely, but wholly lost, till it be restored by grace: and that we haue not the like libertie in the act of willing as Adam had in his creation, thus we shew it.

Argum. S. Paul saith, When we were dead by our sinnes, he hath quickened vs in Christ, Ephes. 2. 13. Ye which were dead in your sinnes, hath he quickened together with him, Coloss. 2. 13. He saith not, as in the Parable, in diuitis, they left him for halfe dead, but in pauperibus, plaine dead men indeede: As Augustine also saith, Si homo redeat ad iustitiam, opus habet medico, quia sanus non est; opus habet vinificatore, quia mortuus est: Man before hee can returne to doe righteously, hath neede of a Phisition, because hee is sicke; had neede of a quickener and reuiuer, because hee is dead: de natur. grat. cap. 23. Man then is not onely sicke and wounded, but plaine dead, and voide of all life, quicknes or agilitie in good things.

Augustine saith yet more plainly: Cum peccauit primus homo, non in parte aliqua, sed in tota, quoniam datus est natura deliquit: When the first man sinned, he did not offend in any one part, but wholly in that nature wherein he was created: Contr. Pelag. artic. 3. And in another place, Natura sua per liberum arbitrium in ipsa radice vitata: Our nature was wholly corrupted by freewill, in the vnder roote or originall, that is in Adam: in Iohan. tract. 87. Ergo, all the powers both of bodie and soule, are wholly corrupt and decayed in spirituall things.

Innocentius epistol. decretal. 25. Liberum arbitrium Adam perperit, dum suis inconsultiis vitaturus, in prauaricationis profundo demersus est, & nihil quomodo inde surgere possit, inuenit: Adam suffering his freewill, while he vnadvisedly vseth his gifts, was drowned in transgression, and found (nothing) in himselfe whereby to rise from thence againe: Ergo, there remaineth in our freewill by nature no abilitie at all to that which is good.

Concil. Arausican. 2. can. 25. Per peccatum primi hominis ita inclinatum & attenuatum fuit liberum arbitrium, vt nullus postea aut diligere Deum sicut oportuit, aut credere in Deum, aut operari propter Deum possit, nisi gratia eum prouenerit: By the sinne of the first man freewill is so turned and empayed, that none since can loue God, as they ought, beleue in God, or worke according to God, vntill grace preuent them.

Bernard hath this saying: Homo non omnino amisit arbitrium, i. iudicium rationis, in iudicando & discernendo, quamquam libertatem suam amisit, in eligendo & agendo, &c. Man hath not altogether lost his will, that is, iudgement of reason in iudging and discerning, although he hath lost his libertie in chusing and working: for a punishment of his sinne, and a testimonie of his naturall dignitie lost, his will is set for a signe, but captiued: de vir. solitar. So his sentence is, that man hath altogether lost the libertie of his will, though the facultie of his will doe still remaine.

THE SECOND POINT OR ARTICLE, OF the strength and power of freewill in spirituall things.

The Papists.

They say not, that a man by his freewill onely is able to liue well, or to obtaine eternall life: for Bellarmino prooueth at large, that a man hath no power of himselfe, without the especiall assistance of grace, either to beleue, lib. 6. cap. 2. or to prepare himselfe to receiue grace, cap. 5. or to loue God, cap. 7. or to will any thing appertaining to saluation, without the helpe of Gods grace, cap. 4. This then is their opinion, that though the will of man be not able of it selfe only to do any thing in spiritual actions, yet being aided & assisted by grace, it may so that they attribute part to grace, part to freewill: the first motion and stirring of the heart they say is onely of God: and here here the will worketh nothing at all: then it is the part of freewill to apprehend grace offered, to give consent vnto it, and to worke together with it: Trident. Concil. sess. 6. cap. 5. canon. 4. The Rhemists also thus define the matter: Though our election, calling, first comming to God, be not wholly or principally vpon our will or worke, yet our willing and working of any good to our saluation, is the second cause: Gods speciall motion, grace, assistance is the principall, Rom. 9. sett. 4. This then is their meaning, that Gods grace and mans freewill doe worke actiuelly together: as the Rhemists note, The Gentiles, though they beleagued specially by Gods grace and preordination, yet they beleueed also by their owne freewill: Rhem. Ali. 13. sett. 2.

Bellarmino more particularly doth thus determine: first the grace, whereby men are first stirred and moued vnto any good thing, worketh alone without the helpe of our will: Nil omnino in hoc genere ex se facere homo potest: Man in this case worketh nothing of himselfe, Lib. 6. cap. 15. propos. 3. Secondly, that we may giue our assent, gratia excitanti, to grace mouing and stirring of vs, requiritur necessario gratia adiutrix, the helping or assisting grace is requisite and necessarie: Ibid. propos. 7. So here grace worketh, and mans will worketh. Thirdly this grace that helpeth mans will to giue assent, doth onely deale by perswasion, it inforceth not, nor draweth it: but it remaineth for all this in mans power freely to giue or withhold his consent: propos. 8. And hereupon it cometh, that by the same grace and inward motion, one is conuerted, and another is not, because it is in mans power to reject grace: propos. 9. And so he concludeth: Potest homo absolute per liberum arbitrium bene facere, si velit; & non facere, si non velit: That a man, notwithstanding the first stirring, as also the helping and assisting grace, absolutely by his freewill may doe well if he will, and not doe well, if he will not: Lib. 5. cap. 29. respons. ad testimon. 2. Thus the Iesuite maketh the will of man the principall, not the secondarie cause, (wherein the Rhemists are more reasonable, as we haue seene, that make it onely the inferior cause:) for the will of man may make grace frustrate, but grace cannot make freewill frustrate, by the Iesuities doctrine: let vs see some of their arguments, whereby they would proue the fellow-working of grace and freewill together.

Argum. 1. Cast off the olde man, put on the new, Ephes. 4. 22. 24. Worke out your saluation with feare and trembling, Philip. 2. 12. Ergo, man together with God worketh his saluation: Bellarmino Lib. 6. de grat. cap. 10.

Ans. The Scripture thus vseth to speake vnto men, because they are not as stockes and stonnes voyd of sense, but reasonable creatures, indued with naturall gifts of will and vnderstanding: not because men haue power to will or worke any good thing of themselves. Worke your saluation, saith the Apostle, then it followeth: for it is God that worketh in you the will and the deeds. So then man worketh, and God worketh: Man hath a naturall power generally to worke, to will: but to will or worke that which is good, is onely of God. Certum est, saith Augustinus, Nos uelle, non volumus, sed ille facit, ut uelimus bonum; certum est, nos facere, cum facimus, sed ille facit, ut faciamus: It is certaine that it is man which willet, whatsoeuer is willed, but God is the cause that he willet, that which is good: it is certaine that we worke whatsoeuer is wrought, but God is the cause that we do that is good: De bono perseverant. cap. 16. God only then is the agent and working cause, man is the instrument.

Arg. 2. The Prophet Dauid saith, Make haste to helpe me O Lord, Psal. 70. 1. He helpeth our infirmities, Rom. 8. 26. But how can man be said properly to be helped, vnlesse he laboured? Bellarmino ibid.

Ans. 1. Bellarmino himselfe doth here furnish vs with an answer: a better we cannot desire: Opus pium, quatenus opus, a libero arbitrio est tantum, non tamen secluso auxilio generat; quatenus pium, a sola gratia est; quatenus opus pium, a libero arbitrio, & gratia simul: Euery godly worke as it is a worke, proceedeth onely from freewill, with the generall helpe of Gods prouidence; as it is good and godly, it is onely of grace; as it ioynly is a good worke, it is of grace and freewill together: Lib. 6. de grat. cap. 15. propos. 10. This is the same thing, that we said from the beginning, that we deny not a naturall power in man simply to will this or that, but to will that is good, we hold it a worke onely of grace: and herein Bellarmino agreeth with vs in this place, howsoeuer elsewhere he dissent from himselfe in this poynnt and vs. By this position of his, we may easily answer the argument: for if the good worke be ioynly considered, as it is a worke, and besides that, good; so grace onely helpeth the will: both of them ioyned together, the will to worke, and grace to make it good: but as the worke is good, it is onely of grace, and so grace helpeth not onely, but doth alone make the worke good. 2. So where the Apostle saith, The spirit helpeth our infirmities: we are to vnderstand, that in the godly action of prayer, the spirit, and our soule worke together: we worke as it is an action proceeding from the will, the spirit as it is a godly action: and in this respect as the prayer is a godly action, the spirit worketh onely, our infirmities nothing at all: And therefore the Apostle saith, The spirit it selfe maketh request for vs: for we know not what to pray, as we ought: that is the goodnes of the action, and the gift to pray a right, is only of the spirit. Hauing now examined such places of Scripture as are alleaged by our aduersaries: let vs see some other of their obiections.

Obiect. 1. If that man by his freewill hath no inclination vnto that which is good and godly, then belike men are compelled against their willes to the kingdome of God: Sic R. bernist. Ioh. 6. sect. 3.

Ans. Indee, man by nature is vnwilling to any good thing, but God reformeth our willes, and giueth vs grace most gladly to embrace Christ. Thus Augustine saith, Trabis Domini miris modis, ut homo vellet, non ut homines, quod fieri non potest, nolentes credant, sed ut volentes ex voluntate suam: God draweth a man diuers wayes to make him willing: for men, which were impossible, doe not beleue against their will, but of vnwilling are made willing: Cont. 2. epistol. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 20.

Obiect. 2. If man haue no good motion of himselfe, nor no desire or will to good things: what is he better then a stone, or a piece of clay, being altogether destitute of freewill? R. bernist. Rom. 9. sect. 7.

Ans. We say with Augustine: Non sicut in lapidibus insensatis, aut in his quæ rationem non habent, Deus salutem nostram operatur: God worketh not our saluation in vs, as in senselesse stones, or unreasonable creatures: So we doe not take away mans proper motions, and thoughts, as the Romists accuse vs: 2. Corinth. 3. sect. 2. God giueth not a new minde, soule, will, or vnderstanding to the regenerate, but onely altereth and changeth it: Man by nature hath power to will, to thinke, to vnderstand: so cannot a stone or a piece of clay, or any brutish creature: but to will, or thinke that which is good, is onely a worke of grace.

Obiect. 3. If God worke all, then man worketh nothing; what then can good workes profit him, seeing he worketh not?

Ans. God by his speciall grace worketh onely that which is good in man: man himselfe by nature hath a generall power to will and worke, yet not any good thing, but of grace: so God worketh, not without man, but in man and by man, as his instrument, which receiuethe the whole actiuite in good things from the first mouer and principal efficient. Augustine also thus answereth the like obiection: Ergo agimur (inquies) non agimus: Thou wilt say then, that we our selues wrought to good things, we worke not: Inimio & agis, & ageris, & tum bene agis, si a bono ageris: In rather, thou art both wrought thy selfe, and workest: and then thou workest well, and that which is good, when thou art first wrought and made good: De verb. Apostol. serm. 13.

Obiect. 4. Thus also the Pelagians, and freewill men objected: if man haue no freewill in good things: Tale ergo hominibus datum est arbitrium, quale in demonibus, quod nihil aliud possit, vel velle, quam malum: Then such a will is given to men, as diuels haue, which neither can, nor will do any thing but euill.

Ans. Augustine answereth: First, Talis est multorum malitia, qualis demonum, ut Dominus, ex parte diaboli esset: The like malice is in many wicked men, as is in the diuels themselves, otherwise our Satiour Christ would not haue said to some, you are of your father the diuell. Secondly, Sed hoc inter homines malos & diabolum distat, quod hominibus etiam valde malis, superest etiam, si Deus voluerit, reconciliatio: demonibus nulla seruata est conuersio: But this difference there is betwixt wicked men and the diuell, that there remaineth hope of reconciliation, if God will, euen for the most wicked men: but no conuersion or amendment is kept in store for the damned spirits: Id. articul. cont. August. articul. 6. The same difference there is betwixt the corrupt will of men, and the malice of diuels: that the will of men, though it be presently euill, by grace may be made good: but the malice of the diuell can neuer be changed to the better.

The Protestants.

THere are two things to be considered in our will and thoughts, the naturall power of willing, and thinking, and the goodnesse and holinesse of our thoughts: the first is in vs, and is properly ours by the generall gift of God, but the other commeth onely of God, by his grace. The will, the vnderstanding, the thoughts are ours, but the goodnesse is meere, and entirely wrought by the spirit of God: So that in respect of the goodnesse inspired into our mindes, our willes are altogether passive: in respect of the generall power, and naturall facultie, of willing, thinking, vnderstanding, they are also active.

One very fityl compareth mans freewill in good actions, vnto materia; the grace working vnto forma: that as the said materia, without forma, the matter without the forme is rude, and shapelesse: so freewill is a thing altogether rude and deformed, if it be not framed and fashioned by grace comming thereunto: Ex epistol. Valens. Episcop. Carthag. ad Nicolaum Papam.

Augustine saith, Rectè comparari arbitror liberum arbitrium inuenio, gratiam sessori: I thinke mans freewill may very fityl be compared to y<sup>e</sup> beast which a man rideth vpon, grace to the rider or sessor: Sicut inueniunt illud dum in via dirigunt sessoris manu regitur, ut iter rectum secundum sedentis in se voluntatem possit incedere; sic liberū arbitrium gratia regimine regitur, ut possit in semitis Domini rectè ambulare: And as the beast is guided by the hand of the rider, that it may goe right in the way, according to the riders pleasure: so freewill is gouerned by grace, to walke aright in the wayes of God: Cont.

Cont. Pelag. artic. 3. Mans free will therefore is no more able without grace, to doe any good thing, then the horse is to goe the right way without a guide.

Argum. 1. The Prophet David saith, Create in me a cleane heart, O God, Psal. 51. 10. Mans will therefore doth no more worke with grace, then the creature doth with the creator, when it is created. And therefore the Prophet elsewhere saith: He hath made vs, and not we our selues, Psal. 100. which is spoken of the regeneration of men, rather then of the first creation; because it followeth, We are his people, and the sheepe of his pasture.

Ans. There is not a new substance of the heart created in our regeneration: sed ipsa mundities effatur: but the purenes or cleannes of the heart is onely wrought, the same substance remayneth, which worketh together with grace: Bellarmin. cap. 13. respons. ad loc. 2.

Contra. The Iesuite by thus answering, confirmeth our argument rather then refuteth it: for we also affirme, and graunt, that the naturall power of the will and affections remayne still, and worke together in the naturall action of willing, or thinking: but the supernaturall goodnesse and purenes of our heart, our will, our thoughts, we holde onely to be wrought by grace, and that the will of man doth not helpe any thing thereunto. And thus much the Iesuite graunteth, and so he confesseth against himselfe, that the supernaturall purenes of mans will, is onely wrought by grace, though the naturall substance of the will remaine still.

Ans. God indeede worketh our will, but not without vs: for the Apostle in the same place saith, Work your saluation with feare and trembling, ver. 14. Ergo, man worketh together with God: Bellarmin. ibid.

Contra. Gods working is the cause why man worketh: Worke out your saluation, saith the Apostle: and then he rendreth the reason or cause thereof; For it is God which worketh, &c. So that man worketh not any thing of himselfe, but as his will is moued and wrought by the spirit of God: for if all were not of God, how then saith the Apostle, That God may be all in all. 1. Cor. 15. 28. and that every good gift is of God, 1. Iam. 1. 17. Augustine saith, Sicut homo sedens in iumento dicit, feci bona, vixit 30. milia, cum iumentum illo sedente cucurrerit, sed rector dicitur facere, quia iumentum facere fecit: so liberum arbitrium fidei iter peragit, sed non sine gratia dirigente & gubernante: As a man sitting vpon his beast, saith, I haue gone to day thirti miles, or there about, when as not he, but his beast hath gone it; but the rider is said to doe it, because he maketh his beast doe it: so it is free will that runneth the race of faith, but grace directeth and gouerneth it: Cont. Pelagian. artic. 3. Man then as Gods instrument worketh, but God giueth him the whole actiuitie and power to worke.

Argum. 3. Saint Paul saith: I laboured more abundantly, then they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which is with mee, 1. Corinthian. 15. 10. By this correction of his speech, the Apostle sheweth, that of himselfe he was not able to worke any good thing, but it was the grace of God in him.

Ans. He saith, Gratia Dei mecum, The grace of God with him: so that the Apostle wrought not alone, but he, and grace together Bellarmin. cap. 10.

Contra. Nay, the Apostle ascribeth all to grace: and by saying, The grace of God with me, he meaneth the grace that wrought in him, and was present with him: As elsewhere he saith, Thou I bee, not I now, but Christ is with me: Galath. 2. 20. So that whether he say, Grace with me, or in me, it is all one: his meaning is, that grace onely worketh in him, and he by grace. And so Augustine expoundeth it: Quicquid vult bonum, quicquid potest, à Domino est, quia sine me, aiji Dominus, nihil potestis facere: What good soeuer a man either willeth, or is able to doe, it is of God: because the Lord saith in the Gospell, Without me you can doe nothing: Hypognost. cont. Pelagian. artic. 2. Beside these places of Scripture, which are manifest against this popish error of free will, we haue also certaine obiections to appose them with.

Obiect. 1. If the spirit of God doe not draw and enforce the will of man, but onely moue it by perswasion, then should wee haue no more forcible meanes to leade vs to good, then wee haue to seduce vs to euill: for sathan dealeth onely by intisement, and perswasion: Euerie manis tempted, when hee is withdrawne by his concupiscence, and entised: James 1. 14. Augustine saith: Satanus non cogit inuitum: Sathan compelleth none against his will: In Psalm. 91. But it is certaine, that the spirite of God worketh more strongly in vs vnto life, then the tempter doth vnto destruction: for our Sauour Christ saith, The kingdome of God suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force: Matth. 11. 12. This spirituall violence and force is not wrought onely by perswasion: But Hell suffereth violence, many there be that goe in thereat, that is, willingly, and of their owne accord, Matth. 7. 13. Augustine saith well: Virtus est vitio potentior, & anima virtute praeuita animo vitio potentior: Vertue is mightier then vice, and a vertuous minde stronger then a vitious: De liber. arbit. cap. 12. This strength is wrought by more effectuall meanes, then by perswasion:

for the will of man naturally is more prone to euill, that to good. And if it were on the one side entised to euill, on the other but perswaded and moued onely to good, it would more easily be swayed that way, then this.

Obiect. 2. Bellarmine saith: Habemus dono Dei liberum arbitrium & hoc dono accepto Domini sumus alii: Freewill is the gift of God, and by this gift once received, we are made Lords of our owne actions: so that it is in our power to doe well or no: Bellarm. lib. 5. de grat. cap. 29. respons. ad argum. 6. So belike, freewill is from God, but man himselfe maketh it good: for then is the will of man good, when it willett good things: but it is in mans power, as they say, to incline his will to good: Expo. also to make the will it selfe. Marke then what followeth hereupon: as Augustine very well gathereth: Si libera voluntas à Deo est, bona autem ex nobis, melius est id, quod à nobis, quam quod à Deo: quod si absurdissimum sit dicere, oportet fateamur, & bonam voluntatem nos à Deo adipisci: It free-will be of God, and good will of our selues, that is better which is of vs, then that which is of God: which if it be most absurd to say, we must needs confesse, that our good will is also of God: Chr. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 18.

Obiect. 3. Bellarmine againe thus writeth, that God inclineth our hearts, Non cogendo, sed suadendo, & invitando, not by enforcing, but by mouing and inuiting it: ita ut in potestate voluntatis relinquantur consentire vocanti: so that it is left in the power of the will to consent to him that moueth, and calleth: Lib. 5. cap. 29. respons. ad testimon. 3. And againe hee saith, it is in mans power, whether he will bee perswaded or not, potest non persuaderi: Lib. 6. cap. 13. respons. ad loc. 4.

Who seeth not now how neere the Iesuite commeth to that old Pelagian heresie: Hominem tantum à Deo adiunari, reuelando tantum, quod fieri debeat: That man is helped only of God, by reuealing only what is to be done. Which heresie Augustine confuteth thus: Nos eam gratiam volumus, quam solum reuelatur sapientia, sed amatur: nec suadetur solum omne bonum, sed persuadetur: We vnderstand such a grace, whereby wisdom is not onely reuealed, but loued; not propounded, but perswaded. He then that confesseth not such a grace of God, whereby we are made to loue that is good, and are thoroughly perswaded thereunto, thinketh not as Augustine thought, but as the old Pelagians: But thus doth Bellarmine: he saith, that, Gratia suadendo inclinatur, grace doth onely moue; but, homo potest non persuaderi, it is in mans power whether he will be perswaded: So then, gratia doth suadere, non persuadere, moue, but not perswade, by his opinion: which is the very position of the Pelagians.

Obiect. 4. It was another heresie of the Pelagians: that God to this end gaue his grace to men, Vt quod facere iubentur per liberum arbitrium, facilius implere possint per gratiam: That, what they are commaunded to doe by their freewill, they may more easily accomplish by grace. What els now doe the Rhemists say giuing this note: That although the Gentiles doe especially beleue by Gods grace, yet they do beleue by their freewill: annot. Act. 13. 2. And againe, Man was neuer without freewill, but is made more free by grace: Rhemist. Iohn. 8. sect. 2. So then grace in their iudgement, helpeth man onely more especially, fully, freely, that is, more easily to beleue: Whereupon it followeth, that they may beleue without grace, though not so especially.

This heresie Augustine confuteth thus: Velo facilius, remio difficilium, tamen & remio iur: immo facilius, pedibus difficilium, sed tamen & pedibus peruenitur: Non est sic, (verus magister ait) sine me nihil potestis facere: As if you should say: the veileth goeth more easily with the sayle, more hardly with the oares, yet it goeth with the oares: A man traueleth better by horse, not so easily a foot, yet he traueleth: It is nothing so (saith Augustine) as our master witnesseth, who is true, and cannot lye, Without me you can doe nothing: De verb. Apost. serm. 13.

Thus was it also concluded, Concil. Mileuitan. cap. 5. Quicumque dixerit ideo nobis gratiam iustificationis dari, ut quod facere per liberum arbitrium iubemur, facilius impleamus per gratiam; tanquam nisi gratia non daretur, non quidem facile, sed tamen possemus sine illa implere diuina mandata, anathema sit: Dixit enim Christus, sine me nihil potestis facere, non dixit, sine me difficilium potestis facere: Whosoever saith that the grace of iustification is therefore giuen vs, that, what we are commaunded to doe by freewill, we may more easily doe by grace: as though if grace were not giuen, we might, though not easily, keepe the commaundements, let him be accursed: for Christ said, Without me you can doe nothing: he said not, without me you can hardly doe.

Man therefore of himselfe is vnable, not onely to sayle, but to rowe; not onely to ride, but to goe in the way of righteousness: But every good desire, will, and thought, is wrought in vs by grace. Thus, I trust, we haue requited our aduersaries, and answered their obiections; and repayed them againe with as many in number, but in waight greater.

Now lastly, the holy Martyrs haue sealed this doctrine with their blood: That blessed man Master Bradford confesseth beleefe onely to be Gods gift: whereas Frier Alphonsus, disputing with him, held on the other side, that the act of beleueing is in mans power: For pag. 1619: There were diuers persons to the number of twentie persecuted in the townes of Winson and Aldwilsam in de grat. Christian. cap. 14.

in Suffolke, anno 1556. for maintaining this article with others, That man had no freewill of himselfe vnto good, Fox pag. 1913.

See also for this matter, African. Concil. 2. can. 7. Si quis per natura vigorem bonum aliquod, quod ad salutem pertinet vitæ æternæ, cogitare, eligere, prædicationi salutari consentire posse dicit absque illuminatione spiritus, heretico fallitur spiritus; cum Dominus ait, Sine me nihil potestis facere. If any man say, that by the strength of nature man can thinke or choose any thing, that appertaineth to eternall life, or consent vnto the preaching of saluation, without the illumination of the spirit, is seduced with the spirit of heresie: for Christ saith, Without me you can do nothing.

S. Ambrose: Voluntas nihil habet in suis viribus, nisi periculi facilitatem: The will of man hath no power in it selfe, but onely a facilitie of sinning: de vocat. Gent. lib. 2. c. 2. epistol. 84. Gratia tota repellitur, nisi tota suscipitur: Grace is wholly refused, if it be not wholly received. Grace then worketh wholly, not grace and mans will together.

Decret. p. 2. caus. 33. distinct. 1. c. 35. Resuscitatus corpore vivit, absente suscitatore, non autem sic resuscitatus in anima: He that is rayled in his body liueth, though he be ablent, that rayled him; but he that is rayled in his soule cannot: Ergo, without grace the soule can do nothing.

Pet. Lombard. vpon these words, It is not in him that runneth, or willeth, but in God that sheweth mercie, &c. reproveth their interpretation that say, It is not in mans will onely: and further reasoneth thus, That if it be not onely in the will, nor onely of mercie, the Apostles wordes might be turned thus, It is not in him that sheweth mercie, but in him, that willeth, &c. so he concludeth, ideo rectè dictum intelligatur, ut totum detur Deo, therefore this is so to be vnderstood, that the whole may be giuen vnto God: lib. 2. dist. 26. liter. b. Ergo, if all be of grace, nothing remaineth by mans will to be performed.

AN APPENDIX OF AUGUSTINES IVDGEMENT, thoroughly discussed concerning Freewill.

BEcause this learned Father, and in his time the most zealous defender of the grace of God against the power of freewill, and the mightiest impugner of the heresie of the Pelagians, hath written at large of this matter; and more without all question, then any of the fathers beside: I will therefore produce the testimonies alleaged on both sides, that in the ende it may appeare, which way the iudgement of this father enclined.

The Papists.

THE places of Augustine vrged by Bellarmino for the prooffe of freewill, are these.

47. Error.

1. Lib. de quantitat. animæ, cap. 36. Datum est animæ liberum arbitrium, &c. There is giuen to the soule of man freewill, &c. which they that denie, are so blind, &c. The same is repeated by Bellarmino lib. 5. de grat. c. 27.

2. Lib. 5. de ciuitat. Dei, cap. 10. Nullo modo cogimur, &c. Wee are not constrained, reftayning Gods preſcience, to take away voluntatis arbitrium, the iudgement of the will.

3. Hypognostic. lib. 3. Quisquis negauerit liberum arbitrium, &c. Whosoever denieth freewill, is no Catholike: Bellarmino lib. 4. de grat. c. 9.

Anſw. 1. Augustine vnderstandeth freewill from coaction or compulsion: as lib. 5. de ciuitat. Dei, c. 10. Nec ideo peccat homo, &c. Man doth not sinne, because God foresaw he should sinne: Gods preſcience doth not force or compell mans will to do any thing. 2. Likewise elsewhere Augustine, saith, Liberum arbitrium nos habere, &c. It must be confessed, that we haue freewill to do both good and euill, &c. Sed in bono faciendo, liber nullus esse potest, but in doing of good no man is free, except he be freed by him, that saith; If the Sonne make you free, then are you free indeede, lib. de corrept. & grat. c. 1. In this sence wee confesse freewill with Augustine, free to euill without constraint, free also vnto good, but by grace.

4. Lib. 4. contr. Iulian. c. 3. Tolerabilius illas, quas in impijs dicis esse virtutes, &c. More tolerably those vertues, which you say are in the wicked, you should rather ascribe diuino muneri, to the diuine gift, then to their will, though they know it not, Bellarmino lib. 5. de grat. c. 9.

Anſw. This place maketh against Bellarmino, for Augustine would haue the vertues euen in Infidels, ascribed in some sort to the gift of God, rather then to their owne will.

5. Lib. de perfect. iustit. contr. Cælestin. That place being objected out of S. Paul, Quod vultis facere, let him do what he will: Augustine answereth thus; quasi pro magno habendum sit, velle nubere as though it were such a great matter, to haue a will to marrie: where wee reason of the assistance of Gods mercie; hence Bellarmino concludeth a free will in morall workes without grace. objected.

Anſw. This place also maketh against him: for to haue a wil to marrie, is natural, neither good nor euill: but to marrie to such end as God hath appointed marriage, is a good worke, and is not in mans will without Gods helpe: as it followeth in the same place, Quasi prodest aliquid velle, &c.

As

As though in this caſe it auailed to will, vnleſſe God by his prouidence do ioine the man and the woman.

6. Hypognoſtic lib. 3. Eſſe fatemur liberum arbitrium, &c. Wee confeſſe a freewill, not by the which it is fitte to beginne or finiſh things appertaining to God, ſed: animi in operibus vita preſentis, tam bonis quam malis, but onely in the workes of this preſent life, eyther good, or euill: Bonũ dico, quæ de bono natura oriuntur, &c. I call thoſe good things, which do come of the goodneſſe of nature, as to worke in the field, to eate, to drinke, &c. Bellarmin. ibid.

Anſw. All this we graunt, that naturall and ciuill workes are in mans power, as to worke, to eate, to drinke: but to do theſe things well, and to referre them to the glory of God, which is the morall goodneſſe of theſe actions, is from God, and not from mans will.

7. Auguſtin. lib. 1. de liber. arbitrio, c. 12. Vides in voluntate noſtra eſſe conſtitutum, &c. You ſee it is in our will, whether we enioy ſo great a good, or want it, &c. Againe, Quis peccat in eo quod nullo modo cauere poteſt, &c. Who ſinnet in that, which cannot be ſhunned: but we ſinne, Ergo may be ſhunned, Bellarmin. lib. 5. c. 27.

8. Lib. 2. de animab. 12. Peccatum reum quæquam: For a man to be held guiltie of ſin, becauſe he did not that, which he could not do. ſumma inſania eſt, is great madneſſe: wherefore the ſoules, that which they do, if they do it of nature, not of will, if they want a free motion to do or not to do, &c. they can not be held guiltie of ſinne, Bellarmin. ibid.

9. Lib. 2. aſtor. cum Felice. Manich. c. 3. Eſſe liberum arbitrium, & inde peccare quæquam; ſi uelint, &c. That there is a free will, and thereby every one may ſinne if he will, and not ſinne if he will not, is euident in the Scripture: Againe, Habet unusquisq; in voluntate, aut eligere, quæ bona ſunt, &c. Every man hath in his will, eyther to chooſe the good, and ſo to be a good tree, or to chooſe the euill, and to be an euill tree, ibid.

Anſw. 1. I anſwere here for Auguſtine, as Hierome for himſelfe, who diſputing againſt Iouinian, who ſeemed to extenuate Virginie, falleth into the other extreame to be thought to condemne Mariage; ſaith he, Deſuerat prudens lector, ea, quæ uidentur duriora, eſtimare de cæteris, &c. The diſcreet Reader ſhould eſteeme and meaſure the hard ſayings by the reſt, and not to accuſe me, in this and the ſame booke to bring forth contrarie ſentences: Quis enim ita hebes, &c. Who is ſo blockiſh to prayſe and condemne the ſame thing? Againe, Aliud eſt docere diſcipulum, aliud aduerſarium uincere. It is one thing to teach a diſciple; another to confute an aduerſarie: are yee angrie with me, quia Iouinianum non docuerim, ſed uicerim, becauſe I did not teach Iouinian, but confute him? quod log. ad Pammach. The like may be ſaid for Auguſtine: Do we thinke he was ſo forgetfull or vnkilfull, as one while to extoll freewill, another to deprauẽ and empayre it? we muſt conſider againſt whom he writeth, namely the Manichees, who imputed ſinne to the neceſſitie of nature: Auguſtine dealing againſt them, when he ſpeaketh of freewill, doth conuince rather then teach them.

2. Let vs giue Auguſtine leaue to expound himſelfe: Who Lib. 1. retract. c. 9. thus ſayth, Cum de libera voluntate rectè faciendi loquimur, de illa, in qua homo factus eſt, loquimur: When wee ſpeake of the free will of doing well, we ſpeake of that will, wherein man was made: Thus if we vnderſtand Auguſtine ſpeaking of free will, we willingly graunt all. Bellarmines exception is a meere cauill, that Auguſtine ſhould affirme the ſame will to chooſe good or euill to be in vs, that was in Adam, but not the ſame power of execution. Contra. 1. He ſpeaketh directly, de voluntate, non poſſe rectè faciendi, of the will not the power of doing well, which he ſaith was in Adam, and not in vs.
4. Secondly, he elſewhere ſaith, Vitiato libero arbitrio, totus homo uitiatus eſt: That free will being corrupt, man wholly was corrupted. Hypognoſtic. c. 7. If man wholly, then his will alſo wholly was corrupt; then conſequently the freedome of his will to good and euill was corrupted.

3. Auguſtine further expoundeth himſelfe, and lib. 1. retract. treating of his bookes De libero arbitrio, he retracteth this very ſentence vrged before, loc. 7. as that ſinne may be ſhunned, that a man may liue well if he will: he thus explaineth himſelfe, Voluntatem bene non uelle, niſi à Deo liberetur. That the will cannot will well, vnleſſe God make it free: Et nihil poſſe ſentienti, intelligenti bonum occurrere, &c. And that nothing that is good, can come into the ſenſe or vnderſtanding, but from God: thus if we will giue Auguſtine leaue to expound himſelfe; where he treateth of free will to do good, he muſt be vnderſtood to include a neceſſarie ſenſe of Gods grace, whereby it is made free, and not by nature.

10. Lib. de ver. religion. c. 14. Non dubitandum uideo, &c. It is not to be doubted, that the minde hath freewill: for God would haue his ſeruants to ſerue him freely, which cannot be, ſi non uoluntate ſed neceſſitate ſeruiunt, if they ſhould ſerue him not willingly, but of neceſſitie, Bellarmin. ibid.

Anſw. 1. By neceſſitie Auguſtine vnderſtandeth the forcing and conſtraying of the will: as before loc. 2. Non cogimur tollere, We are not compelled to take away free will, becauſe of Gods preſcience: likewise ſuch a neceſſitie, as the heathen aſcribed to the ſtarres, and fatall deſtinie; in freewill he denieth, lib. de incarnat. uerbis. c. 2. but ſuch a voluntary neceſſitie, whereby the will cannot now chooſe, but willingly ſinne, Auguſtine affirmeth, Lib. 1. retract. treating of his bookes de libero libero arbitrio: Quid homo non possit, &c. That man cannot now refrain from lustful concupiscence; Non natura est primò instituti hominis. sed poena damnati, it is not the nature of the man first created; but the punishment of him being condemned: if homo non potest, if a man cannot abstaine, how is there not a necessitie laid vpon him? 2. God indeed will haue vs to serue him willingly and freely, but as Augustine elsewhere saith, Ex nolentibus, volentes facit, of nilling hee maketh vs willing: and as S. Ambrose; Virtus nulla volentium est, sed ipsa gratia hoc agit: There is no vertue, where unwillingnesse; but grace it selfe worketh this: that is, that we are willing, lib. 2. de vocat. Gen. c. 9. Hitherto then Augustines sense is maintained to be sound and good.

11. Lib. de grat. & liber. arbit. c. 1. Renouit Deus per Scripturas, esse in homine liberum arbitrium: God hath reuealed by the Scriptures, that there is a freewill in man, Beilarm. c. 28.

12. Epistol. 47. Catholica fides neque negat liberum arbitrium: The Catholike faith neither denyeth freewill in man, neque tantum ei tribuit, ut sine gratia valeat aliquid, neyther doth it attribute so much vnto it, as though it could do any thing without grace, Beilarm. c. 28.

13. Lib. 2. de nupt. & concupisc. Non negamus liberum arbitrium: We denie not free will: lib. 1. ad Timotheum c. 2. Quid nostrum dicis? Which of vs saith? That by the sinne of the first man free will is lost from mankind, Beilarm. ibid.

Ausw. 1. Augustine expoundeth himselfe, loc. 12. how he vnderstandeth freewill, that it cannot do any thing at all that is good, without grace: and elsewhere, he calleth it liberam voluntatem, propter gratiam Dei, a free will because of Gods grace, which doth free it from the law of sinne, act. 13. Fortunate dicitur.

2. In that he saith, the freewill, which Adam had is not lost, hee vnderstandeth a libertie from coaction, and forcing: 1. as thus he defineth the will, Voluntas est motus ad aliquid faciendum nullo cogente: The will is a motion to do any thing without forcing: this libertie of will remaineth still. 2. Yet Augustine acknowledgeth that our will by nature is not free from necessity: Postquam ille libera voluntate peccauit, non in necessitate precipitatus sumus: After Adam had sined by his freewill, we were precipitate into necessity; and he giueth this example: as before a man is accustomed to a thing, he hath free will to do it, or not to do it; but afterward, cum consuetudine infigitur voluntas, vincere non potest, quod sua libertate fabricata est: When the will is entangled with custome, it cannot overcome that, which first it willingly deuised: As many would not swear, yet by custome they cannot forbear: act. 2. dicitur. Fortunatus.

Such a voluntary necessity Adam by his sinne hath brought vpon his posteritie. 3. Augustine saith, Liberum sanctis in vita futura habiturum arbitrium, sed ita liberum, ut non possit inuicere: The Saints shall haue freewill in the next life, but so free, that it cannot sinne, lib. 2. de ciuit. dei. c. 30. As they shal haue a free will with a necessity of not sinning, so we by nature haue a freewill with necessity of sinning.

14. Augustine lib. de grat. & liber. arbit. c. 2. Illa precepta diuina homini non prodesse, &c. The diuine precepts should not profite a man, vnlesse he had freewill: quomodo iubet, how doth God command, if there be no freewill, Beilarm. ibid.

Ausw. Augustine shall expound himselfe, who thus answereth the like obiection of the Pelagians, taken from the precepts of Scripture: Spiritu dei aguntur filij dei ut agant, non ut ipsi nihil agant, & alibi eis ostenditur quid agere debeant: The children of God are wrought by the spirit, that they should worke, not that they should do nothing, and therefore it is shewed them, what they should do: And againe, O homo in preceptione cognosce, quid debeat habere, in corruptione cognosce, tu te vitio inuicere, in oratione cognosce, unde accipias, quod vis habere: O man, in the precept know what thou oughtest to haue; in the rebuke, that by thine owne fault thou hast it not; in prayer acknowledge, whence thou must receiue that thou wouldest haue: de cor. & grat. c. 3.

Wherefore then the precepts of Scripture are to this end, to shew man, what hee should do, and to driue him to seeke that at Gods hands, which is commanded; they demonstrate a freewill in man, but to be wrought and directed by the spirit.

15. August. epistol. 89. qu. 2. Neque voluntatis arbitrium ideo tollitur, quia inuincitur, &c. Neyther is free will taken away, because it is helped; but therefore it is helped, because it is not taken away, Beilarm. ibid. That is not helped, that is not; therefore there is freewill in man, because it is helped, Beilarm. rursus, lib. 6. c. 11. et 12.

Ausw. Augustine shall here also expound himselfe: Adiutor noster Deus est, nec adiunari potest, ut qui sponte aliquid equatur: God is our helper, neyther can a man be helped, vnlesse he do somewhat of himselfe: then it followeth, Quia non sicut in lapidibus insensatis, &c. Because God worketh not saluation in vs as in senselesse stones, or as in vnreasonable creatures; cons. Pelag. lib. 1. c. 5. His opinion then is, that God is said to helpe our will, in respect of the natural facultie of willing, because man hath reason, will, and vnderstanding by nature: but to will that which is good, man is not onely helped, but altogether guided and directed by grace: as he saith in another place, Laborem homines inueniunt in voluntate, quid boni sit nostrum, &c. Men do labour to finde in the will some

Bernard hath the like saying, Liberum arbitrium nos facit volentes, gratia bene volentes, ex ipso nobis est

Ausw. Augustine shall here also expound himselfe: Adiutor noster Deus est, nec adiunari potest, ut qui sponte aliquid equatur: God is our helper, neyther can a man be helped, vnlesse he do somewhat of himselfe: then it followeth, Quia non sicut in lapidibus insensatis, &c. Because God worketh

not saluation in vs as in senselesse stones, or as in vnreasonable creatures; cons. Pelag. lib. 1. c. 5. His opinion then is, that God is said to helpe our will, in respect of the natural facultie of willing, because man hath reason, will, and vnderstanding by nature: but to will that which is good, man is not onely helped, but altogether guided and directed by grace: as he saith in another place, Laborem homines inueniunt in voluntate, quid boni sit nostrum, &c. Men do labour to finde in the will some goodnesse, which is not of God, which how it can be found, I am vtterly ignorant, ibid. c. 18.

Bernard hath the like saying, Liberum arbitrium nos facit volentes, gratia bene volentes, ex ipso nobis est

est velle, ex ipsa bonum velle: Freewill maketh vs willing, grace well willing; from that wee haue power to will, from the other power to will that is good: lib. de liber. arbit. Thus then mans will and grace worke together, man by nature willeth, by grace he willeth that is good.

16. August. in Psal. 7. Diabolo non consentire in potestate nostra esse voluit: Not to consent to the diuell God would haue it in our power: de spirit. & liter. c. 34. Consentire vocationi dei, vel ab ea desistere propria voluntati est: To consent to Gods calling, or dissent from it, it is in mans owne will, Bellar. ibid. cap. 28. & lib. 6. cap. 11. Tom. 3.

- Answ.* Augustine saith, that it is in the will of man to consent, &c. but this will must be prepared, and wrought of God: first, thus hee expoundeth himselfe, lib. 1. retractat. making mention of his booke against Adimant. he had affirmed, that it was in mans power to chaunge his will: Sed potestas ista nulla est, nisi a Deo data: But this is no power, vnlesse it be giuen of God. And againe, lib. 2. cap. 1. he correcteth that saying in his booke ad Simplician. that it is in vnusquisque potestate, ut velit, in euery mans power to will: nam a Deo etiam voluntas preparanda est, for the will also must be prepared of God. Secondly, he further thus explaneth himselfe: Sine iniquitas, sine iustitia: Whether iniquitie or righteoulnes, vnlesse they were in our will, they could not be in our power, being not in our power, there should be neither iust reward, nor punishment: Ignorantia vero & infirmitas, &c. But his ignorance and infirmitie, that either man knoweth not, what he ought to will, or cannot doe that which he willeth, ex occulto penarum ordine venit, proceedeth from the secret order of punishment: cont. Faust. lib. 22. cap. 78. Here hee affirmeth, that both good and euill is in mans will and power, and yet that mans will by nature is so blind and weake, as that it can neither will, nor worke that, which it bught: wherefore the power of the will to good is not of it selfe, but of grace. Thirdly, so then as Bernard saith, Nec bonus nec malus est quisquam nisi volens: No man is either good or euill against his will: but (saith he) Deus facit voluntarios, ut non saluet inuoluntarios, God maketh them willing, that they be not saued vnwilling, lib. de liber. arbit. Wherefore it is mans will that consenteth to God, and consenteth not to the diuell, but his will reformed and made free or willing by grace. Those places are alleaged by Bellarmino, to proue the power of mans will in morall duties: these following are produced to set forth the cooperation or ioynt working of Gods grace, and mans will in spirituall workes.

17. August. lib. 1. retractat. cap. 22. In nostra potestate positum, &c. It is in our owne power to chaunge our will, &c. sed de potestate nulla est, nisi detur a Deo: but that is no power, vnlesse it be giuen of God: Preparatur voluntas a Deo, The will is prepared of God: Bellarmino. lib. 6. cap. 11. The will then being prepared of God, obeyeth, &c.

Answ. Augustine saith in direct termes, Potestas nulla est, &c. That mans will hath no power at all, vnlesse it be giuen of God: Ergo, if all the power be of God, there is no power in mans will.

17. Many other plaeces are heaped vp to the like purpose: Tom. 4. lib. 1. ad Simplician. Pro voluntarium esse voluit & nostrum: To will he would haue it both his and ours; his in calling, ours in obeying, Bellarmino. ibid.

18. Tom. 5. lib. 5. de ciuitat. cap. 10. Multa facimus, quia si nollemus, non faceremus: Wee doe many things, which if we would not, we should not doe them.

19. Tom. 6. lib. 2. ad ioh. contr. Felice. Habet unusquisque in voluntate: Euery man hath in his owne will to chuse the good, and so become a good tree; or the euill, and so be made an euill tree: Nemo nisi deus, facere arbores potest, None but God can make trees.

20. Tom. 7. lib. 2. de remiss. peccat. cap. 5. Ad ioh. Deus, &c. God is the helper, neither can he be helped, which doth not somewhat of himselfe, Bellarmino. ibid.

21. Lib. de natur. grat. cap. 32. Illo operante cooperamur: He working we worke together, because his mercie doth preuent vs.

22. Lib. de predest. cap. 3. Virumque nostrum est: Both are ours, to loue and beleue, because of freewill, and both are giuen by the spirit of faith.

23. De grat. & liber. arbit. cap. 15. Ne autem putetur, nihil ibi facere homines per liberum, &c. Least it should be thought, that man doth nothing by his freewill, it is said, Harden not your hearts.

24. Lib. de grat. c. 14. Arbitrium nisi adiutum, &c. No man commeth, vnlesse his will be helped. Lib. 2. cont. 2. epist. Pelag. c. 8. Nisi adiunxerit illo: Vnlesse he helpe, we can doe nothing.

25. Tom. 8. in titul. Psal. 71. Non erat in potestate tua, &c. It was not in thy power to be borne of Adam, it is in thy power to beleue in Christ.

26. Tom. 9. tract. 72. in Ioann. Credere in Christum, &c. To beleue in Christ, is the worke of Christ: this hee worketh in vs, but not without vs: With Christ working iustification, man worketh together.

27. Tom. 10. serm. 15. de verb. Apostol. Totum ex Deo, &c. All is of God: but wee must not be as asleepe to doe nothing, to will nothing: Sine voluntate tua, non eris in se iustitia dei: Without thy will the righteoulnes of God shall not be in thee: he that made thee without thee, doth not iustifie thee without thee: Bellarmino. lib. 6. cap. 11.

Answ.

Ans. First, in all these places, where we are said to worke together with grace, and to be helped by grace, loc. 20. 21. 24. and that God doth not iustifie vs without vs, 27. Augustine vnderstandeth onely the naturall power and actiuite of the will, which as it willeth; so it is actiue, and worketh together with grace, and is helped and assisted: but as it willeth that which is good, it is altogether passiue, and worketh not, but is wrought vpon: 1. How else should all be of God, as hee saith, loc. 27. and wee must onely not be as men asleepe: and as elsewhere he saith; Neque sic templum suum de vobis adificat Deus, quasi de lapidibus, qui non habent motum suum. Neither doth God so build his temple of you, as of stones, that haue no motion: serm. 13. de tempore. Mans naturall power then of willing must be added to Gods grace that maketh it to will well. 2. This is further testified by Augustine, that our actiuite to goodnesse is altogether of Gods grace, and the mouing of his spirit: Erru agitur (inquies) non agitur; therefore you will say we are done to, wee doe not. The answer followeth: sumus & agi & ageris, & tum bene agis, cum a bono ageris: Yea thou art both done to, and thou doest, and then thou doest well, when thou art done to, and art driuen of that, which is good: serm. 13. de tempore. The will then cannot doe well, but as it is driuen: See our answer before ad loc. 14. 15.

Secondly, concerning the precepts in scripture, whereby Augustine insinuateth freewill, loc. 23. his further iudgement of that matter is this: Ad hoc lex precepit ista, ut cum in his implendis homo de se non se extollat superbiat nimis, sed ad gratiam confugiat fatigatus: To this end hath the lawe commanded these things, that when man seeth himselfe to faile in the fulfilling thereof, he should not pride be lifted vp: but being wearied in himselfe, haue recourse to grace: cont. Celestiu. de perfect. iustie. We see he confesseth; that without grace man hath no power to performe the precepts comanded.

Thirdly, where Augustine saith, it is in a mans will to chuse good or euill, loc. 19. to beleeue in Christ, loc. 25. 26. he before expounded himselfe, loc. 19. Deus solum facit arbores, &c. God only maketh good trees: The will then of man hath this power, but not from it selfe, but from God: Potestas nulla est, &c. It is no power, vnlesse it be giuen of God: as before I alleaged out of Augustine in our answer ad loc. 16. And that this is the resolute iudgement of Augustine, that man hath no power of will by nature to any good thing, it euery where appeareth in his workes: Arbitrii libertas simul data est homini, sed quia peccantis voluntas, sequuta est peccantium peccatum habendi necessitas: Libertie of will was once giuen vnto man, but because his will sinned, there followed and fell vpon the sinner a necessitie of sinning: cont. Celestiu. de perfect. iustie. Here Augustine saith, that there is in the will by nature a necessitie to sinne; how then can it haue any inclination to good?

Againe, Si homo in peccatum irretit, &c. For a man to runne into sinne his owne freewill sufficeth, whereby he corrupted himselfe; vs autem redens ad iusticiam; but to returne to righteousness, he hath neede of a Phisition, because he is not sound, opus habet vniuersatore, quia mortuus, he had neede of a reuiuer, because he is dead: lib. 1. cont. Pelag. cap. 23. If mans will be then dead by nature, it hath no life, nor actiuite at all.

And to conclude, he thus testifieth, lib. 1. de predestinat. cap. 9. Liberum, quod a Deo habemus arbitrium, &c. The freewill, which we haue of God, is prone to wickednes, & cum ad virtutis instantiam deo adiutus nihil possit, ad genus omne peccati idonea fulum virtutis subsistit: and hauing no power, or being able to doe nothing vnto vertue, it hath sufficient strength of it selfe to all kinde of sinne. Here is an euident testimonie, that the will, nihil possit, can doe nothing of it selfe to attaine vnto vertue.

Thus (I trust) I haue sufficiently answered the obiections out of Augustine, now I will proceede to alleage such euident and cleere testimonies out of his workes, whereby it may appeare, that he was an vtter enemy to the naturall power of freewill to good.

The Protestants; lib. 1. de predestinat. cap. 9. Liberum, quod a Deo habemus arbitrium, &c. The testimonies out of Augustine against the power or abilitie of freewill naturally vnto good, are these.

1. Epistol. 106. Sine gratia ad non peccandum nihil voluntatis arbitrium valere: The will without grace hath no power at all not to sinne.

Ans. First, his meaning is, that the will without grace hath no power to liue altogether without sinne, not to abstaine from soine one sinne: for Augustine saith, Si ita esset, nullus locus adiuuanti gratie reformationis: If it be so, there is no place left for the helpe of grace. Grace is not excluded, if nothing be left to the will, but if all be ascribed to it. Secondly, by not sinning he may vnderstand, the resisting of temptation, which the will cannot doe without grace: Uoluntatem lib. 5. cap. 11. r. 1. ad rom. 7.

Contra. First, if ad non peccandum, not to sinne, were ad viuendum sine peccato, all one, as to liue without sinne, Augustine had said iust nothing: for euen with grace the will of man hath no power to liue altogether without sinne: He speaketh then of that which is possible in this life, to abstaine from some sinne, not of that which is impossible to liue without any sinne.

Secondly,

Secondly, the consequent is good, that grace must be either wholly admitted, or wholly refused: Saint Paul so reasoneth, Rom. 11. 6. If of grace it is no more of works: for grace were no grace &c. The grace then of God and the worke of mans will cannot stand together. Ambrose likewise faith, psl. 84. Gratia dei tota repellitur, nisi tota recipitur: Grace is wholly refused, if it be not wholly received.

Thirdly, it is well you confesse, that a mans will without grace cannot resist temptation: for thus you confesse the cause, that sinne cannot be auoided without grace: for there is no sinne, which commeth not by temptation: Iam. 1. 14. Every man is tempted, when he is drawn by his own concupiscence: therefore if the will cannot resist temptation without grace, it cannot resist sin, and consequently not do any good without grace.

2. Enchirid. cap. 30. Quid boni operari potest perditus, nisi in quantum a perditione liberatur: What good can a man of perdition doe, but as he is freed from perdition? Now every one by nature is the child of wrath and perdition: therefore by nature no good can be done.

Ans. Augustine speaketh of such good workes as tend to saluation, which indeede cannot be done without grace: ibid. resp. ad 3. loc.

Contra. First, the Scripture counteth no workes good, but corrupt and euill, which are not reaped of the spirit to life euerlasting: Galath. 6. 8. He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption, and nothing else: He that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life euerlasting.

Secondly, Augustine saith directly: Sed non illum bonum hominem dicere, illum voluntatem bonam habere, per quod solum homo potest ad aeternum dei regnum perducere: Know this, that I call him a good man, and that a good will, and that a good worke, by the which onely a man may be brought to Gods euerlasting kingdome, lib. 4. cont. Iulian. c. 3. Ergo, in Augustines iudgements these are not to be counted good workes at all, which tend not to saluation. Thirdly, Augustine affirmeth, Virtutes illas, quas dicis in impijs esse diuina muneri potius, quam eorum voluntati &c. That the vertues, which are in the wicked, must rather be attributed to the diuine gift, than to their will: cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 3. Euen these workes, though they be not perfectly good, are of the diuine gift rather, than of mans will.

Loc. 3. August. lib. 2. de remiss. peccat. cap. 18. Si voluntas aut bona est, aut mala, & utique malum habemus ex deo, restat ut bonam voluntatem habeamus ex deo: If the will be either good, or euill, and we haue not an euill will from God; it remaineth, that we haue a good will from God.

Ans. By a good will here is vnderstood the power of the will, and not the act: for a will that is not good may bring forth some good act, as the good will of a righteous man may bring forth sinne, Bellarm. ibid. resp. ad arg. 4.

Contra. First, that a good act can proceede from a will that is not good, is contrary to the Scripture: Matth. 7. 18. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit. Secondly, if a righteous man bring forth an euill worke, it commeth not from his regenerate will, but from his sinfull and corrupt will: Rom. 7. 20. It is not I, but the sinne that dwelleth in me. Thirdly, whereas he saith, the good act of the euill will, is ex bona natura, of the naturall goodness: he speaketh contraries: for how can there be any good thing in an euill will or minde? As Augustine saith, Laborem hominis non in ipsa voluntate, quid boni sit nostrum &c. Men doe labour to finde somewhat in the will that is good, which is not of God; which how it can be found, or shewed, I am vtterly ignorant: cont. Pelag. c. 18.

Loc. 4. 5. Augustine lib. 1. cont. 2. epist. Pelag. cap. ultim. affirmeth, Bonum vsum liberi arbitrii est ex Deo: That the good vse of the freewill is of God: Lib. 3. cont. 2. epist. Pelag. cap. 8. Librum arbitrium captiuatum non nisi ad peccatum valet: Freewill being captiued by sinne, cannot doe any thing, but sinne.

Ans. He is said to vse freewill well, not that doth one or two good morall workes, but that liueth well, and this is of grace: yet hee is not said to write well, that can make two or three letters well: so the freewill by nature is said to haue no power but to sin, because for the most part it sinneth: Bellarmino ibid. resp. ad loc. 5. 6.

Contr. First, yet he that can make 2. or 3. letters well, can write somewhat well, but the will of it selfe can do nothing well: as our Sauiour saith, Ioh. 15. 5. Without me you can do nothing. And Augustine before, loc. 1. Nihil valet: The will can do nothing at all. And lib. 1. de predest. c. 9. Ad opus inuoluntate dei deseruente nihil potest illi: If God do leaue, that is, not assist the wil, it can do nothing in the attaining of vertue. And againe, Nulla potestas nisi ex deo data: There is no power at all, but giuen of God: lib. 1. retr. act. cap. 22. If there be no power in the will, then at no time, neither to doe any good thing: wherefore Bellarmine doth very fondly wrest Augustines words against his owne sense.

Loc. 6. Enchirid. c. 30. Libera arbitria male vti non homo, & se perditur & ipsum &c. Man vsing free will euill, lost himselfe, and is. Nullum peccato, amissum est liberum arbitrium: Sinne being conqueror, freewill was lost.

Ans. He meaneth not, that freewill is vtterly extinct, as man himselfe is not, but onely made worse.

as things are not perished, but lost, that are taken by the enemy in battell: so the libertie of grace onely is lost, not the libertie of nature: Bellarm. 2. 3. de lib. respons. ad loc. 1.

Contra. 1. Neyther do we say, that freewill or the nature of man is wholly extinct, but there remaineth a freeness in the will still, a freedom from coercion or constraine, which is the libertie of nature, but there is no freedom to good without Gods assistance, which is the libertie of grace: Augustine saith; Natura tota fuit per liberum arbitrium in paradiso vitata. The whole nature of man was corrupted in the roote by freewill, trist. 87. in locum. If the whole be corrupted, then nature thereof remaineth vncorrupt. 2. This the similitude of captivirie sheweth: for like as he that is a prisoner, or taken captive, walketh not whither he would, but is led whither he would, as Christ saith to Peter, John 21. 18. so the will of man being captivated to sinne, becommeth the servant thereof, Rom. 6. 16. Know ye not, that to whomsoever you give your selves as servants to obey, his servants ye are, to whom ye obey?

Luc. 7. Epist. 144. Sine gratia Dei non potest liber a se voluntas. Without grace the will cannot be free, being subject to the concupiscence overcoming.

Luc. 8. De spirit. & liter. 4. 30. Per gratiam sanatio animae a vitiis peccati, per animae sanitatem liberatur arbitrium, per arbitrii libertatem dilectio iustitiae. By grace, the healing of the soule commeth from the corruption of sinne; by the health of the soule, the libertie of the will; by the libertie of the will, the love of righteousness.

Luc. 9. Lib. de corrupt. & grat. 2. 13. Peccat per liberum arbitrium, non liberatum. They sinne by freewill, but not yet freed; that is, by grace: Ergo, there is no libertie or freedom of the will to good, without grace.

Ans. Bellarmino answereth to all these places, that Augustine speaketh of the libertie of grace, not of the libertie of nature: for although the will be the servant of sin without grace, yet it is free from naturall necessitie: as the eye, though it cannot exceed the sight without light; yet simply it can see of it selfe. ibid. respons. ad 4. 7. 7. lib.

Contra. 4. He hath granted as much as we desire: for like as there is in the eye a possibilitie of seeing; but yet without the light cannot discern this or that: so we say that in mans power by nature to will without constraine; but it cannot will anything that is good; without the illumination of grace: as Bernard saith. Ex ipso vobis est velle, ex ipso vobis est nolle. Of the will it is that we do will, of grace, that we will that is good: so libertie then of the will simply and absolutely wee grant by nature; but to will that which is good, proceedeth from the libertie of grace: All this is granted by Bellarmino to be acknowledged, which we willingly condescend unto.

Luc. 10. Lib. 1. retract. 2. 1. Quis contra peccatum: bene voluntas resistere non potest, si non sit peccatum in eo, ut sit etiam peccatum peccatum. He that cannot resist his foreing concupiscence by a good will, is so sinne in him, that it is also the punishment of sinne.

Luc. 11. Lib. de corrupt. & grat. 2. 12. Si relinqueretur ipse sua voluntas, ut in adiutorio Dei manerent peccatum. If they should be left to their owne will, to continue in Gods helpe, if they would, through so many and great temptations, their will through infirmitie would give place: Et idcirco peccatum non possent, quia infirmitas infirmum in eis debet. And therefore they cannot persevere or continue; because sayling by infirmitie, they will not.

Luc. 12. Ex libro de perfect. iustit. respons. 9. Quia peccantis voluntas, sequens est peccantem peccatum libenter dandi necessitas. Because the will sinned, there followed upon the partie sinning, a necessitie of having sinne: Here it is confessed by Augustine; that by nature the will cannot otherwise doe but sinne, and therefore hath no power of it selfe to do any thing, that is good.

Ans. The summe of Bellarmines answer to all these places is this; that this necessitie or impotencie of the will, is conditionall, not absolute; quia potest succurrere Dei adiutorio, because man may sue for Gods helpe; which if he do not, it is his owne fault: so then there is no such necessitie affirmed by Augustine, in any of these places; that taketh away the libertie of the will. Bellarmino, ibid. respons. ad 3. 6. 8. 2. lib.

Contra. 1. Thus Bellarmino fighteth with himselfe, affirming, that without the invocation of Gods helpe, the will hath no power to resist the concupiscence, and consequently not to do any thing that is good: if it be then of grace, how can it be of nature? 2. Wee affirme that this impotencie of nature is not so absolute, but by the condition of Gods grace and assistance it may be loosed: but it is not in every mans power by nature, to receive this condition, and to sue unto God for his helpe. 3. The Apostle saith, Rom. 8. 26. Propter nos debemus orare, ut sciamus, sed spiritus helpet nos infirmitates: it is then of the spirit, that we have a minde to pray not by nature. 4. Augustine saith. Quantum est quod vult voluntas, nisi forte si pia est, ut contra auxilium? What is it, that the will can do, vntilse it being godly, do pray for helpe? ibid. retract. 2. 13. It must first then be godly, before it can sue for grace; but godliness is not by nature; and againe; absque adiutorio gratiae, non deo placet, non vult incipere; without the helpe of grace it is no able to begin anything, that doth please God: Hypognostic. 3. Ergo, without grace a man cannot pray.

Loc. 17. De grat. & liber. arbitr. c. 17. Vt velimus, sine nobis operatur: cum autem sic volumus ut operemur, nobiscum cooperatur. That we will he worketh without vs; but when we so will, that we work, he worketh with vs.

Loc. 18. Totum Deo dandum est, qui hominis voluntatem bonam & preparat adiuuandum, & adiuvat operantem. All is to be giuen to God, which doth prepare mans good will to be helped, and doth helpe it being prepared.

Ans. God one way worketh the will without vs, that is by perswasion: but we also worke by consenting: and therefore here he saith, wee doe cooperari, we doe worke together with God in the outward act, Bellar. ad loc. 5.

Contra. First, God doth not onely perswade, but causeth the will also to consent: for otherwise God should doe no more, than man doth, who may minister counsell and perswasion, but cannot moue the heart: so the scripture saith, that God draweth vs, Ioh. 6. 44. but to draw is more than to perswade. And Augustine said before, that mans will cannot resist Gods calling: therefore it is not in mans will to consent or not to consent. Secondly, we graunt, that mans will worketh with God, in naturale instrumentum ab alio motum, as a natural instrument moued or stirred by another, which Beilarmius owne words: then like as the instrument in the workmans hand hath no cunning in it selfe to fashion or frame the worke, but is directed by the workman; so the will is but as a natural instrument working naturally to will: but to will that which is good, it is directed by grace, as the workmaster vnto it.

Thus notwithstanding these cauillous and sophisticall answers, I trust it is euident to any indifferent eye, not obscured with wilfull darknes, that Augustine is a resolute patrone of Gods grace against mans freewill, as it is now by nature subiect and subdued vnto sinne.

Beside these places alleged, many other also may be produced out of Augustine: as these that follow.

Loc. 19. De corrupt. & grat. c. 8. Voluntas humana non libertate consequitur gratiam, sed gratia libertatem. Mans will doth not by it freenes obtaine grace, but by grace free dome.

20. Ibid. c. 11. Liberrimum arbitrium ad malum sufficit, ad bonum parum est, nisi adiunetur, &c. Freewill is sufficient to euill: but little or of small force to doe good, vnlesse it be helped.

21. Artic. 3. contra Pelag. Non est idoneum, quia ad deum pertinent, sine deo &c. It is not fit without God to begin any thing, that appertaineth to God.

22. Ibid. Homo est tanquam equus errans libero arbitrio in operibus diaboli, &c. Man is as a sheepe going astray by freewill in the workes of the diuell, whom Christ taketh vpon his shoulders, &c. Like as a stray sheepe cannot returne, vnlesse he be carried: so freewill is drawne vnto that which is good, by grace; it hath no power of it selfe thereunto.

23. In Psal. 26. Dic tibi, voluntatem liberam mihi dedisti: sed sine te nihil est mihi conatus meus. Saye vnto GOD, thou hast giuen mee freewill: but without thee mine endeavour is nothing.

24. In Psal. 133. Tu in teipso non facis, quod vis, sed teipso tibi das gratiam, ut facias in teipso, quod vis. Thou canst not doe in thy selfe, what thou wouldest, but he giueth thee grace, to doe in thy selfe, as thou wouldest.

25. Epist. 88. ex Sapient. 8. 25. Scini, quod nemo est continens, nisi deus deus, non ex libero arbitrio est, sed deo dei. I know that none can haue continencie, vnlesse God giue it. It is not then of freewill, but of Gods gift.

26. De ciuitate dei lib. 13. cap. 15. Ad malum hominis prior est voluntas, ad bonum prior est voluntas creatoris, sine ut eam faceret, quia nulla erat, sine ut lapsam resciret, quia perierat. To euill mans will is first, to good the Creators will is first, either to make the will, which was not; or to restore it, which was lost.

27. De ciuitate lib. 14. cap. 11. Arbitrium voluntatis propriis vitiis amissum, nisi a quo daretur posset, redi non potest. The iudgement of the will cannot be restored, but by him, that first gaue it. Like as then we wought not with God in the first creation of the will, so neither in the reparation thereof, but all is of God.

28. Contra Pelag. 1. 5. Et oculus ut videns adiunatur a luce, neque hoc omnino nisi illa adiunxit, potest. As the eye that it may see is helped of the light, neither can it see any thing at all, vnlesse it be so helped: so God, which is the light of the inward man, doth helpe the sight of the minde, that not according to ours, but his righteousnesse, boni aliquid operemur, wee may worke some good thing. Thus then as the eye without the light seeth nothing at all: so the will without graces will do no good thing at all.

29. Contra Pelag. 1. cap. 18. Si libera voluntas a deo est, bona ex nobis, melius est id, quod a nobis, quam quid a deo, &c. If freewill be of God, a good will of our selues, then that is better which is of vs, than that which is of God: which if it be most absurd, oportet fatemur &c. liberam voluntatem nos a deo adipisci: we must confesse, that we haue our good will from God.

30. Lib. 8. de Genes. 11. The question being propounded, why Adam is said to labour in Paradise, Id dicitur, ut intelligamus & operari hominem ut sit, & custodire ut in istis sit: This is said, that we may vnderstand, that God both worketh man to haue a being, and keepech him, that he may be iust: both the one then, as well as the other, are wholly of God.

31. Soliloqu. 2. 15. 16. Credebam me aliquid fore ex me, existimabam me sufficere per me, me parare, quoniam tu rogebas me, &c. I beleueed, that I was somewhat of my selfe, I thought I sufficed by my selfe, neyther did I perceiue that thou diddest gouerne me: Si quid boni est, meum est parui, donum tuum est, nostrum non est nisi malum, siquid boni unquam habui, tu recepsi, siquid mali me fecisti, siquid peccati, per me cecidi, per me cecidi: If there be any good in me, great or little, it is thy gift; cometh nothing but euill: if euer I had any good thing, I receiued it of thee; if I stand, I stand by thee; if I fall, I fall by mee, &c. Hee proceedeth, Tentator desuit, & ut desisset tu fecisti, &c. The tempter was wanting, and that it should so be, thou wast the cause: place and time were wanting, thou also diddest cause it, Affuit tentator, non desuit locus, &c. There was a Tempter, and there wanted neither place nor time, sed ut non consentirem, tu fecisti, that I should not consent: the cause was in thee, &c. Thus Augustine leaueth no power at all to the will of man without grace, no not where temptation is wanting.

32. Soliloqu. 2. 25. Non est hominis velle, quod possit; aut posse quod velit, vel scire quid possit & velit, sed potius a te gressus hominis diriguntur: It is not in mans power to will that he can, or to can that he will, or to know what he can or will, but mans wayes are directed by thee.

33. In c. 7. Matib. Totum reputa, quod iustum es pietati, quod autem peccator es, tua iniquitas ascribe: omne enim crimen, facinus, peccatum nostrum est negligentia; omnis virtus, sanctitas, Dei indulgentia: Ascribe the whole that thou art iust, to pietie; that thou art a sinner, to iniquitie: euery crime and sinne is of our negligence; euery vertue, of the diuine indulgence, &c. Here all is ascribed to grace.

34. Tad. 10. de verb. Apostal. serm. 6. Idem mens humana ne tibi tribuas, ne multum superbias, tui, ne omnino superbias, &c. Wherefore O thou mind of man, attribute nothing to thy selfe, be not ouer proud; may be not proud at all: for that thou dost not consent to the desires of the flesh, the law of the spirite of life in Iesus Christ doth free thee.

35. In Psal. 91. Ut cum lapidem calori subtraxeris, fragescet, &c. sic tu, si a Deo recesseris, frigus: As when thou takest a stone from the heate of the fire or Sunne, it waxeth cold: so thou, if thou departest from God, &c. the will then of man hath no more goodnes of it selfe without God, than a stone hath heate.

36. De patient. c. 22. Homo non potest eligere aut diligere, nisi prius electus dilectusque, curari, quod caritate eligenda non cernit, & languore diligenda fastidit: Man cannot elect, or affect, vntill he be elected, and affected of God, and so healed: who by his blindnes seeth not things to be elected and by his weaknes doth lothe things to be desired and affected.

37. De penitent. cap. 6. Nostrum est velle, sed voluntas ipsa mouetur, ut surgat, sanetur, ut valeret, ut capiat, ut impletur, ut habeat: To will is ours, but the will is stirred, that it may rise; it is healed; that it may haue strength; it is enlarged, to receiue; and filled, that it may retaine or haue, &c. Thus the will can doe nothing of it selfe.

38. Epist. 107. Neque fideles sunt sine libero arbitrio, & tamen illius gratia fideles sunt, quibus potestate tenebrarum liberauit arbitrium: They are not made beleeuers without freewill; and by his grace they are become beleeuers, which hath deliuered their freewill from the power of darknes, &c. God onely then deliuereth our will from the power of darknes, and captiuitie of sinne.

39. De natur. grat. cap. 67. Cum de libera hominis voluntate loquimur, de illa scilicet, in qua non factus est loquimur, nunc sunt omnes animae peccanti duo ista pericula, ignorantia, difficultas, &c. When wee speake of mans freewill, we speake of that, wherein he was made: but now these two perill things are laid vpon euery soule that sinneth, ignorance and difficultie: ignorance bringeth error, difficultie sorrow, &c.

40. De bono perseruanti. 13. Cogitantes credimus cogitantes loquimur, &c. We thinking beleuee, we thinke, when wee speake, and when wee doe any other thing: sed tamen quod iustum ad patriam viam, non sumus idonei cogitare aliquid ex nobis, &c. But as touching the way of godlines, we are not fit to thinke any thing of our selues, but our sufficientie is of God, &c. Wee are not able to thinke any thing, how much lesse to will that is good.

Many such like places beside might be alleaged out of Augustine: but these I trust may suffice to cleare this point, that this learned father ascribed no power at all to mans will by nature, but referred all to grace. In other controuersies the like might be shewed: but that it were neither convenient at large on both sides to discusse the sentences of the fathers, whereby this volume might grow to be too large: nor yet so profitable in this worke, which is intended chiefly for their vse that are not professed in these studies; nor yet so agreeable to my purpose and scope in this treatise, which haue chiefly propounded to my selfe to decide these controuersies by Scriptures.

THE FOURTH PART OF THIS CON-
trouersie, concerning Iustification.

The severall questions that are handled are these: first, of faith: secondly, of iustification it selfe.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF FAITH.

The parts of this question: first, what faith is. Secondly, of the diuers kinds of faith. Thirdly, whether faith may be separated from charitie. Fourthly, of the validitie of faith. First, after what manner faith iustificeth. Secondly, whether faith onely iustifie.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NATURE and definition of faith.

WE define iustifying faith, to be an vndoubted confidence, ioyned with a certaine knowledge, whereby we both vnderstand, and are perswaded, euery man in, and for himselfe, that the promises of God made vnto vs in Christ, are verily ours, and we made partakers of them.

The Rhemists take exception against three points of this definition: first, he denieth faith to be a confident or sure perswasion. Secondly, that it is not necessarily ioyned with knowledge. Thirdly, he affirmeth, that the promises of God in Christ, are not the proper object of faith: Of these then in their order.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER FAITH, whereby we are iustified, be a sure confidence of the heart.

The Papists.

Belarius holdeth, that faith hath the proper seate and place onely in the vnderstanding, not in the heart or affections; and therefore denieth, that there is any such assurance or confidence: lib. 1. de iustificat. cap. 6. The Councel of Trent likewise determineth, that iustifying faith, is no confidence of the heart: sess. 6. can. 13. The Rhemists affirme it, to be an act onely of vnderstanding: Armin. 2. Cor. 13. sect. 1.

4. Error.

Argum. 1. Confidence is the effect of faith, and faith the cause thereof: We haue entrained with confidence by faith in him, Ephes. 3. 12. faith worketh confidence: Ergo, it is no confidence, Belarius.

Ans. 1. Saint Iohn saith, God is loue, 1. Epist. 4. 8. yet it is no good consequent, that God therefore worketh not loue in vs: for Saint Paul saith, That the loue of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, Rom. 5. 5. God is loue one way, that is, essentially, and originally; and hee worketh loue another way in vs, or rather another kinde of loue, which is an image, and effect of his loue: So faith worketh confidence, and it selfe neuertheless, is a kinde of confidence. 2. As the effect is so is the cause: can the waters be sweete, if the fountaine be bitter? It is the propertie of fire to giue heate, therefore it must it selfe also be hot: so faith worketh confidence, therefore it must needs be much more confident it selfe. 3. We say not, that fides, and fiducia, faith and fiduce, or confidence, are all one: for this confidence is a common qualitie both to faith and hope: but this we say, that faith is alwaies ioyned with confidence. Now betwene this confidence, that accompanieth faith, and that confidence, which is wrought by faith, we make this difference: faith hath a generall confidence and assurance of all the promises of God, and it is the fountaine and storehouse from whence issueth but all our assurance and confidence in particular: As faith maketh vs to pray confidently, Aske in faith, and neuer noe, Iam. 1. 6. which is the same which the Apostle saith here, We haue entrained with confidence, Ephes. 3. 12. Faith also worketh confidence, and reioicing in tribulation, Rom. 5. 3. This confidence and assurance in these Christian exercises, is nothing else but the particular vse and application of that generall confidence in the promises of God, which we say is necessarily required in faith.

Argum. 2. First, faith and hope are two diuers things: 1. Cor. 13. 13. Now abide faith hope and loue, these three: but hope is nothing else but confidence: Ergo, faith is not. Secondly, againe 1. Cor. 10. 5. Bringing into captiuitie every thought to the obedience of Christ: faith then doth captiuate the vnderstanding, and subdueth it to Christ: Ergo, not the will: Belarius lib. 1. de iustificat. cap. 6.

Ans.

Ans. First, fiduce or confidence is a common qualitie both to faith and hope, and as the gen man to them both: therefore it is absurdly reasoned, hope hath confidence: Ergo, faith not: as if he should haue argued thus: A beast hath sense: Ergo, man hath noe. Who would not hiffe such a disputer out of the schooles?

Secondly, 1. It followeth not, faith doth captivate the understanding: Ergo, not the will: it doth not captivate the thoughts onely, but every high thing that is exalted against the knowledge of God: and so also the rebellious will of man. 2. Obedience is properly in the will, and not in the understanding, therefore it working obedience to Christ, worketh also vpon the will and affections of man: and so the Scripture speaketh directly, that the heart, which is the seate of the affections, is purified by faith, Act 15. 9.

The Protestants.

WE affirme not, that faith only is an assurance of the hart, but that the light of vnderstanding, and knowledge of the minde, is requisite thereunto. As faith is described, Heb. 11. ver. 6. He that cometh to God, must beleue that God is: Here is the certaine knowledge, that God is, and that he is holie, iust and true: And thus he is a remembrance of those that seeke him: Here is the assured perswasion and confidence of the heart. That faith then is inseparable ioyned with this assured confidence, it is thus warranted by the word of God.

Argum. 2. Rom. 4. 19. 20. Abraham was not weak in faith, &c. neither did he doubt of the promise of God through unbelief, but was strengthened in faith, being fully assured, &c. Here first the Apostle saith, he doubted not through unbelief: As vnbeleefe then is ioyned with doubting, so faith hath confidence: and this it is to be strong, and not weak in faith. Secondly, being fully assured: therefore the assured perswasion of the heart doth perpetually accompanie faith.

Argv. The text is rather thus to be read, after the Latine translation, plurimum scimus, non fully knowing, not fully persuaded. And by this the Iesuite would prooue, that faith consisteth rather in knowledge, than perswasion, Bellarmin. cap. 6. loc. 1.

Contra. The word in the original is, μετὰ πίστιν, which must be translated per suasionem, or persuadeo, being persuaded, or assured, not plenissime scire fully knowing: First, it being a participial of the passive, cannot properly be translated by an active. Secondly, there is not a letter or syllable in this word included, whereby knowledge is signified or expressed in the Greeke tongue. Thirdly, the vulgar translator doth read otherwise in other places, translating this word μετὰ πίστιν and the derivatives thereof by these Latine words, implere, compleri, to fill, or fulfill: as Luk. 1. 1. 2. 1. Timoth. 4. 5. In which places, though the translator expresse not the full meaning of the word, as we will now proue, yet he varieth from his reading in this place: which sheweth the imperfection of the translation agreeing not with it selfe. Fourthly, this translation, plenissime scire, fully knowing, which seemeth to define faith by the fulnes of knowledge, impugneth the Iesuites opinion, who denieth, as well that fides, is notitia, faith is a knowledge, as that it is fiducia, fiduce or assurance: therefore he should not gaine much by this reading. Fifthly, that this word μετὰ πίστιν, signifieth, we reade, to persuade, plenum fidem facere, to make a thing certaine or assured, it may appeare by comparing other places of scripture, where this word is vied: as Luk. 1. 1. the Euangelist faith, Haec habet in manu scribere the storia of these things, whereof we are fully persuaded: the word is μετὰ πίστιν, the vulgar translateth, of things, que in nobis completa sunt, which are fulfilled in vs; very gloriantly, not distinguishing betweene the Greeke words, μετὰ πίστιν, and, μετὰ πίστιν, the first signifieth to certifie or persuade; the second, to fill: And μετὰ πίστιν μετὰ πίστιν, are such things which are confidently proued, that there remaineth no more doubting: as Master Beza sheweth out of Plinius. So the word μετὰ πίστιν is truly translated, assurance, 1. Thess. 1. 5. Our Gospell was not in word only vnto you, but in power and much assurance, certa persuasione, not plenitudine multa, much fulnes: but the scripture vseth another word to expresse fulnes, and that is μετὰ πίστιν, Ephes. 1. 23. 3. 19. not μετὰ πίστιν. Sixtly, Espeus, a learned Papiist also approoueth this interpretation of the word, and to that purpose he alleageath these places: Rom. 4. 14. Colossi. 2. 2. Heb. 6. 10. in the which places μετὰ πίστιν is taken for a certaine faith and perswasion: μετὰ πίστιν, being persuaded, &c. in 2. Timoth. pag. 149. Sic &c. Seuenthly, this is prooued by the Etymology or denomination of the word: for μετὰ πίστιν is as if we should say, plenum fidem affero, I bring or giue certaintie or assurance to a thing. Eightly, that it is so to be taken in this place, for a full assurance, the words before going declare: Haec dubitasti de the promise: what is that else, but to be assured?

Argum. 2. S. Paul faith Rom. 8. 38. I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, &c. shall separate us from the love of God, &c. the word is persuaded, from whence the word faith, is known to be derived. The vulgar text hath certus sum, I am certaine. Origen tract. 23. in Matth. is translated thus: confido, I trust, that neither death nor life: Ergo, faith hath a fidence, confidence, or certaine perswasion.

Bellarmino here distinguisheth, that there are two kinds of fiduce or confidence, one in the vnderstanding, the other in the will : the first faith hath, the second hope : Bellar. c. 6.

Controls:

Contrā. First, Beilarmine forgetteth his owne argument vsed before: hope hath confidence: Ex not faith: for if there be two kinds of confidence, as he faith, he hath made a simple argument. Secondly, Beilarmine propoundeth the question generally, Fidem iustificauit non esse fiduciam, that iustifying faith is no fiduce, or confidence at all, cap. 6. and therefore it is sufficient for vs that hee graunteth it to be any confidence. Thirdly, yet that the Apostle here meaneth a persuasion of the heart and affection it is eident, because he speaketh of loue, which is in the heart: If it be taken chiefly for our loue toward God, as Origen vnderstandeth it, writing vpon these wordes, 1. Corinth. 13. 8. Loue doth neuer fall away: Ex charitate nunquam excidente erant illa uoces, confido, &c. From this charitie neuer falling away proceeded those wordes of the Apostle, I am perswaded, that neither life nor death, &c. can separate vs from the loue of God, Rom. 8. 38. in Matib. But if we take it passiuely for Gods loue to vs, which is the better sense, it commeth all to one: for the Apostle Heb. 10. 22. That tribulation and anguish cannot separate vs from this loue, that is, from the assurance thereof. Now tribulation, &c. worketh not vpon the vnderstanding, but the affection: this persuasion then of the Apostle was not only in his vnderstanding, but in his heart and affection.

Augustine faith: Si nunc tempus est fidei, salus autem animarum merces est fides, quis dubitet in fide, qui per dilectionem operatur, peragendum diem ultimum, atque in fine diei recipiendam esse mercedem, non solum redemptionem corporis, uerum etiam salutem animarum? If now it be the season of faith, and the saluation of the soule be the reward of faith, who doubteth, but that a man shall dye in this faith, that worketh by loue, and afterward receiue the reward, both the redemption of the bodie, and saluation of the soule? Tractat. in Iohann. 86. Quis dubitet? Who can doubt? faith Augustine: Ergo, fides expelleth doubting. Decret. 1. 1. l. 1. Qui dubius in fide, infidelis: He that is doubtfull in faith, is an Infidell.

Saint Andrewe vpon these wordes, Ephes. 3. 17. that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith, &c. Cor. 1. 3. in de Christo, &c. Let them be sure of Christ, that he dwelleth in their harts by faith: ut enim fidem non habeamus in cordibus nostris, &c. that when wee haue his faith in our hearts, wee may seeme to haue him. The seate then of faith is the heart: not the heart taken generally for the whole inward man, as Beilarmine answereth, cap. 6. but properly as it is the seate of loue, and of other affections: so it followeth in the same 17. vers. being rooted and grounded in loue: the heart then is the seate both of faith and loue.

Peter Lombard agreeth: Fidem in corde, &c. That a man seeth his faith in his heart. And he allea- geth thus out of Augustine: Credimus ut cognoscamus, non cognoscimus ut credamus: Wee belecue to vnderstand; we vnderstand not to belecue. But if faith were only in the vnderstanding, we should first vnderstand, then beleue: lib. 3. dist. 2. l. 1. &c.

The holy Martyrs thus iudged of the Christian faith, that it brought a most certaine assurance with it: Master Bradford holy Martyr did no more doubt, that by dying for the fayth of Christ, he should please the Lord, then that the Sunne did shine, which at that time did shine in at the win- dore, Ex. pag. 1614.

Master Peter blessed Martyr, when a popish Bishop had said vnto him, thus, these heretikes take vpon them to be sure of all things they stand in: you should rather say, I trust I know Christ, then that I am sure of it: the holy Martyr thus answered: Let him doubt of his faith that listeth; God giue me grace alwayes to beleue; that I am sure of true faith, and fauour in Christ. Ex. pag. 182.

THE SECOND POYNT, WHETHER knowledge be necessary vnto fayth.

The Papists.

Beilarmine faith, fidem non esse notitiam sed assensum, that faith is no knowledge, but a bare assent 49. Error. of the minde, without knowledge or vnderstanding of that whereunto it assenteth. Thus also the Rhemists note, there is a kind of faith called fides implicita, the faith of simple men, and Idiotes: who although they are not able to giue a reason of their beleefe, yet it is enough for them to say, they are Catholike men, and that they will liue and die in that faith which the Catholike Church doth teach, Rhemist. annot. Luk. 12. sect. 3.

This implicite faith, which they say is sufficient for common Catholikes, is nothing els, but to beleue, as the Church beleueeth, though they knowe nothing themselves particularly: that faith is sufficient without knowledge, thus they reason.

Argum. Though I know all secrets, and all knowledge (saith the Apostle) yet if I had all faith, &c. 1. Cor. 13. 2. the Apostle distinguisheth knowledge, and faith, as being two sundry things, Beilarm. cap. 7.

Ans. 1. Though the Apostle reckon vp here diuers particular giftes, yet doth he not so se- parate and deuide them, but that one may communicate with another: for if this be a good con- sequent, sequent, because Saint Paul saith, all knowledge, and all faith, making two sundry giftes of them, therefore faith hath no fellowship with knowledge: then by the same reason, because he also saith, if I could prophesie, and know all secrets, therefore he that prophesieth hath no knowledge of secrets.

2 Saint Paul speaketh not here of iustifying faith, but of the faith of miracles, If thou I had faith whereby I could remove mountaines, &c. which faith may be separated from loue: but iustifying faith cannot: faith working by loue, saith the Apostle, Gal. 5. 6. this place therefore concludeth nothing against iustifying faith.

The Protestants.

AS before they spoyled faith of the better part thereof, which is a stable and certaine persuasion of the heart: so now also they rob it of the other part, which is an euidence and light of spirituall knowledge: for faith cannot stand with ignorance, but necessarily bringeth with it, an illumination of the minde, as it worketh stablesnes in the heart.

Neither doe we affirme, that we doe perfectly vnderstand with the minde, those things which by faith we beleue: for the Apostle saith, that neither the eye hath seene, nor the eare heard, neither came into mans heart, the things that God hath prepared for those that loue him, 1. Cor. 2. 9. And now we see thorough a glasse darkely, then shall we see face to face, 1. Cor. 13. 12. We shall neuer therefore bee able perfectly to vnderstand in this life so much, as wee beleue: yet we doe know and vnderstand them after a sorte: for as M. Latimer saith; there is great difference betwene certaine knowledge, and cleare knowledge, for that may be of things absent that appeare not; this requireth the presence of the object: A man therefore may certainly and surely know the thing which he perfectly beleueth, though he doe not cleerely and euidently know it.

Againe, concerning this distinction of implicita, and explicita fides, our iudgement is this: we doe not absolutely condemne or refuse it; but with two conditions are content to receive it: first, if they vnderstand that to be the explicita fides, when as a man by sufficient knowledge and learning is able to maintaine euery poynt of his faith: that to be implicita fides, not when a man is utterly ignorant to giue a reason of his faith, but when his knowledge and instruction is not so full, as is to be found in the learned sort: So then the explicite faith, is not that which onely hath skill and knowledge; the implicate, that which hath none: but they differ onely in degree, the one hath a greater measure of knowledge then the other.

The second condition is this, that we vnderstand the implicate faith, to be that, not which is grounded vpon the determination of the Church, but vpon the truth of the holy Scriptures: As if a man should thus professe, this is my faith, and thus doe I beleue, because I am so taught by the Scriptures, though otherwise I be not able to giue an exact account of my faith. With these respects and conditions we will admit of this distinction: as we finde it to haue been admitted by that holy Martyr, Master Saunders, whose wordes I will set downe: Albeit I cannot explicita fide, as they call it, conceiue all that is to be conceiued, neither can discusse all that is to be discussed, in the doctrine of this most true religion: yet I doe binde my selfe, as by my humble supplicatie, so by my fidem implicitam, that is, by faith in generalitie, to wrap my beleefe in the credite of the same, that no authoritie of the Romish religion, repugnant thereunto, shall by any means moue me from the same, Fox. pag. 1495. ex epist. Saund. ad Wintoniens. This holy Martyr confesseth this implicate faith, and modestly acknowledgeth his faith to be such, not that he was altogether rude and ignorant, but not yet attayned to the depth of Christian knowledge: secondly, he groundeth his faith not vpon the determination of the Romish Church, but vpon the truth of his religion warranted by the Scriptures. Such an implicate faith doe we also graunt. But a popish implicate faith altogether void of knowledge, when men vtterly ignorant content themselves to beleue as the Church beleueth, we do detest and abhor: Such a faith, as the Bishop of Cauillon in France, commended sometimes to the Christians of Merindol, in these wordes: It was not necessary or requisite to saluation, that they should be so cunning, as to expound or vnderstand the articles of their faith, but that it was sufficient that they knew it in Latine: for there were many Bishops, Curates, yea and Doctors of Diuinitie, whom it would trouble to expound the Pater Noster, or the Creede, Fox. pag. 949. Against this blind, popish, and vsauory faith, we reason thus.

Argum. 1. Saint Peter saith, We must be ready to giue account to euery one that asketh, of that hope, which is in vs. 1. Pet. 3. 15. Ergo, it is not sufficient for a Christian to say he beleueth, as the Church beleueth: but he must be able to giue account of his beleefe.

Argum. 2. Master Lambert holy Martyr, against this popish implicate faith which indeede is no faith, but a blockish ignorance, alleadgeth these testimonies of Scripture: Brethren, be ye as children in wit and vnderstanding, but as concerning malice, ye be as children. 1. Cor. 14. Be not like the horse and mule, which haue no vnderstanding, Psalm. 32. Trye all things, and keepe that which is good, 1. Thes. 5. 21. Ergo, Christians ought to haue knowledge to discern good from euill, &c. Fox. pag. 1103.

him from God, and credite given to Gods speeches, that he should be the father of many nations, by his Sonne, which was yet vnborne, whom his wife Sara, both barren and now old, was to beare vnto him: But Abrahams faith was a iustifying faith: Ergo, Rhemist annot. Rom. 4. sec. 9. Bellarm. lib. 1. de iustificat. cap. 8.

Answ. 1. The object of Abrahams faith, or the thing which Abraham beleeued, was not onely concerning the birth of his sonne Isaac, and the multiplying of his seede by him: but the promise which Abraham gaue credite vnto, was spirituall concerning Christ: As the Apostle noeth, he saith not, and to the seedes, as speaking of many, but, and to thy seide, as of one, which is Christ, Galath. 3. 16. And Abraham was promised not so much to be the father of many nations, as to be the father of all them that beleue, Rom. 4. 11. therefore it was not a temporall, but a spirituall promise, which was made vnto Abraham. 2. Neither was Abrahams faith onely a generall or historically belike, that this promise was true: but a sure confidence and trust in God that this promise pertained to him, and that he himselfe should be blessed, in that promised seede: as our Sauour testifieth Ioh. 8. 16. Abraham desired to see my day, and saw it, and reioyced: for whereoffranged that exceeding joy in Abraham, but vpon that certaine hope and perswasion, which he had of his owne saluation in Christ?

Argum. 3. That faith, which Christ required, and confirmed by miracles, was a iustifying faith; but that was no certaine fidence or particular perswasion, but onely a generall beleefe in the power and omnipotencie of Christ.

The assumption Bellarmino proueth by diuers places of Scripture.

1. Matth. 9. 28. Christ saith to the blind, Beleuee yes that I am able to do this? According to your faith be it vnto you.

2. Such was the faith of the Centurion, which Christ so commended, saying, hee founde a great faith in Israel. Luko 7. 9. Say the word onely, and my seruants shall be whole.

3. Such was Naibanaels faith, Iohn 1. 30. Because I said I saw thee vnder the figtree, beliest thou?

4. Iohn 11. 37. I beleuee that thou art Christ the sonne of God, which should come into the world.

5. Iohn 20. Christ saith to Thomas; Thou hast seene and beleueed, &c. Hee beleued onely the truth of this article, that Christ was risen from the dead.

6. Mark. 1. 40. The Leper doubted of Christs mercie; If thou wilt, thou canst make mee cleane; he beleued onely his power.

7. The Pharisee had confidence that he was iust and righteous, Luk. 18. yet was he not for all that iustified.

8. The Eunuch had no assurance of Gods mercie, but said onely, I beleuee Iesus Christ to be the Sonne of God, Act. 8. 37.

9. Rom. 10. 9. If thou confesse with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, and shalt beleue in thy heart, that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved: iustifying faith is nothing els, but the beleefe of the resurrection of Christ.

10. 1. Iohn 3. 1. Whosoener beleueth, that Iesus is the Christ, is borne of God: Here is no persuasion or particular confidence required; Bellarmino lib. 1. de iustificat. c. 8.

Answ. First, 1. To the proposition I answere, that indeed, that faith which Christ required and preached, was the true iustifying faith; which included a certaine assurance of forgiveness of finnes: as Luk. 7. 47. Christ saith of the penitent woman, Many finnes are forgiven her; for she loved much: she by her love vnto Christ, testified her inward feeling and assurance of forgiveness. 2. Though this faith Christ required, yet in his mercie, he refused not the least beginning of faith, which was to beleue his power, that he was able to worke miracles vpon their bodies, which was the faith of miracles, yet an introduction to the true iustifying faith: and therefore it was written of Christ, A bruised reed shall be not breake, and smoking flaxe shall be not quench: Matth. 12. 20. that he shall beare with the infirme and weak; and not reiect their small measure of faith.

1. Secondly, our particular answer to the places objected, is this: 1. Those blind men beleued not onely that Christ was able to helpe them, but were perswaded of his mercie, in saying, O sonne of David David mercie vpon vs. 2. To the receding of a temporall benefite in recouering of their sight, a temporarie faith (which we call the faith of miracles) might suffice.
2. Secondly, 1. the Centurions faith is shewed in beleueing Christ to be able to heale his seruants bodily sickness: but the redemption of finnes is the object of iustifying faith, and therefore it is improperly alleaged. 2. Yet this Centurion had as well confidence in Christs mercie, as beleefe of his power, Christ hauing said to him, ver. 7. I will come and heale him. 3. The Centurions faith, was for another; but the iustifying faith, is the assurance that euery man hath for himselfe.
3. Thirdly, 1. Naibanael is commended for this good beginning of faith, which Christ promisseth to encrease, thou shalt see greater things then these. 2. And his faith is not without particular confidence, science, acknowledging Christ to be King of Israel: of which number he was, being affirmed by Christ to be a true Israelite, vers. 47.

4. The faith of Martha, was not onely a generall confession of the resurrection, which she had made before, Ioh. 11. 24. but a particular beliefe, whereby euery one is by Christ saued frō the death of sin: as she, being asked, Beluest thou this? answered, Yea: that is, that whosoever beleeueth in Christ shall neuer die. v. 26. This is the particular assurance of faith, to be preferred frō everlasting death.

5. Thomas faith also was particular, in saying to Christ, Thou art my Lord and my God: Ioh. 20. vers. 28. It was not a generall apprehension onely, that he was risen againe.

6. First, the Lepers request was for the cleansing of his body; what is this to the remission of sin, which is the proper object of iustifying faith? 2. Neither doth he doubt of Christs will and power, because he saith, if thou wilt: will ye say that Christ doubted of his Fathers good will, because he thus prayed; Father, if thou wilt, take away this cuppe, Luk. 22. 42. that is, Thou canst take it away, if thou wilt: but a man is thus to pray for things temporally, namely with a condition not that God sayleth in mercie, when he withholdeth them, but because it is not alwayes good for vs to receive them. 3. The Lepers confidence appeareth in his earnest prayer, Mark. 11. 40. He besought him, and kneeled downe &c. and Christ had compassion vpon him: By the effect then it appeareth he prayed with confidence, as our Sauiour saith, Mark. 11. 24. Whosoever say, disce when you pray, beleeue that you shall haue it, and it shall be done vnto you.

7. The Pharisee doth boast of his owne worthinesse, and hath a vaine confidence in himselfe, which was no confidence at all: though he say, God I thanke thee; he doth it in hypocrisie, acknowledging herein a gift from God, but procured by his owne worthinesse.

8. The Eunuches faith wanted not a particular apprehension and application of Christs death: What longeth me (saith he) to be baptized? vers. 36. that as hee was in his flesh sprinkled with water, so he beleeued, that in his soule he was washed in Christs blood from his sinnes.

9. The faith and confession which the Apostle speaketh of, is not without a particular persuasion and assurance of the heart. 1. So he saith, Rom. 6. 8. If we be dead vnto Christ, we beleeue that we shall liue with him: The beleeve then of Christs death and resurrection worketh in vs assurance of life. 2. It followeth in the next verse, Rom. 10. 11. Whosoever beleeueth in him, shall not be ashamed: but it is the hope and assurance of the heart, that maketh not ashamed. Rom. 10. is not a generall apprehension onely. 3. Rom. 10. 14. How shall they call vpon him, vpon whom they haue not beleeued? A louation is a fruit of this faith: but true inuocation or prayer is not without assurance to be heard, Marke 11. 24.

10. Euer the Apostle in that faith requirerth particular confidences: for it followeth, 1. Ioh. 3. 23. Every one that longeth him; Euery one that beleeueth, that Iesus is Christ, longeth him: but lone cannot stand out feare and doubtfulnesse, and maketh vs to haue boldnes in the day of the Lord, 1. Ioh. 4. 16. 17. Ergo, faith expelleth doubtfulnes, and worketh in vs boldnesse and confidence.

A Iustifying faith is not onely a generall beliefe of the articles of faith, that Christ was really borne, rose againe for them that beleeue: but it is assisted and stedfast confidence, whereby euery man particularly doth apply to himselfe the generall promises of God, for the remission of his sinnes in Christ, that Christ dyed, rose againe, and did all therest euen for him: so

Argum. 1. Saint James saith, the diuells also doe beleeue that God is, and doe tremble: Iam. 2. 19. yea without doubt, but they beleeue that the word of God is true: and confesse the articles of the faith: do they acknowledge Christ to be the Sonne of the liuing God, Marke 16. 7. But the faith of the diuells is no iustifying faith: Ergo, neither this historicall and generall faith: Thus Master Tindal the holy Martyr witnesseth, who saith, that the diuill beleeueth that there is a God, and life everlasting, and that there is an hell, yea he beleeueth that the father, the sonne, and the holy Ghost are but one God, yet he is nothing the better for this beliefe, vid. plur. Fox. p. 1255. artic. 5.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul was saued by no other faith, but the common iustifying faith of all Christians; but this faith wrought a particular persuasion in him: from henceforth it sayleth for me in peace of righteousness. 2. Tim. 4. 8. And againe: I liue by the faith of the sonne of God, who hath saued me and giuen himselfe for me. Galath. cap. 2. vers. 20. Ergo, such onely is the faith of all Christians to be

Belarmine would here scence to say somewhat, but he confirmeth himselfe with a maxim, which he himselfe, then ouerthroweth it: Religio dicunt posse vniuersumque generalem professionem sibi applicare, per fidem: They say right, that euery man by faith, may apply the generall promises to himselfe, for as I beleeue by the Catholike faith, that Christ died for all, ita eadem fides operatur mortuum esse pro me by the same faith, I beleeue he died for me, Belarm. cap. 1. responsio ad obiect. 5. Doubtless the Iesuite now confesse against himselfe, that the speciall mercy of God is the object of faith: which he before denied? And if a man by faith may apply to himselfe the generall promises of God, which he before denied? Certe vniuersumque speciale misericordiam ad presumptionem non habet fidem pertinere: That for a man to promise to himselfe speciall mercy, is belongeth to presumption, rather than to faith, faith, Bellarmin. cap. 4. What neede now any other confutation, seeing the Iesuit confuteth himselfe.

Argum. 3. Iustifying faith bringeth tranquillitie and peace of conscience: but the promises of God generally apprehended, doe not worke the peace of conscience, vnlesse they be particularly applied: Ergo, they are not the object of iustifying faith. Bellarmin. here in flat tearmes denieth, that faith breedeth the securitie and peace of minde, but rather paucos metus, it breedeth feare and terror in the minde, Bellarmin. resp. ad obiect. 5. wherein he doth contradict of purpose the holy Apostle, which sayth, being iustified by faith, ye haue peace toward God, Rom. 5. 1. Ergo, iustifying faith worketh peace.

Argum. 4. That faith doth not generally only apprehend, but particularlie applie, and worke a speciall assurance thereof in the heart, these places of scripture further doe testifie.

1 Mark. 11. 24. Whatsoeuer ye desire, when ye pray, beleeue that ye shall haue it, and it shall be giuen vnto you.

Iam. 1. 6. Let him aske in faith, and wauer not.

2. Chiron. 20. Put your trust in the Lord your God, and ye shall be assured.

4 Therefore the Scripture reprobeth fearefulness and doubtfulness, as shewing a want of faith. Matth. 8. 26. Why are ye fearefull, O ye of little faith! Matth. 14. 31. Christ saith to Peter, O thou of little faith, wherefore dost thou doubt? If want of faith bring doubtfulness, then faith worketh assurance.

5 Rom. 4. 14. It is by faith, that the promise may be sure to all the seed. Ergo, faith bringeth assurance.

1 Ans. Bellarmin. It is true we must beleeue, that we shall receiue, but yet conditionally, if we aske aright: resp. ad obiect. 2.

Contra. We graunt this condition, if a man aske aright, that is in faith, he is sure to be heard, as S. Iames saith, 5. 15. The prayer of faith shall saue the sick. Ergo, the condition of faith bringeth assurance; which is the same thing we affirme: thus he hath yeelded the cause.

2 Ans. The Apostles meaning is, that we should not doubt of Gods power, Bellarmin. ibid.

Contra. No nor yet of Gods mercie and good will: for before he had said, Iam. 1. 5. Which giueth to all men liberally, and reprocheth no man: to be a liberall giuer without reproch, sheweth Gods will and mercie, not his power onely. Againe, let him aske in faith, nihil basitans, doubting nothing at all: Ergo, he must not doubt either of Gods power or mercie.

3 Ans. It followeth in the same verse, credits prophetis eius, beleeue his Prophets, and all things shall fall out well: 2. Chiron. 20. 20. But we must not put our trust in the Prophets, Bellarmin.

Contra. First, it is all one, to say credits in Deum, &c. beleeue in God, as the text is, and credits prophetis, beleeue the Prophets: To beleeue the Prophets, is to acknowledge they speake the truth; to beleeue in God, is to put our trust in him. Secondly, it is a grosse consequent, we must not put our trust in the Prophets, Ergo nor in God. Thirdly, the text is, trust in God, & securi sitis, ye shall be assured: but where there is any doubtfulness, there is no assurance.

4 Ans. Christ reprobeth his Disciples because they doubted of his power: for if they had beleeued Christ to be omnipotent, &c. they would not haue doubted the danger of shipwrecke, Bellarmin. resp. ad obiect. 3.

Contra. First, will ye make the Apostles of lesse faith, then the poore Leaper, Matth. 13. If thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane? he doubted not of Christs power. Secondly, neither did the Apostles make question of Christs power at this time, saying, verf. 25. Saue vs or else we perish: they doubted not in thus praying, but that he was able to saue them. Thirdly, to beleeue Christ to be able, belongeth to the intelligence; to be assured thereof, is of the heart and affections: but feare or doubtfulness is not in the intelligence or vnderstanding part, but in the heart: Ergo, this feare or doubt was not of Christs power: but they failed in their confidence and assurance.

5 Ans. The promise made to Abraham was not of remission of sinnes, but of the calling of the Gentiles: and it was onely an historicall or dogmaticall faith, in the power and omnipotence of God, Bellarmin. c. 11. resp. ad obiect. 4.

Contra. First, the promise in deed was made of the calling of the Gentiles, and consequently of remission of sins: for the promise was, that in his seed (which is Christ, Gal. 3. 16.) all the kindreds of the earth should be blessed, Gen. 12. 3. but blessednes consisteth in the forgiveness of sinnes: Blessed are they, whose iniquities are forgiven, Rom. 4. 7. Secondly, Abraham was not only resolute in his iudgement of Gods power, but assured in his heart of his loue: for he both saw the day of his Christ in his spirit, and reioyced in his heart, Iohn 8. 56. Abraham reioyced to see my day, he saw it and was glad.

Let vs heare the iudgement of holy martyrs and confessors: That honourable Earle the Lord Cramwell, who now doth shine in heauen, who was sometime famous vpon earth, whose godly memorie shall neuer die: Hee in that sweete prayer which he made at the houre of his death, sayd thus: Thou mercifull Lord was borne for my sake, thou didst suffer both hunger and thirst for my sake; thou didst reach fast, and pray for my sake; all thy holy actions and workes, thou wroughtest for my sake; thou sufferedst most grievous paines and torments for my sake; finally thou wast by most precious blood to be shed vpon the crosse for my sake: now most mercifull Saniour, let all these things profite me, which thou hast done for my sake.

which hath also given thy selfe for me, &c. Fox. 1. 190. faith, we see wrought in this true noble heart a particular perfituation of Gods mercy, with a sweet application of the merits of Christ. Beaumont thus writeth in a certain letter of his to a godly Gentlewoman: What profit should it be to you, to beleue this to be true (I am the Lord thy God) to others; if you should not beleue that it is true to your selfe, Fox pag. 1639.

Augustine saith, Quicquid cum loquer agnoueris in te, quisquis expertus es, crede ceteris omnibus In Psalm. 108. Thou which I say, thou that hast experience thereof in thy selfe, know that it is common to all, Thou art redeemed by that precious blood. Ergo, every man must haue a particular feeling of his redemption in himselfe. Interpreting. Casarian. cap. 3. Qui per sanguinem Christi sanguine redimuntur & continentur passionis Christi, iustitiam, et continuo iustificatur, iustitiam remissionem peccatorum. He that is redeemed by the blood of Christ, and to whom the merite of Christ is applyed, he is forthwith iustified, and findeth redemption of sinne. Thus the Elder Papists confessed a particular application of Christs redemption to be necessarie in iustification, and not a generall beleueing onely of the truth thereof to be sufficient.

John Lombard alleageeth thus out of August. lib. 1. dist. 23. g. Fidem ipsum videt quisque in corde suo. Heredit. Every man seeth faith in his own heart, if he beleue: but a man cannot let his faith that it is not sure of his faith: that he seeth onely in his heart, which is firme, fixed, and settled in his heart.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE DI- uers kinds of faith.

WHereas we affirme, that there are diuers kinds of faith: as first, fides historica, an historical faith, which is to beleue the truth of whatsoever contained in Scripture: there is also fides miraculorum, the faith or gift of working myracles, whereof S. Paul speaketh, 1. Cor. 12. 9. the third kinde is, fides iustificans, that faith which iustificeth, which is an assured beleefe of Gods promise made vnto vs in Christ: the Leuitite and the Rhemists affirme, all these kinds of faith in substance to be all one: the faith of myracles differeth onely from iustifying faith, in an accidentall qualitye, of more seruour deuotion, and confident trust, Rhem. annot. 1. Cor. 12. 9. Bellarm. de iustificat. lib. 1. cap. 4. Yea our Rhemists are yet more absurd: that faith (say they) which S. James calleth a dead faith, is notwithstanding a true faith, and the same which is called the Catholike faith, & which the Apostle defineth, Heb. 11. 1. and in substance all one with that, which iustificeth, Rhem. au. 1. am. 2. fol. 111. argum. 1. That faith which S. Paul defineth, Heb. 11. 1. is the same faith, which iustificeth: but this faith also, is the historical faith: Thou shalt see faith we vnderstand that the world was ordamed, &c. vers. 2. v. 1. is the same also with the faith of myracles: thorough faith they stopped the mouths of Lions, quenched the violence of the fire, &c. vers. 33. 34. And all this while the Apostle discourseth of that faith, which is described in the beginning of the chapter, Bellarmin. cap. 5.

Ans. We graunt that these three kinde of faith may sometime be found in one man: for the historical, and the faith of myracles doe as handmaides accompany the iustifying faith: the historical faith, that is, the beleefe of all things contained in Scripture, is neuer disioyned from the true faith: and the faith of myracles, so oft as is necessary, doth waite vpon the same: all these three were together in those holy Patriarches, whose faith the Apostle commendeth: Yet it followeth not, that they made all one faith: for the historical faith may be, where iustifying faith is not, as in Diuels, Luc. 11. 19. they beleue, that there is one God: the faith of myracles also may be in false Prophets, which haue no part in Christ, Matth. 7. 22. But if they were all one, and the same, they could not be separated: but where one is, there of necessity should be the other.

Argum. 1. Matth. 16. 17. The few that shall follow me, shall be saved in my name: they shall cast out diuels, and shall speake with new tongues, and shall be able to stand against serpents: hence it appeareth, that the faith of myracles and iustifying faith is all one, Bellarm. lib. 1. de iustificat. 8.

Ans. The argument followeth not: both that beleueth in Christ, and hath iustifying faith, may worke myracles: Ergo, iustifying faith is all one with the faith of myracles: as it followeth not, because both faith, hath also loue and hope: Ergo, these three are all one. 2. The contrary rather appereth out of this text: for he that beleueth, shall be saved, vers. 16. but a man may worke a miracle, and yet not be saved, Matth. 7. 22. Again, the faith of myracles is now ceased, but iustifying faith remaineth: but if the faith of myracles, and that whereby we are iustified were all one, then he that hath the one should haue the other also: and where and when the one is, then there should be the other also.

Ans. The Protestants. 2. 36. The faith of myracles, and the historical faith are not of the same nature with iustifying faith: nor yet that a dead faith, and a true faith, are not all one, we shew it thus.

Argum. 1. The faith of miracles may be in wicked men, Marth. 7. 23. the iustifying faith can be in none, but those which shall be saved, Mark. 16. vers. 16. They that beleuee shall be saved: Ergo they are not all one. Again, the faith of miracles may be separated from loue, 1. Cor. 13. 2. the iustifying faith cannot, Galat. 3. 6. Faith working by loue: Ergo, what intollerable boldnesse then is this, to ascribe greater confidence and trust to that faith of wicked men, then to the true iustifying faith in the elect.

Argum. 2. That the dead faith which Saint Iames speaketh of, is not of the same nature with the iustifying faith; nor with that faith which is handled, Heb. 11. it may thus appeare: first, by that faith there described, the Patriarches pleased God, and beleueed that hee was a rewarder of those, that sought him, vers. 6. but this dead faith hath no such operation. Secondly, as a dead man cannot be said properly to be a man, no more can a dead faith be properly called a faith. Nay further, the faith of diuels and the faith of Saints cannot be of one nature and substance: but the dead speculative faith may be in diuels, Iam. 2. 19. Ergo, it is a blasphemous assertion, that these two faiths are all one.

Augustine faith, Discerne fidem tuam a fide demonum, demonem credunt, quod oderunt: distinguat Apostolus fides, que operatur per dilectionem: Discerne thy faith from the faith of diuels, the dead beleuee that which they hate: the Apostle doth distinguish them, faith, which worketh by loue. Ergo, a dead faith, which is fruitlesse, and worketh not by loue, is the faith of diuels, and is not of one nature with a true iustifying faith.

Synod. Treuerens. sub Iohanne cap. 4. Populo persuadeant non quamlibet fidem, quam in Deum credunt, sed eam deum saluiferam fore, que per dilectionem operatur: Let them perswade the people, that not euery faith, whereby men beleuee in God, but that onely bringeth saluation, which worketh by loue: by this distinction (not this, but that) we do gather that faith effectually by loue, which is the true lively iustifying faith, is in the iudgement of this Councell, of another kinde and nature, than other generall and common faiths are.

Decret. caus. 33. distinct. 1. c. 11. In fide, spe, charitate, &c. Spiritus perfectorum corda non deserunt: in Prophetis uirtute, miraculorum exhibitione, electi sui aliquando adesse, aliquando se subtrahit: In faith, hope, charitie, and other gifts, &c. the spirite forsaketh not the hearts of the perfect: but the power of prophetic, exhibiting of miracles, sometime the spirite is present with the elect, sometime he withdraweth himselfe. If then faith ioyned with charitie remaineth, faith of miracles alwayes doth not remaine; then are they not one and the same kind of faith.

Peter Lombard lib. 3. dist. 23. liter. d. Fides sine charitate informis qualitas mentis: Faith without charitie, such as the diuels haue, is a deformed qualitie of the minde: Say if you dare, that faith, which iustifieth, is a deformed qualitie: Fides una dicitur, non quia sit una mens in omnibus, sed generis similitudine: Faith is said to be one, not because the same particular faith is in all, but in generall same, that is, by a certaine similitude, ibid. liter. f. Faith which iustifieth, and faith without charitie are the same not in nature and trueth, but in similitude onely.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER FAITH MAY be separated from charitie.

The Papists.

51. Error.

That true iustifying faith, may be separated from loue and other Christian vertues: Belarm. Endeouereth thus to proue it.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul saith, If I had all faith, so that I could remove mountaines, and had loue, I were nothing, 1. Cor. 13. 2. Ergo, there may be a diuorce and separation betweene faith, and loue.

Ans. 1. The Apostle thus speaketh, ex hypothesi, by way of supposition; that if it were possible for faith to be without loue, faith were nothing, as before he sayd, though I speake with tongues of men & Angels; not as though he could speake as the Angels, but if he could, and had no loue, &c.

Belarm. Thus much then we haue gayned by this answer, that faith profiteth not without charitie, therefore it cannot iustifie without charitie: for to what purpose els hath faith such need of charitie, that it cannot be separated from it, Belarm. lib. 1. de iustific. cap. 15.

Contra. Charitie is neuer severed from faith; not because faith needeth charitie, or that it cannot iustifie without charitie: but because charitie doth alwayes accompany faith, as a principall fruit, and effect thereof; as the fire is neuer without the heate, which is no part notwithstanding of the essence or nature thereof, but a nature qualitie issuing from thence: And like as a good tree is neuer void of good fruit; which good fruit make not the tree good; but the tree being first good, it maketh also the fruit good.

Ans. 2. Or we answer rather that S. Paul speaketh here of the faith of miracles, which wee graune may be separated from loue, and may be found in the wicked, Marth. 7. 23. for he meaneth such a faith, whereby mountaines are removed.

Belarm. S. Paul speaketh as well of that faith, which iustifieth, as of this faith of miracles. 1. He saith, If I had all faith, ver. 2. he speaketh generally of all. 2. He meaneth that faith, which is ioynd with hope and loue, now abideth faith, hope and loue, these three, ver. 13. but this is a iustifying faith; Ergo.

Contra. 1. Saint Paul in saying all faith, meaneth not vniuersally every kind of faith: but that whole faith or generall power, whereby all myracles may be wrought, whereof he giueth one particular instance, of removing mountaines. Secondly, in the last verse he speaketh of another kind of faith then in this place: for there he vnderstandeth such a faith as abideth still; and is in all ages necessarie for all Christians: but this faith whereby mountaines are removed, now abideth not, the gift is ceased, therefore he meaneth not that faith.

Argum. 2. Iohn 12. 42. Many of the chiefe beleeued in him, but because of the Pharisees, they did not confesse him, lest they should be cast out of the Synagogue, for they loued the praise of men, more then the praise of God. Here we see there was faith without charitie, Belarm. ibid. argum. 1.

Ans. 1. We must eyther vnderstand here a common and superficial faith, not a true faith indeed: as our Sauour faith, Iohn 5. 44. How can ye beleue, when ye receiue honour one of another? If these therefore were such, as altogether neglected Gods honor, and onely loued the praise of men, they had not a true faith, and therefore it is no maruell, if they wanted charitie. 2. Or if we vnderstand this place of such chiefe men, as Nicodemus, and Ioseph of Arimathea, who beleeued in Christ indeed, but were letted by their owne carnall weakenesse and infirmities: then had they a true faith, though imperfect, and a loue also vnto Christ, though somewhat ouershadowed and obscured with the loue of the world, and the feare of men.

Argum. 3. Iam. 2. 14. What auaileth it my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, when he hath no workes? Ergo, faith may be without the workes of charitie: and the Apostle meaneth not a shadow of faith, but a true faith indeed. 1. The Apostle saith in the same place, that Abrahams faith wrought with his workes: but Abrahams faith was a true faith. 2. Ver. 24. the Apostle saith, that a man of workes is iustified, and not of faith onely: but the shadow of a faith iustifieth not. 3. Hee compareth a faith without workes to a bodie without a soule; but a dead bodie is a true bodie: Ergo, a dead faith is a true faith.

Ans. First, 1. Abrahams faith was a true faith, because it was a working faith; doth it follow therefore that faith not working by loue is a true faith? nay, the contrary rather is inferred. 2. A faith, which is effectually by workes, iustifieth: Ergo, a true faith: but a faith without workes cannot saue, ver. 14. Ergo, it is not a true faith. 3. A dead bodie is in part a true bodie, in respect of the terrene and materiall part, but simple it is not a true bodie, nor the same bodie, which it was before in all points, wanting life, actiuitie and motion: so a faith that worketh not, hath some of the materials of a true faith, as knowledge, vnderstanding; but it is not the same, wanting conscience, and charitie, and true confidence, which is the life and soule of faith.

Secondly, that a faith not working, is not a right or true faith, is euident by the Apostle: 1. Because he compareth it to the faith of diuels, ver. 19. which is no right faith. 2. A faith without workes helpeth not, neyther sauieth, ver. 14. but a working and effectual faith, iustifieth, ver. 24. Ergo, they are not the same; for the same faith will haue the same effect. 3. A dead faith and a liuely faith are not the same: but a faith not working is a dead faith, ver. 17. Faith if it haue no workes, is dead in it selfe: but as a dead man is not a man, no more is a dead faith a right faith.

The Protestants.

Faith and charitie, as they are two diuers gifts and graces of the spirit, so in nature and propriety they may be distinguished: but in vse they can neuer be separated: for where a true liuely faith is, there is charitie; and where true loue and charitie is, it is an infallible signe of the presence of faith: no faith then, no charitie: and againe, no loue, no faith.

Arg. 1. Faith without workes is dead, Iam. 2. 26. and no better than the faith of diuels, ver. 19. but a dead faith, and the faith of diuels is no true faith: Ergo, there is no true faith, without the workes of charitie.

Belarm. 1. Fides demonum, ex parte obiecti vera est: The faith of diuels is a true faith, in respect of the obiect.

Ans. First, this speech cannot by any sound diuinitie be iustified, that the diuels haue in any respect a true faith. Secondly, if in this respect the wicked spirits haue a true faith, then they haue every way a true and perfect popish faith. For thus they define their faith: It is an act of the vnderstanding, Rhemist. 2. Cor. 13. sect. 1. whereby wee doe vniuersally beleue the articles of Christs death and resurrection, &c. Rhemist. annot. Rom. 4. sect. 9. But the diuell hath this act of vnderstanding, whereby he doth vniuersally beleue, &c. Iam. 2. 19. Mark. 5. 7. Ergo, hee hath a true popish faith, and is a right popish Catholike.

Belarm. 2. A dead faith may notwithstanding be a true faith: as a dead bodie, is a bodie; and a standing water, and a running water, are the same in substance, Belarm. c. 15.

Answ. Though a dead faith may be compared to a dead bodie, because it is altogether void of spirituall quickening, as the bodie is without naturall life: yet a lively faith is not fitly resembled to a living bodie, but rather to the life of the bodie; because faith is not that which is quickened, but that which quickeneth and giueth life: for it is written, The iust shall live by faith, Rom. 1. 17. As therefore a dead man is no man properly, no more is a dead faith a true faith.

2. Again, as a dead bodie hath the same terrene substance, which a living bodie hath, but not the same spirituall substance, which is the soule; and as a standing puddle hath part of the same matter, which is in a running water, but yet grosse, muddie, stinking and putrifying, so that it can be called the same water: so a dead faith hath some part of that which a true faith hath, as namely some light of knowledge and vnderstanding; but yet not hauing the substance and likelihood of faith, it cannot be a right and true faith.

Argum. 2. He that is borne of God hath loue: Every one that loveth is borne of God, 1. John 4. 7. He that dwelleth in loue, dwelleth in God and God in him, vers. 16. But hee that beleeueth, that Iesus is Christ, is borne of God, 1. Ioh. 5. 1. Ergo, he that beleueth hath loue.

Bellarmin. We graunt, that fides formata, formed or perfect faith, hath alwaies loue annexed.

Answ. As though we spake not all this while of a lively, perfect, and iustifying faith, which we call a formed faith: for a faith without forme, is no faith: If he thus vnderstand a formed faith, he faith the same now that we affirme, and is contrarie to himselfe, who tooke vpon him in the beginning of this chapter to prooue, that fides vera, qua iustificat impium, a true faith, and such an one as iustifieth the vngodly, may be separated from loue: If he haue found out a formed faith beside this true lively, and iustifying faith, he is contrarie to the Apostle here, who knoweth no other true faith, than to be beleue in Iesus Christ.

Argum. 3. 1. He that hath no charitie denieth the faith: 1. Tim. 5. 8. He that provideth not for his owne, denieth the faith. 2. 1. Ioh. 2. 4. He that saith he knoweth God, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar: Ergo, the true knowledge of God is not seuered from charitie. 3. The iust shall live by faith, Rom. 1. 17. but without charitie, faith is dead, and can giue no life: Ergo, a true faith is not diuided from charitie.

Answ. 1. Bellarmin. answereth out of Gregor. Hom. 29. in Euangel. Non habere veram fidem, qui non bene operantur: That they haue not a true faith, that doe not worke well: that is, they denie the faith in the worke, not in the heart.

Contra. First, Gregories testimonie is very direct for vs, that there can be no true faith, where is no right worke. Secondly, the faith denied in worke, is denied also in the heart: as the Apostle faith, Whosoever sinneth, (that is in worke) hath neither scene nor knowne him, (in his heart) 1. Ioh. 3. 6. Thirdly, as Saint Paul faith, 2. Tim. 3. 5. Having a shew of godlines, but haue denied the power thereof: so where the power of faith is denied, what else remaineth but onely a shew and shadowe of faith.

Contra. Such is that knowledge, which accompanieth faith: as the Apostle faith, 1. Ioh. 4. 16. We haue knowne and beloued the loue, that God hath in vs: Ergo, the knowledge of faith is not without loue.

3. It must be vnderstoode of faith formed with charitie, Bellarmin. resp. ad arg. 6.

Contra. He vnskillfully giueth an instance in the cause: this formed faith, is the faith which we meane, a right and perfect faith, not a deformed and vnshapen faith. Thus then by his owne confession, a true faith, which he calleth a formed faith, is not without charitie.

Augustine faith, Si dilectio patris in te non manet, non es natus ex Deo: gloriaris te esse Christianum, nomen habes, & facta non habes: si factus te non ostendis Christianum, quid prodest nomen, ubi non inuenitur? If the loue of the father be not in thee, thou art not borne of God: thou dost bolst thy selfe to be a Christian, thou hast the name but not the deedes: if thou dost not shew thy selfe a Christian, what good doth the name, where the thing is not found? Tract. 5. in Epistol. Iohannis. If he be not borne of God, that hath no loue, then hath he not faith: for he that hath faith and beleueth, is borne of God, 1. Ioh. 5. 1.

Again, hee faith, Omnes negant Christum in carne venisse, qui violant charitatem: All they which violate charitie, denie Christ to be come in the flesh, Tractat. 7. But they which denie Christ to be come, &c. are void of faith: Ergo, also of charitie: hee that wanteth the one, wanteth the other.

Wee want not testimonie from themselves: Caus. 33. dist. 2. c. 14. gloss. In Christum credere est amando in ipsum credere: To beleue in Christ is by louing him to beleue in him. This is that faith, which the Apostle defineth working by loue, Galath. 5. 6.

Peter Lombard lib. 3. dist. 23. super d. Credere in deum, est credendo amare, credendo in eum ire: To beleue in God, is in beleueing to loue him; in beleueing to come vnto him. Dist. 25. super c. Quam incredimus, tantum amamus: As much as we beleuee, so much we loue: Plu fides non est sine chari- tate: A godly faith is not without charitie.

Ephes. Sine charitate fides ueritas immo uanitas non prodest: Without charitie the veritie, or rather vancie of faith profiteth not, in 2. Tim. p. 65. Faith then is vaine, that is no true faith without charitie.

Let the holie Martyrs speake. Thus Master Tindall writeth: If thy faith induce thee not to good works, then hast thou not the right faith, thou dost but onely thinke that thou hast it: for S. Iames saith, that faith without works is dead in it selfe: be faith not that it is little or feeble, but that it is dead, and that is dead is not: Fox. p. 1255.

Master Bradford holy Martyr: when Harpsfield had thus said, That all which beleuee in Christ, shall not be sau'd, alleaging that place, Matth. 7. how many shall say to Christ in the day of iudge-ment, Lord, Lord, haue we not in thy name cast out diuels? &c. the holy Martyr maketh this answere:
 You must make a difference betwixt beleeuing, and saying, I beleuee: As for example, if one should say, and I were be loueth you, for all his saying you will not beleue him, when you see he goeth about to doe all the euill he can against you: Fox. p. 1613. Ergo, by the testimonie of those most blessed and holy Martyrs, true faith cannot be separated from charitie: for that which hath no loue, is no faith.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE validitie of faith.

First, after what manner faith iustifieth, whether as a proper efficient cause of iustification, or as an instrument onely. Secondly, whether we are onely iustified by faith.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, AFTER WHAT manner faith iustifieth.

The Papists.

Faith doth not iustifie as an instrument in apprehending the iustice or righteousness of Christ, 13. Error.
 but as a proper and true cause it actually iustifieth, by the dignitie, worthinesse, and meritorious worke thereof, Bellarm. lib. 1. de iustificat. cap. 17. Rhemist. annot. Rom. 3. sect. 3.

Argum. 1. These phrases vsed in scripture: iustificari ex fide, Galath. 3. 8. & per fidem, Rom. 3. 30. to be iustified of, or thorough faith, doe betoken an actuall force and power in faith to iustifie: for these prepositions, ex, & per, of & thorough, are not attributed to the instrumentall, but to the proper efficient & working cause: As Rom. 3. vers. 20. ex operibus legis, of the works of the law no flesh is iustified, Galath. 3. vers. 11. no man is iustified, per legem, by or thorough the law: he meaneth not by the law, that is, by the apprehension of the iustice thereof, but by the actuall working and iustice indeede: as therefore he denieth, that we are iustified by the law, that is, the actuall working thereof, so he affirmeth, that we are iustified by faith, that is, actually, by the very work. So the Apostle saith, per fidem vicerunt regna, through faith they obtained kingdomes: that is, verily, and indeed, not respectiue onely: And by faith Abel offered a greater sacrifice, &c. Heb. 11. 4. Faith wrought not this instrumentally, but verily and effectually, Bellarm. ibid.

Ausu. 1. Bellarmines argument is grounded wholly vpon his logicke quiddities: as because this preposition, ex, is a note of the materiall cause; and per, of the formall cause: therefore when the Scripture saith, ex fide, or, per fidem, we must vnderstand faith to be more then the instrumentall cause. But let him know this, that the spirit of God is not bound to the rules of Logicke, neither yet will learne to speake of men, but hath a proper speaking of it selfe.

2. We are able to shew, that these prepositions, ex, and per, of, and through, are in Scripture attributed to the instrument: Rom. 10. 17. Fides ex auditu, Faith commeth of hearing: The Gentiles are made partakers of the promise of God in Christ, per Euangelium, by the Gospell, that is, the preaching thereof, Ephes. 3. 6. But the outward ministerie, or hearing of the word, doth not actually worke or beget faith, but onely instrumentally, the spirit of God working by it.

3. It followeth not, because the Apostle denieth that we are iustified by the law, that is verily, and actually, that hee should affirme the same of faith: for vnto this negatiue, nominum iustificari per legem, vel ex operibus legis, that no man is iustified by the law, or the workes thereof, this affir-matiuie answereth, iustificari per fidem Christi, Rom. 3. 22. to be iustified not simply by faith, but by faith in Christ: and by the redemption that is in Christ, vers. 24. by faith in his blood, vers. 25: the something then is affirmed of Christ, which is denied of the law, though not after the same manner: the iustice of Christ is the actuall and very cause indeede of our iustification, yet not actually in vs, but instrumentally applied vnto vs by faith. It is Christ then, not faith, that properly effe-cteth that which the law cannot: faith effecteth it not, but onely respectiue, and as it hath relation to Christ.

4. Through faith they subdued kingdoms, stopped the mouthes of Lions, &c. Faith was not the proper efficient cause hereof: but faith apprehendeth Christ: Christ apprehended worketh all good things: If God haue giue vs his Son, how shall he not together with him giue vs all things? Rom. 8. 32. These great workes were verily done by them through faith, not as by the proper power and efficacie thereof, but by the power of Christ dwelling in them, and being present by faith. So Abels sacrifice was preferred before Cains, not for the worthines of his faith, but by Gods gracious acceptation, to whom he was ioyned by faith. Lastly, we make a great difference betwene iustification and sanctification: faith iustificeth onely instrumentally, but of the workes of sanctification it is a proper efficient cause, though not the principall: for there is a twofold righteousness, a perfect righteousness, whereby wee are made righteous before God; and that is the righteousness onely of Christ: and of this righteousness, faith onely is an instrument, no efficient cause. There is an imperfect righteousness, that is, sanctification, whereby euery faithfull man is made righteous in himselfe, not sufficient to iustifie him before God, but yet available to leade an holie and vpright life in some measure. And of this righteousness faith is a proper efficient cause: for as the tree is the cause of good fruit, so is faith the roote and beginning of godly workes: faith stirreth a man vnto pray, Iam. 5. 15. it worketh peace of conscience, Rom. 5. vers. 1. and it hath other proper effects: but it maketh vs not righteous before God by it owne act, but as it apprehendeth, and layeth hold of Christ.

Argum. 2. Faith is a worke, Ioh. 6. 29. we are iustified by faith: Ergo, by a worke, and so consequently, by merit: faith then is meritorious.

Ans. Faith indeede is a worke, but not any of our owne workes: it is called the worke of God, Ioh. 6. 29. God doth wholly worke it in vs: Ergo, we cannot merit by it: Faith iustificeth not then, as it is the work of God in vs: for by this reason all other gifts & graces, which are wrought in vs by the spirit of God, should in like manner iustifie vs: But as it hath relation vnto the object Iesus Christ, in apprehending his righteousness, which is the office only of faith, and not of any other spirituall grace.

1. Argum. 3. First, faith is our iustice it selfe: Ergo, not the apprehension onely of iustice: the first is proued: Rom. 4. 5. To him that beleaueth in him, that iustificeth the vngodly, faith is counted for righteousness. So 1. Corin. 3. 11. Other foundation can no man lay, then that which is laid, Iesus Christ: Faith then is the foundation: and the foundation is part of the building. Act. 15. 9. Faith purifieth the heart, the puritie of the heart is our iustice: faith then is our iustice, and not the apprehension of iustice onely, Bellar. c. 17. arg. 2.

2. Secondly, Luk. 7. 40. Thy faith hath saved thee: Ergo, it doth more then apprehend saluation. The sicke mans hand, that apprehendeth or reacheth the medicine, is improperly sayd to heale him.

3. Thirdly, Rom. 10. 14. How shall they call vpon him, vpon whom they haue not beleued? how shall they beleue without a Preacher? As the cause of faith is preaching; so faith causeth inuocation, inuocation obtaineth iustification: faith therefore not respectiue onely, but effectiue worketh iustification, Bellar. ibid.

1. Ans. First, 1. It followeth not, faith apprehendeth iustice: Ergo, it is not our iustice. They apprehendeth, or receiue the light of the day, and yet it is it selfe the light of the bodie, Matth. 6. 22. But like as the eye is but instrumentally the light of the bodie, by conueying and applying the outward light: so faith is our iustice instrumentally, in that we beleue in him that iustificeth, as the Apostle there saith. 2. Christ is properly the foundation: and yet faith also is the rock and foundation. Christ then and faith make but one foundation: Christ positiue, and effectiue; faith instrumentally, by applying and laying the foundation. 3. Faith is not said to purifie the heart, but God by faith; God as the principall agent, or efficient; faith as the instrument.

2. Secondly, 1. It is no rare thing in Scripture to attribute the effect to the instrument: as Gen. 27. 40. By thy sword thou shalt liue: yet is the sword but the instrument: so the iust man liueth by his faith, being the liuely and effectiue instrument of the spirituall life. 2. As Christ here saith, thy faith hath saved thee: so elsewhere: according to your faith be it vnto you, Matth. 9. 29. So that faith is but the meane or measure of the worke: Christ is the worker: as in the same place, verse 8. Beloeue ye, that I am able to doe this:

3. Thirdly, 1. As preaching is the cause of faith, so I graunt faith is of iustification: but the preaching of the word is but the instrument, the spirit working by the word is the efficient. 2. But faith doth not so worke iustification as inuocation: for as I shewed before, faith efficiently produceth the workes of sanctification, whereof inuocation is a principall, but it instrumentally onely causeth iustification.

The Protestants.

Faith doth not iustifie vs by the worthines and dignitie thereof, or as it is a qualitie inherent in man, by any meritorious act, or by the worke of beleeuing, or as a proper efficient cause, but by way of an instrument onely, being as it were the hand of the soule, whereby wee doe apprehend the righteousnes of Christ.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul saith, By grace are you saved through faith, not of your selues, for it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast himselfe. Ephel. 2. 8. Out of this place wee gather these arguments: first, grace and faith may stand together towards the attaining of our saluation: for the grace of God offered in Christ is the principall cause, faith apprehending grace the instrument: but grace and worke cannot stand together, Rom. 11. ver. 6. Ergo, faith and worke cannot be iunited together: faith then iustifieth not, as a worke.

Secondly, they that merit, must merit of themselves, faith is not of our selues; it is the gift of God: Ergo, by faith we merit not.

Argum. 2. Faith as it is commaunded in the law, iustifieth not: for the Apostle saith, that a man is iustified by faith, without the workes of the law. Rom. 3. 28. but faith, as it comprehendeth only the act of beleeuing, is a commaundement contained in the law: for we are commaunded to beleue in God: Ergo, as it is an act of beleeuing only, it iustifieth not.

Argum. 3. Master Bradford holy Martyr reasoneth thus: As the Israelites were healed by beholding the brazen Serpent, so are we saued by beleeuing in Christ: but the looking vp of it selfe doth not procure health vnto the Israelites, but the promise made in the obiect, which was the brazen Serpent, whereupon they looked, gaue them health by their looking vp: Ergo, after the same manner we are saued by our faith, and spirituall looking vp to the bodie of Christ crucified: not that the action is selfe of beleeuing, as it is a qualitie in man, doth so deserue; but because it taketh that dignitie and vertue from the obiect Iesus Christ: See pag. 1659.

Augustine saith, Nemo iustus uiuit, nisi iustificatus, id est, iustus effectus: ab illo autem sic homo iustus, quamquam potest esse iniustus: sicut lucerna a seipso non accenditur, ita nec anima humana seipso praeas, sed clamat ad Deum, tu illuminabis lucernam: No man liueth iustly, vntill hee bee iustified, that is, made iust before: and man is made iust by him that can neuer bee vnjust: for as the lanterne doth not fetch light from it selfe, so neither doth the soule of man giue light to it selfe, but giueth vnto God, thou shalt lighten my lanterne, Plal. 109. Faith then is the lanterne that giueth light to the soule, that is, iustifieth: but as the lanterne giueth not light of it selfe, but as it is lighted of it selfe, so faith by it owne act doth not iustifie, but as it hath respect vnto Christ who is the light: Per fidem lucem damus in corde Deo, qui in nobis & per nos bona operatur: It is the office of faith, to make rourne for God in our heart, who in vs and by vs worketh that which is good, Plal. 144. Faith it selfe therefore properly worketh not our iustification; but, onely prepareth a way for the Lord, to come vnto our hearts: God then is the worker, faith is the way whereby hee worketh.

likewise, ex epistol. Augustini. & 9. Episcopi ad Innocentium: Non per legem iustitia, &c. sed ex fide & dono Dei per Iesum Christum: Righteousnes is not by the law, but by faith, and the gift of God by Iesus Christ. Faith then doth not iustifie by the worke and merite thereof: for merite and gift cannot stand together, yet faith and gift may: because faith it selfe is the gift of God. Again, in the same epistle, iustus patres ex fide uiuentes, non possibilitate naturae, sed dei gratia per fidem iustificati: The righteous fathers which liued by faith, not the possibilitie of nature, but Gods grace by faith did iustifie. But grace and worke cannot stand together, therefore faith doth not iustifie by the merite of the worke.

Peter Lombard rehearseth and approoueth this sentence out of Augustine vpon these words of Saint Paul Rom. 8. 24. We are iustified freely by grace: Hoc idem dicit, ne fides ipsa superba sit, ne dicat sibi: Therefore he so said, lest faith it selfe be proud and say, how freely? for that which faith meritieth, is bestowed rather, than giuen: Non dicit homo ista fidelis, quia cum dixeris, habes fidem, ut merces in iustificationem respondetur, quid habes, quod non accepisti? Let not a faithfull man say so, because if he say, I haue faith, to merit iustification, it will be answered, What hast thou, that thou hast not received, &c. See 10. dist. 26. li. 4. Thus then faith is excluded from meriting or working of iustification.

Again, lib. 2. dist. 19. li. 2. Ut olim aspidochelones, &c. As in time past, they which looked vpon the brazen Serpent were healed from the biting of Serpents: si uide ergo fidei tantum in illis respiciamus, qui pro nobis pendit in ligno: so if by the beholding of faith, wee looke vpon him that hung vpon the tree, we are loosed from our sinnes, &c. Thus faith then by the beholding onely and spirituall apprehending of Christ doth iustifie, euen by the sentence of their Master.

THE SECOND ARTICLE, WHETHER faith onely iustificieth.

The Papists.

14. Error.

FAith is not the onely cause of our iustification: but there are other also, as hope, charite, aines deeds, and other vertues, Rhemist. annos. Rom. 8. fess. 6. Bellarm. lib. x. de iustificat. cap. 13. Yet works are more principall than faith, in the matter of iustification, Rhem. l. am. 2. fess. 7. Whosoever therefore faith, that a man is iustified only by faith, and that nothing else is required to iustification, we pronounce him accursed, Trident. Council. fess. 6. can. 9.

Argum. 1. We are saved by hope, Rom. 8. 24. Ergo, not onely by faith, Rhemist. anno. in hunc locum.

Answ. The Apostle here expoundeth himselfe: for (saith he vers. 25.) If we hope for that we see not, we doe with patience abide for it: We are said then to be saved by hope, not because we are thereby iustified, but because by hope we doe expect and waite for our saluation, which is not yet accomplished: so then iustification is the proper object of faith, which is now present; saluation which is the end of our faith, and followeth iustification, is the proper object of hope. And therefore the Apostle saith, that faith is the ground of things hoped for, Hebr. 11. 1. the thing hoped for, is the saluation of our soules, the ground is iustification by faith in Christ. So wee are saved by hope, not that we are iustified by hope, which the scripture no where affirmeth, but because hope worketh in vs a patient abiding and expectation, till the promised reward come.

Argum. 2. Charitie iustificieth: Ergo, not faith onely. The antecedent is thus proued, Luk. 7. 47. Many sinnes are forgiven her, for she loued much: her loue is the cause, that her sinnes are forgiven to faith. S. Iohn. We know we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren, 1. Ioh. 3. 14. Loue then is the cause why we are translated from death to life, Bellar. ibid.

Answ. 1. To the first place we answere: that the womans loue is not rendred as a cause, that her sinnes were forgiven her by Christ: but by her exceeding loue which was an euident hope and effect of her faith, whereby her sinnes were forgiven her, our Saviour Christ confuted the Pharisees who reputed her as a sinner, vers. 39. and sheweth, that she was not now in her sinnes, but they were already remitted; as it might appeare by her great loue: for she hauing receiued so great a benefite, as the remission of her sinnes, doth hold her selfe much bound to Christ. Beholdeth therefore, to whom a little is forgiven, he loueth a little: but to this woman much was forgiven, therefore she loued much. Her loue then followed the remission of sinnes, as an effect, it was not before as a cause: for in this respect our Saviour telleth her, it was her faith that saved thee, vers. 50. not her loue.

2. To the other place we likewise answere: the Apostle saith not, we are translated from death to life, &c. but, we know we are, because we loue the brethren: that is, loue as a speciall fruit of faith, is certaine signe vnto vs of our regeneration: as vers. 19. thereby we know that we are of the truth, by loue issuing from faith, wee are assured our faith is not in vaine; not that thereby we are iustified: yet loue it selfe is no cause of our iustification, but onely a signe and badge thereof: for it is impossible, that wee should loue GOD first: But here is loue, not that we loued God, but he loued vs, chap. 4. 10. God then sheweth his loue first, in reconciling vs by his Sonne whom wee approached by faith, and then after our reconciliation by Christ, and iustification by faith, loue also is wrought in vs toward God. If our loue then should goe before our reconciliation, wherein Gods loue appeareth toward vs, then should we loue God first, contrarie to the Apostle.

Argum. 3. Feare doth iustifie as well as faith: as Prou. 1. 7. The feare of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. Prou. 14. 27. The feare of the Lord is a wellspring of life: Ergo, faith onely doth not iustifie, or giue life, Bellar. lib. 1. 3. dispos. 2.

Answ. First, by feare here may be vnderstood in generall the whole spirituall state of man, as it also comprehendeth faith: as Psalm 128. 1. Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord: but his blessednes is by faith: therefore faith cannot be heretofore excluded. In this sense, we doubt not, that the feare of the Lord, that is, being ioyned with faith, is the beginning of wisdom. Secondly, if wee take feare more specially, for a particular gift of the spirit; in this sense iustification is not ascribed to it: for in the first place, it is said to bring knowledge; in the second, to call the fountain of life: which in the same place is expounded, vers. 28. in the feare of the Lord is assured strength. These are the gifts and graces of sanctification; knowledge, assurance, strength they are not iustification it selfe, but the fruits thereof, to the which the feare of God is the ready way.

Argum. 4. If faith alone doe iustifie, and the other vertues, as of hope, charitie, doe not helpe any thing to iustification, then faith may as well iustifie, when those vertues are absent, as when they are present: But faith separated from hope and charitie, iustificieth not: Ergo, faith alone doth not iustifie, Bellar. cap. 14.

Answ.

Ans. It followeth not, faith alone doth iustifie: Ergo, it is, or may be alone. In the Sunne, there is both heate and light: It is the heate onely that heateth the earth, not the light; and yet the heate cannot be separated from the light: the tongue both toucheth and tasteth; by the taste onely it discerneth the sauer of meates, not by the touching or feeling; yet there can be no taste without feeling: so faith alone iustificeth, yet it is not alone: faith and charitie are inseparable, yet charitie helpeth not faith to iustifie. The good tree is neuer without good fruit, yet the good fruit doth not helpe to make the tree good; the tree is good first it selfe, before it can bring forth good fruit: So charitie doth not helpe to iustifie, that is, to make men good; but first he is made righteous by faith, and then he bringeth forth good fruits, as the workes of charitie.

The Protestants.

Faith whereby we are iustified, is to be considered, partly as it is passive, partly as it is active: It is passive in apprehending the promises of God in Christ, and applying Christ with all his benefits, in which respect faith onely iustificeth. It is also active in bringing forth good fruits, and quickening of vs to every good worke; but so it iustificeth not. Faith then is inseparably ioyned with hope and loue, and necessarily yeeldeth in vs good fruit; but none of all these doe concurre with faith, in the act of our iustification: but it is the office onely of faith, to applie vnto vs the righteousness of Christ, whereby only we are made righteous before God.

Argum. 1. If men are iustified without workes, then iustification is onely by faith. But the first true, as it may appeare by these testimonies of Scripture: We conclude, that a man is iustified by faith, without the workes of the law, Rom. 3. 28. If Abraham were iustified by workes, he hath whereof to glory, but not with God, Rom. 4. 2. By grace are ye saved through faith, not of workes, Ephes. 2. 9. That I might be found in him, not having mine owne righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, Philip. 3. 9. Ergo, faith onely iustificeth.

Belserme answereth, that the Apostle excludeth not all workes, for then faith it selfe should be excluded from iustification, because it is a worke: And if iustificing faith doe except every law, then the law of faith also should be excepted, Belserme. cap. 16. Such workes therefore only are excluded, which goe before faith, which are done, sola cognitione legis, vel solis viribus liberi arbitrii, sine grace, by the knowledge onely of the law, or by the strength onely of freewill, without grace: not such workes as are of faith, and proceede of grace, cap. 19.

Contra. 1. The Apostle excludeth euen the workes also of grace: for when he had said, we are saved by grace through faith, not of workes: he afterward sheweth what workes; euen such as the Lord had ordained for vs to walke in, Ephes. 2. 10. Again, in another place he saith, Not by the workes of righteousness which we had done, but according to his mercie he saved vs, Tit. 3. 5. The workes of righteousness are excluded: but no man by nature without the helpe of grace, can doe the workes of righteousness. Further, the Apostle sheweth, that grace and workes cannot bee matched together: If it be of grace, it is no more of workes, or else were grace no more grace: if of workes, it is no more grace for then workes were no more workes, Rom. 11. vers. 6. Grace and workes cannot therefore iustifie together, because the one destroyeth the other. Euen workes of grace cannot iustifie together with grace: for I aske them, the workes of grace, are they not workes? But if they should iustifie together with grace, they should be no more workes: or else (saith the Apostle) workes were no more workes.

Euen at this time, when Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteousness, and his workes were refused in respect of his iustification; Abraham had done many excellent workes by his faith: As he obeyed God, to goe from his fathers house, vnto a straunge country, which he knew not, Genes. 12. 1. which was a worke of faith, Hebr. 11. 8. He built altars, and called vpon the name of God, Genes. 12. 7. 13. 18. Before this time also Abraham was blessed of Melchisedech, Genes. 14. 20. And then after all these workes of faith, the Scripture saith, That Abraham beleued the Lord, and it was counted to him for righteousness, Genes. 15. 6. Wherefore euen Abraham's godly workes, issuing from his faith, are excluded from his iustification.

Belserme answereth, that although Abraham at this time wrought many workes by his faith, yet the Apostle taketh not exception against such workes, but those onely that Abraham did without faith: for euen the faithfull, that haue faith, aliquando operantur non ex fide, sometime do workes but not of faith; as when they sinne, or doe any pure morall workes, without relation to God? Belserme. ibid.

Contra. 1. As for the sinfull workes of faithfull men, which we demie not, but they may sometime fall into, it is absurd to thinke, that the Apostle excludeth any such workes: as though any man were so blinde to thinke, that by his sinnes or euill workes, he might be iustified. What then meaneth the Iesuite, to giue an instance of the sinfull workes of Abraham, or any other faithfull man, as though they euer came in question, in the matter of iustification?

2. As for other workes of faithfull men, if they be good and vertuous, they are of faith: for whatsoeuer is not of faith, is sinne, Rom. 14. 23. but faith alwaies hath respect and relation to God

God: therefore whatsoever faithfull men doe well, it commeth of faith; and a good conscience. All, whatsoever else in them, is sinne, and so commeth not within the compasse of this question.

3. Saint Paul, when he saith, That I may be found, not having mine owne righteousness, &c. doth not speake onely of such workes, as he did before he was called, but even of those which he did since he was an Apostle: For whom I have counted all things losse, and doe iudge them to be dung, that I might winne Christ, Philip. 3. 8. He saith not onely, I have counted, as speaking of the time past, but I doe.

Bellarmino answereth, that the Apostle could in no wise vnderstand his workes done after his calling, to iudge them as dung, because he saith, that for such workes, there was laid vp a crowne of righteousness, 2. Timoth. 4. 8. Nunquid Deus coronaret stercora? Should God crowne dung? Bellarmino, cap. 19.

Contra. First, Saint Paul doth not simplicie call these workes dung, or losse, but in comparison: I count all things losse, for the excellent knowledge sake of Christ. Secondly, God crowneth the workes of his Saints, not for the worthines of them, which indeede are but as dung, in respect of the excellencie of reward: but we with our workes are crowned for the worthines of Christ: Life eternal is the gift of God, through Iesus Christ our Lord, Rom. 6. 23.

4. Now where the Iesuite obiekteth, that faith is a worke, and that there is a law also of faith: Ergo, euery worke, and euery law is not excluded from iustification. We answer: First, that faith is indeed a worke, but not any of our workes, it is the worke of God wrought in vs only by his spirit: This is the worke of God, that ye beleue in him, &c. Ioh. 6. 29. Secondly, faith iustificieth not as it is a worke, but in respect of that propertie, which it hath to apprehend, and apply the iustice of Christ: it iustificieth not by it owne worthines and dignitie, but by the worthines of the obiekt. Thirdly, we exclude not euery law, but legem operum, the law of workes: but the law of faith is not the law of workes: for the Apostle doth distinguish them, Rom. 3. 27.

Argum. 2. The scripture ascribeth iustification to faith and beleefe: Who sooner beleueth in him, shall haue everlasting life, Ioh. 3. 16. Thy faith hath saved thee, Luk. 7. 50. We are saved through faith, Ephes. 2. 8. Ergo, faith onely iustificieth.

Ans. Though faith onely be named, yet faith onely doth not iustifie: for by the same reason, because other vertues sometimes are onely named, as, Many sins are forgiven her, for she loved much, Luk. 7. 47. And, We are saved by hope, Rom. 8. 24. As notwithstanding, we cannot gather, that love, or hope doe iustifie without faith, although they be named alone: so the contrarie cannot be concluded, by the sole naming of faith, Bellarmino, cap. 20.

Contra. First, that neither hope, nor charitie doe iustifie in whole, or in part, neither that can be gathered by these places, wee haue shewed before in our answer to their second and third argument against iustification by faith. Secondly, we are able to bring forth a place of Scripture, where faith onely is required: Christ said vnto the ruler of the Synagogue, whose daughter was now dead: Crede tantum, Beleue onely, and she shall be made whole, Luk. 8. 50.

Bellarmino answereth: That Christ speaketh not here of iustification, or remission of sinne, but onely of doing a miracle, in raising vp one which was dead: and faith alone is able to obtaine a miracle, though it be not to iustifie, Bellarmino.

Contra. 1. Our aduersaries affirme iustifying faith, and the faith of myracles in substance to be all one, and that it is one and the selfesame faith, whereby myracles are wrought, and the soules of men iustified, Bellarmino, cap. 5. Yea, the Rhemists confesse, that the faith of myracles hath more fervor, deuotion, and confident trust, than the iustifying faith: Annot. 1. Cor. 13. 9. If then such only be sufficient to worke myracles, why not also to iustifie, seeing, in their opinion, they are operations of the same faith? Nay, if to worke myracles, as they say, be the more worthie thing: a faith onely suffice for the greater worke, much more for the lesse.

2. Our Saviour Christ requireth no other faith of Saimus here, than he doth of the father, whose sonne was possessed with a dumme spirit: Mark. 9. Christ requireth of him to beleue, that he was able to cast out the euill spirit; and of this man, to beleue, that he was able to raise his daughter: But that faith was not sufficient onely for myracles, but for all other purposes: If thou wilt beleue, all things are possible to him that beleueth, Mark. 9. 23. If all things, then not onely the health of the bodie, but the saluation of the soule: Ergo, this onely faith here required, where our Saviour saith: Crede tantum, Beleue onely, is sufficient to obtaine all things.

3. This, crede tantum, beleue onely, was no other faith, than that which was in the woman, healed of the bloodie issue: for she beleued onely that Christ was able to doe it. But Christ saith vnto her: Fides tua te saluam facit, Thy faith hath saved thee, Luk. 8. 48. which the Iesuite himselfe confesseth to be vnderstood of the health both of her bodie and soule: Fides tribuit utramque salutem: He ascribeth to faith both kindes of health. And in the same forme of words our Saviour saith to the woman, whose sinnes were forgiven, Thy faith hath saved thee, Luk. 7. 50. Bellarmino, cap. 17. If all these places speake of the same faith, which Christ commaundeth, in saying, crede tantum, beleeue onely; then this faith, to belecue onely, is sufficient to procure both bodilie and ghostlie health.

Argum. 3. We are iustificd freely by grace, Rom. 3. 24. Therefore not of workes, but by faith: By grace are ye saved through faith, Ephes. 2. 8. To him that worketh not, but beleueth in him that iustificth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousness, Rom. 4. 5. Wee are then iustificd freely by faith and beleefe, without workes: Ergo, by faith onely.

Ans. 1. Iustificacion freely by grace, excludeth not all workes or merits, but those workes onely, which doe properly merit, ex congruo, of congruencie and worthines, not those which doe merit de congruo, of congruencie: there are other dispositions then beside faith which goe before iustificacion, which doe not merit of congruencie, that is, for their worthines absolutely, yet of congruencie in some sort they doe merit: And yet for all this kinde of meriting, our iustificacion shall be free by grace, Bellar. cap. 2.

Contra. 1. Before we haue faith, there is no place at all for merits: for without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. 6. Where God is not pleased, there is no meriting: Ergo, without faith no man can merit. Those dispositions then, which goe before faith and iustificacion, cannot merit any thing at all, and therefore not so much, as, de congruo, of congruencie. 2. The least degree of meriting in the world, taketh away the freenes of the gift: if iustificacion come freely by grace, it cannot be any way merited: for to him that worketh (saith the Apostle) the wages is not counted by fauour; but by debt, Rom. 4. 4. And that wee might knowe, that our iustificacion is altogether of Gods meere mercie, the Apostle vseth two words expressing the samething: he saith, we are iustificd by grace, yea and that freely: gratis per gratiam, freely by grace.

Ans. 2. Iustificacion freely by grace excludeth not all workes and merits, but those onely, which are of our selues, those merits which wee worke by grace, and are of God, may stand very well with grace: for as iustificacion by grace excludeth not faith, because faith also is of grace, so it excludeth not other workes, because they also are of grace, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. 1. Not onely the workes, which men are able to doe by their owne strength, are excluded from iustificacion, but euen the workes of grace: Not by the workes of righteousness, but according to his mercie he saved vs, Tit. 3. 8. Mercie then shutteth out all workes, euen holie and righteous workes: We are saved by grace, &c. not of workes, yea good workes which God hath prepared for vs to walke in, Ephes. 2. 8. 10. Grace therefore admitteth not so much as good workes, in the matter of iustificacion: See more of this before, responsal argum. 1. 2. Though faith be wrought in vs by grace, yet it standeth together with grace, in the benefit of iustificacion, the one as the efficient, the other as the instrument thereof: faith merited not or deserueth any thing towards iustificacion, but onely applyeth Christ crucified: which office of applying is proper onely to faith; it is not common either vnto workes, or any other gift beside: therefore they are excluded. And againe, the Scripture ioyneth grace and faith together: By grace are ye saved by faith, Ephes. 2. 8, but no where doe wee finde grace and workes coupled together, in our iustificacion. And this may be a sufficient cause why workes are excluded, and not faith.

Ans. 3. The Rhemists graunt, that the beginning of our iustificacion, which they call the first iustificacion, is meere of Gods grace, neither can we haue any acceptable workes, before we are iustificd: but in the second iustificacion, which is the encrease of the former iusticie, a man may merite by good workes: Animar. Rom. 2. 3. Saint Paul in this place speaketh of the first iustificacion, not of the second.

Contra. This is but a late and new deuise, of the first and second iustificacion, as afterward we will shew in the proper place. The Scripture teacheth vs, that not only the beginning of our righteousness, but the finishing, and perfecting of it, is onely by grace in Christ: Ephes. 2. 5. 6. When we were dead in our sinnes, he hath quickned vs together in Christ, by whose grace ye are saved, and hath raised vs up, and made vs sit together in beautie places. We see that this saluation by grace, bringeth vs vp to heauen: Ergo, both the first and second iustificacion are of grace, for they can bring vs no further than to heauen.

Argum. 4. The Scripture testifieth, that all, which beleue, are iustificd and saved; which should not be infallibly true, if faith onely did not iustifie: as Ioh. 3. 16. That whosoever beleueth in him should not perish: Act. 16. 31. Through his name, all that beleue in him shall receiue remission of sinnes: Act. 13. 39. By him every one, that beleueth, is iustificd.

Ans. 1. The meaning of these places may be this: Every one that beleueth shall be saved; that is, none without faith can be saved: and none is iustificd, except he beleue, Bellar. c. 23.

Contra. 1. You are a goodly interpreter, to expound an affirmative by a negative: as to say, every one that beleueth shall be saved: that is, he that beleueth not, shall not be saved. This is rather a consequence, than the sense of the former: as Mark. 16. 16. Christ placeth them together, having first said, he that beleueth shall be saved he addeth, he that beleueth not shall be damned. This is not the exposition of the former, but a conclusion inferred vpon it. 2. Where Christ sayth, Iohn 5. He

that beleueſt, &c. hath paſſed from death to life: will you expound it thus, be that beleueſt not, hath not paſſed, &c. thus in your ſenſe, hath not paſſed, and hath paſſed, ſhall one expound the other: Such kind of interpreting is moſt groſſe.

Anſw. 2. By all, which beleue, are vnderſtood all ſortes of people, whether Iewes or Gentiles, that they are ſaued by faith, Ballarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. If this ſenſe be admitted, all that beleue, that is, all ſorts of men that beleue ſhall be ſaued: the ſame concluſion ſtill remaineth, that faith to all ſorts of men both Iewes and Gentiles is ſufficient to ſaluation. 2. How all is to be expounded, our Saviour ſheweth, Mark. 16. 15, 16. Preach the Goſpell to every creature, he that ſhall beleue and be baptized, ſhall be ſaved: but the Goſpell is not preached onely in generall to all ſorts, nor yet Baptiſme miniſtered, but in particular alſo: Ergo, euery particular man that beleueſt is ſaued. 3. And as hee that beleueſt not is damned; ſo hee that beleueſt is ſaued; but euery man in particular not beleueing is damned. Ergo.

Anſw. 3. Theſe Scriptures do proue that faith doth iuſtifie, if other things be not wanting, it ſufficeth not alone, but doth iuſtifie for the part thereof; as likewise hope, charitie, for their part. Ballarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. The want or abſence of faith onely condemneth, he that beleueſt not is damned, Mark. 16. 16. Ergo, the preſence of faith onely ſaueth: He that beleueſt and is baptized ſhall be ſaved. 2. Baptiſme is the ſeale of the righteousneſſe of faith, as Saint Paul ſayth of circumciſion, Rom. 4. 11. Ergo, faith onely ſealed in Baptiſme ſufficeth. 3. Whereas it is ſaid, through his name and by him euery one that beleueſt, ſhall be ſaved, Act. 10. 43. & 13. 39. we reaſon thus, Chriſt himſelfe onely iuſtifieth vs; but faith onely, neyther hope nor charitie, applieth Chriſt: Ergo, faith in Chriſt onely ſufficeth.

Auguſtine ſaith, Intelligenda eſt gratia Dei per Ieſum Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum, qua ſola liberamus à malo: We muſt vnderſtand the grace of God by Ieſus Chriſt, by which wee are onely deliuered from euill: De corruptis & grat. cap. 2. If all be of grace, then nothing is of workes. That alſo is knowne ſaying of Auguſtine: Opera non præcedunt iuſtificandum, ſed ſequuntur iuſtificatum: Works goe not before vnto iuſtification, but follow in him that is already iuſtified. If a man therefore be iuſtified, before workes come, then workes helpe not at all toward his iuſtification. Again he ſaith, Quantalibet fuiſſe virtutis antiquas iuſtus prædixit, non eas ſaluus fecit, niſi fides Mediatoris: How vertuous ſoeuer you report the ancient righteous perſons to haue been, they were not ſaued by the faith of the Mediator: Lib. 1. con. 2. epiſt. Pelag. cap. 21. Likewise, Ex epiſtol. Auguſtini & Episcoporum ad Innocentium: Fide euacuata, qua hominis iuſtitia remaneat? Chriſtus manens Deus, homo factus, reſcit ipſe, quod fecit: Faith being euacuated, what righteousneſſe remaineth in man Chriſt remaining ſtill God, being made man, did make againe, that is, reſtore what he had made. If no righteousneſſe remaine where there is no faith, then all mans righteousneſſe before God, is by faith in Chriſt.

The fathers are plentifull witneſſes for iuſtification onely by faith.

1. Origen in c. 3. epiſt. ad Roman. Dicit Apoſtolus ſufficere ſolius fidei iuſtificationem: The Apoſtle ſaith, that the iuſtification onely of faith ſufficeth.

2. Hilar. can. 8. in Matth. Fides ſola iuſtificat: Faith onely doth iuſtifie.

3. Baſil. homil. de humilitate. Nouit ſe ſola fide in Chriſtum iuſtificatum: He doth know himſelfe onely iuſtified by faith.

4. Ambroſ. in c. 3. ad Roman. Sola fide iuſtificati ſunt dona Dei: They are iuſtified by faith alone by the gift of God: in cap. 9. Sola fides poſita eſt ad ſalutem: Onely faith is appointed to ſaluation.

5. Chryſoſt. homil. de fide. Si credis fidei, cur alia inferi, quaſi fides iuſtificare non ſufficiat ſed ſi you beleue faith, why do you bring in other things, as though faith onely ſufficed not to iuſtifie.

6. Cyrl. lib. 10. in Ioan. c. 18. Hominem per ſolam fidem inherere Chriſto: That a man by faith onely doth cleane to Chriſt.

7. Bernard. ſerm. 22. in Cantic. Solem iuſtificatus per fidem pacem habebit apud te: Being iuſtified onely by faith he ſhall haue peace with thee.

Anſw. Bellarmine to all theſe places answereth, that the fathers, in ſaying, Faith onely iuſtifieth, exclude not all other things beſide; but eyther externall workes onely, as Origen 1. Chryſoſt. 5. or the workes of the law without faith, as Hilar. 2. Baſil. 3. or the ceremonies of the law, as Ambroſ. loc. 4. For otherwiſe Chryſoſtome ſaith, Non ſolum fide opus eſt, ſed charitate: We haue not need onely of faith but of charitie, hom. 1. in 1. Timoth. Bellarm. c. 25.

Contra. Firſt, that charitie is neceſſarie, and other graces of the ſpirite beſide, we graunt, but yet faith onely hath this propertie to iuſtifie: for S. Paul hauing taught, that we are iuſtified by grace, non by the workes of righteousneſſe, Tit. 3. 5. 7. yet exhorteth, that they which haue beleued in God, ſhould be careful to ſhew forth good workes; theſe things are good and profitable to men: though he aſcribe iuſtification onely to faith, yet he vrgeth workes as neceſſary and profitable.

Secondly,

Secondly, that the fathers excluded all other things whatsoever, from the worke of iustification, imputing it onely to faith, it is evident.

1. Chrysostome said before, Cur alia inferat? Why do yee bring in any other thing to iustifie beside faith?

2. Augustine before alleaged, Fides euacuata, qua hominis iustitia remanet? Faith being euacuate, what other iustice of man remaineth?

3. Cyprian, Fidem tantum prodesse, & tantum nos posse, quantum credimus: That faith onely profiteth, (to saluation) and that we onely can do so much, as we beleuee, lib. 3. ad Quirin. c. 42.

4. But S. Ambrose of all other is most plentiful: First, in Luc. 13. Fides regnum celorum est: he that hath faith, hath the kingdome. Secondly, in 3. ad Roman. Beati dicuntur, de quibus hoc sanxit Deus, ut sine labore & aliqua obseruatione sola fide iustificentur apud Deum: He calleth them blessed, of whom God hath decreed, that without any labour or obseruation, they should be iustified onely by faith. And againe, manifeste beati sunt, quibus sine labore, vel opere aliqua remittuntur iniquitates, nulla ab his requisita poenitentia opera, nisi tantum ut credant: They are manifestly blessed, whose sinnes are remitted without their labour, no worke of repentance being required, but onely that they should beleuee, &c. Here Ambrose excludeth euen the godly and religious workes of repentance from iustification.

Thirdly, in 9. ad Roman. Conuenit, ut in solo nomine Domini conditoris consequatur salutem creatura, hoc in per fidem: It is conuenient, that the creature only should obtaine saluation in the name of the Creator, that is, by faith, &c. I reason from hence thus; as the name onely of the Creator iustifieth; so faith onely in his name: but his Name alone, without any other thing whatsoever iustifieth: Ergo, Faith onely in his name, all other things excluded. Fourthly, ibid. Nullum opus dicitur, sed sola fides dandam in causa Christi: He saith no worke of the law, but onely faith to be given in the cause of Christ, &c. If faith onely is to be exhibited in the cause of Christ, what else is required, I see not.

Fifthly, in 2. Cor. 3. Lex spiritus datur libertatem, sola fides poscent: The law of the spirit doth giue libertie, requiring faith alone, &c. If the spirit require onely faith, who is it that shall require any thing els? Sixthly, in Ephes. 6. Armis Dei fides stabilis, per quam sola semper victus habemus: The armour of God is a stable faith, by the which onely Sathan alwayes hath beene overcome, &c. As by faith alone we escape the condemnation of Sathan, so by faith alone wee obtayne iustification by Christ.

Seventhly, in 2. Timoth. 2. Fundamentum Dei fides, qua continet, quae promissa Deus: The foundation of God is faith, which containeth all that God hath promised, &c. one foundation may suffice for one house; if faith be this foundation, who dare take vpon him to lay another? Eighthly, in 3. ad Galath. Sciunt Abraham sine operibus legis per solam fidem iustificatum: They know that Abraham without the workes of the law was iustified only by faith, &c. and by workes of the law are vnderstood all good workes and graces, and not the law of Moses onely; as Thome expoundeth, vpon these wordes; No fides est iustificata per the workes of the law; Quod ne de legi Moysi tantum dictum putes, &c. Which lest you should thinke is spoken only of the law of Moses, and not of all Gods commandements, the same Apostle writeth, saying, I consent to the law of God in the inward man, &c. ad Iosephum. Thus then haue we the most cleare testimonies of the fathers, for iustification by faith alone, deliuered from this popish writers corrupt glosses.

Thirdly, wee want not testimonie here from themselves, decret. part. 3. dist. 4. c. 99. Gratia Dei non requirit gemitum, non planctum, nec opus aliquod, sed solam fidem, & omnia gratis condonantur: The grace of God doth not require mourning, or sighing, or any worke, but faith alone, and it forgiveth all freely.

Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 43. c. 3. Innocent. Qui Christum habet per fidem, etiam si Baptismum non habet, habet utiq; fundamentum, praeter quod aliud poni non potest, quod est Christus Iesus: He that hath Christ by faith, though he haue not Baptisme, hath the foundation, beside which none other can be laid, that is Christ Iesus, &c. If Christ onely be the foundation, and faith holdeth this foundation, then faith sufficeth, (not onely without Baptisme, but all other things beside excluded) to iustification.

Peter Lombard lib. 2. dist. 26. d. Hic aperti ostenditur, quod fides est causa iustificationis: Here it is evidently shewed, that faith is the cause of iustification: lib. 3. dist. 19. a. Per fidem mortis Christi, a peccatis mundamur: We are washed from our sinnes by faith in the death of Christ, dist. 25. a. ex Augustino. Nemo liberatur a damnatione qua per Adam facta est, nisi per fidem Iesu Christi: No man is deliuered from damnation wrought by Adam, but by faith of Iesus Christ, &c. If not otherwise then by faith; then faith alone doth it.

Lastly, for this holy trueth, that we are iustified by faith onely in Christ, haue many holy Martyrs suffered persecution and death: Patrick Hamelton condemned, for affirming that a man is onely iustified by faith in Christ: Eox. pag. 974. col. 2. artic. 2. Iohn Tewksbury, for the same article with others, put to death, pag. 1026. col. 1. articulus. Also Iohn Lambert holy Martyr, pag. 1117. articulus 31. Likewise B. Farrar suffered holy Martyrdom, for holding, that we are iustified before

God by faith onely, and that hope and charitie are not neceſſarily required to iuſtification. pag. 1554. col. 2. articul. 5. with many holy Martyrs, who confirmed: and ſealed this trueth with their blood: Which evidence our aduerſaries ſhall neuer be able to ſhew for the contrary doctrine.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS ARTICLE; WHETHER faith be the beginning onely of iuſtification.

The Popiſts.

55. Error.

WE are ſayd to be iuſtified by faith, becauſe faith is the beginning onely, the foundation and roote of iuſtification: Council. Trident. ſeſſ. 6. cap. 8. The ſame alſo is the opinion of Belarmine: Eſdem eſſe initium iuſtificationis: That faith is the beginning of our iuſtification: Lib. 1. de iuſtification. cap. 13.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, He that commeth to God, muſt beleene that God is, &c. Hebr. 11. 6. Ergo, faith is but a beginning and preparation to iuſtification: for he muſt haue it, that is, in comming to God: Belarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, faith is the beginning of iuſtification: Ergo, it is onely the beginning: he that commeth to God muſt haue faith, and he that is come already, muſt haue faith alſo. In a comming and beginner, there is required a comming and beginning faith: and his faith muſt grow vp, and encrease with him: Lord I beleene, ſaith the carefull parent in the Goſpell, here is the beginning of his faith; helpe my unbeliefe, here is the encrease: Mark. 9. 24. Secondly, neither is it neceſſarie to vnderſtand, this comming vnto God onely for the beginning of our calling, but for the whole vocation of a Chriſtian: as is euident by theſe places: Come vnto me al ye that are weary, and I will reſtreyne you, Matth. 11. 28. He that commeth vnto me ſhall not hunger, Iohn 6. 35. He that commeth to me, I caſt not away, verſ. 37. He that is taught of God, and hath learned of the father, commeth to me, verſ. 45. But theſe are not fruites onely of the beginning of our calling, namely, to be reſtreynd, not to hunger, not to be caſt off, to be taught of God: but they proceede from the very perfection of our vocation and iuſtification: Ergo.

Argum. 2. To as many as receiued him, he gaue them power to be ſonnes of God, euen to them that beleue in his name: Iohn 1. 12. Ergo, they that beleue in Chriſt, are not yet the ſonnes of God, but haue a power and poſſibilitie onely to be: faith then is a preparation to iuſtification, rather then the thing it ſelfe: Belarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, they that beleue in Chriſt are already the ſonnes of God, as it followeth in the next verſe, which are borne of God: and, Whoſoever beleueth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God: 1. Iohn 5. 1. He ſaith not, ſhall be borne, or may be borne, but is borne: but he that is borne of God, is already the ſonne of God. Secondly, He that beleueth hath euerlaſting life, and hath paſſed from death to life, Iohn 5. 24. But none are heires of life, but children: Rom. 8. 7. If ye be children, then heires alſo, &c. Ergo, he that beleueth, is really and actually already the child of God. Thirdly, As many as are led by the ſpirit of God, are the ſonnes of God, Rom. 8. 14. But they which beleue are led by the ſpirit of God, for the father draweth them, Iohn 6. 44. and they are borne not of blood, nor of the will of fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God, Iohn 1. 13. And he that is not borne of the fleſh is borne of the ſpirit, Iohn 3. 6. Wherefore he that beleueth, is the childe of God, he hath not onely poſſibilitie to be. Fourthly, this place then cannot carrie any ſuch ſenſe, as the Jeſuite inferreth vpon it, for then the Scripture ſhould be contrarie to it ſelfe; that God giueth a facultie and abilitie onely to them that beleue, to be the ſonnes of God: But this place declareth rather, from whence faith receiueſh this high dignitie, power and vertue, to make vs the ſonnes of God: that it commeth not of our ſelues, nor of the worthines of faith, but of the grace and free gift of God: as Saint Paul elſe where ſheweth, We are ſaued by grace through faith, not of our ſelues, &c. Ephes. 2. 8.

The Proteſtants.

FAith is not onely the beginning and foundation of our iuſtification, but both the encrease, and perfection, and full accompliſhment thereof.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, The Goſpell is the power of God to ſaluation, &c. for by it, the righteousnes of God is reuealed from faith to faith, Rom. 1. 17. Faith then leadeth vs to faith: It is not then onely the beginning, but the encrease of righteousnes. The Scripture alſo ſaith, The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Rom. 1. 17. But we liue not by iuſtification begun onely, but perfected and finiſhed: Ergo, our full iuſtification is by faith.

Anſw. We liue by faith, that is, faith perfected, and formed by charitie: And we are led from faith to faith, that is, from an imperfect to a perfect faith, which is perfected by charitie: Belarm. lib. 1. de iuſtification. cap. 20.

Contra. That there are degrees of faith we graunt: there is a beginning and encrease of faith: I beleene, helpe my unbeliefe, Mark. 9. 24. There is a great faith, Matth. 15. 28. There is a little or ſmall small faith, as a graine of Mustard seed, Math. 17. 20. But that faith is formed or perfected by charitie, we utterly deny it, as an untrue and contrarie to Scripture; as shall be shewed more at large in the proper place: Faith indeed worketh by charitie, Galath. 5. 6. but the substance of faith is one thing, the working another: Love concurres with faith in working, it is no part of the essence, or being of faith: Love is an effect of faith: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy strength, with all thy mind, and with all thy power, this is the first commandment, which is the chiefest. The second, thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. These two commandments, if they be kept, all the law and the prophets hang together. 1. John 2. 3. 4. The dwelling of Christ by faith in us, maketh us to be grounded in love: If love then be an effect, and follow faith, it is rather perfected by faith, then a perfecter of faith.

Argument. Abraham beleueed God, and he was counted as him for righteousnesse. Rom. 4. 3. But Abraham at this time was no novice, or young beginner in faith, but a perfect righteous man, hege, of faith is not onely the beginning, but perfectiō of our righteousnesse.

Ans. We say not, that faith is such a beginning of iustification, as it is worth away with perfection to onemeth: but it is such a beginning and foundation, as the ground worke of the house which though it be the beginning of the building, yet it is finished, when the building is perfected and finished. Therefore Abraham's iustice was both begun, perfected and perfected by faith; but not onely by faith: this we say, that faith is not able alone perfectly to iustifie the beleuer: Belarmin. lib. 2. de iust. cap. 1. §. 1.

Contra. 1. We take this kindly at the Iesuites hands, that he will graunt vs thus much, that faith is the foundation of iustification: the foundation is the principall part of the house; first so by his confession, faith is the principall in our iustification; Rom. 10. 10. they that say in these very words, That work is more principall then faith in the matter of iustification: 1. Cor. 13. 2. 7. It were good for them first to be agreed; before they deale against vs, & then they haue worke enough among themselves. 2. Belarmin. is ascribing to faith the beginning, increase, and perfection of righteousness, though not to faith alone, heerin dissenteth from his ghostly fathers of the Tridentine Chapter, which, as he saith, Nihil amplius fidei dederis, quam ut esset initium iustificationis: Did giue no more vnto faith, then to be the beginning, onely of iustification: Belarmin. cap. 13. initio cap. 3. That faith doth perfectly iustifie, we haue proued at large before, and it may appeare further thus: Hee that is at peace with God; is fully and perfectly iustified; his conscience cleared, and his sinnes remitted; but by faith we haue peace of conscience: Being iustified by faith, we haue peace toward God, Rom. 5. 1. Ergo, by faith we are fully and perfectly iustified.

Augustine vpon these words: Ioh. 6. 29. This is the worke of God, that ye beleue, &c. writeth thus: Si iustitia est opus Dei quomodo erit opus Dei, ut credamus in eum; nisi ipsa sit iustitia, ut credamus in eum? If iustice or righteousness be the worke of God, how is it the worke of God to, beleue in him, vnlesse it bee righteousness it selfe to beleue in him? See then, it is not initium iustificationis, sed ipsa iustitia, not the beginning of iustice to beleue; but iustice and righteousness it selfe.

Council. Basiliens. ex oration. presidentis ad Bobemos, in appendice. Habitar, dicit Apostolus, Christus in per fidem in cordibus nostris, nec solum habitabit, quinimo per fidem in filium adaptum assumet: omnes enim inquit, Apostolus, filij Dei estis per fidem: The Apostle saith, that Christ dwelleth in our hearts by faith, Eph. 3. neither that he dwelleth only, but by faith adopteth vs to be his children: Ye are all the sonnes of God by faith, saith the Apostle, Galath. 3. 26. If faith maketh vs the sonnes of God, then doth it wholly iustifie vs: for before we are iustified we are not the sonnes of God.

THE SECOND GENERALL PART, OF IUSTIFICATION

it selfe.

The particular questions are these: First, whether inherent iustice be the formall cause of iustification. Secondly, of the certaintie of iustification by faith. Thirdly, whether faith, or the grace of iustification may be lost.

THE FIRST QUESTION, WHETHER INHERENT

iustice be the formall cause of iustification.

The Papists.

They deny instantly, that men are iustified by the onely imputation of the righteousness of Christ, or by the remission of sinnes: Trident. Concil. sess. 6. can. 11. or that we are formally made iust by the righteousness of Christ: can. 10. but hold them accursed that so affirme and teach. This then is their sentence, that Vnica formalis causa, est iustitia Dei, qua nos iustos facit, quam quisque in se recipit: The onely formall cause of our iustification, is the iustice of God, whereby we are not reputed iust, but are made iust indeede. This is that iustice, which euery man hath within himselfe,

and

56. Error.

all sinners

and is inherent in him: Self. 6. cap. 7. Sic Rbmist. anat. Rom. 2. sect. 4. Bellarmine also consenteth: Lib. 2. de iustificatione. cap. 31. First let vs see their arguments for inherent iustice: secondly, against the imputative iustice of Christ.

Argum. 1. As by our mans disobedience many were made sinners: so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous. Rom. 5. 19. Ad Adams inobedientia vire non imputatur vobis peccatum suppressu: But Adams disobedience did truly print sinne in our nature, not imputatively onely. Ergo, we are truly made righteous by Christ, not by imputation onely: Bellarmino cap. 13. argum. 1. This argument Bellarmino taketh to be so firme, that he saith: Videtur nullam responsioneui admittere: It cannot be answered. And therefore he doth intekate the same argument often, even thrice together in this one question: Once, cap. 3. argum. 10. Again, cap. 7. argum. 2. And againe, argum. 6. Where he reasoneth thus: Christ restoreth that to vs, which we lost in Adam, but we lost true inherent iustice in Adam: Ergo, we recouer true inherent iustice by Christ.

Ans. 1. This argument concluded nothing, vntlesse he will haue the Apostles comparison betwene the disobedience of Adam, and the obedience of Christ, our fall by the one, and our restitution by the other, to agree in all things; but that cannot be, for all men in the world are borne in Adams sinne, yee all men are not made righteous by Christ. Again, Adams disobedience brought vs from paradise, Christs obedience shall not bring vs to paradise, but to heauen: Ergo, this comparison holdeth not in euery respect.

2. The Apostle himselfe, in this similitude, sheweth some difference and dissimilitude: The gift is not so, as the offence, the fault hauius from offence to condemnation, the gift is of many offences to iustification, vers. 16. And againe, The gift is but so as the offence, vers. 15. For, if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God &c. That is, Christ is much more able to saue many by his righteousness, then Adam was to condemne many by his disobedience. We see then that this comparison, As by one mans disobedience, &c: so by the obedience of one, &c, is not to be vrged in euery part, but where in onely the comparison standeth. And if it hold not in these poynts, which the Apostle himselfe seceded downe, why should it hold in this, which the Iesuit vrgeth, seeing it is not that poynt, wherein the Apostle compareth them?

3. The Apostle then compareth them together, in respect of the worke or the thing done, many are made sinners by one, and many are made righteous by one, but not in respect of the manner: that righteousness should bee conueyed from Christ after the same manner, as sinne was propagated from Adam: for the Apostle saith, that in Adam all sinned, that is, verely and indeed in us they are sinners: But speaking of the righteousness of Christ, he saith, It is a gift, and of the abundance of grace, vers. 17. And how this gift is conueyed, he sheweth, where he saith, The righteousness of God by the faith of Iesus Christ, vnto all, and vpon all that beleue, Rom. 3. 22. This gift of righteousness is by faith in Christ.

4. If yet notwithstanding the Iesuite will stand still strictly vpon the equalitie and likenes of this comparison in all poynts: let him remember, that he defineth originall sinne to be nothing els, but privatio & carens iustitia originalis, to be a priuation or wanting of originall iustice: De remissione. lib. 5. cap. 19. Then by the same reason, it may be inferred by this comparison, that as Adams sinne brought nothing but a priuation of iustice: so Christs righteousness should bring nothing to vs, but a priuation of originall sinne and vnrighteousnes. But Christ doth not onely free vs from sinne, but also maketh vs righteous: as Augustine saith, Non solum peccata per Christum interfecta sunt, sed iustitia tributa: Our sinnes are not onely slaine by Christ, but righteousness also is giuen.

5. Yet somewhat better to content the Iesuit, wee graunt also a similitude euen in this respect betwene Christ and Adam, in the manner of transferring sinne on the one side, and righteousness on the other: for as there are two parts of originall sinne, the guilt of Adams sinne propagated to his posteritie, and the depriuation of our nature: so there is a two-fold iustice: there is a iustice imputed vnto vs by faith, which is the iustice of Christ; there is a iustice inherent and abiding in vs, which is our owne iustice: And as Adams sinne entring into his posteritie made them subiect to death and condemnation, Rom. 5. 12. and wholly corrupted and depraued their nature: so it is the righteousness onely of Christ which freeth vs from condemnation, which worketh in vs an imperfect inherent righteousness, whereby we leade an holy life, but are not thereby iustified before God: And as Adams sinne is propagated by the naturall and carnall generation, so Christs iustice is spirituall deriued vnto vs by the spirituall birth which is by faith.

6. Wherein this comparison holdeth betwene Adam and Christ, in what respect Adam is said to be a forme of him, that was to come, that is, of Christ; Augustine very well sheweth in these words: Adam forma est futuri, i. Christi, quoniam sicut ille ex semetipso nascentibus licet non manducauerint de ligno, factus est causa mortis, quae per cibum indulta est: ita Christus, qui ex ipso sunt, cum vbi nihil iniuste egerunt, factus est promisor iustitiae quam per crucem nobis omnibus condonauit: Adam is the figure of him that was to come, namely Christ, because, as he became the cause of death, which came in by

by the forbidden meat, to those which were borne of him; although they did not eate of the tree: so Christ to those which are of him, although they had done no righteousness, yet provided for them righteousness, which he purchased by his crosse, and gaue vnto them. Adam then may be a figure of Christ; and the comparison may hold without inherent iustice: for the iustice giuen to vs, is the iustice of Christs crosse, and we are made iust, without doing iustly, that is without our owne iustice: as Augustine here saith.

Now lastly, whereas Bellarmin would haue Christ to restore whatsoever is lost in Adam: by the same reason, by Christ men should be exempted in this life from sinne and death: for Adam before his fall, was subiect to neither. Our answer then is this: that indeed we find more in Christ, then we lost in Adam: he doth restore vs to a farre more excellent estate, then man was created in: but this our happines is but begun in this life, the perfection and accomplishment of it is reserved for the life to come. And thus, I trust, this vnanswerable argument is answered: our stout champion then was somewhat too forward in triumphing before the victorie.

Argum. 2. First, Hebr. 11. 4. Abel by faith obtained to be righteous; and Noah likewise, vers. 7. these were iust by their inherente iustice, because they did righteous workes: as Abel did offer sacrifice; Noah prepared the Arke, &c. Bellar. arg. 5.

Secondly, Rom. 8. 29. He hath predestinate them to be made like the image of his Sonne: but Christ is iust, not by an imputatiue, but an inherent iustice: Ergo, so are his members.

Thirdly, Rom. 6. 5. We are graft into the similitude of Christs death and resurrection: but hee trulie died, and not putatiuely, or in opinion: Ergo, we also trulie not putatiuely must die vnto sinne, &c.

Fourthly, S. Paul speaketh of the spirit of adoption now present, and of the adoption by the redemption of our bodies, Rom. 8. 15. 23. but the adoption or redemption of our bodies, shall be true, and not putatiue, or in opinion: Ergo, so is our adoption now, Bellar. arg. 7. 8.

Ans. First, Abel and Noah we graunt had iust and righteous workes, which were fruites of their faith: but they were not by them iustified before God, but it was the righteousness of faith, whereby they were iust before God: as the Apostle saith, Noe was made heire of the righteousness which is by faith.

Secondly, the conformitie betweene Christ & vs standeth not in our iustification: for the iustice of Christ was in him originall, but in vs it is deriued from him: but it consisteth in our sanctification, as the Apostle sheweth: Arme your selues with the same minde, that he, which hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sinne. We must then be conformable vnto Christ in dying vnto sinne, and rising to newnes of life.

Thirdly, to dye vnto sinne is part of our sanctification, not of our iustification, which we grant must verily and trulie be in vs.

Fourthly: first, an adopted sonne, is a reputed sonne: and therefore seeing we are Gods sonnes by adoption in Christ, we are so by reputation or imputation. Secondly, it followeth not our adoption is true, therefore not by imputation: for, the righteousness of Christ is as verily ours thorough imputation by faith, as if it were actually in our selues. Thirdly, the argument followeth not from the state of the next life, to our condition now: for then we shall see Christ face to face, we shall neede no faith, nor imputatiue iustice, but shall verilie and perfectly be made iust by Christ: our robes shall be made white in the blood of the Lambe, Reuelat. 7. 14. but in this life we walke by faith, and not by sight, 2. Corinth. 5. 7. and therefore are iust onely by the iustice of faith.

Argum. 3 The Apostle saith, According to his mercy he saued vs by the washing of the new birth or regeneration, and the renewing of the holy Ghost, which he shed on vs abundantly, through Iesus Christ our Saviour, that we being iustified by his grace, &c. ad Tit 3. 7. To be iustified then, is nothing els but to be regenerate and renewed by the holy Ghost: but our regeneration is inherent in vs: Ergo, so is our iustification: Bellarmin. cap. 13. argum. 4.

Ans. The Apostle in this place vseth this word (to be iustified) in the largest sense, as comprehending both the iustice of Christ imputed vnto vs by Christ, as also that iustice & holines which is wrought in vs by his spirite: for seeing the scripture doth call men iust both these wayes; iust by the righteousness or iustice of faith, as Noe, Heb. 11. 7. iust also, though imperfectly, by the righteousness wrought in them, as Lot is called iust, 2. Pet. 2. 7. not vncluely both these kinds of iustice are comprehended vnder the word iustification. Againe, this word the Apostle in this sense vseth in other places, as Rom. 8. 30. Whom he iustificeth, he glorifieth; where iustification also comprehendeth sanctification, which goeth before glorification. Likewise, Rom. 6. 18. the Apostle calleth the whole worke of our redemption, including also our saluation, which must answere in that place to condemnation, the iustification of life: yet at other times speaking more distinctly, he maketh these three degrees, being freed from sinne, here is our redemption, To haue your fruit in holines, this is sanctification, and the end everlasting life, here is saluation, Rom. 6. 22. so in this place, the Apostle confoundeth these two words to be saued, and iustified: and so he doth, Ephel. 2. 8. At other times he distinguisheth betweene them: as Rom. 8. 9. Being iustified by his blood, we shall be saved through him: and in the next verse also he putteth difference betweene these two, to be reconciled, and saved: for salvation, to speake properly, is of the end, iustification is the meane that leadeth to the end. Lastly, the Apostle himselfe doth distinguish this generall kinde of iustification into parts: They which believe in God (saith he, vers. 8.) this is the iustification by faith; ought to be careful to shew forth good works: this is the iustice which is in vs.

2. The Apostle here saith, That the holy Ghost is shed on vs abundantly through Iesai Christ, Tit. 3. 6. But faith is the meane and way whereby it is applied: We receiue the promise of the spirit through faith, Galath. 3. 14. He nameth also here the washing of the new birth, which new birth is by believing in Christ, 1. Iohn 3. 1. Whosoever beleeueth, that Iesus is the Christ, is borne of God: so that the Apostle necessarily vnderstandeth in this place iustification by faith, though he also speake of regeneration and renouation: so farre is the Apostle from making them all one, though he name them together, because they must goe together, and are both necessarie towards the attaining of euermlasting life.

These, and the like arguments our aduersaries haue deuised for their inherent iustice: Now let vs see, what they can object against the imputation of the iustice of Christ.

Argum. 1. If the iustice of Christ be truly imputed vnto vs, so that thereby we are verily and truly counted iust, as if it were our owne proper righteousness; we should then be counted no lesse iust and righteous, then Christ himselfe, and so consequently be counted Redeemers and Saviours of the world, as well as he: Bellarmin. cap. 7. argum. 3.

Ansiv. First, it followeth not, Christs iustice is verily made ours, as if it were properly our own: Ergo, we are as iust as Christ: for Christs iustice was originally in him, it is ours but by imputation: his iustice was truly meritorious, and not of grace, our iustice by him is of grace: Neither is the whole iustice that was in Christ, imputed to vs, for he was not iust onely, as he was man, but iust also as God: Secondly, we must distinguish betwene iustice it selfe and the communication thereof, betweene the proprietie and possession of a thing, and the vse. A thing may be common in vse, yet proper in possession: so Christs iustice is communicated to vs, that is, the vertue, power, and efficacie thereof, yet Christs personall iustice still remaineth in himselfe. The two oliue branches did continually emptie themselves into the golden pipes: Zachar. 4. 12. The pipes or conduits had no oyle, but from the branches; yet the fountaine of oyle remained in the oliue tree still: It cannot be sayd now, that the pipes were as full of oyle as the branches. By these oliue branches, the Prophet vnderstandeth Christ, from whom we receiue all the oyle of grace which we haue, in as ample manner, as if this oyle sprang of our selues, yet farre inferiour for all this are the pipes to the oliue tree.

Argum. 2. If we by the righteousness of Christ imputed to vs, are truly counted iust before God, and are become the sonnes of God, by the same reason Christ by the imputation of our sinnes, may be truly counted a sinner, and so also the childe of the diuell, which were a most horrible blasphemie. But if Christ, notwithstanding the imputation of our sinnes, be righteous and iust still, we also, though the righteousness of Christ be imputed, should remaine vnrighteous, and vniust still, and therefore not thereby iustified: Bellarmin. ibid.

Ansiv. 1. That our sinnes were imputed to Christ, and that he tooke them vpon himselfe, and suffered for them, being now counted his by imputation, wee haue euident testimonies out of Scripture to proue it: Esa. 53. vers. 6. The Lord hath laid vpon him the iniquitie of vs all: He shall beare their iniquities, vers. 11. He was counted with the transgressors, and bare the sinne of many, vers. 12. This also was euidently prefigured by the scape goate, which was a type and figure of Christ: the sinnes of the people were put vpon the head of the goate, and the goate did beare their iniquities into the wilderness: And the goate by this imputation of the peoples sinne, was counted vncleane, the beast yet by nature being vncapable of sinne; inasmuch that hee, which carried the goate, was commaunded to wash his cloathes and flesh with water, as polluted with touching the goate, Leuit. 16. 22. 26. So S. Paul saith, that Christ was accursed, yea made a curse for vs, Galat. 3. vers. 13. And that he was made sinne for vs, which knew no sinne, 2. Cor. 5. 21. not onely a sacrifice for sinne, but euen so sin for vs, that is by imputation, as we are made his righteousness: for seeing this is the perpetual rule of Gods iustice, that the same soule that sinneth should dye, Ezech. 18. 20. how can it stand with Gods iustice, that Christ should suffer for our sins, if they were not in some sort now annexed vnto him? Seeing then the Scripture saith, that Christ bare our iniquitie, was accursed, made sinne for vs, counted among sinners and transgressors: why should wee doubt to speake, as the Scripture doth, that Christ was for vs counted a sinner and a transgressor, yet in himselfe remained holie, iust, and righteous still? So wee in Christ are verily reputed righteous, though by nature we are vniust and vnrighteous.

2. Now concerning these consequents, which Bellarmin inferreth hereupon: as first, Si Christus poteris dici vere peccator, tum etiam filius diaboli: If Christ may verily be counted or called a sinner, ner, then also the childe or sonne of the diuell, which is an horrible thing to be thought. Wee answer: not every sinner is the childe of the diuell: He that committeth sin, is of the diuell, 1. Ioh. 3. 8. But Christ neuer committed sinne: In him is no sinne, ibid. vers. 5. sinne is laid vpon him only by imputation: Ergo. Againe, euen amongst men, every one that hath sinne, is not of the diuell: for there is no man liuing but hath sinne: If we say, we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, 1. Ioh. 1. 8. And yet it is true, which the same Apostle saith, Who neuer is borne of God, sinneth not, 1. Ioh. 3. 9. for there is great difference betwene these two, to commit sinne, and to haue sinne, as Augustine distinguisheth: Aliud est non peccare, aliud non habere peccatum, nam in quo peccatum non regnat, non peccat. &c. It is one thing not to sinne, another, not to haue sinne: for he sinneth not, in whom sinne reigneth not, to obey the desires thereof: in 4. cap. ad Galat. And againe, Quamuis diabolus (saith he) sit princeps omnium peccatorum & author, non tamen filius diaboli facit quacunq; peccata, filius autem diaboli facit ut facit: Although the diuell be the prince and author of all sinnes, yet all sinnes make not the children of the diuell, infidelitie onely maketh a man the sonne of the diuell, Augustine cont. epist. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 2. He then that committeth sinne, that is, in whom sin reigneth, or in whom there is infidelitie, is the childe of the diuell; not he which hath sinne, but obeyeth it not, or is a beleuer: much lesse can it be inferred, that Christ is of the diuell, though he were for vs counted among sinners, because he neither hath, nor doth sinne, but it was only imputed vnto him; into whose heart neuer any sparke of infidelitie entred.

Secondly, the Iesuite inferreth, that if our sinnes were imputed to Christ, as his righteousness is to vs, then as Christ for all the imputation of our sins, remaineth iust, and holie; so wee, notwithstanding the imputation of his righteousness, should be vnholie and vnrighteous still.

Ans. 1. True it is, that as Christ in his owne nature remaineth righteous and iust, though our sinnes were imputed, the imputation of our sinnes doth not pollute the purenes of his nature: so, if we should set apart the righteousness of Christ, by the imputation whereof we are iustified; in vs by nature, there is nothing else, but sinne and corruption: as S. Paul saith, I know, that in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing, Rom. 7. 18. 2. There is nothing the like reason, that the imputation of our sinne should leaue any staine or blot in the holy nature of Christ, as, that the imputation of his righteousness should worke holines in vs: whereupon it is, that wee are holy and iust by his righteousness imputed, but he notwithstanding the imputation of our sinne, is neither vnjust nor vnholie: first, because it is impossible that Christ should be vnjust, his holy nature is not capable of sinne, but it is possible that man should become righteous: the humane nature is capable of righteousness, wherein it was once created, and shall be againe restored vnto it in Christ. Secondly, sin is not so forcible to defile and destroy nature, as the grace of God is to preserve and sanctifie: as S. Paul reasoneth: If through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, Rom. 5. 15. If grace euen in men, whose nature is subiect to sinne, and death, be more able to saue, than sinne is to destroy: much lesse can sinne preuaile more, or so much, being but imputed, in the nature of Christ to pollution, which cannot sinne, as grace and righteousness doth in vs to sanctification? And thus farre of their arguments.

The Protestants.

WE acknowledge an inherent iustice in all faithfull men, wrought in them by the spirit of God, being now iustified by faith in Christ: but it is imperfect, not able to iustifie them before God; it is no other then sanctification, which is a fruit of iustification: But that iustice, whereby we are iust before God, not falsely accounted, but made truly iust, is by the righteousness of Christ onely, which we apprehend by faith. And of this our iustification by Christ, there are two parts, the cleere remission of our sinnes and punishment due thereunto: for in Christ we are freed from the law of sinne, and death, Rom. 8. 2. The other part is the imputation of the righteousness of Christ: By the iustifying of one, the benefit abounded toward all men, to the iustification of life, Roman. 5. 18. And that this is our righteousness before God, and no other, it remaineth now to be proved by scripture.

Argum. 1. Abraham beleeued God, and it was counted to him for righteousness, Rom. 4. 2. And, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sinnes are covered, and to whom the Lord imputeth no sin, vers. 7. 8. Ergo; the righteousness of man consisteth not in any actuall inherent iustice in himselfe, but in that his sins are forgiven him, and the righteousness of Christ applied to him by faith.

Ans. 1. Wee graunt that Abraham was reputed righteous by his faith, yet it followeth not, that to haue faith reputed or counted for righteousness, is to haue the righteousness of Christ imputed by faith: for faith, which is imputed for righteousness, is not the righteousness of Christ, but our owne righteousness. And to be reputed for righteous here, signifieth not a bare opinion of righteousness, but such an opinion, as the truth of the matter answereth: for the Apostle vsing the same word, saith, that to him that worketh, the wages is counted, or reputed not by fauour, but by debt, vers. 4. But the wages is not giuen to him that worketh in opinion, or account onely, but verily, and in deede, Bellarmin. cap. 9.

CONTRA.

Contra. 1. Faith, saith the Iesuite, which is reputed for righteousness, is not the righteousness of Christ: and therefore it is all one to say, faith is reputed for righteousness, and righteousness is imputed.

Ans. 1. The Apostle here by faith vnderstandeth also the object apprehended by faith: as more plainly in these words, The righteousness of God by the faith of Iesu Christ, Rom. 3. 22. So that in faith here reputed for righteousness, we are not to respect the worthines of the act of beleeuing in it selfe, but in respect of the object: the faith (saith the Apostle) of Iesu Christ.

2. Again, the Iesuite elsewhere saith, that faith, in his meaning, vnderstanding still the dignitie of faith in it selfe, is but the beginning of righteousness: but the Apostle saith, that faith it selfe, not naming any thing else, is righteousness, that is more then the beginning.

3. And if faith as it is a work and act in vs doth iustifie; how can it be true, which the Apostle saith, To him that worketh not, faith is counted for righteousness, ver. 5. and God imputeth righteousness without works, ver. 6.

2. We say not, that to be reputed iust, is to be iust onely in opinion, but verily and indeede: for seeing the Apostle vseth the same word, speaking of the reputing of the reward of debt, as well as of fauour: we say that of grace and fauour a man is as verily reputed righteous, as if hee were righteous indeede by his owne deserts: for that which is reputed of fauour, is verily, and indeede, as that which is reputed of debt, though not after the same manner.

Argum. 2. Christ is our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, 1. Cor. 1. 30. Ergo, Christ onely is our righteousness, whereby we are iustified.

Ans. Christ is said to be our righteousness, because hee hath satisfied God for vs, and this satisfaction is imparted to vs, when we are iustified, in such sort, that it may be called our satisfaction and our righteousness: for although we are truly iust, by our inherent iustice, yet thereby wee can not satisfie God for our sinnes, and the punishment thereof: but it is an effect of Christs satisfaction, which is conferred, and applied to vs in our iustification: And so wee may safely say, that Christs righteousness, and his merits are imputed to vs, when they are so applied vnto vs, as if we our selues had satisfied: so that wee confesse also an inherent iustice, whereby wee are truly iust: Bellarm. cap. 10. resp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. 1. It is very absurd, as the Iesuite here setteth it downe, that wee should be iustified by our inherent iustice, and yet thereby are not able to satisfie for our sinnes: that onely hath power to iustifie vs, that is able to redeeme vs, and satisfie for vs: We are iustified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ, Rom. 5. 24. Our inherent iustice is not able to satisfie for vs, by the Iesuities confellation: Ergo, it is not able to iustifie vs. 2. We may thus reason also out of the Iesuities words: That cannot be a cause of our iustification, which is an effect thereof: but our inherent iustice is an effect of the satisfaction of Christ applied vnto vs, which is nothing else but our iustification: Ergo. 3. That righteousness, whereby being applied vnto vs, we are as iust, as if in our owne person wee had satisfied for our sinnes, is that righteousness, whereby we are iustified: but this doth the righteousness and merits of Christ applied and imputed to vs, as the Iesuite here acknowledged: Ergo. 4. Bellarmino speaketh contradictories, and ioyneth together impossibilities: he saith, that the iustice of Christ is imputed to vs in as effectuell manner, as if we had satisfied our selues; and yet hee saith besides, Iustitiam inbarentem veram esse & absolutam iustitiam: That iustice inherent, is a true and absolute iustice: How can this be an absolute iustice, and that together which is imputed? There cannot be a double absolute iustice: for that is absolute which is perfect, and entire of it selfe: but Christs iustice imputed is an absolute iustice, which hath satisfied for vs, as fully, as if we our selues had done, but the inherent iustice doth not satisfie for vs: all this is by the Iesuite confessed: Ergo, it is not an absolute iustice. 5. Doth not the Iesuite now, in ioyning the iustice of Christ, and our iustice together, make two formall causes of our iustification? which notwithstanding hee instantly denied before, affirming this to be the iudgement of the Tridentine chapter, that we are not iustified, not onely, but not at all by the iustice of Christ, cap. 2. But here he saith, that by Christs iustice applied, we doe satisfie the wrath of God: what now is this else but by the iustice of Christ truly to be iustified? For to be iustified, is nothing else, but to be reconciled to God, and saued from his wrath, Rom. 5. 9. 10. How is it now possible, that Bellarmino should agree with others, seeing he so shamefully disagreeeth from himselfe?

Argum. 3. Saint Paul saith, He hath made him to be sinne for vs, that knew no sinne, & that we should be made the righteousness of God in him, 2. Corin. 5. 21. Out of this place we reason thus: As Christ was made sinne for vs, so wee are righteous in him: But our sinnes were onely imputed to him, they were not actually in him: Ergo, so is his righteousness, whereby we are iustified, onely imputed to vs.

Ans. 1. Christ is said to be made sinne for vs, not that our sinnes are imputed to him, otherwise, than for that he satisfied for our sins, and was an offering for our sinne: so the iustice of Christ is imputed to vs, in respect of his satisfaction: by the which notwithstanding we cannot be counted iust: Bellarmino. cap. 10. resp. ad arg. 3.

Contra. 1. If sinne be here taken onely for the suffering for sinne; because Christ bare the punishment of our sinne; then where the Apostle saith, we are righteous in him, we must vnderstand, not righteousness it selfe, but onely the reward of righteousness: for these two members or parts doe answer one the other: as Christ was sinne for vs, so we are righteousness in him: but Christ onely bare the punishment for sinne: Ergo, we obtaine onely the reward of righteousness by him. 2. How could the punishment of sinne in the iustice of God be laid vpon Christ, if the sinnes were not in some sort annexed to the sufferer: seeing it is the perpetuall rule of Gods iustice, that the same soule that sinneth, should dye? Ezech. 18. 20. And how can wee obtaine the reward of righteousness, if first we be not made righteous? 3. The Scripture also evidently affirmeth, that Christ bare not onely the punishment of our sinnes, but our sinnes also: He hath borne our iniquities, Esa. 53. 4. He was counted among transgressors, and bare the sinne of many, verf. 12. What aileth then the Iesuite so boldly to denie, that our sinnes were imputed to Christ? 4. He graunteth, that Christs satisfaction is imputed to vs, yet we are not thereby iust: If God be satisfied, his wrath appeased, are we not fully redeemed? If while we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his sonne, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life, Rom. 5. 10. Reconciliation then and saluation, follow satisfaction by the death of Christ: Christ hath freed vs from the law of sinne, and death, Rom. 8. 2. there remaineth therefore no condemnation. If then Christ hauing satisfied for vs, we are made heires of life; how are we not by vertue of his satisfaction iust also? seeing first wee must be iust, before we can looke for the reward of iustice: Yea, Beilarmius himselfe saith, Remissio peccatorum non potest fieri, nisi iustitia infundatur: There can be no remission of sinnes; but iustice must be infused withall, as darknes cannot be chased away, but light must needes succede: cap. 9. alarg. 1. We will inferre hereupon: but by the satisfaction of Christ we haue remission of sins: Ergo, also thereby we obtaine iustice, and so consequently are iust.

Ausw. 2. Or thus we may vnderstand the Apostle: As Christ is made sinne for vs, that is, being the head, he counteth the sinnes of his members as his owne, so wee are the righteousness of God in him: that is, the diuine iustice which is in Christ our head, is communicated to his members, Beilarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. In the matter of iustification, we haue not any thing to doe with the diuine iustice of Christ, whereby hee is iust as hee is God; for that is not communicable to his members: but the Apostle meaneth, the righteousness of God, that is, of the grace of God through faith, Rom. 3. verf. 22. 24. but the diuine and essentiall righteousness of God, is neither apprehended, nor applied by faith.

2. If our sinnes agree vnto Christ, as he is our head; then they doe more then by imputation, yea properly and verily agree vnto him: because there is a reall coniunction and communication betweene the head and the bodie: he said to Saul, why persecutest thou me? not because our afflictions are imputed to Christ, but that the head and members make but one mysticall body: by denying imputation of sinne, they fall into a greater gulf, euen to appropriate sinne vnto Christ.

3. The Iesuite hath made a very good argument for vs: Christ is the head, wee are the members, both make but one bodie: one and the same bodie, hath one and the same forme; Ergo, Christ and his Church are both formally iust by the same righteousness, and that is the righteousness of Christ: The Apostle also saith, that the body of Christ, that is, his Church, is the fulnesse of him that filleth all in all things, Ephes. 1. 23. our fulnes then is the fulnes of Christ, our righteousness is our fulnesse: Ergo, and if Christ fill all in all, then Christ onely iustificieth: not not Christs iustice in part, and our owne iustice in part.

Ausw. 3. Christ was made sinne for vs, that is, he tooke vpon him the similitude of sinful flesh, and wee are righteousness, that is, do take the similitude of the diuine iustice: As Christ then verily not imputatiuely tooke our flesh, so we verily, not imputatiuely, are partakers of his iustice, Beilarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. This interpretation which the Iesuite here enforceth cannot hold: for where the Apostle saith, hee came in the similitude of sinful flesh, it followeth, and condemned sinne in the flesh, Rom. 8. 3. If he will make one of them agree with this place, he must make both: then by his exposition Christ was made sinne, that is, condemned, or destroyed sinne: Or where the Apostle saith, he was in like sort as we are, sin onely excepted, Heb. 4. 15. wee must say after his interpretation, Christ was made sinne; that is, tooke our nature without sinne: A proper exposition sure; by the contrary, he was made sinne, that is, he was not made sinne. 2. Againe, the Apostle saith, hee was made sinne, that knew no sinne: in both clausess, sinne is to be taken and vnderstood alike: if then to be made sinne, be to take flesh, then not to know sinne, is not to know flesh, which is to destroy Christs humanitie. 3. As Christ was made sinne, so we are made righteousness: if Christ be said here to take our humane nature, then wee also may be said to take the diuine nature. But I thinke they will not say, that the diuine nature is so appropriated to vs, as the humane nature nature is to Christ. Wherefore setting apart all such vaine glosses, and idle shifts, which we see do vanish as the mist, the sense of this place appeareth evidently and plainly to be this: that as our sins by imputation were annexed to Christ in this passion, so his righteousness is appropriate to vs by faith in our iustification.

Argum. 4. Act. 13. 38. Throug h this man is preached unto you forgiveness of sinnes, &c. and by him every one that beleueth is iustified: Ergo, our iustification in the remission of sinnes is by the preaching of Christ apprehended by faith, and so consequently not inherent in vs; Likewise Luc. 18. verse 13. The Publicane is said to be iustified, saying, God be mercifull to me a sinner: Our iustification then is in the forgiveness of sinne, grounded vpon Gods mercie, who in his mercie counteth vs no sinners, but as iust in Christ: Ergo, we are not iustified by any inherent iustice.

1. Ans. First, by preaching of remission of sinnes, is not onely vnderstood the condonation of the fault, but the succeeding also of inward iustice, whereof Christ is the efficient cause, but yet Christs iustice is not the formal cause thereof. Secondly, the Publicane prayeth not onely for forgiveness, but for perfect reconciliation, which requireth also an infusion of iustice, Belom, cap. 12.

2. Contra. First, 1. We graunt that remission of sinnes once obtained in Christ, wee are consequently reputed as iust in Christ, for the remission of sinnes, and imputation of Christs righteousness do alwaies concur in act: but inherent iustice cannot stand together with remission of sin; the one being of grace and mercie, the other of worke; but grace and workes cannot agree together, Rom. 11. 6. If of grace; it is no more of worke. 2. As Christ is the efficient cause by his spirit of our iustifying faith: so is his iustice the very formall cause of our iustification: for it is not our owne righteousness, but the righteousness of God by the faith of Iesum Christ unto all that beleue, Rom. 3. 22. whereby we are iustified.

Secondly, 1. The Publicane sueth for perfect reconciliation, which is by Gods mercie in the free forgiveness of our sinnes in Christ: as the Apostle sayth, Rom. 5. 1. Being iustified by faith, we are at peace with God, and so are perfectly reconciled. 2. But he standeth not vpon any inherent iustice of his owne; the Pharisee did so, and was refused; but onely appealeth to Gods mercie.

Argum. 5. Now in the last place wee will conclude, with that excellent saying of the Apostle: That I might be found in him, not hauing mine owne righteousness, which is of the law, but that, which is through the faith of Christ, grem the righteousness, which is of God through faith, Phil. 3. 9. S. Paul denieth his owne righteousness: but he that hath inherent righteousness, hath some righteousness of his owne. Again, he commendeth the righteousness of God through faith: that is, apprehended by faith, not consisting in the meritorious act or worthiness of faith: for if faith in itselfe should be this righteousness, how can it also be the righteousness of God? the righteousness of God is not faith, for Christ hath no such faith: it is the righteousness then of God apprehended by faith, which is our righteousness before God, not any inherent iustice in vs. Augustine saith well, Si dixerimus, quod nihil iustitie habemus, aduersum Dei dona mentimur: si enim iustitia nihil habemus, per fidem habemus: si autem fidem habemus, iam aliquid habemus iustitie: If we say, we haue no iustice at all, we do belie the good gifts of God; for if we haue no iustice, we haue no faith: but if wee haue faith, then haue we some iustice in vs. Here Augustine acknowledgeth no inherent iustice, but the iustice onely of faith. If it shall be answered that euen the iustice of faith is an inherent iustice, because it iustificeth by the worthiness and merit thereof: Augustine saith againe, writing vpon these words of our Sauiour, No man commeth vnto me, &c. Vt doceret nos, ipsum credere, diuise non meriti, To teach vs that to beleue, is of the gift of God, not of merit: de verbis Apost. serm. 2. To conclude, he saith yet more plainly: Totum reputa, quod iustum es pietati; quod autem peccatum est, tua iniquitati ascribe: Omne crimen, facinus, vel peccatum, nostrum est negligentia: Omnis virtus & sanctitas Dei est indulgentia: That thou art iust, repute it wholly to godliness; that thou art a sinner, ascribe it to thine owne iniquitie: euery sin and offence is of our owne negligence: all holiness and vertue in vs is of Gods mercie, in Mat. serm. 8. All our iustice then, whereby we are iust, dependeth of our godliness, which is our faith, beliefe, and confidence in God.

S. Ambrose also in 9. ad Romay. Conuenit vt in solo nomine Domini conditoris consequatur salutem creatura, hoc est per fidem: It is conuenient that in the onely name of the Lord Creator, the creature should obtaine saluation, that is, by faith, &c. If by faith onely in the name of the Creator we are iustified, there is no place for inherent iustice.

We haue here the testimonie of some of their owne: Albertus Pignus contr. 2. Colonienses, in antididagmas. do agree, that our inherent iustice is imperfect, and not the sufficient and formal cause of our iustification.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE CERTAIN- tie of iustification by faith.

The Papists.

THe Rhemists call it a faithlesse perswasion of saluation to be confident of Gods grace and sal-uation, and fides demoniorum, non Apostolorum, the faith of diuels, not of Apostles, annos. 8.
1. Cor. 9. sect. 9. So the Tridentine Councell, call certitudinem remissionis peccatorum vanam, & ab- sumi Pietatis remotam fiduciam: The certaintie of remission of sinnes, a vayne and faithlesse perswasion: And therefore euery man, de gratia timere & formidare potest; may stand in doubt and be afraid, whether hee be in the state of grace, sect. 6. c. 9. This is also affirmed by Bellarmin. that a man without speciall reuelation, cannot be assured by his faith, that his sinnes are forgiven him, lib. 3.

Argum. 1. Prou. 20. 9. Who can say, my heart is cleane, I am pure from foune, which is not so to be vnderstood, as though no man could haue a cleane heart: for our Sauour Christ saith, Blessed are the pure in heart, Matth. 5. But the wise man thus speaketh, because no man can know whether his heart be cleane: sic Bellarm. cap. 4.

Ans. 1. The words are thus to be read according to the Hebrue, Who can say I haue made my heart cleane: not after the vulgar Latine, Who can say my heart is cleane: So that the wise man here doth repress the insolencie of those, which thinke to be iustified by their owne strength. And thus answereth Catharinus a Papist. 2. We say, that the meaning of the wise man is this, that no man can be cleane from sinne in this life: In many things, we sinne all, Iam. 3. 2. which if the Iesuite will denie, as indeed he doth, he giueth the holy Apostle the lye: and reneweth the olde Pelagian heresie, Passe hominem sine peccato esse per Dei gratiam: That a man by the grace of God, may be without sinne, August. de natur. grat. 1. 11. 3. To be pure in heart, betokeneth not absolute pure-nes in the sight of God: for so neither the Angels nor the heauens are cleane, Iob. 15. 15. But to be pure in heart, is as much as to be vpright in heart, to be without deceit, as it is expounded, Psalm. 24. 4. Not to haue a double heart, Psalm. 12. 2. As our Sauour said of Nathaniel, this is a true Israelite, in whom is no guile, Ioh. 1. 47. This it is to be pure or vndefiled in heart. Augustine saith, Ingressi sine macula dicuntur, non qui iam perfecti sunt, sed qui ad perfectionem irreprehensibiliter currit: He is sayd to walke without spot, not which is already perfect, but who doth walke on forward towards perfection without reprehension, Augustine cont. Celest. This purenes of heart, a faithfull man may see and knowe in himselfe, as Dauid saith, Psalm. 73. 13. I haue cleansed my heart in vaine, and washed my hands in innocencie.

Argum. 2. Eccles. 9. 1. No man knoweth whether he be worthy loue or hatred: Ergo, a man cannot

Ans. The wise man meaneth not, that a man cannot any way at all know whether he be in fa-uour with God: but that it cannot be discerned, by the outward chances and accidents of this life:
as he sheweth in the next verse, that there is the same outward condition to the iust and wicked.
Nay it many times fareth better with the wicked, then with the righteous in this life: I saw, saith he, under the Sunne, that riches are not for men of vnderstanding, nor yet bread for the wise, nor fauour for

he compareth not the wicked and the righteous together, ibid.

Contra. In the next verse the wise man expoundeth himselfe, all things fall out alike to all, the same condition is to the iust and to the wicked, &c. as is the good, so is the sinner, be that sweareth, as he that swears an oth: vers. 2. It is euident therefore, that the Wiseman compareth here the righteous and wicked both together: and that he meaneth, that it cannot be discerned by the outward events of mans life, which of them is in fauour with God. And that this is his meaning, it may ap-peare by the like place, chap. 3. vers. 21. Who knoweth whether the spirit of man ascend upward, and the spirit of the beast descend downward? Not that we are altogether ignorant of the end of mans soule: but it cannot be discerned by the outward and corporall death, what difference is betweene the spirit of man, and of beasts: for as the one dyeth, so dyeth the other, vers. 19. So in this place, the Wiseman, saying, that no man knoweth hatred, or loue; doth not meane, that this is impossible to be knowne, but that it cannot by the externall things of this life be discerned: Sic Cal- uin. lib. 3. in iust. cap. 2. sect. 38.

Bellarmin answereth that Salomon in the third chapter speaketh in the person of the vnwise, and worldly sensuall man, who knoweth no difference betweene the spirits of men, and bruite beasts: Bellarmin. cap. 4.

Contra. So also doth the Preacher vtter many things in this chapter, in the person of the Epitaph: as that, verse 4. better is a liuing dogge, then a dead Lion: Goe eate thy bread, and drinke thy

thy wine: At all times let thy garments be white, and let no oyle be wanting upon thine head, verſe 7.8. Theſe are the very ſpeeches of carnall and ſenſuall men, that place their whole happines and felicitie in this life. Such alſo there were among the Corinthians, that ſayd, Let vs eate and drinke, for to morrow we ſhall dye: concerning whom the Apoſtle ſaith, Euill words corrupt good maners, 1. Corinth. 15. 33. for any thing then, that the Iſeuite hath yet ſayd, or is able to ſay, the meaning of the Preacher in this place is ſuch as we haue ſaid.

Argum. 3. S. Paul ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelfe, yet am I not thereby iuſtified, 1. Corinth. 4. 4. Though the Apoſtle had the teſtimonie of a good conſcience, yet he durſt not aſſure himſelfe, whether he were thereby iuſtified, Rhemist. in eum locum. Bellarm. lib. 3. de iuſtificatione. cap. 5.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, I know not my ſelfe to be iuſtified, but I am not thereby iuſtified: therefore by this example it cannot be gathered, that we haue no knowledge of our iuſtification. Secondly, this place rather maketh againſt popiſh inherent iuſtice: for the Apoſtle ſaith, he is not iuſtified by his good conſcience, and ſo conſequently not by any good thing, that was in him. Thirdly, Paul was moſt ſure of Gods grace, and of his iuſtification thorough faith, Rom. 8. 30. Therefore it is too great boldnes, to ſay, the Apoſtle was not ſure of his iuſtification. Fourthly, this then is the Apoſtles meaning, that although he were cleere in conſcience, that he walked moſt painfully in his calling, yet this was not ſufficient to cleare him, and pronounce him moſt iuſt before God: for as S. Iohn ſaith, If our owne heart or conſcience condemne vs not, God tryeth then our heart, and can ſpie what is amiſſe in vs, though we our ſelues ſee it not, 1. Ioh. 3. 20.

Bellarmino replieth, where the Apoſtle ſaith, Nihil mihi conſcius ſum: I knowe nothing by my ſelfe. Firſt, either he ſpeaketh of himſelfe in his owne iudgement, that he knew no ſinne in himſelfe, and then it is not true, that the Apoſtle was not iuſt, hauing no ſinne. Secondly, or that he knew his ſinnes to be forgiven in Chriſt, and then alſo in their owne opinion, Paul was iuſtified, but now he ſaith, I am not thereby iuſtified. Thirdly, either they muſt ſay, that he ſpeaketh of the iudgement of others, but that cannot be: for he ſpeaketh of his owne iudgement, I iudge not my ſelfe, it remaineth then, that the Apoſtle ſheweth that notwithstanding his conſcience that accuſed him not, he was not ſure of his iuſtification, Bellarmino. c. 5.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not in generall of his owne ſtate, as though he knew no ſinne by himſelfe: the contrarie is confeſſed by him, that Chriſt came into the world to ſaue ſinners, of the which, ſaith he, I am chiefe, 1. Tim. 1. 15. Secondly, neither doth the Apoſtle ſpeak of himſelfe, as now acquitted of his ſinnes by faith in Chriſt: for ſo euery where he confeſſeth he was iuſtified by Chriſt, Galath. 2. 16. We haue beleued in Chriſt, that we might be iuſtified, &c. verſ. 20. I live by the faith of the ſonne of God, Philip. 3. 8. 9. That I might win Chriſt, and might be found in him, not hauing mine owne righteouſneſſe, but that which is through faith, &c. Thirdly, he ſpeaketh then of his outward diſpenſation and Apoſtleſhip, wherein his owne conſcience bare him record, he had been faithfull, and therefore he paſſed in that behalfe, very little to be iudged of them, becauſe I doe not iudge my ſelfe: that is as faultie or negligent in my calling, wherein I am iudged of others.

Argum. 4. Worke your ſaluation with feare and trembling, Philip. 2. 12. Ergo, men muſt not be ſecure, neither can be ſure of their ſaluation. Again, Make your election and calling ſure by good works, 2. Pet. 1. 10. But this certaintie that dependeth of good works, is but coniecturall: and if it doe ariſe from good works, then faith onely certiſieth vs not of our iuſtification, Bellarmino. cap. 6.

Anſw. Firſt, the working of our ſaluation with feare, excludeth onely preſumption and careleſſe ſecuritie, not faithfull boldnes and confidence: As it may appeare in the verſe following, where the Apoſtle giueth a reaſon of this feare: For it is God which worketh, &c. We ought then to finiſh our ſaluation not doubtfully, becauſe God worketh it, and therefore we may be moſt ſure of his promiſe: but yet with feare and reuerence, as it becommeth children, for it is the Lord, with whom we haue to deale: thus we ſee confidence and the feare of God may very well ſtand together. Secondly, S. Peter maketh not mention onely of good works, but faith, ioyne vertue and other ſpirituall graces to your faith, verſ. 5. Good works then onely doe not make our vocation ſure, but faith and good works, that is, faith working by loue: good works then are a certaine demonstration of our faith: and by faith we vnderſtand our vocation, and iuſtification. Again, neither is it an vncertaine demonstration that is made by works, though it be not ſo perfect, as that which ſheweth the cauſe: for the heat doth euidently ſhew the fire, and a good tree is certainly knowne by good fruit: Neither did our Sauour giue a coniecturall ſigne to know falſe prophets by, but a ſure and infallible marke, when he ſaid, by their fruits you ſhall know them, Matth. 7. Laſtly, we muſt vnderſtand, that there is a double aſſurance of our vocation, and iuſtification: One which is more perfect, by the cauſe ſhewing the effect, and that is the inward teſtimonie of the ſpirit, Rom. 8. 16. And this is for thoſe that are wholly ſpirituall. There is another not ſo perfect, by the effects demonſtrating the cauſe, and that is by the workes and fruites of the ſpirit, whereof S. Peter ſpeaketh: And this is for thoſe which are not yet able to comprehend the other.

That by a lively faith we may be assured, that our finnes are forgiven vs, and that we be fully justified in Christ, reconciled to God, and are remaining in the state of grace: we have most cleare and evident testimonies of Scripture to prove it.

Argum. 1. Rom. 8. 15. We have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, father, the same spirit beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. But the testimonie of the spirit is most certaine, for the spirit cannot be deceived, neither doth deceive any: Ergo, we may be certaine of our adoption, that we are the Sonnes of God.

Ans. This testimonie of the spirit, whereby we are moved to cry Abba father, is not known unto vs by faith, or any other expresse means, but onely by certaine coniectures which may deceive vs, as by the inward peace, and taste of some sweetnes in the soule: for there be many that call God their father, as the Jewes, Iohn 8. 41. And many say in the Lords prayer, Our father, who are not assured that they are the Sonnes of God, Bellarm. Respons. ad 6. respons. cap. 9.

Contra. First, to beleieve that God is our father, is of faith: for to beleieve that God is, and that he is a rewarder, &c. is of faith, Heb. 11. 6. but it is more to beleieve that God is our father: how then saith the Resuite, Non constat nobis ex fide divina. It is not knowne unto vs by faith, that it is the spirit which moueth vs to cry Abba father.

Secondly, and say you that the inward peace of conscience is but a coniecturall and deceitfull meanes: yet S. Paul saith, If our sinne bea condemneth us not, we have boldnes toward God, Iohn 3. 21. it hath vncertaine and barely coniecturall, which worketh boldnes in vs: The inward taste also, and sweetnes of the spirit, doth the Iulius make so small account of it: he that hath a true taste of the mercie of God, teach God: Taste and see how gracious the Lord is, Psalm. 34. 8. But he that feeleth the Sonne, and beleueeth in him is sure to haue everlasting life, Iohn 6. 46.

Thirdly, and what if many say with their mouth, Abba father, and yet are not sure they are the children of God: the Apostle speaketh not of a crying with the mouth, but a crying in the heart: He hath sent the spirit of his Sonne into our hearts, which crieth Abba father, Galath. 4. 6. for though all vnder the same voyce, yet is it not the same crying: The vncleane spirit made the same confession outwardly of Christ, Mark. 5. 7. acknowledging him to be the Sonne of God, which Peter did make, Marth. 16. yet were not both one kind of confession: the beleefe of the heart, which was in Peter, and not in the other, did discerne their confessions.

Now that the spirit of God, by his inward testimonie, doth not coniecturally but vndoubtedly assure vs, that we are the Sonnes of God, we shew it thus; the spirit of adoption expelleth all feare: for the Apostle saith, you haue not receiued the spirit of bondage to feare againe, Rom. 8. ver. 15. and where no feare is, there loue is perfect, 1. Iohn. 4. 18. And where no feare is, there is no painefulnes: therefore neither doubtfulness, nor mistrust. Secondly, they to whom the spirit of God testifieth, that they are so the Sonnes of God, that they be also heires with Christ, doe certainly know that they are the sonnes of God: for how could they be heires, vnles they were sonnes? But the spirit of God doth certifie vs that we are heires annexed with Christ, Rom. 8. ver. 17. And our Sauiour saith, He that beleueth, is already passed from death to life, Iohn 6. 24. Ergo, much more are we sure that we are sonnes: Thirdly, he that hath the spirit of the Sonne is sure he is also a sonne: Because ye are sonnes, he hath sent the spirit of his sonne into your hearts, Galath. 4. 6. But he that hath the spirit of adoption, hath the spirit of the sonne: Ergo, he is vndoubtedly sure he is a sonne. Many such arguments may be gathered out of the text it selfe: where by the Ielousie, grasse and corrupt canis and thistles may easily be auoyded: I wonder that they are not ashamed, thus to obscure the euident light of Gods truth against their owne conscience.

Argum. 2. I am certaine, Iohn 5. 1. Paul, ye haue perswaded, that neither life, nor death, or any thing else is from the loue of God in Christ, Rom. 8. 38. The Apostle was fully perswaded of his saluation in Christ.

Ans. First, the Apostle speaketh onely in generall, as if he should haue said: So many as are dected cannot certainly perishe, Ruimist scilicet Bellarm. cap. 9. respons. ad 1. respons. 7.

Contra. The Apostle speaketh not onely in generall, but pronounceth particularly of himselfe, I am certaine: As more plainly, 2. Tim. 4. 8. from hence forth is laid vp for me a crowne of righteousness.

Ans. Secondly, S. Paul might haue this perswasion, by some speciall reuelation, Ruimist scilicet Bellarm. cap. 9. respons. ad 1. respons. 7.

Contra. The ground of the Apostles perswasion is none other, but that which is common to all the faithfull, vnder the loue of God in Christ. And so Augustine interpreteth this place, writing thus: His significat fidei ad Timotheum, &c. Those of whom the Apostle speaketh, are signified in another place to Timoth. 2. 2. 19. The foundation of God remaineth sure, the Lord knoweth who are his. And againe in another place, when the Apostle had shewed his owne confidence, There is layd vp for me a crowne of righteousness, he declared that his priuiledge was not proper to him, but common to all the faithfull: And not to me onely, but vnto them also, scilicet his appearing, 2. Tim. 4. 8.

Ergo, this assurance, and confidence is common, though not in the like measure, to all faithfull Christians.

Ans. Thirdly, the word which the Apostle useth, signifieth not a certaine and infallible perswasion, but such an one as ariseth of coniecture and gesse: As else where he saith, I am perswaded of you brethren, that you are full of goodness, &c. Rom. i. 14. And I am perswaded the same faith dwelleth in you, 1. Tim. 4. 5. But the Apostle did not certainly know this, but only by coniecture, Beilarmus ibid.

Contra. First, we graunt, that this word, scimus, doth not alwaies signifie an vndoubted and infallible knowledge, and perswasion: yet I see no reason why it may not so signifie in those places alleged: for the Apostles had the gift of discerning of spirits, whereof we reade, 1. Cor. 12. 10. though this gift be ceased now: by the which gift they might certainly be perswaded, of the graces that were in the faithfull.

Secondly, Howsoever this word may other where be taken, it is certaine that S. Paul speaketh here of a full and perfect perswasion and assurance that he had of his saluation, vntill he will say that S. Paul stood in doubt, or was not sure of his saluation; which is a blasphemous vntruth, seeing the Apostle doth in so many places protest and testifie his assured hope and confidence: As he doubted not, but after his dissolution to bewith Christ, Phil. 1. 23. That there is a crowne of glory layd up for him, 2. Tim. 4. 8. Who hath loued me and giuen himselfe for me, Galath. 2. 20. But whom Christ loueth, he loueth his brother, Iohn 13. 1.

Thirdly, this word that signifieth to trust, to be sure, or perswaded, is no where vsed, where mention is made of heavenly things, but is sheweth an infallible trust and confidence: as Ephes. 3. 12, by whom we haue boldnes and entranee with confidence, by faith in him: the word here translated confidence, is, confidamus, which is deriued from the same word, which S. Paul useth in this place, Rom. 8. 38. And it betakeneth a full and stedfast perswasion, being ioyned with two other very significant and effectuell words, fiducia, boldnes, and fides, faith.

Beilarmus hath nothing to answer here: but that S. Paul speaketh not of the confidence or certaintie of our iustification, but of the truth of the articles of the faith, that Christ is now risen, ascended, and sitteth at the right hand of God a Mediator, and intercessor, and therefore we haue boldnesse, Beilarmus respon. ad loc. 12.

Contra. First, it is not the knowledge onely of the articles of faith, that they are true, that can worke this boldnes, and confidence in vs: for then the diuell who beleaueth and acknowledgeth the truth of these things, Mark. 5. 7. Iam. 2. 19. should haue access with confidence as well as the faithfull.

Secondly, S. Paul declareth else where, that this access, or entranee with boldnes, is a fruit of our iustification by faith, Rom. 5. 1. Being iustified by faith we haue peace with God, &c. then it followeth, by whom we haue access thorough faith vnto this grace, yer. 2. therefore by the same faith which iustifieth, thorough the same we haue this boldnes.

Argum. 3. S. Iohn saith, We know we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren, 1. Iohn 3. 14. Again, hereby know we, that we dwell in him, and he in vs, because he hath giuen vs of his spirit, chap. 4. 13. We know that we are of God, chap. 5. 19. He that beleaueth in the Sonne of God hath the witness of God in himselfe, 1. Iohn 5. 10. By these places, it is proued, that we may be assured of the fauour of God, and that we are in the state of grace.

Ans. This knowledge, which the Apostle speaketh of, doth not shew an absolute and infallible certaintie or surer: but we may be said to know, when as by signes and coniectures onely we doe gather any thing, Beilarmus respon. ad loc. 13.

Contra. 1. It appeareth that this knowledge of our saluation wrought in vs by the spirit, is sure and certaine, without any doubting, not coniecturall: because the Apostle by this word useth to expresse the sure and vndoubted apprehension, that we haue of any thing: We know that who cometh is of God, sinneth not: we know that the Sonne of God is come, 1. Iohn 5. 18. 20. this knowledge whereby we knowe, that they which are borne of God, sinne not, that is, haue not sinne reigning in them; and whereby we also know, that Christ is come in the flesh, is most firme and sure without any waivering or doubting: Ergo, in the same sense the Apostle sayth, we know, that we are of God, yer. 19. for why should not the same word, being twice taken in the same place, both in the verse next before, and in the verse next after, for a sure and certaine knowledge, be so also vnderstood in this verse.

2. The Apostle speaketh not in the second or third person, you knowe, or they knowe, but in the first, we know, putting himselfe in the number: Now I trust they will not say that the Apostle did gesse only, and was not sure that he had the holy Ghost: S. Paul indeede saith, I thinke that I haue the spirit of God, 1. Cor. 7. 40. not as though he doubted of it or spake by coniecture: but he thus speaketh in modestie least he should seeme to boast; for he was sure he had the spirit: for if he could pronounce certainly of others: God hath giuen you his holy spirit, 1. Thessal. 4. 8. much more was he certaine of himselfe.

3. The knowledge of faith is sure and certaine, without any doubting: as our Saviour saith to Peter, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? Matth. 14. 31. where faith is full and perfect then, there is no doubting. Saint James also saith, Let him aske in faith, and it shall be given him. Jam. 1. 6. But this knowledge, which the Apostle speaketh of, is of faith: He that beleaueth in the Sonne of God, hath the witnesse of GOD in himselfe, 1. Ioh. 5. 10. Ergo, it is a certaine and infallible knowledge.

4. That knowledge, whereby we doe assure our hearts before God, and haue boldnes with God, is a certaine and vndoubted knowledge. Such is this knowledge: Thereby we know we are of the truth, and shall before him assure our hearts, 1. Ioh. 3. 19. and wee haue boldnes toward God, vers. 21. Ergo. If the Iesuite answere vs, as hee doth, that, audacia non est certitudo, boldnes is not certaintie: we replee againe, that boldnes, which the children of God shall haue in the day of iudgement, is full of confidence, without any despaire or doubting, and therefore certaine: but this knowledge worketh in vs such boldnes, 1. Ioh. 4. 17. Herein is loue perfect in vs, when we shall haue boldnes in the day of iudgement: Ergo.

Argum. 4. Proue your selues, whether you are in the faith, examine your selues, know ye not your owne felices, how that Iesu Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates, 2. Corin. 13. 5. Ergo, they that by faith are sure that Christ is in them, are sure also of their saluacion, and know, that they are not reprobates.

Ans. The Apostle speaketh not of the presence of Christ by grace, but by his power and providence: so that his meaning is, that vntill they are giuen ouer to a reprobate sense, they will acknowledge the power of Christ working amongst them, by these myracles, which the Apostle wrought: and by which power he deliuered some to Satan, Bellarmin. respons. ad testim. 1. 12. 2. 1. 1. 1. 1.

Contra. That the Apostle speaketh of the presence of Christ by grace, and of iustifying faith; may strongly be gathered by these arguments: 1. The Apostle useth this phrase of speech, to be in the faith, or of the faith, when he would expresse the manner of our iustification as Gal. 3. 9.

They which be of faith, are blessed with faithful Abraham: Where it is euident, that the Apostle speaketh of iustifying faith. 2. Examine your selues, saith the Apostle: but it is that faith, which iustifieth, whereby wee doe examine our selues: Let a man examine himselfe, and so let him eate of this bread, 1. Cor. 11. 28. to examine themselves is to proue whether they be in the faith: 1. Cor. 13. 5.

And that faith, whereby we doe eate and drinke worthilie the bodie and blood of Christ, is iustifying faith. 3. Saint Paul speaketh of that faith, whereby we liue in Christ, vers. 4. But wee shall liue with him; but that is iustifying faith: The iust shall liue by faith, Rom. 1. 17. I liue by faith in the Sonne of God, Galath. 3. 20. 4. For Christ to be in vs, sheweth his presence and being by grace, and not by his power onely: he in whom Christ is, hee hath Christ, and hath the Sonne: he that hath the Sonne, hath life, euen life eternall, 1. Ioh. 5. 11. 12. Ergo, he in whom Christ the Sonne of God is, hath eternall life: Ergo, knowing Christ to be in him, he knoweth thereby that he shall be saued:

by the being then of Christ in him, he is sure of his saluacion.

Argum. 5. Further, we thus reason for the certitude of iustification by faith out of these places of Scripture.

First, Ioh. 3. 21. He that doth the truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought according to God. But this a man cannot know, not being assured of his faith and iustification, that his workes are acceptable to God: whom it is impossible to please without faith, Hebr. 11. 6.

Secondly, Ioh. 14. 17. But ye know the spirit, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you: Ergo, if we know the spirit to be in vs, we also consequently know our iustification.

Thirdly, Rom. 4. 13. Therefore it is as by faith, that the promise may be sure: Ergo, we by faith are sure of the promise.

Fourthly, Ephes. 3. 12. By whom we haue boldnes and entrance with confidence by faith in him: Ergo, faith maketh vs confident and assured.

Ans. 1. Christ speaketh of those which in a simple heart came vnto him, as Nathanael, Nicodemus, not being yet iustified, but comming to be iustified; how then could they yet be sure of their iustification? Bellarmin. c. 9. resp. ad loc. 2.

Contra. Christ speaketh of belecuers, vers. 18. He that beleaueth, shall not be condemned: of those that doe the truth, and whose deeds are wrought according to God: but they, which are but comming to Christ, hauing yet no knowledge of the truth, cannot doe the truth; nor worke according to God.

Ans. By the presence of the spirit we are not sure of our iustification, but onely we know, hauing faith, that it is not without Gods helpe, Bellar. resp. ad loc. 4.

Contra. A most absurd answer: a man, faith he, is not sure of his faith: but if he haue faith, he is sure the spirit worketh it. First, if a man be sure of the spirit, how is he not sure of faith, which is the effect of the spirit? as if there be fire, there is heate necessarily. Secondly, indeed if a man haue not faith, he cannot be ſure of it: but when he hath it, he knoweth he hath it, becauſe he knoweth he hath the ſpirit that worketh it.

3 Anſw. Abraham was ſure by faith; but we haue not ſuch a faith as Abraham had, Bellarm. reſp. ad 5. reſp.

Contra. Firſt, that the promiſe might be ſure by faith to all the ſeede, ſaith the Apoſtle: Ergo, not in Abraham onely, but in all his ſeede faith worketh the ſame ſurenes. Likewise, Rom. 4. verſ. 12. That righteouſnes might be imputed to them alſo that walke in the ſteps of the faith of Abraham. Secondly, ſo S. Ambroſe expoundeth: Quid credidit Abraham? ſe ſemen habiturum, in quo omnes gentes iuſtificantur per fidem, ſicut & Abraham, &c. What did Abraham beleue? that he ſhould haue a ſeede, wherein all nations ſhould be iuſtified by faith, as Abraham was iuſtified, &c. In 4. ad Roman. Abraham faith then and ours is the ſame.

4 Anſw. The certitude, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, is not of our iuſtification, but of the truth of the myſteries of faith, as of Christs death, reſurrection, &c. Bellarm. reſp. ad loc. 12.

Contra. Saint Paul aſcribeth this aſſurance to iuſtification by faith: as Rom. 5. 1. Being iuſtified by faith, we are at peace with God: then it followeth verſ. 2. by whom we haue entranſes by faith: where the Apoſtle vſeth the ſame word tranſeunt, which hee doth here: ſhewing that our entranſes with boldnes is a fruit or effect of our iuſtification by faith.

Auguſtine ſaith, Unusquisque inſpiciat ſe intus, appendat ſe, probet ſe in omnibus factis ſuis: fides, quæ peratur per dilectionem, ſi in vobis eſt, iam pertinet ad prædeſtinatos: Let every man looke into himſelfe, examine, proue himſelfe, if faith working by loue be in you; euen now ye doe belong to the number, and companie of the predeſtinate. Auguſtine otherwiſe expoundeth the Apoſtles word, than the Ieſuite doth: and ſheweth, that this examination of our ſelues by a true and lively faith, is an inſalſible argument of our election. The Ieſuite therefore may be aſhamed thus to expound ſcripture againſt ſcripture: and to make the Apoſtle to ſpeake what he liſt himſelfe, euen againſt his owne meaning.

Origen ſaith, Tract. 7. in Matth. Omnis anima, quæ ſe inſeparabilem eſſe cognoviſit à Christo, diuigit. Every ſoule, which knoweth it ſelfe to bee inſeparable from Chriſt, ſaith, Who ſhall ſeparate vs &c.

Saint Ambroſe thus excellently writeth vpon theſe words, Eph. 3. verſ. 17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith: In eapetis deo magis firmari, et non ambigant, ſed magis credant Chriſtum habitare in ſe, et certi ſint de Chriſto, quod habitet per fidem, &c. He deſireth them therein to be confirmed, that they ſhould not doubt, but rather beleue that Chriſt dwelleth in them, that they may be ſure of Chriſt, becauſe he dwelleth by faith in their hearts, that when wee haue his faith in our hearts, wee may be knowne to haue him, et ſecuri ſumus de auxilio eius, that wee may be ſure or ſecure of his helpe, becauſe he doth not forſake vs, but is alway preſent, becauſe of his faith, which he ſeeth to be in vs, &c.

We want not their owne teſtimonie: Dier. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 7. c. 1. Stephanus: Dubius in fide infidelis eſt: He that is doubtfull in faith, is an Infidell.

Ambroſ. Catharinus apolog. cont. Dominic. à Soto, Enebirid. Colonienſ. tract. de iuſtificatione. Theſe populiſh authours doe herein agree with vs: Poſſo fideles certa fide ſtatuerè, ſibi remiſſa peccata: That faithfull men by their faith, may certainly determine that their finnes are forgiven them.

Laſtly, let vs adioyne the conſent and teſtimonie of the holic Martyrs: Maſter Patriſs Hamelton Martyr, condemned for this article with others, for ſaying, He is not worthie to be called a Chriſtian, which beleueth not that he is in grace: Fox. pag. 974. col. 2. articul. 4. Maſter Tyndall ſayth thus: Chriſt is thine, and all his deedes are thy deedes, Chriſt is in thee, and thou in him, neither canſt thou be damned, except Chriſt be damned with thee: neither can Chriſt be ſaued, except he be ſaued with thee: pag. 1248. Maſter Bradford thus: Know for a certaine, that as the diuell goeth about nothing ſo much, as to bring you in doubt, whether you be Gods childe: ſo whatſoeuer ſhall moue you to admit that dubitation, be aſſured, the ſame to come of the diuell: pag. 1640. epiſtola. quidam. Maſter Philpot thus boldly and confidently proteſteth: Let him doubt of his faith that liſteth, God giue me alwaies grace to beleue, that I am ſure of true faith, and fauour in Chriſt: pag. 1825. Iulius Palmer Martyr thus confeſſeth: No man can beleue, but by the inſpiration of the holic Ghhoſt: therefore if I were not a ſpirituall man, and inſpired with Gods holic ſpirit, I were not a true Chriſtian: Qui ſpiritum Chriſti non habet, hic non eſt eius: Hee that hath not the ſpirit of God, is none of his, pag. 1938. All theſe holic Martyrs, with many other, both were aſſured themſelues of their ſalvation by faith in Chriſt, and in confirmation of this doctrine, gaue their moſt precious liues. Such a ſeale of their doctrine our aduerſaries are neuer able to ſhew.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER FAITH, OR the grace of iustification may be lost.

The Papists.

A Man, they say, may fall away from the faith, which once truly he had, and be deprived altogether of the state of grace, so that he may iustly be counted among the reprobates: Bellarm. 57. Error.

lib. 3. de iustificat. cap. 14.

Argum. 1. First, they allege these and such like testimonies of Scripture, Ezech. 18. 24. If a righteous man turne away from his righteousness, &c. Saint Paul also saith of some, That they had made shipwracke of their faith, 1. Tim. 1. 19. Rhemist. Bellarm. lib. 3. de iustificat. cap. 12. Ergo, true faith and iustice may be lost.

Ans. The Apostle saith, some having put away a good conscience, made shipwracke of faith: such a faith indeede, that hath not a good conscience may be lost: for it is not a true lively faith, but a dead fruitlesse faith: So is also the place in Ezechiel to bee vnderstoode, of such righteous persons, as seemed so to be rather, than were so indeede. And thus S. Luke teacheth vs to expound it: who, whereas other Euangelists write, From him that hath not, shall be taken away, even that which he hath: he saith, that which he seemed to haue, Luk. 8. 18. God taketh away his grace from him, that hath it not; but seemeth onely to haue it: he giueth still to him that hath. Thus one of your owne expoundeth this place: Fidem quam habere magis videntur, quam habere perdidit: They lost faith, which they rather seemed to haue, than they had indeede: Effugit in hunc locum.

Argum. 2. Further, these places of Scripture are produced:

First, Luk. 8. 13. They receiue the word with ioy, but they haue no roots, which for a while beleeue, but in the time of temptation goe away: These haue faith, for they beleeue the worde of God, yet fall away. 1.

Secondly, Iohn. 15. 2. Every branch that beareth not fruit in me, he taketh away: but it can be no branch, vnlesse it were once in the stocke. 2.

Thirdly, Matth. 24. 12. The loue of many shall waxe cold. 3.

Fourthly, 1. Cor. 9. 27. I doe chastise my bodie, lest when I haue preached to others, I should be a reprobate. 4.

Fifthly, Galath. 5. 4. Whosoener are iustified by the law, are fallen from grace. 5.

Sixtly, Hebr. 6. 4. It is impossible, that they which were once lightened, &c. and haue tasted of the word of God, if they fall away, &c. Ergo, they which haue faith may lose it, and fall away from it: Bellarmin. cap. 14. 6.

Ans. 1. The text expoundeth it selfe, they had no roots, and they beleeued but for a while: Ergo, they had no true faith: for a true faith is not without a roote: Ephes. 3. 17. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith, that being rooted, &c. 1.

2. Hypocrites and vnbeleeuers may for a while be counted among the branches of Christ, but they were neuer true branches: first, Christ saith, vers. 5. I am the vine, ye are the branches, speaking to his faithfull followers. Secondly, Matth. 15. 13. Every plant, which my father hath not planted, shall be rooted vp: there are plants then in outward shewe, not planted of God: but all the true branches of the true vine are planted of God. Thirdly, then as S. Iohn saith, 1. Ioh. 2. 19. They went out from vs, but were not of vs: so these branches may be accounted among the true branches, secundum presentem iusticiam, non secundum praesentiam, according to their present iustice, but not in respect of Gods prescience: as Ambrose well saith. 2.

3. That loue, which falleth away, was neuer any true loue: as Augustine: Caritas, qua deseri potest, nunquam vera fuit: Charitie, which may be forsaken, was neuer true charitie. This sentence is rehearsed, decret. p. 2. can. 33. dist. 2. c. 2. 3.

4. First, Saint Paul hath no such feare lest hee should become a reprobate or castaway: hee professeth the contrarie, Rom. 8. 38. that he was perswaded nothing could separate him from the loue of God: and 2. Cor. 13. 6. I trust ye shall know we are not reprobates. And say if you dare, that Paul the elect vessell might become a reprobate. Secondly, but his meaning is this, least if hee preached one thing, and practised another, hee might be reprooued and reproched of men: in which sense hee saith, 2. Corinth. 13. 7. though we be as reprobates, that is in mans iudgement; and as hee expoundeth himselfe, Galath. 2. ver. 18. If I build the thing: that I haue destroyed, I make my selfe a trespasser, which is all one, as if he had sayd, estime, reprooued, or reprobate to men. 4.

5. The Apostle speaketh not of any mans particular state, but of the generall falling away of the Galathians from the doctrine of the Gospell: as Gal. 1. 6. I marneile ye are so soone removed to another Gospell: Chap. 3. 3. Are ye so foolish, that when ye haue begun in the spirit, ye would end in the flesh? This is then nothing to the purpose. 5.

6. These which the Apostle speaketh of, neuer had any true faith, but onely a taste thereof, and a momentanie or superficiall lightning of the minde: for the Apostle saith, They that went out from vs, that is, fell away, were not of vs, 1. Iohn 2. 19.

Thus their owne glosse expoundeth this text: Aliud est bibere, vel manducare, aliud degustare, &c. It is one thing to drinke or eate, another thing to taste: hee drinketh, that is rooted in charitie: Ille degustat, quia aliquatenus communicat, à qua postea delinquendo recedit, de quibus Apostolus: Impossibile est, &c. He tasteth, that doth somewhat communicate of that water, but afterward by sinning departeth; of whom the Apostle saith: It is impossible, that they which are once lightened, and haue tasted, &c. if they fall away, &c. Caus. 33. dist. 2. c. 44. gloss.

Argum. 3. Dauid, Peter, did grievously fall: Saul, Simon, Judas, became reprobates: Ergo, the righteous may finally fall away. Bellarm.

Ans. First, the faith of Dauid and Peter, by their transgression, was greatly decayed, and much shaken, yet not utterly lost: for Christ praied for Peter, that his faith should not faile, Luk. 22. vers. 32. Secondly, as for the rest, they were neuer truly iust or righteous: Judas is called the child of perdition, and when he was in his holiest course, he was but a theefe, and an hypocrite, as the Scripture testifieth of him. Saint Peter also saith of Simon Magus, That his heart was not right in the sight of God, howsoeuer he appeared before men: Act. 8. 21. These examples therefore proue nothing.

The Protestants.

Our sentence is this: that he which once hath received a true lively faith, and is thereby iustified before God, can neuer finally fall away; neither can that faith utterly perish, or faile in him, though it may for a while somewhat decay, and be empayred; yet shall it reuiue, and hee be rayed vp againe.

Argum. 1. Iohn 4. 14. Hee that drinketh of the water that I shall giue him, shall neuer be thirsty, &c. 1. Iohn 3. 9. Who soeuer is borne of God, sinueth not, for his seed remaineth in him, &c. Ergo, the grace of iustification cannot be lost.

Bellarmino answereth, that so long as they haue this water and seed, they shal neyther thirst nor sinne; but the fountaine may be dried vp, and the seed lost: and then may they fall into both.

Contra. 1. The Gospell saith, It shall be in him a well of water, springing up to euermlasting life: Ergo, it cannot be dried vp; for it springeth continually and stineth not, til it haue brought him to eternall. 2. Saint Iohn saith not, they sinne not, if, or while they haue their seede: but simply, because their seed abideth. Neither doth hee reason thus: they sinne not: Ergo, they haue the seede: But they haue this seede abiding: Ergo, they cannot sinne: for if they that are borne of God, are subiect to sinne in such sort, as the Apostle meaneth, then may the child of God, be the child of the diuell: for hee that so sinneth willingly with delight, and continuance therein, is of the diuell.

Argum. 2. He that beleeueth, is already passed from death to life, Iohn 5. 24. If it be then possible for a man to be brought from life to death, from heauen backe againe to hell, then may a faithfull beleeuer become also a faithlesse infidell.

Argum. 3. Cantic. 8. 7. Much water cannot quench loue, neyther can the floods drowne it: 1. Cor. 13. vers. 8. Loue doth neuer fall away; if charitie cannot be lost, then neyther faith, for without faith there is no charitie.

Ans. Charitie indeed falleth not away, but a man may fall from charitie: and as long as charitie remaineth, no floods, that is, persecutions can drowne it or extinguishe it: Bellarmino, c. 15. resp. ad 1. text. c. 4.

Contra. 1. As charitie it selfe is alwayes permanent, both in this world and the next, which I graunt is the speciall meaning of the Apostle: yet it is true also, that true charitie cannot be separated from the heart of a faithfull man, being rooted (saith the Apostle) and grounded in loue, Ephes. 2. 17. How can that wither, which hath a roote? the seede sown in stonie ground doth wither, because it hath no roote, Luk. 8. 13. Augustine also saith, radicata est charitas, securus eius, charitie is rooted, be secure or out of doubt: tract. 8. super epist. 1. Iohn. rehearsed, caus. 33. dist. 1. c. 3. 2. Origen expoundeth this place, 1. Cor. 13. of the stabilitie and firmenesse of charitie, tract. 23. in Matth. vpon these words, Charitie neuer falleth away: Ex charitate nunquam excidente erant illa voces dicentis, confido, &c. From charitie neuer falling away, proceeded those speeches of the Apostle, I am perswaded, that neither death, nor life, &c. can separate me from the loue of God, &c. 3. S. Gregory also thus expoundeth the first place, Valida est vis amoris dilectio, virtuti amoris dilectio comparatur, quia mentem, quam semel caperit, à delectatione mundi funditus occidit, &c. Loue is strong as death; loue is compared to the strength of death, because it doth ilay in the mind for euer where it is the delight of the world, lib. 10. moral. c. 22. repeated, caus. 33. dist. 2. c. 4.

Augustine doth plainly set downe his sentence of this matter: Horum fides que per dilectionem operatur, perfecta, aut omnino non deficit, aut si qui sunt quorum deficit, reparatur, antequam vis illa fini- dur: de corrupt & grat. cap. 7. Their faith, which worketh by loue, either neuer faileth at all, or if it do faile in any, it is repayed againe, before the life be ended: this sentence is ratified. 1. Cor. 13. 8.

1. Inuolub. cap. 5. Qui iustificantiur, idem adoptantur Deo filij, &c. Et iam habent inuolub. hereditatē illius, quā est uita aeterna: They that are iustified, are adopted the sonnes of God, and haue already, or euen now, the right to come vnto the inheritance of eternall life. How then can they loose the heavenly inheritance, that haue it already?

Let's see further testimonie from themselves, caus. 3. diff. 2. c. 5. (Charitas est rella caritatis, &c. in illa Deo inseparabiliter: Charitie is a right mind inseparably ioyned to God: 1. Cor. 13. 8. 1. Thim. 1. 5. Charitas in quocumque fuerit, radix illi erit, arserit non potest: In whomsoever charitie is, it is as a roote, it cannot wither.

Cap. 14. Charitas est aqua, de qua Dominus in Euangelio, &c. Charitie is that water, whereof the Lord saith in the Gospell: He that drinketh of this water, which I shall giue, shall not thirst for euer.

1. Thim. 2. 17. Aurum, quod quādoque sterni potest, aurum ante Dei oculos nunquam fuit, &c. Golde, which may become dirt, was neuer gold before God: They which are seduced, and neuer returne, quasi habitant in sanctis, ante oculos hominum uidentur, auertere, &c. Doe seeme to loke sanctitie, which they had before men; but they neuer had any before God.

Decret. part. 3. dist. 1. cap. 29. vpon these wordes, Nolite spiritum extinguere: Quench not the spirit: Non quia ille extingui potest, sed quantum in ipso est: not that the spirit can be extinguished, but as much as in them lyeth, &c.

Peter Lombard. lib. 1. diff. 17. liter. f. ex Augustin. Si uillaret ab eum charitatem separare, quid esset, non solum melius, sed etiam certius hoc bene potest: If nothing can separate vs from the loue of God, what thing is better or more certaine?

This trueth also is sealed by M. Bradford holy Martyr: Our cecitie or blindness, and corrupt affections, do often shadow the sight of Gods seede in Gods children, as though they were plaine reprobates: whereof it cometh, that they praying according to their sense, but not according to the trueth, desire of God to giue them againe his spirit, as though they had lost it, and here had taken it away: which thing God neuer doth indeed; although he make vs to thinke so for a time.

THE FIFTH PART OF GOOD WORKES, FIRST

in generall, then in particular.

Concerning good workes in generall, the severall questions are these: first, of the law, which is the rule of good workes: secondly, of good workes themselves.

THE FIRST QUESTION OF THE LAW.

The parts of this question are these: first, of the differences of the law and the Gospell: secondly, whether the law be possible to be kept: thirdly, of the workes of Supererogation: fourthly, whether God be to be seruiced for hope of reward, or feare of punishment.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE TRUE AND FALSE

difference betweene the law and the Gospell.

FIRST OF THE FALSE

differences

There are some differences betweene the law and the Gospell, concerning the which we are both agreed: as first the law setteth forth but the shadow of things to come, the Gospell containeth the body it selfe, Col. 2. 17. Secondly the law of Moses was mutable, and to be changed, Heb. 7. 12. if the Priesthood be changed, there must be a change also of the law: but the Gospell is eternall: Thirdly, the law was not giuen, to iustifie vs, but to be onely a schoolemaster to bring vs to Christ, Gal. 3. 24. The Gospell teacheth the way to life by Christ. Fourthly the law of Moses engendred feare: the Gospell bringeth libertie and peace, Rom. 8. 15. You haue not receiued the spirit of bondage to feare againe. Fifthly, The law of Moses was a hard yoke, gricuous to be borne, Act. 15. 10. but Christs yoke is easie, Matth. 11. 30. These differences we acknowledge: but these following we do vtterly reject.

First, Beilarmine saith; the Gospel differeth from the law, as a perfect thing from an imperfect; and that the Gospel is contained and included in the law, as the tree in the seed: and that the Gospel doth not onely expound, and expound the law, but addeth the Counsels of perfection vnto it: Beilarmine de iustificatione cap. 4. The Protestants on the other side say; The Protestants say; Contra. If by the law we vnderstand whatsoeuer is contained in the old testament, as Moses and the Prophets, we willingly grant, that the doctrine of the Gospel is included in the law: for of Christ spake all the Prophets, Luk. 1. 70. but then should we not speake properly to our purpose: for when we compare the law and the Gospel together, we vnderstand onely the law of workes, which is called the morall law, as it is opposite to the doctrine of faith. This then we affirme, that the law of faith, which is the substance of the Gospel, is not indiuicibly contained in the decalogue, which is the law of workes; as it may appeare by these reasons.

1. The law of workes and the law of faith haue contrary effects: by the law, sinne is reuiued and receiue strength, Rom. 7. 5. but being baptized by faith into Christs death, we are dead vnto sin, Rom. 6. 2. Ergo, no affinitie betweene the law and the Gospel, which commandeth faith. If faith were commanded in the law, it should be a workes of the law, which the Apostle denieth, concluding thus: This man is iustified by faith, without the workes of the law. Rom. 3. 28. Grace excludeth workes, and workes excludeth grace, Rom. 11. 6. For if of workes, then we may boast of grace. workes also exclude faith and beleefe, Rom. 4. 5. To him that worketh not, but beleeueth, Grace. If then the law of workes excludeth faith, can in no wise be included in the law. The Gospel therefore and the law are two distinct things: the law saith; Do this; and thou shalt be saved: the Gospel beleeue onely, and it sufficeth vnto life: For all things are possible to him that beleeueth. Mark. 9. 23. the doctrine therefore of the faith of the Gospel cannot be set forth in the law of workes: and if it were, this would shew an agreement rather betweene the law and the Gospel, then a difference: for betweene the thing that containeth, and that which is contained, there must needs be some affinity: therefore the lesuite cannot properly herein make any difference betweene the law and the Gospel.

S. Ambrose saith, in Luc. 12. Nemo sub lege fidem constituit; lex enim intra mensuram; ultra mensuram gratia; nemo fidem intra mensuram legis constituit: Let no man place faith in the law: the law is within measure; grace is without measure: let no man place faith within the measure of the law, &c. Ergo, faith is not contained in the law.

Caus. 23. qu. 4. c. 16. Cum lege scriptum sit, diliges amicum, odio habebis inimicum, &c. Whereas it is written in the law, Thou shalt loue thy friend, and hate thine enemy, &c. It was lawfull then for righteous men to hate their enemies: quod in nouo Testamento non continetur: which is restrained in the new: If the law suffered that which the Gospel forbiddeth, how is the one contained in the other.

Peter Lombard. lib. 3. dist. 37. inter. C. Littera Evangelij exprimitur, quod littera legis non exprimitur: That is expressed in the letter of the Gospel, which was not expressed in the letter of the law, &c. how then is the Gospel contained in the law?

3. Neither is it true, that the Gospel addeth vnto the law, precepts or counsels, concerning workes of greater perfection: for all good workes appertaine to the law, as faith belongeth to the Gospel: and therefore the Apostle concludeth, that if we be not iustified by the workes of the law, it followeth, that we are by faith, Galath. 2. 16. He findeth no meane betweene. Our Saviour Christ alio saith, that there are no commandements greater, than to loue God alone, and our neighbour as our selfe, which are contained in the law, Mark. 12. 31. Therefore the Gospel cannot counsell or commaund any thing greater then the law: seeing there can be no greater thing, then to loue God with all the heart, soule and strength, Mark. 12. 33.

Hieron. ad Ctesiphont. vpon these words; Non solum shall be iustified by the workes of the law: Quod uo de lege Moysi tantum dictum putes, non de omnibus mandatis, qua uo nomine legis continentur, &c. Whist that you should not thinke to be spoken onely of the law of Moses, and not of all commandements whatsoever, which are contained vnder the name of the law, the same Apostle saith. It cometh vnto the law in the inward man, &c. Ergo, all commandements of workes, whatsoever belong to the law.

39. Error.

Beilarmine second difference betweene the law and the Gospel is this: The law onely teacheth the doctrine, and sheweth the way, to differre betweene vertue and vice: the Gospel beside this knowledge, giueth power and strength to keepe the law, for saith Salomon, 1. 17. The law was giuen by Moses, but grace and truth came by Iesus Christ. Beilarmine. sup.

Ans. First, it is true, that the law is a reuealer and discouger of sinne, Rom. 7. 7. not a giuer of Righteousnesse, for that is impossible to the law, in as much as it was weak, &c. Rom. 8. 3. Yet even vnder the law by grace they receiued strength, in some measure to keepe the law, though not thereby to be iustified: I will rime the way of thy commandements, (saith the Prophet Dauid) when thou shalt enlarge my heart, Psalm 119. 32. Secondly, grace indeed is giuen vnto vs in the Gospell, not to enable vs to be iustified by doing the workes of the law, but by grace are we saved through faith, Ephes. 2. 8. In that Christ is become our righteousness, 1. Cor. 1. 30. and we the righteousness of God in him, 2. Cor. 5. 21. So that as by grace the righteous both vnder the law and the Gospell are sanctified to walke in some measure of obedience to the law: so neither then, nor now doth grace giue power to vs to be iustified by the keeping of the law: but our iustification, wholly, onely, and immediately is wrought by the faith of Christ, Galath. 3. 16. This therefore is no difference between the law and the Gospell.

OF THE TRUE DIFFERENCES OF the law and the Gospell.

The Papists.

WHereas wee distinguish the law and the Gospell, chiefly in these two respects: first, that the law engendreth terror and feare; the Gospell peace. Secondly, the law requireth obedience of the commaundements thereby to bee iustified; the Gospell commaundeth onely faith. Bellarmino refuseth these two differences betweene the law and the Gospell, and thus bendeth his force to ouerthrow them.

Argum. 1. First, that the Gospell worketh feare, as well as the law, he would proue it by these menaces and threatnings, which are denounced in the Gospell, as Matth. 7. 19. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewen downe, &c. Rom. 1. 16. I am not ashamed of the Gospell of Christ, &c. Then he sheweth the fruits and effects of the Gospell: First, the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith. Secondly, the wrath of God is revealed from heauen against all vngodlinesse. The Gospell then reuealeth the wrath of God: Ergo, it worketh feare, Bellar. cap. 2.

Ans. First, as whatsoeuer is contained in the old Testament, doth not appertaine to the law, as the promises of mercie in Christ foresheved by the Prophets, which though they were vttered in the time of the lawe, yet belonged to the Gospell: so in the new Testament, all that wee finde there written, is not straightway of the substance of the Gospell: but the threatning of Gods iudgements there contained, doe as well appertaine to the law, as the comfortable promises in the olde Testament to the Gospell. So that those places doe proue onely that the law and the Gospell are ioyned in vse; yet it followeth not, that they haue the same operation and effect: S. Peter, Act. 2. and 3. and the rest of the Apostles, in their sermons tempered the threatnings of the law, and the comforts of the Gospell together, by the one drawing the people to repentance, by the other ministering hope of remission of sinnes: the same course ought the Ministers of the Gospell to take in teaching the people now: first in humbling them by the lawe, then comforting them by the Gospell: for the law, as Saint Paul saith, is a schoolmaster to bring vs to Christ, Galath. 3. vers. 24. But all this sheweth onely a ioyning of the lawe and the Gospell in vse, not in nature or propriety.

Secondly, the Gospell worketh feare and terror, per accidens, not of it selfe, but accidentally and improperly: as Saint Paul saith, The Gospell is the sauour of life vnto life, and of death vnto death, 2. Corinth. 2. 16. That is, properly and of it selfe, it worketh vnto life, but not so vnto death: which is not the proper effect of the Gospell, but is caused by the wilfull contemners, and disobedient hearers of the Gospell: by whose peruerse nature the sweetnes thereof is turned to bitterness. So then vnto the faithfull and belecuers the Gospell bringeth comfort and peace: if it do not so to others, the fault is in themselves: But the law brought terror to all, euen to the righteous: for Moses trembled, and quaked at the deliuering of the law, Heb. 12. 21.

Argum. 2. Bellarmino also proueth, that the Gospell requireth the condition of obedience as well as the law: as Christ saith to the young man, if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements, Matth. 19. 17. Hence he inferreth, that the Gospell also inioyneth obedience, and not onely faith: And the Councell of Trent, sess. 6. cap. 7. doe call this verbum fidei, and, verbum Christi, the word of faith, and the word of Christ, to be obeyed and followed of all Christians; which Christ here vttered to the young man.

Contra. First, wee graunt that the Gospell requireth obedience, for it establisheth the lawe, and without this obedience there is no saluation: for every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be cut downe, &c. But it is not now required as in the law, to be a meanes and cause of life and iustification, as it was then said, Do this, and thou shalt live; but only as a necessarie consequent of our faith, and an effectuall fruit of our iustification. Secondly, our Sauour Christ vttered these wordes to the young man onely to humble him thereby, and to teach him to know himselfe: for he willing to iustifie himselfe by keeping of the law; as we reade, Luk. 10. 29. of another, which came to our

60. Error.

Saujour, with the same question, What shall I doe to haue eternall life? our Saujour hereby sheweth him how farre short he came of keeping the law, that not by doing, but by beleeuing from henceforth he should hope to be saued. Thirdly, the Apostles exhorted men to beleue in him any other condition, and so to be saued, Act. 16. 31. Their doctrine was not diuers from Christs: therefore Christ onely required the condition of faith to iustification. By this meanes also, the law should become a minister and instrument of life, contrarie to Saint Paul, who saith, it serueth onely as a schoole-master to bring vs to Christ, Galat. 3. 24. It discovereth and reuealeth sinne, Rom. 7. 7. the Apostle also calleth it the killing letter, and ministerie of condemnation, 2. Cor. 3. 6. 9. It cannot therefore helpe to procure our saluation: but if that we are iustified by our obedience to the law, then should the law helpe to iustifie vs, which is contrarie to the Apostle.

The Protestants.

NOW on the contrarie side, our arguments are these: First, that the law worketh terror, the Gospell onely comfort: Rom. 8. 15. Ye haue not receiued the spirit of bondage to feare againe, but ye haue receiued the spirit of adoption, whereby wee crie Abba father. And againe, Galath. 4. 4. God sent his sonne, that he might redeeme them that were vnder the law, that we might receiue the adoption of sonnes, and because ye are sonnes, God hath sent the spirit of his sonne into your hearts, which crieth Abba father. These places proue, that while we were vnder the law, wee were seruants, and kept in feare: but by the Gospell of Iesus Christ we are made sonnes, and receiue the spirit of adoption.

Bellarmine answers here is very simple, that not the law but the old Testament, engendred feare; and not the Gospell, but the new Testament ministreth comfort, Bellarmin. cap. 2.

Contra. 1. The contrarie rather hereof is most euident, that not the old testament, but the law; not the new testament, but the Gospell, worketh the one feare, the other comfort: for both the old testament containeth comfortable promises of the Gospell, and the new fearefull threatnings of iudgement: therefore neither the old wholly, nor the new wholly, can be, that the minister of feare, this of peace, but the law, and the Gospell comprehended both in the old and new Scriptures.

2. Bellarmin himselfe, forgetting what he had said before, confesseth afterward in these words: Lex Moysi, lex timoris & seruitutis fuit; Euangelium lex amoris. The law of Moses was the law of feare and seruitude; the Gospell the law of loue and peace. Thus he himselfe acknowledgeth this distinction betwene the law and the Gospell; Bellarmin. lib. 4. discrim. 7.

August. Hac est breuissim. & apertiss. differentia duorum testamentorum, timor & amor, contr. Adamant. c. 17. This is a short and manifest difference of the two testaments, feare and loue.

Ambr. in 3. ad Romi. Lex iram operatur fides gaudium: The law worketh wrath, faith ioy. Ibid. Peccem cum deo habere fides facit non lex: Faith maketh vs to haue peace with God, not the law: 1. 11. ad Rom. Data est lex ut humanum genus terrore manifestat a legis frangeretur: The law was giuen, that mankinde might be terrified by the manifestation thereof.

Caus. 2. 3. qu. 4. c. 1. gloss. In lege populus seruli timore cohebatur, &c. In the law the people was compelled with a seruite feare, and they had the law as a schoolemaster: in Euangelio filiali amor inuitatur, but in the Gospell they are inuited with a filiall loue, &c.

Argum. 2. That the Gospell requireth not obedience to the commaundements as a meane to saluation, as the law doth, but onely commaundeth faith, Saint Paul euery where sheweth: Roman. 3. 20. We cannot be iustified by the workes or obedience of the law: the reason followeth: for by the law cometh the knowledge of sinne. And againe, vers. 21. The righteousness of God (which is by the faith of Christ Iesus, vers. 22.) is made manifest without the law: Only faith then is required to make vs righteous before God, without the workes or obedience of the law.

August. expo-
sit. in Psal. 77. Heare what Augustine saith: Testimonium legis est, qui ea non legitime vtuntur, testimonium est, quo conuincantur: eis, qui legitime vtuntur, testimonium est, quo demonstratur, quod liberandi confugere debeant peccatores: The testimonie of the law, to them which vse it not aright, is a testimonie to conuince them: to them which doe, a testimonie to teach them, to whom sinners ought to flie for their deliuerance: Ergo, the law worketh not our deliuerance it selfe, but sendeth vs to our deliuerer.

Again, Lex fidei aque atque lex factorum aijt ne concupiscas, sed quod operum lex minando imperat, fidei lex credenda imperat: The law of faith, and the law of workes, doe both say thou shalt not conuict: but what the law of workes, by threatning inioyneth, the law of faith by beleeuing obtaineth: de spiritu & liter. cap. 13.

Ambr. in c. 3. ad Galath. Non est ex fide lex, quia nihil mandat credendum: The law is not of faith, because it commaundeth nothing to be beleued, &c. As the law commaunded not faith, so neither doth the Gospell commaund obedience to the law as a meane to our iustification.

Master Patrick Hamelton holy Martyr, hath sealed this truth: The law sheweth vs our sinne, the Gospell sheweth vs remedie for it: the law is the word of ire, the Gospell is the word of grace: the law is the word of despayre, the Gospell is the word of comfort, &c. Fox. p. 977.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE
libertie of the Gospell.

Bellarmino here is not ashamed to slander vs, that we should affirme Christian libertie herein to stand, in that we are altogether freed from the obedience and subiection of the law: Vt Mosi cum suo decalogo nihil ad nos pertineat: And that Moses with his decalogue belongeth not to vs, lib. 5. de iustificat. c. 5. initio. But we call God and all the world to record, that wee witness no such thing, knowing that Christ came not to dissolue, but to fulfill the law, Math. 5. 17. Here therefore Bellarmine fighteth with his owne shadow, cap. 5.

Christian libertie then consisteth in these three poynts: First, in that we are exempted from the ceremonies of the law, and the Iudicials, so farre forth, as they concerned the politike state of the lawes: Act. 15. 10. Why lay ye a yoke on the disciples neckes, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear? Secondly, we are freed from the curse and guilt of the law: Galath. 3. 13. Christ hath redeemed vs from the curse of the law, when he was made a curse for vs. Thirdly, we are deliuered from the seruitude of sinne, that although it remaine in vs, yet it reigneth not in vs, Rom. 6. 12. Herein the lawe dissenteth from vs.

The Papists.

Bellarmino's opinion then is this, that by the libertie of the Gospell wee are altogether freed from sinne, so that it is thoroughly dead, and not onely not imputed, but not aliue, or hauing any being in the righteous, cap. 6.

Argum. Rom. 7. 6. Now we are deliuered from the law, being dead vnto it, that wee should serue in newnes of the spirit: If sinne be dead in vs, and we vnto it, then hath it no life at all.

Ans. First, in the very same chapter, the Apostle sheweth by his owne example, that euen in the regenerate there is some remnant of sinne: vers. 20. Sinne that dwelleth in me: vers. 21. Euill is present with me: vers. 23. I finde a law in my members rebelling against the law of my minde: If sinne dwell, he present, rebell euen in the righteous, then are they not fully purged from it. Secondly, wherefore the Apostle in saying, we are dead vnto sinne, or to the law, would be vnderstood as where he saith, He that is dead, is freed from sin, Rom. 6. 7. that is, from obedience and seruice to sin: vers. 12. Let not sinne reigne in your mortall bodie: they are freed from the kingdome of sinne, not from the hauing of sinne.

The Protestants.

That wee are by the libertie of faith, freed from the tyrannie and kingdome of sinne, but not altogether from the dwelling and abiding of sinne in vs, so long as we liue in the flesh: thus we are perswaded out of the Scripture.

Arg. Saint Paul being now an Apostle, and so consequently a sanctified and regenerate man, saith, I am carnall, and sold vnder sinne, Rom. 7. vers. 14. And vers. 25. In my flesh I serue the law of sinne: Ergo, sinne was yet abiding in him. Vers. 24. Who shall deliuer me from the bodie of death? that is the bodie of sinne, Rom. 6. vers. 6. Ergo, he was not yet fully deliuered from sinne, though it reigned not in him: but his freedome onely consisted in this, that the bodie of sinne should be destroyed, that hereforth we should not serue sinne, Rom. 6. 6. We are freed then from the seruice and obedience to sinne, not from the possession and habitation of sinne.

Augustine saith, Aliud non est peccare, aliud non habere peccatum: nam in quo peccatum non regnat, non peccat id est, qui non obedi desiderijs eius: in quo autem non existunt ista desideria, non solum non peccat, sed nec habet peccatum: It is one thing not to sinne, another not to haue sinne: for in whom sin reigneth not, he sinneth not, that is, obeyeth not the desires thereof: but he in whom none of these desires are, hath no sinne at all: in 4. cap. epistol. ad Galat. But there is no man liuing, in whom there be not found some euill desires: Ergo, no man, but hath sinne.

Ambrose sheweth wherein Christian libertie consisteth: in 2. Galath. Libertas in Iesu Christo habet subiecti legi: This is the libertie in Iesus Christ, not to be subiect to the law: that is, the terror and feare thereof, as he expoundeth, Galath. 4. Lex data est, ut terrori esset: The law was given to be a terror. Again, in 1. Cor. 3. Lex spiritus dat libertatem solam fidem poscens: The law of the spirit giueth libertie, requiring onely faith: Ergo, this is our libertie, that by faith we are deliuered from the thraldome and bondage of the law, both in the obseruation thereof required as a meane to saluation, and the punishment of the transgression thereof.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER IT BE possible to keepe the law in this life.

The Papists.

63. Error.

IF any man say, that the precepts, and commandments of God vnto a man iustified, and in the state of grace, are impossible to be kept, let him be accursed, Council. Tridentin. sess. 6. can. 18.

Argum. 1. Rom. 8. 4. That the righteousnes of the law might be fulfilled in vs: Ergo, the law of God by the grace of Christ may be kept, and the keeping thereof is our iustice. Christ also saith, my yoke is easie, and my burthen light: Ergo, his commaundements are possible to be kept.

Ans. First, the Apostle saith not, that the law is fulfilled by vs, but in vs by Christ, who is our righteousnes, and sanctification, 1. Cor. 1. 30. The law remaineth still impossible to be kept through the weaknes of our flesh, vers. 3. Neither doth God giue vs abilitie to keepe it, but Christ hath fulfilled it for vs: God sent his sonne in the similitude of sinfull flesh, vers. 3. Wee notwithstanding are bound to walke in obedience to the commaundements, which is, to walke after the spirit, not after the flesh, vers. 4. But this our obedience is imperfect, and farre off from that perfection, which Gods iustice requireth. Secondly, to him that is borne of God, his commaundements are said to be easie, and not grievous, not because they are able perfectly to keepe them: but that strength is giuen to keepe them in part, and they doe willingly, not of constraint exercise themselves therein: as also for the rest, that notwithstanding their obedience is imperfect, yet the curse of the law is taken away, and their sinnes pardoned in Christ.

Augustine also telleth vs how Christs yoke is light: Præcepta sunt uolentibus grauia, uolentibus leuia, itaque aut inquit meum suauis est: de saintar. dogm. cap. 7. His precepts are heauie to the unwilling, but to the willing light, therefore he saith, my yoke is pleasant. The commaundements then are easie, not because we can keepe them perfectly, but Christ maketh vs willing by his spirit in some measure to walke in obedience.

Argum. 2. Rom. 13. He that loueth his neighbour hath kept the whole law: but it is possible to loue our neighbour: Ergo, to keepe the law, Beellar. cap. 11.

Ans. He that loueth perfectly, as he ought, may keepe the law: but the assumption is false, that it is possible for any man so to loue. Beellarmino sheweth, that our loue may be perfectly sufficient toward the keeping of the law, because Dauid saith, With my whole heart haue I sought thee, Psalm. 119. Contra. The Prophet Dauid in so saying, With my whole heart, sheweth the qualitie rather, then the quantitie of his loue: to loue therefore with all his heart, is all one as wher he saith, I haue loued exceedingly, Psalm. 119. vers. 167. that is vnfeinedly, not with a double heart: and as the hebrue phrase is, a heart and a heart, Psalm. 12. 2. This sheweth not therefore the perfection of his loue before God, but the singlenesse and simplicitie of his owne heart.

Argum. 3. That it is possible to keepe the law, they would enforce further by these testimonies of Scripture.

1. Iosua. 11. 15. Iosua left nothing vndone of all, that the Lord had commanded Moses.
2. Act. 13. 22. I haue found Dauid a man after mine owne heart, which will do all things that I wil.
3. 2. King. 23. 25. Like vnto Iosiah was there no king, that turned vnto the Lord, with all his heart, with all his soule, with all his might, according to all the law of Moses.
4. Luke 1. 6. Both were iust before God, (that is, Zacharie and Elizabeth) and walked in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord without reproofe.
5. Iohn 17. 6. Our Sauour thus testifieth of his Apostles, Thine they were, thou gauest them me, and they haue kept thy word.
6. Rom. 7. 19. The euill that I would not, that do I: now, if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sinne that dwelleth in me, Vers. 25. I my selfe in my mind serue the law of God: then Paul sinned not, for sinne cannot be but in the mind, Beellarmino lib. 4. de iustificat. c. 11.
1. Ans. 1. Iosua in that particular, concerning the destruction of the cities of the heathen, did all as God commanded, Deut. 7. 2. 2. Otherwise Moses himselfe, that gaue the charge to Iosua, did not absolutely keepe all Gods commandments: for thus the Lord saith to him and Aaron, Numb. 20. 12. Because ye beloued not me, to sanctifie me in the presence of the children of Israel, ye shall not bring this congregation into the land, &c.
2. The Scripture maketh a manifest exception of the matter of Uriah, that Dauid did that, which was right in the sight of the Lord, sauing in that: 1. King. 15. 5. Ergo, he did not keepe all the commandments.
3. Iosiah turned with all his heart vnto the Lorde, which noteth the singlene and integritie of his heart, rather then perfection: for hee also was disobedient to the voyce of God in going against Pharao: as hee said vnto him in the name of God, Leaue off to come against God that is with me, lest he destroy thee, 2. Chron. 35. 21.

They

They were iust without reproofe: as Augustine saith, Alind est esse sine peccato, &c. aliud sine qua- 4
re: It is one thing to be without sinne, which is said onely of Christ; another to be without re-proofe: de perfecti iusti. contr. Celsitiu. Hierome also distinguisheth of iustice: there is perfecta in- istitia, a perfect iustice, and another, qua composita nostra fragilitati, which agreeth with our frailtie, and so Zacharie and Elizabeth are said to be iust, dialog. 1. contr. Pelag. Otherwise that they were not perfectly iust, it is manifest, for the Angel saith to Zacharie, Thou shalt be dumbe, quia non cre- disti, because thou hast not beleoed my wordes, Luke 1. 20.

In the same sence the Apostles kept the word of Christ; as Paul saith, We are perfect, Philip. 3.
vers. 15. As many as be perfect: Secundum humana fragilitas in modum; after the measure of humane 5. frailtie: As Hierome saith, dialog. 2. contra. Pelag. For absolutely the Apostles had not kept Christs word, seeing Peter before this, for giuing carnall counsell to Christ against his passion, deserued to be called Sathan, Matth. 16. 23.

First, this place evidently maketh against him; for how dare he conclude that Paul had no sin, seeing he confesseth that sine duels uolum, Rom. 7. 19. Secondly, by his mind and spirit is not vn- 6.
derstood his soule, but the regenerate part of the whole man, wherein, by the grace of God, hee consented to the law of God; but the law of his flesh, that is, the vnregenerate part resisted; so that his obedience to the law was thereby hindered. 3. Lastly, Augustine thus saith, Idem A- ugustinus & perfectum se dicit & imperfectum; imperfectum cogitando quantum illi ad illam iustitiam de- est. The Apostle doth call himselfe perfect, Philip. 3. 15. and imperfect, ibid. vers. 12. imperfect; by thinking what hee wanted of that iustice, whose fulnes hee thirsted for: perfect; quid suam per- fectionem facere non erubescit, because he is not ashamed to confesse his imperfection: Like as wee call a Traueller perfect, cuius bene promouetur accessio, quoniam non perficiatur intentio, nisi fuerit facta peruasio: Whose accessio still is furthered, though his intention be not perfited, till his peruention be fulfilled, contr. 2. epistol. Pelag. 3. 7. Paul therefore had no perfect or absolute iustice and obedience.

Argum. 4. The old Pelagians, who held the same or very like position to the Papists, obiected this; Si impossibilia sunt mandata, non in his erit culpa, qui accipere mandata, sed in eo qui dedit impossi- bilia: If the commandements be impossible, the fault is not in them that receiued them, but in him that gaue them, Hieron. ad Ctesiphont.

First, Hierome answereth, Namquid praecepti mihi Deus, ut offensa, quod Deus est? &c. Hath God commanded, that I should be the same, that God is? that I should haue that which the Angels haue not? Of Christ it is written, Peccatum non fecit, he did no sinne: if this, be common to mee and Christ, Quid ille habuit proprium? what had he proper to himselfe?

Secondly, saith he, Possibilia sunt Dei mandata, &c. The commandements of God are possible; who denieth it? but how this is to be vnderstood, the chosen vessell sheweth. Rom. 8. 3. That which was impossible in the law, &c. God sending his filium, &c. His meaning is, that the commandements were possible in the obedience of Christ, Hieron. ad Ctesiphont.

Thirdly, Impossibilia sunt, non imbecillitate natura, sed animi lassitudine: They are impossible, not by the imbecillitie of nature, (wherein Adam was first created) sed lassitudine animi, but through the infirmitie of the minde, (by Adams fall:) dialog. 1. aduers. Pelagian.

The Protestants.

That no mortall man is able to keepe the Lawe of God perfectly in this life, it may bee thus proued.

Argum. 1. S. Peter saith, Act. 15. 10. Why tempt ye God, to lay a yoke on the disciples neckes, which 1.
neither our fathers nor we were able to beare: Ergo, the law is an importable burthen, and so impossible to be kept.

Againe, S. Paul saith, Rom. 7. 18. To will is present with mee, but I find no meanes to performe that is 2.
good: Ergo, Paul could not keepe the law.

Bellarm. S. Peter speaketh of the ceremonial law, which being added to the moral law, made it 1. importable; but now the ceremonial being abolished, the moral law is portable. s. 14. resp. ad loc. 1.

Contra. 1. Though the Apostle in that place treat chiefly of the ceremoniall, yet the reason is generall: Waebatene through the grace of the Lord Iesus to be saved, Act. 15. vers. 11. Beleeue is opposed not onely to the ceremoniall, but morall law also: wherefore seeing that is made easie and portable by faith, which otherwise is importable, it followeth that both the ceremoniall and morall are in themselves importable. 2. The Apostle generally speaking of the whole law, saith it was impossible, Rom. 8. 3.

Contra. 1. The Apostle sheweth the contrarie: that both it is a sinne to lust, Rom. 7. 7. I know not sinne, but by the law; for I had not knowne lust, except the law had said, thou shalt not lust: Ergo, it is sin to lust. 2. He confesseth in direct wordes also, that this sinne dwelleth in him, vers. 10.

Kkkk

Argum. 2. Galath. 3. 10. As many as are under the works of the law, are under the curse: for it is written, cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the booke of the law: The Apostle reasoneth thus: who so keepeth not the law in all points, standeth accursed: but no man is able to keepe it: Ergo, every man is vnder the curse.

Bellarmino answereth, that they are accursed, which thinke to keepe the law by their owne strength, without grace, which indeed it is impossible to doe, but possible by grace: resp. ad h. 2.

Contra. Nay the Apostle sheweth, that it is possible no way to keepe the law perfectly: for if man by grace might performe the law, he might deliuer himself by grace from the curse: but now are we redeemed only from the curse by Christ, who was made a curse for vs, vers. 13. Ergo, the law by no man can be performed. ¶ The law is not of faith, vers. 12. But if by faith and grace the law could be kept, then the law should be of faith.

Argum. 3. If the righteous man doth keepe the law, then is he without sinne: for where there is no transgression of the law, there is no sinne: but no man is without sin, Iam. 3. In many things we offend all: 1. Ioh. 1. If we say we have no sinne, we deceive our selves: Ergo, no man can keepe the law.

Bellarmino answereth, that the veniall sinnes which iust men commit, are not directly against the lawe, but præter legem, beside the lawe: and therefore they may keepe the lawe, and yet have veniall sinnes.

Contra. First, Saint Iohn saith, Sinns is the transgression of the law, and whoſoever committeth sinne transgresseth the law, 1. Iohn. 1. 4. but a veniall or small offence is sinne: Ergo, a transgression: and where the law is transgressed it is not kept. Secondly, S. Iames saith, Whoſoever shall keepe the whole law, and yet faile in one point, he is guiltie of all, Iam. 2. 10. But he that committeth veniall sinnes, faileth in some point, he doth somewhat (præter legem) beside the law: Ergo, they are guiltie of the whole, and so transgreſſe contra legem, against the law: and so this distinction of sinnes beside, and against the law, is found nothing worth.

Augustine thus writeth of this matter against the Pelagians: Ilud quod dicunt sine vilo peccato aliquos homines vixisse in hoc seculo, vel vivere, optandum est ut fiat, conandum est ut fiat, supplicandum est ut fiat, non tamen, quasi factum fuerit, confidendum: That which they say, that some may, and haue lived here without sinne, we must endeavour, and pray, that it may be so, not presume that it hath been done: contr. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 10.

Concil. Milenitan. c. 6. Placuit, quod aye S. Iohannes, si dixerimus, quod peccatum non habemus, nos ipsos seducimus, quisquis sic accipiendum putat, ut deat propter humanitatem non oportere dici, nos non habere peccatum, non quia veritas est, anathema sit: Whereas S. Iohn saith, if we say we haue no sinne, we deceive our selves: if any man thinke that of curtesie and humanitie, we say that we haue no sin, not because it is so indeede, let him be accursed. But they which say, they can keepe the law, consequently affirme that they haue no sinne.

See the testimonie of the holie Martyrs: Patrick Hamelton Martyr, saith, that the law biddeth vs to doe that thing, which is impossible, in as much as the keeping of the commandments, which the law biddeth, is impossible, Fox pag. 976.

Master Tyndall holie Martyr: The law, when it commandeth thou shalt not lust, giueth thee not power so to doe, but damneth thee, because thou canst not so doe: If thou wilt therefore be at peace with God, thou must thou turne to the promises of the Gospell: Fox pag. 1247.

AN APPENDIX, OF THE DIVISION OF THE LAW.

The Papists.

THe Master of the Sentences, whom the rest doe follow, maketh but three commaundements in the first table, ioyning in one the first and the second: lib. 3. dist. 37. liter. b. and he diuideth the second table into seauen, making two of the last commaundement: this to be the sixth, Thou shalt not count thy neighbours wife: that which followeth, Thou shalt not count thy neighbours house, nor his servant, &c. to be the seauenth and the last: lib. 3. dist. 40. liter. a. This deuice the Papists succeeding haue the more willingly embraced, that the second commaundement, which doth pinch them very sore, might be left out altogether, which some of them haue most impiously attempted. And Catharinus, a great popish writer, is directly of this iudgement, mandatum secundum fuisse temporale, that the second commaundement was but temporall, to continue for a time: opusculi de imaginib. For this their deuice, reasons out of Scripture they haue none.

The Protestants.

THIS diuision of the law, to ioyne the first and the second commaundement in one, and so to make two of the last; wee shew it to be contrarie to the Scripture, to reason, and authority.

First,

First, Mark. 10. 19. our Sauour Christ maketh but fixe commandements in the second table : where in stead of the last, Thou shalt not couet, is put, Thou shalt hurt no man, no not so much as by thought or desire to couet any thing of his.

Againe, Saint Paul, Rom. 7. 8. calleth the law forbidding to lust, inuidia, a commaundement in the singular number, not commaundements.

Secondly, reason also giueth, that this commaundement, Thou shalt not couet, should be but one: first, diuers commaundements haue their diuers acts which are forbidden, as to steale, to kill, to commit adulterie: but these two supposed lawes haue but one action, which is to couet. Secondly, the conclusion, after the particular induction, uer anything that is his, sheweth, that all the particulars before going belong vnto the same charge and commaundement.

Thirdly, 1. Origen mistaketh this diuision thus writing in 8. Exod. Hac omnia nonnulli putant simul esse mandatum, quod si ita putetur, non complebitur decem numerus mandatorum: Some thinke all these to be one commaundement: which if it be so, how shall the number of tenne commaundements be fulfilled? Therefore this is the first commaundement, Thou shalt haue no other Gods, &c. The second, Thou shalt make no Idoll, &c.

Ambros. Constat primum esse mandatum, &c. It is euident this is the first commaundement, Thou shalt haue no other Gods, &c. then, Thou shalt make no image, &c. the third, Thou shalt not take the name &c. in 5. ad Ephes.

Leodius. epist. cont. Paschal. 2. Tertium decalogi, &c. The third precept, Thou shalt not take in vaine, &c.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE WORKS of Supererogation.

The Papists.

They teach, that it is not onely possible for men to keepe the law of God in this life, but to do <sup>65. Error.</sup> more than is prescribed or commaunded: and that men of their abundance may allot vnto others such workes of supererogation, Rhemist. 1. Cor. 9. sect. 6. ex Tileman. loc. 3. err. 16.

Argum. 2. Cor. 8. sect. 3. As your abundance now supplieth their want, their abundance also may supplie your want, that there may be equalitie. Saints, or other vertuous persons may in measure and proportion of other mens deseruings, allot vnto them as well the supererogation of their spiritual works, as those that abound in worldly goods may giue almes of their superfluities, to them which are in necessitie, Rhemist. totid. verbi.

Ans. 1. This place proueth no communication of merits of one to another: but that as euery one aboundeth in the gifts and graces of God, so they ought to communicate the vse thereof one to anothers benefit: for no man meriteth himselfe by any worke of his: therefore he can not communicate that to another, which he hath not himselfe. Here also mention is made of mutuall communication, for one to supplie anothers want: but he that doth supererogate to another of the abundance of his good workes, hath no neede to haue his wants supplied by another mans deseruings: therefore there is no mutuall communicating betweene them, which is the thing whereof the Apostle speaketh in this place.

The Protestants.

Arg. That no man is holpen by another mans deseruings, but all that a man can doe, is little enough and not sufficient for himselfe; it is plaine in the Gospell: where our Sauour saith, That when we haue done all that is commaunded, we are vnprofitable seruants, and did no more than was our dutie, Luk. 17. 10. Ergo, a man cannot doe more than his dutie.

Hierome vpon this place thus concludeth: Su inutilis est, qui fecit omnia, quid de illo dicendum est, qui exple non potuit: If he be an vnprofitable seruant, which did all, what shall be said of him which could not fulfill them? ad Ctesiphont.

Saint Ambrose vpon the same words writeth thus; Ergo, & cum fecerimus quod vobis imperatum est, &c. Therefore, when we haue done that which is commaunded vs, we must not straight be exulted, but humble our selues: quia non statim, si aliquid fecerimus, implemus omnia seruitoris obsequia, quis tanta salutis beneficia digno possit aquare seruitio? quis potest saluare, quod accepit? because not straightwaies, if we haue done any thing, we haue performed all the duties of our seruice, who can be equall in his seruice to so great benefit of saluation? who can pay that which he hath receiued? serm. 16. in Psal. 119. Ergo, no man can doe more than he is bound to doe.

Wee may also remember the parable of the Virgins, Matth. 25. where the five wise refuse to giue of their oyle to the five foolish: least (say they) there will not be enough for vs and you. No man therefore hath attained to such a perfection of goodnes, that he is able to spare ought for his brother, but shall haue neede thereof himselfe.

monio quicquam adiunatur apud Deum: & vix sibi quisque sufficit, ut sibi testimonium perhibeat conscientia sua: Every man shall giue account for himselfe, neither is a man relieued by anothers testimony before God: the testimonie of a mans conscience is hardly sufficient for himselfe. See more of this matter: Controvers. 14. quæst. 7. part. 4. & quæst. 8. part. 3. artic. 2.

Terentian hereof also thus writeth, lib. de Pudicit. Sufficiat martyri propria delicta purgasse, ingrati, vel superbi est in alios spargere, quod ipse promagno fuerit consecutus: æquis alienam mortem sua morte saluit, nisi solus filius dei? Let it suffice a Martyr to haue purged his owne sin, it is the part of an vnthankfull or proude man, to scatter vpon others, that which he hath obtained for a great benefit: doth any man by his death loose anothers death, but onely the sonne of God?

Esper. a learned Papist thus confesseth: Quo die multa nimirum misericordia opus erit omnibus Sanctis: In which day of the Lord all the Saints shall haue great neede of mercie: in 2. Tim. p. 15. And againe he thus alleageth out of Augustines Sentences, collected by Prosper. sent. 2. 34. Nemo fidelium, quamuis multum profecerit, dicat, sufficit mihi: Let none of the Saints, though he haue well profited, say, it sufficeth me: p. 126. If no man hath sufficient for himselfe, how can hee supererogate to others.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER GOD BE to be serued for hope of reward, or feare of punishment.

The Papists.

66. Error.

MEn ought to doe good in respect and for reward and recompence in heauen for their good workes: the Apostle saith of Moses, Hebr. 11. 26. He had respect to the recompence of reward, Rhemist. ibid.

The Protestants.

In Psal. 51.

Answ. First, we denie, that we ought to make account of heauen to be giuen as a iust recompence deferred by our workes: for life eternall, as the Apostle saith, is the free gift of God, Roman. 6. 23. Secondly, wee graunt that men in their well doing ought to haue respect to the reward, but not chiefly or principally: but the respect of Gods glorie and their owne dutie ought to moue them more.

Argum. Psal. 34. 8. Taste and see, how gracious the Lord is: We ought as dutifull children to yeeld obedience to the Lord, and delight in him, euen because of that pleasant taste, comfort and ioy, which we feele in his goodnes toward vs. Augustine saith well, Dens non propterea se amari vult, quia dat aliquid prater se, sed quia dat se: God would not be beloued of vs, because hee giueth or promisseth any thing beside himselfe, but because he giueth himselfe.

Ambrose: Propositum piamentis mercedem non expetit, sed pro mercede habet boni facti conscientiam & iusti operis effectum: The purpose of a godly minde doth desire no reward, but in stead of a reward hath the conscience of a good fact, and the effect of a righteous worke, lib. 1. de Abram. 3.

Master Tyndall holy Martyr saith: Euery Christian man must keepe Gods commaundements by loue, and not by hope, to get for his seruice euermlasting life, pag. 1255. artic. 10. Again, they that for feare of hell, or the ioyes of heauen doe their dutie, doe a constrained seruice which God will not haue: such are hyred men and waged seruants, not children, pag. 1255. col. 2.

The Papists.

67. Error.

2. Even in right Christian godly men there remaineth doubt, mistrust, feare of hell and damnation: and the feare of Gods iudgements causeth iust men to humble themselves, lest they should be damned. And so S. Paul saith, Werke out your saluation with feare and trembling, Philip. 2. Rhemist. 1. Iohn. 4. sect. 6.

The Protestants.

In Psal. 127.

Answ. WE acknowledge a dutifull reuerence and feare of God alwaies rentaining in the godly: but it is farre from that seruile and slauish feare, which is caused only by the remembrance of hell fire and eternall iudgement. Augustine doth thus resemble the matter: The chaste wife (saith he) and the adulterous do both feare their husbands: sed casta timet ne discedat vir; adultera, ne veniat: But the chaste wife is afraide lest her husband should depart; the adulterous is afraide lest he should come. Such a feare as is in the chaste wife, we grant to be in the children of God, but not the other.

2. We also confesse, that the horror of hell is profitable to make a way and entrance for the calling of worldly and hard hearted men, as the needle or bristle (as Augustine saith) maketh a way for the thread: but in a man already called, this feare is expelled by loue, as the Apostle saith, 1. Iohn. 4. 18. For wee must be of those that loue the appearing of Christ, 2. Timoth. 4. 8. not of that number which feare it, and wish it were prolonged.

August. Si possumus efficere, fratres, ut dies iudicii non venires, puto, quia nec sic erat, male viuendum: If wee could bring it about, that the day of iudgement should not come at all, wee ought not for all all that to liue ill. His meaning is, that wee ought not to liue well onely for feare of Gods iudgements.

Origen tract. 33. in Matth. vpon these words, Matth. 25. 24. I knew thou wast an hard man and therefore was afraide: Nec est bonus huiusmodi timor, nec liberat nos talis timor à tenebris exterioribus: This feare is not good, neither deliuereth vs from vtter darknes.

Peter Lombard. Inimicus est iustitia, qui pœna timore non peccat: He is an enemy to iustice, that sinneth not for feare of punishment, lib. 3. dist. 36. iter. c.

Master Tyndall holy Martyr: They are the people of Christ, which willingly doe heare and follow him, not for feare of the law, but onely entised and lead with a gracious libertie, and faithfull loue, not doing any thing, because it is commaunded, but because it is pleasant and acceptable to them, though it were not commaunded, Fax pag. 1253. col. 2.

THE SECOND GENERALL QUESTION of good workes.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE necessity of workes.

The Papists.

Their opinion is, that good workes are not onely necessarie to saluation, necessitate præsentia, 68. Error. because they must necessarily be present, and we cannot be without them: but necessitate efficietia, they are necessarie, as efficient causes together with faith, of our saluation.

Argum. Phil. 3. 12. Workes out your saluation with feare, and trembling: 2. Cor. 4. 17. Our light affliction causeth vnto vs a more excellent weight of glorie: Ergo, our workes and sufferings are the cause of saluation, Bellar. cap. 7.

Answ. 1. To the first place we say, that the Apostle there saith none other thing, than his fellow Apostle Saint Peter, 2. Epist. 1. 10. Make your election sure: to worke out our saluation, and to make our election sure by good workes, is all one, not that our saluation or election is thereby caused before God: but good workes doe serue to assure our owne conscience of our saluation, and to perfir or finish it to our selues. And againe it followeth in the next verse: For it is God which worketh in you both the will and the deede, vers. 13. So then man worketh, but it is God, that giueth him grace to worke: as Augustine saith, Quicquid vult bonum, quicquid potest, à domino est. quia sine me, ait dominus, nihil potestis facere: What good so euer a man willet, or doeth, is of the Lord, for without me faith the Lord, you can doe nothing: Hypognost. cont. Pelag. articulo 2.

2. Affliction is not the cause of saluation, for then the Apostle should be contrarieto himselfe, Rom. 8. 18. I count that the afflictions of this present time are not worthe the glorie, &c. But it is onely the way, that bringeth vs to Heauen, Matth. 7. 14. The gate is narrow, and the way strait, that lea- deth to life. And Bernard (well saith) Sunt via regni, non causa regnandi: Good workes are the way to the kingdome, not the cause of the kingdome.

The Protestants.

A Necessitie of good workes we graunt, as liuely testimonies of our faith, without the which there is neither faith nor life: Matth. 7. 19. Every tree, that bringeth not forth good fruite is hewen downe, &c. And S. James saith, 2. 18. Shew me thy faith, out of thy workes: Bernard also writeth: Credis in Christum? fac Christi opera, ut vinat fides tua: Dooft thou beleue in Christ? doe Christs workes, that thy faith may liue: in Paschal. ser. 2. such a necessitie of workes we graunt, but not as the cause or efficient of saluation.

Argum. Rom. 3. 28. A man is iustified by faith, without the workes of the law, Galath. 2. 20. I liue by the faith of the sonne of God, chap. 3. 11. No man is iustified by the law, and the law is not of faith: Ergo, faith onely is necessarie to our iustification: workes, as being of the law, are not herein ioyn- ed with faith, for then the law were of faith: But they follow after as frutes of our iustification.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 8. Opera iustificationum gratia Dei effectus sunt, & mouente & adiunante spiri- tu sancto fiunt: The workes of those that are iustified, are the effects or frutes of grace, and are wrought by the motion of the spirite. Men then are first iustified by grace, and after their iustifica- tion, good workes are wrought.

The Martyrs haue sealed this truth: Patrick Hamelton: No man is iustified by the deedes of the law, but by the faith of Iesus, Fax pag. 978. Catherine Hamelton put to death, for saying, I know perfectly, that no workes can saue me, but onely the workes of Christ my Lord and Sauour.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE EFFICACIE OF workes, whether we are thereby iustified.

The Papists.

69. Error.

THAT a man by good workes is iustified, and made more iust, they thinke to be very manifest and plaine out of Scripture: wherein, as it shall appeare, they are greatly deceiued, and doe no lesse deceiue others seduced by them.

Argum. 1. Of all others, which may seeme to make for them, they most of al vrge that of Saint James 2. 21. Was not Abraham our father iustified through workes, vers. 25. Likewise was Rahab the harlot iustified through workes: Ergo, we are iustified by our workes, Bellarmin. cap. 18.

Ans. S. James in saying we are iustified by workes, meaneth not that iustification whereby we are made iust before God, for then he should be contrarie to S. Paul, who saith, we are iustified without workes, Rom. 3. 28. But by being iustified he vnderstandeth nothing else, but to be declared iust, as well before men, as in the sight of God: which declaration is testified and shewed forth by our workes proceeding of faith.

Bellarmin contrariwise laboureth to proue, that the word cannot be so taken here: for the Apostle ioyneth workes and faith together, vers. 22. The faith wrought with his workes, and through his workes the faith was made perfect: workes and faith doe then worke together; as one worketh, so doth the other, they iustifie both alike: but faith iustifieth not by way of declaration, but verilie, and in deede, Ergo.

Contra. First, it followeth not, because faith worketh with workes, that therefore they worke both alike: it is one thing for faith to iustifie with workes, another to iustifie as workes: Secondly, as faith doth iustifie vs before God, so also it iustifieth before men, that is, faith serueth also for the declaration of our iustification, in that it causeth good workes, and these good workes doe testifie of faith, that it is lively, and perfect, not a dead faith. Thirdly, that to iustifie is here taken onely for the declaration, or testification of our faith, it thus appeareth: first, that this word is so vsed in Scripture, it is plaine, Rom. 3. 4. that thou maiest be iustified in thy words: that is knowne, or declared to be iust. Augustine also saith, Iustificabuntur, id est, iusti habebuntur, they shall be iustified, that is counted iust, as we also say, Sanctificetur nomen tuum, id est, sanctum habeatur, let thy name be halowed, that is, acknowledged to be holy. Secondly, the Apostle himselfe saith, vers. 18. Shew me thy faith out of thy workes, &c. he speaketh onely of the outward shewing and testification of faith. Thirdly, if we take iustification properly, as S. Paul vseth the word, then should S. James be contrarie to S. Paul, who saith, we are iustified by faith without workes.

Bellarmin answereth; that Saint Paul speaketh of the first iustification, which is without workes; Saint James of the second iustification, whereby a man is made more iust, and this is caused by good workes.

Contra. First, we deny any such difference of iustification: the Scripture speaketh but of one iustification, Rom. 8. 30. Whome hee iustified, them also hee glorified: vnlesse you will haue another iustification to come after our glorification: and verse 7. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven: the iustification in remission of sinnes, doth make a man blessed: Ergo, it is the onely sufficient iustification.

Secondly, if faith doe iustifie as it is a worke, by the merit and worthines thereof, as it is by our aduersaries affirmed, and not instrumentally onely by apprehending Christ, then neither shall their first iustification be without workes, because it is not without faith.

Thirdly, S. Paul and S. James speake both of one and the selfe same iustification before God: for both of them alleage the same example of Abraham, both citing the same testimony of Scripture: Abraham beloued God, and it was counted vnto him for righteousness: Wherefore they bringing in the same example, and vsing the same words, must needs apply them to the same end. Rahab also is brought in an example of the very first iustification, Rahab the harlot was iustified: she was an harlot onely before her first iustification: so then it will follow, that euen the first iustification is by workes, if they will haue Saint James to vnderstand iustification as Saint Paul doth.

Argum. 2. Bellarmin for iustification by workes further opposeth these places of Scripture.

1. 1. Rom. 6. 19. As you haue given your members, seruants to uncleauenesse, and iniquitie to commit iniquitie, so now giue your members seruants to iustice or righte conuersione to sanctification: by sanctification here iustification is signified, being opposed to iniquitie.
2. 2. 2. Cor. 7. 1. Hauiing these promises, let vs cleanse our selues from all filthines of the flesh and spirit, and grow vp vnto sanctification in the feare of the Lord: we must grow vp euery day to more iustice and sanctification.
3. 3. 2. Cor. 9. 10. He will multiplie your seeds, and increase the fruites of your iustice: by almes then our iustice is encreased.

4. Iohn

4. Iohn 14. 23. If any man love me, he will keepe my word, and my father will love him: this keeping of the commandements doth procure the loue of God, and consequently iustification.

5. Apocal. 22. 11. He that is filthy, let him be filthy still, he that is iust, iustificatur adhuc, let him be iustified still. Ergo, by good workes a man hath encrease of iustification.

1. Ans. First, sanctification, sanctificatio, is the fruite of iustice or righteousness by faith: as the Apostle saith, Rom. 6. 22. you haue your fruit vnto holines or sanctification: this place onely sheweth, that we must be the seruants of the iustice of faith, to bring forth fruits of sanctification. Secondly, iniquitas, iniquitie, is a generall name, both signifying the deprauation and vncleanness of our nature, as here it is ioyned with it, as also it betokeneth actuall sinne, for as Saint Iohn saith, iniquitas est peccatum: sinne is iniquitie or transgression of the lawe, 1. Iohn 3. 4. so that the word iniquitie or transgression, may very well answere vnto iustice and sanctification, the tree and the fruite.

2. We deny not, but that we must continually grow vp and encrease in the workes of sanctification, which the Apostle here affirmeth; but iustification is one thing, sanctification another: we must first be iustified by faith in the promises of Christ: of the which promises also the Apostle here maketh mention; then followeth as an effect and fruite thereof, our sanctification and holines with the workes thereof.

3. First, by iustice here either the Apostle vnderstandeth not the iustice of faith, wherewith we are iustified before God; but the iustice wrought in vs by faith, which they call inherent or second iustice: as Matth. 6. 1. Do not your iustice before men, to bee seene of them: but the inward iustice of faith cannot be seene of men: and verse 2. by iustice, our Sauour expoundeth almes. Secondly, or else, if we vnderstand the true iustice of faith: the Apostle saith not, that iustice is selfe, but the fruites thereof are encreased, which we deny not. Thirdly, though the iustice of faith before God be not encreased, yet we may encrease in the assurance thereof vnto our selues.

4. Our Sauour expoundeth himselfe, verbe 1. I will love him, and shew my selfe vnto him: this loue then of God in Christ, is not procured by good workes, but onely shewed, manifested and assured, as S. Peter saith, 2. Pet. 1. 10. Make your calling and election sure by good workes.

5. First, it is manifest by the opposition, that the Apostle speaketh of that iustice which is wrought in vs by faith, which they call the second iustice: for he had said before: inquit, he that is vnjust or iniurious, or as their owne translation readeth, qui nocet, he that is hurtfull, let him be hurtfull still: as this is vnderstood not of original, but externall iniustice; so the clause following, inquit, he that is iust, let him be more iustified, must be referred to the encrease of iustice. Secondly, vntill we will vnderstand it of the assurance of iustification to our selues, wherein as I saide before we may encrease: but what is this to iustification by workes, whereof there is not one syllable mentioned.

The Protestants.

That good workes, although they be notable testimonies of our faith, yet helpe not to iustify vs before God: the Scripture thus witnesseth.

Argum. 1. Rom. 4. 7. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven: our blessednes is not caused by our workes, but by the free remission of our sinnes in Christ.

Bellarmine answereth, that Saint Paul speaketh of the first iustification, or the beginning of iustification.

Contra. 1. He speaketh of that iustification, which blessednesse followeth, which is not the beginning, but the very perfection of our iustification: we see heauen is promised at the first remission of our sinnes, what need then any other iustification? As Augustine saith, Donando delicta facis se debitorem corone, by forgiuing of our sinnes, he hath made himselfe a debtor of the crowne.

2. Again, whereas man all his life long hath need of remission of sinnes, this iustification, whereby all our sinnes are remitted, is not the beginning only, but the consummation thereof, which extendeth it selfe throughout our whole life. Wherefore good workes are not given vs to be iustified thereby, but to be euident signes and witneses of our faith, to the glorie of God: as Bernard saith, Sicut corporis huius vitam ex corporis motu dignoscimus, sic fidei vitam ex operibus hominis: As we discern the life of the body by the motion, so faith by good workes: In Paschali serm. 2.

Argum. 2. Psalm. 143. 2. Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant (saith the Prophet) for in thy forgiuing shall mine iniquities be iustified: Matth. 6. 12. Our Sauour teacheth euery man, though neuer so iust, to pray, forgiue us our sinnes, &c. Ergo, no man is iust by his workes.

Bellarm. 1. David desireth not to be iudged according to those things, which he had of himselfe, whereby he could not be iustified. 2. Or it is to be vnderstoode of venial sinnes. 3. Or he saith, that in comparison of God, who is perfectly iust, no man can be iustified, Bellarm. cap. 20. resp. ad loc. 2.

Contra. 1. David speaketh of himselfe as Gods seruant, and so in the state of grace, not as vnder his naturall condition. 2. Doth he thinke that God hauing forgiuen vnto his seruants their greater greater finnes, will enter into iudgement with them for small offences, which he calleth veniall: therefore Dauid vnderstandeth all finnes whatsoeuer: as in the like place is euident, Psal. 130.2. Sic obseruaueris iniquitates, quis sustinebit? If thou marke iniquities, who shall abide it? 3. Hee saith not, in comparison of God, but in the sight of God: and what other iustification do we speake of, but before God: before men, we denie not, but by good workes one may be iustified, that is, knowne or declared so to be. Againe, he speaketh of such a iustification, whereby Gods seruants shall be deliuered from iudgment: which is not to be made iust, as God is, or equall vnto him; for then euery man should be iudged or condemned: for such iustice the Angels haue not, much lesse men.

2. Bellarm. That petition of the Lodes prayer is to be vnderstood onely of veniall finnes, which are mixed with our good workes, c.20. resp. ad loc. 5.

3. Contra. 1. The word is iniquitates, debitis; we pray to haue all our debts forgiuen: but I trust wee are more endangered and indebted to God, by great finnes then small. 2. Saint Luke readeth, quapris, finnes: and S. Iohn defineth, quapris, finis to be absque, transgression: 1. Iohn 3.4. but great finnes are transgressions of the law, more then veniall: Ergo, they are not excluded. 3. If good workes are tempered with veniall sins, how can they, being imperfect, make vs iust, & perfect before God?

Concil. Aransican. can. 20. Multa in homine bona sunt, qua non facit homo, nulla vera bona facit homo, qua Deus non praestat, ut faciat homo. Many good things are wrought in man, without man; but man doth no good thinges, which God doth not first giue strength to man to worke and doe them. A man then must first receiue grace of God to worke (which is giuen in his iustification) and then he worketh: so that good workes are the effect, not the cause of iustification. See the scale of the Martyrs to this doctrine, Part. 1. of this Question.

Decret. pars. 2. can. 3. qu. 7. c. 5. Gregor. vpon these words, Genes. 4.4. The Lord had respect to Abel and his offering: first vnto Abel, then to his offering: Ex qua re patenter ostenditur, quia non offerens à numeribus, sed munera ab offerente placuerunt: By thence which it is euident, that not the offerer by his gift, but the gift because of the offerer pleased: Ergo, Abel was not iustified by his gift, but before his gift.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE IMPEDIMENTS of good workes.

FIRST, WHETHER THE WORKES OF the righteous be perfect.

The Papists.

70. Error.

Their opinion is, that a iust man in his good workes doth not sinne so much as venially, Concil. Tridentin. sess. 6. can. 25. but that their workes are truly iust, without any spot or blemish of sinne, Bellarm. cap. 15.

Argum. 1. Iob. 1. 22. In all this did not Iob sinne, nor charge God foolishly: Psal. 7. 6. Iudge me according to my righteousnesse: Dauid would not haue stood vpon his righteousnesse before God, if it had bin defiled with sinne, Bellarm. cap. 15.

Ans. 1. Iob is sayd as yet not to sinne, not that he was simply without sinne, but in respect of his sinne afterward committed with his mouth, in murmuring against God; he had not yet fallen into that great sinne to charge God foolishly: for otherwise Iob confesseth himselfe, that if he should wash himselfe most cleane, his vnnie clothes should defile him, Iob. 9. 30. that is, euen in his best workes, God could find sufficient matter against him.

2. The Prophet Dauid doth not stand vpon his innocencie or righteousnesse before God: for elsewhere he saith, If thou markest what is done amisse, who shall be able to abide it? Psal. 133. 2. and in thy sight no man living shall be iustified, Psal. 143. 2. But he cleareth himselfe for his vpright and true dealing among men, as vers. 3. If I haue done this thing, &c. his enemies accused him wrongfully, and persecuted him without a cause, Psal. 25. 3.

Argum. 2. These places also are produced for the perfection of Workes.

1. Matth. 6. 22. If thy eye be single, all thy bodie is light: Luke 11. 36. If thy bodie be light, having no part dark: Ergo, in good workes there is no darkenesse at all.

2. 1. Corinth. 3. 12. If any build vpon this foundation, gold, silver: Ergo, some workes are as precious and perfect as gold.

3. Iam. 3. 2. In many things we offend all: Ergo, in some thinges we offend not.

4. Psal. 4. 4. Tremble and sinne not; Isay. 1. 16, 17. Cease to do euill, learne to do well: to what end are we thus exhorted not to sinne, if we cannot choose but sinne in our good workes.

5. Act. 10. 35. He that feareth God, and worketh righteousnesse, is accepted before him: but nothing can please God, but that, which is truly good.

6. In

6. In diuers places the Scripture calleth the works of the righteous, good works : as Matthe. 5. verſ. 16. that men ſeeing your good workes, &c. Bellarm. lib. 4. de iuſticiis c. 15.

Contra. 1. The ſimple eye, ſignifieth not perfection, but integritie and ſinglenes of heart, without guile or diſſimulation: as Auguſtine very well diſtinguiſheth betweene reſtū cordis & mundum corde: right in heart, and cleane in heart: reſtū cordis eſt, qui reſtō curſu, i. reſtā fide peruenire contendit, ubi habitat mundum corde: He is right in heart, which with a right courſe, that is a right faith, contendeth to come thither, where dwelleth the cleane in heart, de perfecti iuſticiæ contr. Celeſtin. Secondly, the light hauing no darkeneſſe, is Faith, which wholly lighteneth the body: as Chriſt ſaith, John 13. 10. He that is waſhed, is cleane euery whit: this maketh not for the perfection of workes. Thirdly, yet the light of faith, though conſidered in it ſelfe, it hath no darkeneſſe; yet in the ſight of God, and conſeſtred with his light, is full of darkeneſſe: As Hierome well noteth vpon theſe wordes, 1. John 1. 5. God is light, and in him is no darkeneſſe: Offendit omnia aliorum lumina aliqua ſordis maculari: He ſheweth that all other lights are obſcured with ſome blemiſh.

First, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of teachers, and of ſound or corrupt doctrine, which he compareth to gold, ſiluer, or ſtubble, hay, &c. for he compareth himſelfe and other teachers to builders, verſ. 10. So then a man may teach pure and ſincere doctrine, 2. Cor. 2. 17. We ſpeake of ſinceritie: though the Apoſtle denie himſelfe to be perfect in working, Philip. 3. 12. Not as though we were already perfect. 2. This gold, ſiluer, &c. is ſo called not ſimply, being layd to Gods touchſtone, but in reſpect of the buy, ſtubble, &c. So we denie not, but that good workes in reſpect of euill, are as gold. 3. S. Peter expoundeth faith to be that, which is more precious then gold, 1. Pet. 1. 7. This place therefore maketh nothing for the perfection of workes.

First, In many things we offend all; ſaith the Apoſtle: whereupon it is well inferred, that in ſome things we offend not all, which is true: for euery man offendeth not in euery thing: but hereof it followeth not, that in ſome things no man offendeth. 2. The Apoſtle affirmeth the contrary, that he is a perfect man, that offendeth not in word: but no man is ſo perfect, and therefore in this point all offend in ſome meaſure: as Rom. 3. 4. Let God be true and euery man a liar. 3. The word is iniquus, we fall or ſtumble: ſo that in his conſtruction, ſome thing there may be, wherein a righteous man doth not fall or ſtumble; that is, apparently or notoriously tranſgreſſe, though he be not without fault.

First, his meaning is, that we ſhould not be outrageous or immoderate in our anger; as the Apoſtle expoundeth, Ephes. 4. 26. Let not the Sunne goe downe vpon your wrath: not that we can be altogether free from corruption. 2. We are exhorted to ceaſe to do euill; that is, to abſtaine from the workes of the wicked: For as Hierome well ſaith, hominem poſſe eſſe aſe aduſum, ſed non abſq; ſe vitio, I ſay, a man may be without ſinne, but not without fault, diſc. 2. contra. Pelag. 3. And as Auguſtine well ſaith, Præcipitur homini perfecti iuſtitia, &c. Perfect iuſtice is commanded, though it cannot be performed, non enim recte curritur, ſi quod currendum eſt neſciatur, &c. A man cannot runne well, if he know not whither to runne: de perfecti iuſticiæ contr. Celeſtin.

Good workes are acceptable to God, but through Chriſt: Such ſacrifices God is pleaſed with, but muſt offer theſe ſacrifices by Chriſt, Hebr. 13. 15. 16.

Our workes are called good, non ſecundum perfectam iuſtitiam, ſed hanc, qua humana fragilitati competat, not after perfect iuſtice, but as is agreeable to our humane fragilitie, diſc. 1. contra. Pelag. Hieron.

I cannot here omit a moſt excellent teſtimonie of Origen to this purpoſe: Eſi omnia fecerimus, &c. Although we haue done all things, that are commanded vs, yet haue we not done any good: (for God onely is good) for if the things were truly good, that we do, it would not haue bene written, that doing thoſe things, wee ſhould ſay we are vnprofitable ſeruants, Luke 17. 10. Quantum ad comparationem ceterorum dicuntur bona, qua agimus; quantum autem ad veritatem, bonum inſtrum non eſt bonum: In reſpect then of other things, the workes are called good, which we do; but in regard of the truth, our good doing is not good: tract. 8. in Matthe.

The Proteſtants.

THe moſt righteous men in earth, haue not onely their infirmities, and are in danger to ſinne dayly, but euen their beſt and moſt liely workes are blemiſhed with ſome infirmite, and haue a ſmacke of ſinne.

Argum. 1. Eccleſ. 7. 22. There is no iuſt man in the earth that doth good, and ſinneth not: that is, not at another time, as Bellarmino gloſeth, but euen at the ſame time, wherein he doth good, is not free from ſinne: for who can ſay, I am cleaue from ſinne? Prou. 20. 9. the iuſt man cannot ſay, that at any time he is cleaue from ſinne.

Argum. 2. Iſay. 64. 6. All our righteouſneſſe is as a ſtained clout: Ergo, the beſt workes which we do, are ſomewhat defiled with our owne corruptions.

Bellarmino answereth: 1. That the Prophet ſpeaketh of the wicked men, with whom God was angry, not of the righteous.

Contra. Yea, euen of the righteous which say, vers. 5. We shall be saved, and vers. 8. Then art our saviour, and we are the worke of thy hands. The wicked cannot say thus.

Bellarm. 2. The Prophet vnderstandeth onely their ceremoniall righteousness, in bringing sacrifices, obseruing their new Moones, and such like.

Contra. The Prophets words are generall: All our righteousness is stayned: all, that is, whether the righteousness of the morall or ceremoniall law.

Argum. 3. Hierome vrgeth against the Pelagians, these texts of Scripture: First, 1. Pet. 4. 18. The righteous shall scarcely be saved: Saluaretur autem facile, si nihil in se macula haberet: But he should be easily saued, if he had no blot or blemish.

Secondly, Galath. 5. 17. Ye cannot doe the same things ye would: Ecce Apostolus omnesque credentes quod volunt implere non possunt: Behold, neither the Apostle, nor any beleueer, can fulfill that which they would.

Thirdly, 1. Ioh. 1. 5. God is light, and in him is no darknes: Quando dicit nullas tenebras in dei lumine reperiri, &c. When he saith no darknes is found in Gods light, he sheweth that al other mens lightes are stayned.

Fourthly, Matth. 9. 13. I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance: Nullus enim ad perfectum iustus, sed aliqua ex parte peccator: For no man is perfectly iust, but in some sort a sinner: Dial. 2. aduer. Pelag.

First, if the righteous then haue alwaies some stayne; secondly, if they cannot in any worke doe that they would; thirdly, if their light be alwaies mixed with darknes; fourthly, if they be not in any thing perfectly iust: then it followeth, that their best workes are blemished, and imperfect.

Origen saith well: Vix est qui ita curetur, &c. As there is hardly any man so cured of his wound, but there remaineth some marke of it, ita anima, qua peccati vulnus accepit, etiam si curetur, habet remanentem peccati cicatricem: so the soule, which receiued the wound of sinne, though it be cured, hath some scarres of sinne still: Hom. 8. in Leuitic.

Augustine vpon these words of Iob. 29. 14. I put on iustice as a robe, thus writeth: Vestis ista habet magis solet esse quam pacis, ubi adhuc expugnatur concupiscentia, non ubi erit plena, sine aliquo prorsus hoste insidia: This garment, that is a cloake or mantle, is rather for warre, than peace: for herewe doe daily fight against concupiscence, and there is no perfect righteousness without some enemy. But if so any worke of ours could be perfect without sinne, righteousness might be without an enemy, which Augustine denieth.

Clementin. lib. 5. tit. 11. c. 1. Vbi culpa non est, eam timere solent conscientia timorata: Where no fault is, yet fearefull consciences are afraide of it. If mens good workes were not subiect to fault and blame, what neede a righteous man to feare it?

Ephene. in 1. Timoth. 5. 7. Quis non quasi in pulchro corpore, manum aut verrucam habeat? Who hath not as in a beautifull bodie some spot or wart? In 2. Timoth. p. 110. ex Chrysostom. Nemo potest se in omnibus malus esse, quin aliqua bona habeat; vel bonus, quin quedam peccata: No man can be so euill in all things, but he hath some good things; no man so good, but he hath some euill.

SECONDLY, WHETHER A RIGHTEOUS MAN may fall into any mortall sinne.

The Papists.

71. Error.

Mortall sinne (they say) cannot consist together with the grace of God, and cannot be committed by a man continuing the sonne of God: for he that is borne of God sinneth not, sayth the Apostle, that is, falleth into no mortall sinne, Rhemist. 1. Iob. 3. sect. 5.

The Protestants.

First, vnderstanding mortall sinne, as they doe for euery sinne, that deserueth death, as adulterie, theft, murder, their exposition is hereticall: for then Dauid should not haue bin the sonne of God, when he committed adulterie, and consequently should haue been none of the predestinate: but he that is once the sonne of God, is alwaies to the end: For whom God loneth, he loneth to the end, Ioh. 13. 1.

Secondly, the Apostles meaning, when he saith, he that is borne of God sinneth not, is no other but as Saint Paul saith, lei nos sinne raigne, &c. Rom. 6. 12. that is, the children of God, though they fall into sinne, continue not in it, neither delight therein, neither are wholly overcome of it: for it is true of them, that they doe it not, but sinne that dwelleth in them, Rom. 7. 20. Augustine sayth, Quicumque in Dei providentiss. dispositione predestinati sunt, non dico nondum renati, sed etiam nondum nati, filij Dei sunt & perire non possunt: Whosoever in the most wise counsell of God are predestinate to saluation, not onely before they are regenerate and borne againe, but euen before they are borne, are the children of God, and cannot perish: de corrupt. grat. cap. 9. Such therefore cannot finally finally perish, and cease to be the sonnes of God, though they may fall into sinne.

Hierrone to this purpose vrgeth that place of the Psalme against the Pelagians: Psalm. 32. 5. when the Prophet had said: I will confesse against my selfe my wickedness: it followeth: Pro hoc, id est, impietate orabit ad te omnis sanctus: si sanctus est, quomodo orat pro iniquitate? si iniquitatem habet, quare ratione sanctus appellatur? iuxta illum scilicet modum, qui in alio loco scribitur, septies cadit in suum & resurgit. For this, that is, impietie, shall every holy man pray, &c. If holy, how prayeth he for iniquitie? if he haue iniquitie, how is he holy? Surely as it is written in another place, The righteous falleth seauen times a day and riseth againe, Dial. 2. ad Pelag. Ergo, an holy man may fall into impietie or iniquitie, though by Gods grace he may be recovered againe.

THE THIRD IMPEDIMENT OF GOOD WORKS,

namely, of sinne against the holie Ghost: whether it be a sinne irremissible.

The Papists.

ALL finnes are pardonable, so long as the committers of them be in case to repent: as they 71. Erro. are, so long as they liue in this world: It is great blasphemie therefore, which the Calvinists vnter, that Apostasie, and certaine other finnes of the reprobate, cannot be forgiven at all in this life: Rhemist. 1. Ioh. 1. 5. sect. 4. And therefore they say, that blasphemie against the spirit is said to be irremissible, because it is hardly forgiven: And they define sinne against the holy Ghost to be nothing else but finall impenitencie, Rhemist. Matth. 12. 4.

Bellarmino better aduised, saith, that blasphemie against the holy spirit is neither euery sin committed after Baptisme, as Origen thought, nor finall impenitencie, nor yet euery sinne committed of malice, but defineth it to be a malicious hatred, and detestation of the knowne truth: but hee saith as the rest, that it is not a sinne simply irremissible, Bellarmino lib. 2. de penitent. cap. 15.

Argum. Ioh. 20. 23. Whose finnes soeuer you remit, they are remitted, &c. Ergo, all finnes are remissible: Bellarmino lib. 2. de penit. c. 15.

Ausw. 1. The Apostles had not commission to binde or loose whom they would, but to binde all impenitent persons, and to loose all penitent sinners: as Matth. 18. 18. this authoritie of bindeing and loosing is giuen with a limitation, that if any man would not heare the Church, he should be as heathen; him they must binde, loose him they cannot, whom they see impenitent. And therefore sin against the holy Ghost, because it is alwaies ioyned with impenitencie, cannot be loosed.

2. Secondly, Bellarmino spendeth many words in vaine, to proue nullum esse peccatum, &c. that there is no sinne, which is not taken away by true repentance: none of vs euer denied it: yea we doubt not to say with Ambrose: Arbitror, quod etiam Iudas potuisset tanta dei miseratione non excludi a venia, si penitentiam non apud Iudeos, sed apud Christum egisset: I think, that Iudas might haue bin not excluded from forgiveness by the great mercie of God, if hee had done repentance not before the Iewes, but with Christ, lib. 2. de penitent. c. 4. He should then haue prooued, that repentance may be ioyned with sinne against the holie Ghost: but seeing all, which commit that sinne are hardened in their hearts, and so finally impenitent, they cannot be forgiven: for they which repent not shall perish, Luk. 13. 3.

The Protestants.

THis question of sinne against the holie Ghost, though it come here somewhat out of place, (for it belongeth properly to the 18. Controuersie, where the other questions are handled concerning sinne) yet I thought it better to touch a matter so waightie briefly by the way, then altogether to let it be omitted: We haue therefore to deale both with the Rhemists, who doe not rightly describe this sinne, and then with Bellarmino, that together with the rest affirmeth this sin to be remissible, though not ordinarily and commonly.

First then, against the Rhemists we shew, that sinne against the holie Ghost is not finall impenitencie: euery one indeede that so sinneth, is finally impenitent, because he shall neuer haue the grace to repent: But our Sauour Christ meaneth some speciall sinne, in calling it blasphemie against the holie Ghost: for many a wicked man may dye impenitently, and yet not blasphemie.

And againe, if finall impenitencie were this sin, then could it not be committed before death: But seeing our Sauour chargeth the Pharisees then liuing, with blasphemie, and S. Iohn speaking of the finnes of the liuing, which are seene, saith, there is a sin vnto death: If thou see thy brother sinne, &c. 1. Ioh. 5. 16. But if a man could not commit this sin before he die, he could not be seene to sinne.

Augustine better defineth this sinne: Cum quis aduersus gratiam ipsam, qua reconciliatus est Deo, inuidentia facibus agitatur: When a man maliciously doth oppugne that grace whereby hee was reconciled to God: lib. 1. de serm. in mont. 41. But most perfectly is this sinne described, Hebr. 10.

verſ. 29. where there are ſet downe three circumſtances that make this ſinne : firſt, the perſon; he muſt be ſuch an one as hath been lightened with grace, and been in outward appearance ſanctified : therefore Jewes, Turkes, or Infidels, cannot commit this ſinne ; becauſe their mindes were neuer illuminate by the truth. Secondly, his affection muſt be conſidered, which is moſt deadly and hatefull in the higheſt degree : blaſpheming the ſpirit, and deſpiting the ſame, crucifying and perſecuting Chriſt againe as it were, Heb. 6. 6. Wherefore, they which offend of ignorance, as Saint Paul before his conuerſion, or infirmities and weaknes, as Saint Peter did when he denied Chriſt, or which fall not into horrible blaſphemies, are not guiltie of this ſinne. Thirdly, it is the truth which they hate and deteſt, which ſometime they loued, and were thereby ſanctified, not denying ſome part thereof, as the heretikes doe, but making a general Apoſtaſie from the whole profeſſion of the faith, they count the blood of the teſtament as an vnbloodie thing. Blaſphemy then againſt the holie Ghoſt, is an horrible hatred and deteſtation of the truth, and grace of Gods ſpirit, whereby he that now blaſphemeth, was before illuminate.

Secondly, againſt Bellarmine we ſhew, that this ſinne not onely eaſily ſhall not be forgiven, but not at all, as our Sauour ſaith, Neither in this world, nor the world to come, Matth. 12. verſ. 32. And it is impoſſible for them to be renewed by repentance, Heb. 6. verſ. 6. From hence wee gather theſe arguments : No ſinne without repentance can be forgiven, Luk. 13. 3. Voleſſe ye repent, ye ſhall perſiſt : But ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt is vtterly void of repentance, neither can he that committeth it be renewed by repentance, it is impoſſible ſaith the Apoſtle : Ergo.

That ſinne, for the which there remaineth no ſacrifice, is not remiſſible : for our ſinnes cannot otherwiſe be forgiven vs, than by the ſacrifice of Chriſts death : But ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt, which is a willing or wilfull backſliding after the knowledge of the truth, cannot be done away by any ſacrifice, Heb. 10. 26. Ergo.

There is no hope of forgiveness for that ſinne, for the which it is not lawfull to pray : for ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt, which is a ſinne vnto death, it is not lawfull to pray, 1. Ioh. 5. 16. Ergo. Wherefore it is a great blaſphemy in the Papiſts ſo contrarie to the Scripture to affirme, that blaſphemy againſt the ſpirit may be forgiven.

1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt is ſaid not to be remitted in this world nor the next : quia ordinariis & vt plurimum, becauſe ordinarily, and for the moſt part it is not forgiven : lib. 2. de poenit. c. 16. reſp. ad arg. 1.

1. Contra. Firſt, S. Marke ſaith : Non habet remiſſionem in aeternum : He that blaſphemeth the holie Ghoſt, ſhall not be forgiven for euer, Mark. 3. 29. If neuer, how then dare he contradict the Scripture ? Yes, he ſhall be forgiven, though hardly : if he be forgiven at all, then the Euangelist ſaith not true, he ſhall neuer, &c. Secondly, as other blaſphemies are forgiven, ſo this blaſphemy is not forgiven : but other blaſphemies and ſinnes are alſo hardly forgiven ; 1. Pet. 4. 18. The righteous ſhall ſcarcely be ſaued : Ergo, this ſinne is not forgiven, no not hardly. Thirdly, thus Cyprian expoundeth, Non poſſe in Eccleſia remitti ei, qui in deum deliquerit, &c. He cannot be forgiven in the Church, which ſinneth againſt God : and then hee citeth this place, Matth. 12. 32. lib. 3. ad Quirinum cap. 28.

Origen : Quibus (qui in ſpiritum ſanctum, blaſphemant) neque in praſenti, neque in futuro ſeculo miſſetur : Whom (that ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt) it ſhall not be forgiven, neither in this world nor the next.

Cauſ. 33. diſt. 1. c. 59. gloſſ. Blaſphemiam in ſpiritum domini neque in hoc ſeculo, nec futuro miſſendam aſſeruit : Blaſphemy againſt the holie Ghoſt the Lord ſaid ſhall neither in this world be forgiven, nor in the world to come, &c. that is neuer, or not at all.

2. Bellarmine to the ſecond and third place maketh the ſame anſwer, that he that is once lightened, that is baptized, if hee fall away, cannot be renewed againe by the baptiſme of repentance : and for ſuch there is no more ſacrifice, that is, no ſecond baptiſme to be expected : Bellar. ibid.

2. Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle, Hebr. 6. 1. 2. maketh repentance from dead workes, and the doctrine of Baptiſmes two diuers things : therefore by repentance Baptiſme is not inſinuated. Secondly, the meaning of the Apoſtle is, that ſuch an one cannot at all repent, and ſo cannot be renewed by repentance : the reaſon is taken from the greatnes of ſinne, becauſe he doth crucifie againe the ſonne of God, and make a mocke of him, verſ. 6. and therefore is neere to curſing, verſ. 8. Thirdly, Ambroſe ſaith in Luc. 22. Cafſa erat proditoris poenitentia, qui peccauit in ſpiritum ſanctum : The traitors repentance was in vaine (meaning Iudas) which ſinned againſt the holie Ghoſt, &c. ſignifying, that ſuch an one cannot haue true repentance. Likewise Hierome : Nihil ita repugnat deo quam cor impenitens; ſolum crimen eſt, quod veniam conſequi non poteſt; ſolum deſperationis crimen, quod mederi non poteſt : Nothing doth ſo much reſiſt againſt God, as an impenitent heart ; it is the only crime, which cannot obtaine pardon; only the crime of deſperation cannot be healed : ob- iurgat. Sabinian. The Apoſtles meaning then is, that they which ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt, hauing no grace to repent, cannot at all be forgiven.

3. Firſt,

3. First, in the same sense the Apostle saith, there remaineth no sacrifice for this, nor any means at all of forgiveness: but a fearefull looking for of indgement and violent fire, Hebr. 10. 27. so that the Apostle excludeth all meanes and hope of comfort and remission. Secondly, vers. 28. he dyeth without mercie that despiseth Moses law: but he that blasphemeth the spirit, is worthie of greater punishment, vers. 29. therefore he also sine ulla miseratione moritur, dieth without mercie; and where there is no mercie, there is no forgiveness. Thirdly, Peter Lombard lib. 2. dist. 43. b. rehearseth thus out of Augustine: Hoc solum peccatum veniam mereri non potest: Thus sinne onely against the holie Ghost can finde no mercie. And out of Hierome: Taliter peccans dignè poenitere non potest: He that thus sinneth, cannot worthily repent, &c. Ergo, there is no hope at all of mercie for such, nor no sacrifice for remission of their sinne.

4. Bellar. The Apostle doth not forbid vs to pray for such, but onely sheweth, that wee are not so easily heard, nor cannot pray with such assurance: otherwise he had said before, 1. Iohn. 5. 15. we know that he heareth whatsoeuer we aske: Bellar. ibid. resp. ad 4. loc.

Contra. First, the Apostle expoundeth himselfe, vers. 14. This is the assurance, that we haue in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth vs: but to pray for a sinne irremittible, is to pray against his will. Secondly, the Apostle hauing before giuen a direct precept to pray for a brother, sinning not vnto death, afterward giueth a flat exception, of this sinne vnto death, I say not that thou shouldst pray for it. Now that which is excepted out of the precept, is it not denied, or forbidden? as Ioh. 13. vers. 18. our Sauour saith, I speake not of you all: he doth manifestly except and exclude Iudas: so here to pray for a sinne vnto death, being excepted from the generall precept before, is evidently forbidden and denied. Thirdly, the end of our prayer for sinners, is, that God would giue them life, that sinne not vnto death: but life cannot be granted for a sinne vnto death, (for how is it a sinne vnto death if it may finde life?) Ergo, there is no prayer for such, where the end of the prayer cannot be hoped for. Fourthly, thus Ambrose expoundeth: Non potest ibi ex-aminis esse venia, ubi sacrilegi est plenitudo: There can bee no entreatie for pardon, where there is a fulnes of sacrilege. Hierome, as he is cited by Pet. Lombard. Reliè dicit Ioannes, non pro eo oret quis, &c. Saint Iohn saith well, let not any man pray for him: lib. 3. dist. 43. b. He maketh this exception of the Apostle a flat prohibition.

So I conclude this place, with that sentence of Hierome: Genus est lepra, quod omnino mundari non potest, &c. There is a kinde of leprosie, which cannot be cleansed at all, and therefore such a man was bid to goe out of the campe. It is that sinne, which is committed against the holie Ghost, that is of blasphemie, which, as our Lord saith in the Gospell, shall not be forgiven, neither in this nor the next world: de diuers. generib. lepr.

We haue also the testimonie of holie Martyrs: Master Tyndall: Sinne against the holie Ghost is, when men of a set malice doe persecute the truth, and of a grounded hate against the law of God, by reason of a full consent they haue to sinne, and to walke in their old wayes of ignorance, wherein being now past all repentance, they haue utterly yielded themselves, to follow with full lust, without bridle or snaffle, &c. Fox. pag. 1080. col. 2.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE DIGNITIE and worthines of good works, that is, of merits.

THE FIRST PART, WHICH BE THE good works of Christians.

The Papists.

They doe not onely call them good workes, which are commanded of God, but which are al- 74. Error.
so inioyned by the Church and the gouernours thereof; and that euen by such workes men are iustified, Concil. Trident. sess. 6. cap. 10. Tapper. ex Tileman loc. 11. err. 1.

The Protestants.

Saint Paul defineth good workes otherwise, namely, those which God hath ordained, that we should walke in them, Ephes. 2. 10. They are not the precepts of men, but the commaundments of God in his word, the doing whereof hath the name of good workes. As for the traditions and inunctions of men not warranted by Gods worde, they are so farre from being commended or commanded, that our Sauour calleth the doing thereof, but a Worshipping of God in vaine, Mark. 7. 7.

Augustine vpon those wordes, in the 103. Psalm, vers. 18. The louing kindnes of the Lorde is vpon those that keepe his couenant, and thinke vpon his commaundments to doe them, saith thus: Vide ut precepta tenent: sed quomodo tenent? non memoria, sed vita: Memoria reuocantur, man- data eius, non ut reddant ea, sed ut faciant ea: See that thou keepe Gods commaundments: but how? not in thy memorie, but in thy life; not to say them by rote, but to doe them: Ergo, they are LIII 2 Gods

Gods commaundements, which we must thinke of to doe them; for vnto such the blessing is promised, not to the obseruers of mens precepts or traditions.

Origē vpon those words, Cantic. 1. 14. Speciosa es proxima: Thou art faire my loue, or neighbour: Incipis esse speciosa, quod proxima mihi es: Thou beginnest to be faire, because thou art nere vnto me: Hom. 2. in Cantica: The neerenes then to God maketh vs beautifull and faire in good workes.

Esperē, out of Theoderet, thus expoundeth that 1. Timoth. 6. 18. et bonis operibus, to doe well, that is, Credere Deo, & quacunq; fidei committunt facere: To beleue in God, and to doe all things agreeable to faith: in 1. Tim. p. 171. Good workes then are those which God hath appointed, and are according to faith.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THERE be any good workes without faith.

The Papists.

75. Error.

THough they dare not altogether iustifie the workes of the Heathen and Infidels, yet they doe excuse them, and doe blame vs for saying, that Infidels doe sinne in honouring their parents, in fighting for their countrey, and such like. They therefore doe discharge the Heathen of sinne, in these workes of theirs, Rhemist. Rom. 14. sect. 4.

The Protestants.

THese workes are not sinne in themselves, but in Infidels they are, because they proceed of Infidelitie.

Arg. It is the rule of the Gospell, that a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit, Mat. 7. 11. But all Infidels are corrupt trees, being without faith: Ergo, they can bring forth no good fruit.

The Pelagians thought to haue posed Augustine with the same question, which the Papists propound to vs. Was it sinne in the Heathen (say they) to clothe the naked? Augustine answereth, Non per seipsum factum peccatum est, sed de tali opere non in domino gloriari, solus impius negat esse peccatum: The fact of it selfe is not sinne, but in doing any such thing not to reioyce in the Lord, none but wicked men will denie it to be sinne. I may therefore say vnto these patrones of Ethnick vertues, as Bernard in the like case: Dum multum sudat quomodo Platonem faciat Christianum, sive barbari Ethnicum: While he laboureth to make Plato a Christian, hee sheweth himselfe an Ethnick: Epistol. 191.

Hierom. dialog. 3. aduers. Pelagian. vpon these words, Ioh. 15. 5. I am the vine, ye the branches, &c. Qui illis contabescunt: As the boughs doe presently wither, if they be pulled from the stock: so all mans strength doth decay, if he be forsaken of God, &c. Like as then the branch without the vine bringeth forth no fruite: so neither can a man without faith doe any thing, that is good.

Dee. par. 2. caus. 1. qu. 1. c. 26. Gregor. Vbi Christus non est fundamentum, nullum est boni operis officium: Where Christ is not the foundation, there can be no good worke builded vpon.

Peter. Lombard. lib. 2. dist. 41. a. Qua sine fide fiunt, bona non sunt: The things done without faith are not good.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE VSE and office of good workes.

They make a threefolde vse of good workes, as they call them: first, by them the merits of Christ, they say, are applied vnto vs. Secondly, they doe purge our sinnes. Thirdly, they are meritorious.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, WHETHER bona opera be applicatoria.

The Papists.

76. Error.

BY any worke proceeding of faith and charitie, the merit of Christs passion is applied to vs, Soto, ex Tileman. loc. 11. err. 21. Men by their sufferings and other workes, may applie to themselves the generall medicine of Christs merits and satisfaction, Rhemist. annot. 1. Coloss. sect. 4.

The Protestants.

IT is the propertie of faith onely, to apprehend, and applie vnto vs the benefits of Christs passion, and all other his merits.

Argum. Rom. 10. 7, 8. We need not (saith the Apostle) to ascend to beauen, or descend into the deepe, to bring Christ from thence: it is the word of faith, which we preach. By faith then we do scale the beuens, and behold Christ: it is not the doctrine of workes, but the word of faith that performeth this.

And

And therefore the Apostle defineth faith, to be the ground of things hoped for, and the euidence of things not seene, Hebr. 11. 1. This definition cannot agree vnto works, or vnto any other thing but faith: for then it were no good definition, nor yet description: Ergo, faith only is the euidence of things inuisible: and therefore onely applieth Christs precious merits, which are things beleeued and not seene.

Augustine thus also describeth faith: Rerum absentium presens est fides; rerum, quæ sunt, inuitus est fides; rerum, quæ non videntur, videtur fides: Faith maketh things absent, present; things without vs, to be within vs; things not seene, to be seene: Ergo, faith only hath this applicatorie power, to applie Christs merits not present, nor seene, and to make them as our owne.

Ambrosius in 2. Cor. 3. Lex spiritus dat libertatem solum fidem poscens, quia quæ non vidit, credit, de conditione erui mereatur: The law of the spirit giueth libertie, requiring onely faith, which because it beleeueth those things it seeth not, is thought worthie to be deliuered. This then is that which in faith is auailable, because it beleeueth, that which is not seene, which is only proper and peculiar to faith, and not to workes.

THE SECOND ARTICLE, VVHE-

ther bona opera be expiatoria.

The Papists.

THe workes of charitie and mercie, as almes deedes, and such like, haue force to extinguishe our 78. Error. sins, as Saint Peter saith, Charitie doth couer a multitude of sins, Epist. 1. 4. 8. Rhemist. ibid.

The Protestants.

Ans. The Apostle speaketh of mutuall charitie amongst our selues, whose properie is to couer a multitude of our neighbours offences, as Salomon sayth, Prou. 10. 11. Hatred stirreth up contentions, but loue couereth trespasses: what is this to the extinguishting of our sinnes before God?

Arg. It is an abominable and blasphemous opinion, that any man by his workes should be able to redeeme his sinnes: for the Scripture saith, that by himselfe Christ hath purged our sinnes, Heb. 1. 3. If he haue wholly done it by himselfe, he hath not giuen this power and force of redemption to any other meanes.

If they vnderstand by the force of extinguishting sinnes, the meanes onely of applying Christs merits: in that sense, faith only is said to saue vs, Ephes. 2. 8.

Augustine: Si merita nostra aliquid facerent, ad damnationem nostram veniret, sed non venit ad inspectionem meritorum, sed remissionem peccatorum: If our merits were auailable to any purpose, God should come to our condemnation: but he commeth not to behold our merits, but to forgiue vs our sinnes: Ergo, by our merits our sinnes are not forgiuen.

Ambrose: Peccatum aut donatur, aut deletur, aut tegitur; donatur per gratiam, deletur per sanguinem crucis, tegitur per charitatem: Sinne is either pardoned, extinguishted, or blotted, couered; it is pardoned by grace, blotted or washed away by Christs blood, couered by charitie: apolog. David. cap. 13. So then though before men by loue and charitie offences may be couered, yet before God by grace onely and faith in Christs blood, are they blotted and extinguishted. And that is Ambrosius meaning, that before God sinnes are not couered by charitie, but by faith, it is euident by his owne words: Remittere, segere, non imputare, una ratio, unus est sensus: To remit, to couer, not to impute, haue all one sense: in 4. ad Roman. But hee had said before, that sinnes are pardoned and so remitted by grace: Ergo, by grace and faith they are also couered.

THE THIRD ARTICLE, VVHETHER

our workes be meritorious.

The Papists.

God giueth as well euerlasting life and glorie to men, for and according to their workes, as 79. Error. thee giueth damnation for the contrarie workes, Rhemist. Roman. 2. sect. 2. And men by their workes, proceeding of grace, doe deserue or merit heauen, and the more or lesse ioy in the same, 1. Cor. 3. sect. 2.

Argum. 1. He will render to euery man according to his workes, Rom. 2. 6. Euery man shall receiue his reward according to his labour. Here we see the kingdome of heauen is a retribution, hyre, wages for workes: Ergo, our workes are the value, price, worth and merite of the same: Rhemist.

Ans. Our labours and workes are a measure of the reward, according the which God doth mete out and render vnto his Saints of the heavenly reward: but they are no meritorious or deseruing cause thereof. The reward is of mercie, not of desert; of grace, not of merite: for life eternal is the meere gift of God through Iesus Christ, Rom. 6. 23. But the wages of sinne is death. Where the Apostle doth set a manifest difference betweene the reward of the righteous, and the iust recompence of the wicked: for life eternall is the free and gracious gift of God, not deserved: but eternall damnation is the due debt of sinne. Wherefore the Papists doe bid open battell to the Apostle, in saying, that the one is as due by debt as the other.

Argum. 2. S. Paul saith, 2. Timoth. 4. 8. That there is a crowne of righteousness layd up for him, which God the iust Judge shall giue him: Ergo, the crowne is giuen not of mercie, but of iustice, as a wages and iust recompence to the Apostle.

Ans. God rendereth heauen as a iust Judge, not to the merite and worthines of our workes, but to the merite and worthinesse of Christ, and as due to vs by his promise made to vs in Christ. The reward therefore of heauen is of the mercie of God, who hath freely promised it vs in Christ. It is of his iustice, in that he is faithfull and iust in keeping of his promise made to vs: So that it is a debt, not in respect of any desert in vs, but in regard of his owne promise; As Augustine saith: Debitorem ipse Dominus fecit, non accipiendo, sed promittendo: Non ei dicitur reddere, quod accepit, sed reddere quod promissit: God hath made himselfe a debtor, by promising, not by receiuing any thing at our hands: We say not to him, render that thou hast receiued, but giue that which thou hast promised: In Psalm. 83.

Alexander Seton Preacher and Martyr thus witnesseth: If you aske if good workes shall be rewarded, I say yea, and with no lesse then eternall glorie: but for no merite they deserue, but onely because God hath promised, not for the merite of the worke, but for his promise sake, and he will not breake his promise: Fox. pag. 1206.

Argum. 3. Further, these places are produced for the proofof merites.

1. Life euermlasting is in Scripture called merces, a recompence or reward, therefore good workes doe properly merite, Matth. 5. 12. Reioyce and be glad, great is your reward in heauen. Matth. 20. 8. Call the labourers, and giue them their hire.

2. Good workes are rendred as the cause, why eternall life is rendred, Matth. 23. 34. Come ye blessed inherite the kingdome, for when I was hungred ye gaue me meate, &c. vers. 21. Thou hast been faithfull in little, I will make thee ruler over much, enter into thy Masters ioy.

3. Life eternall is promised to good workes: Matth. 19. 17. If thou wilt enter into a life, keep the Commandements. 1. Tim. 4. 8. Godliness hath the promise both of this life and the next: so then, as he that promiseth, is indebted by promise; so he that worketh, and fulfilleth the condition merited.

4. The Scripture counteth men worthie: Luk. 10. 7. The labourer is worthie of his wages. 2. The. 1. 5. That ye may be counted worthie of the kingdome of God, for which ye suffer: Apocal. 3. 4. They shall walke with me in white, for they are worthie.

5. God is no acceptor of persons: Rom. 2. 11. There is no respect of persons with God. Galat. 2. 6. Therefore he giueth vnto euery man according to their workes: Beellarmin lib. 5. de iustif. c. 3.

1. Ans. First Augustine saith, Quicquid promissit indignis promissit, ut non quasi operibus meritis promitteretur, sed gratia gratis daretur: Whatsoeuer God hath promised, he hath promised to those that are vnworthie, that it should not be promised as a reward vnto works, but as grace freely giuen: Præfat. in Psalm. 109. The argument then followeth not, there is a reward, Ergo merite: For the reward may be counted of fauour as well as of debt, Rom. 4. 4. Secondly, S. Ambrose inferreth the cleane contrarie conclusion: Cum hi qui in multo labore sudauerunt, &c. Seeing they, which were in all the labour receiued no more then the last, Intelligent donum se gratia non operum accepisse mercedem: Let them know that they receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of their workes, Amb. lib. 1. de vocat. gent. c. 3.

2. Good workes are alleaged not as the cause or reason of life, but as the way and order thereunto: S. Ambrose sheweth the reason, Habet vitam eternam fides, quia fundamentum est bonum, habent & bona facta, quibus vir iustus & dicitur & rebus probatur: Faith hath life eternall, as a good foundation, and good workes also, whereby a righteous man is proued in word and deede: Officior. lib. 2. c. 2. Good workes then are recompensed as testimonies and proofes of our faith.

3. Promise and merite or worke cannot stand together, but promise is the object of faith: Rom. 4. 16. It is by faith, that the promise might be sure, and that which is of faith is not of debt: as the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 4. 3. To him that worketh, the wages is counted of debt; to him that worketh not, faith is counted, &c. And Ambrose, Veniam tanquam ex fide speremus, non tanquam ex debito: Let vs hope for pardon as of faith, not of debt, lib. 2. de penitent. c. 8. Wherefore it followeth not, God promiseth life with a condition, Ergo, by the condition performed wee doe merite: seeing that the rewarde dependeth vpon the promise which is apprehended by faith, and so is not of merite.

4. First, he that laboureth in the Gospell, is worthie of his wages before men, but it followeth not that is so before God. Secondly, the text is: That ye may be counted worthie: and vers. 11. That God may make you worthie: we are not then verilie worthie, but as it pleaseth God in Christ to account vs worthie. Ambrose saith well, Quantum ad ceterorum comparationem pertinet, hi digni sunt, quantum quantum ad rem ipsam omnes indigni sunt: In respect of others they are worthie, but indeede in respect of the thing, they are all vnworthie, in 2. Timoth. c. 1.

5. God is no acceptor of persons, to admit vnto life those that haue not laboured in his name; and to refuse others with their righteous workes: but he giueth vnto every one according to their workes, but not for, or because of their workes: their workes as liuely testimonies of their faith, are a rule and measure of their reward, but no cause: men shall be both knowne here and iudged there by their workes, as the tree is discerned and iudged by the fruite. Augustine very well vpon these words, Matth. 7. 2. Vbi ubi measure mee, shall be measured to you againe, &c. Est apud id mensura venia danda, inuenies apud me mensuram venia accipiende, &c. There is with thee a measure in giuing lease or pardon; thou shalt finde with mee a measure of receiuing pardon: in Psalms. 140. Our workes then are a measure, whereby it shall be measured againe to vs, but no merite or desert. Gregorie saith, Reddendum est unicuique secundum opera; sed aliud est secundum, aliud propter opera reddere: It shall be rendred to every man according to his workes: but it is one thing according, another to render for workes, in Psalms. 142.

Argum. 4. Now whereas diuers Fathers are alleaged for merites, as Ignatius epistol. ad Roman. Vi Deum possum promereri: That I may merite God: Hilar. c. 8. in Math. De nostro est beata illa a teruitas promerenda: We must merite heauen of our owne. Ambros. lib. 1. de offic. c. 15. Euidens est meritum aut premia aut supplicia manere post mortem: It is euident, that either reward or punishment of our merites do remaine after death: Bellarmin. l. 4.

Our generall answer to these and the like places of the Fathers is this: First, that this word promereri, to merite, sometime signifieth nothing else but to please or be acceptable: as Heb. 13. 16. with such sacrifice, promeretur Deus; God is merited; as the vulgar latine readeth it; the worde is Laetitia, is pleased: and so the vulgar text translateth, Heb. 11. 6. Without faith it is impossible to please God: and in this sense Ignatius is to be vnderstoode.

Secondly, promereri signifieth as much as satagere, for a man to endeouour or put forward himselfe, or to doe seruice; as the Latine phrase is vied, mereri sub aliquo, to serue vnder one: so Hilarie is to be interpreted: for otherwise, heauen is not merited, de nostro, of our owne. And as it followeth, praestandum aliquid est ex proprio, somewhat must be performed of our owne: but he that meriteth, must not doe somewhat, but the whole: it signifieth therefore seruice rather and diligent endeouour, than desert properly.

Thirdly, sometime meritum, merit is taken absolutely, for opus, worke: as Augustine so taketh it, Tract. 3. in Ioann. Deus coronat dona sua, non merita tua: (i. opera) God crowneth his gifts, not thy merits, that is workes: for if they be properly merits, they should be crowned. So then, merit noteth the substance of the worke, and not the qualitie: and thus the word also may haue a tolerable sense.

Fourthly, the fathers vse the word merit, properly referring it vnto y efficacie of Christs death, and the merit thereof: Augustine serm. 13. serm. 14. Per meritum eius cui nihil facere potes, resurges, &c. The bodie shall rise by his merit, to whom thou canst doe nothing &c. that is, by the merite of Christ. In this sense Bernard: Meum meritum miseratio domini, non sum inops meriti, quamdiu ille miserationum non est: My merit is Gods inercie, I am not without merit as long as he is not without mercie: Cantab. 61. Gods mercie in Christ, or Christs merit by Gods mercie is our merit.

Fifthly, merito, signifieth absolutely to get, to compasse, obtaine: as Plaut. Meritis illa virum dote: She got or obtained an husband, with her dowrie. Thus August. serm. de tempor. 252. Nullis precedentibus meritis per gratiam dei meruimus fieri templum dei: Without any merits going before by grace we merited (that is obtained) to be the temple of God, &c. otherwise the grace of God properly is not merited. And how can we merit without merit, as here it is said? And Ambrose saith: Lex spiritus dat libertatem, solam fidem poscens, &c. The law of the spirit giueth libertie requiring only faith, that because it beleueueth, that which it seeth not, de conditione erui mereatur, it may deserue to be deliuered: that is obtaine, in 2. Cor. 3. for otherwise faith meriteth not: As Ambrose againe, Veniatis tanquam ex fide speremus, non tanquam ex debito, &c. Let vs hope for pardon as of faith, not of debt; lib. 2. de peniten. c. 8. But if it were by the merit of faith, it should be of debt. And Augustine: Non pro merito accipies vitam eternam, sed pro gratia, fides enim gratia: Thou shalt not receiue life eternall for merit, but for grace, for faith is grace: Tract. 3. in Ioann. Ergo, there is no merit of faith properly: If the fathers be vnderstood in any of these senses, when they speake of merit, though the phrase be not proper, it is tolerable: otherwise if they be construed to ascribe the kingdome of heauen any way to mans merit, they speake contrarie to themselves, as after in our arguments followeth to be shewed.

The Protestants.

WE confesse a necessarie vse of good workes: As first, they doe serue as notable meanes and instruments to set forth Gods glorie by, Matth. 5. 16. Secondly, by them also our faith is shewed, published and made known, for the good example of others, Iam. 2. 18. Thirdly, our own conscience also is thereby quieted, and our election daily made more sure vnto vs: we doe grow and increase in the certaintie and assurance thereof, 2. Pet. 1. 10. But we acknowledge no power, force, or efficacie at all in them to deserue and merite any thing at the hands of God, neither doth the Scripture in any place so speake.

Argum. 1. If man consider his deserts, he shall finde, that he is worthie of nothing but death: To vs (saith the Prophet) belongeth shame, Dan. 9. 9. There is nothing else by debt due vnto vs: as Augustine also saith, Nil praeferat in meritis nostris, nisi unde damnari deberemus: Nothing goeth before in our merites, but that whereby we ought iustly to be condemned. And againe, Omnis peccatum nostra est negligentia, omnis virtus & sanctitas est Dei indulgentia: All euill and sinne in vs, is of our owne negligence; all goodnes and holines, of the free mercie of God. Si misericordia Domini multa, multus ego in meritis: If the mercies of God be many, my merites are many. Gods mercies are our merites: our due debts are nothing else but punishment for sinne.

Argum. 2. Betweene the desert or merite, and the wages or recompence, there ought alwaies to be some proportion: a like stipend for a like labour: But heauen without comparison exceedeth the worthines of our workes: Ergo, it is not given as a debt, but as a free gift: therefore the Apostle saith, that the afflictions that are present, are not worthie of the glorie that shall be reuealed, Rom. 8. 18. Augustine saith, Quam paruo constat regnum caelorum? duobus minutis emit vidua regnum caelorum: How little doth the kingdome of God stand vs in? a certaine widow for two mites bought the Kingdome of heauen. Shall we thinke that the widowes casting in of two mites deserued the kingdome of heauen? Farre be it from vs so to thinke: it is then a gift of fauour and mercie, not wages of debt.

Argum. 3. These places of Scripture do plentifully testifie against merites, ascribing all to the mercie of God.

1. Psal. 103. 4. Which crowneth thee in mercie and compassion.
2. Dan. c. 9. 18. We do not present our supplications before thee, for our owne righteousness, but for thy great mercies.
3. Luke 17. 10. When ye haue done all, say ye are vnprofitable seruants.
4. Rom. 6. 23. The wages of sinne is death, but life eternall is the grace of God through Christ: Life eternall then is not so the wages of good workes; as eternall death is of euill.
5. Rom. 8. vers. 18. The afflictions of this present time, are not worthie of the glory, which shall be reuealed.
6. Rom. 3. 27. Your reioicing is excluded by the law of faith: Ergo, workes merite not, for then we might reioyce in them.

1. Answ. First, the Crowne is said to be of mercie; because the merites, which deserue the crowne, are giuen vnto vs of mercy. Secondly, or Gods mercie is seene in pardoning our veniall finnes, while he giueth the crowne to our good workes. Bellarmin. c. 5. respons. ad argum. 1.

1. Contra. First, this is like the answer of the Pelagians, that graunted, that free will was of grace, because it was Gods grace and gift in giuing freewill to man at the first; as here he saith it is Gods mercie in giuing vs merites: But as Augustine answereth to that cauil, epist. 95. Gratia illi sensu sumpta non legitur apud Apostolos: Wee reade not of grace taken in that sense with the Apostles, &c. so neither do we reade of mercie so taken. 2. The Prophet saith in the same verse, which redemeth thy life; and before, which forgiveth thy sinne: they may say as well, that Gods mercie is seene in giuing men power to redeeme themselves and their finnes, as in giuing them power to merite. 3. If man meriteth the crowne, and Gods mercie forgiveth onely veniall finnes, then man doth more then God: for, to get the crowne, is more, then to wipe away veniall and small finnes: and if a man may merit the crowne, how is it, that by his merites he also cannot extinguish his veniall finnes? there is no coherence in this broken stufte. 4. Mercie and merit, grace and worke cannot stand together, Rom. 4. 4. To him that worketh, it is not counted of fauour, but of debt: but this fellow correcteth the Apostle, and saith; Yes, it is of fauour and mercie that they merite, and so challenge as of debt. Augustine well saith, Non pro merito accipies vitam eternam, sed pro gratia; fides enim gratia est, & vita aeterna est gratia pro gratia: Thou shalt not receiue life eternall for merite, but for grace; for faith is a gift or grace, and life eternall is grace for grace, tract. 3. in Ioan. But this consequent were not good, if the same thing were both grace and merite.

2. Answ. Daniel in that place doth not desire the crowne of life, but onely deliuerance from captiuitie, wherunto their finnes had brought them; ibid. resp. ad loc. 2.

Contra. 1. If Daniel ascribeth not a temporall deliuerance to his merite, but Gods mercie; how much lesse can our eternall and spirituall deliuerance be deserued. 2. Daniel vtterly excludeth himselfe from all merite, in confessing with the rest, Dan. 9. 5. We haue sinned, and committed iniquitie: as Hierome saith, in 7. ad Roman. Daniel, quem iustum fuisse nouimus, quando se dicit cum alijs peccauimus: Daniel, whom we know to haue been iust, doth confesse as of himselfe with others, we haue sinned, &c. If a righteous and iust man be a sinner, what place is there for merit? sinners must must clayme mercie, not chalenge merite : as the Publicane, Luke 18. Lord be mercifull to a sinner.

3. First, we are vnprofitable seruants of our selues, but by grace made profitable. 1.
Secondly, we are said to be vnprofitable in respect of God, because the profite of our workes 2.
redoundeth not to him.

Thirdly, we are taught so to say for humilities sake, though indeed we are not vnprofitable. 3.

Fourthly, or the meaning is, that for all our seruice, wee can demaund no reward, seeing that 4.
God without reward might bind vs to do all we do, but that gratuito pacto, he dealeth with vs more graciously and liberally by his free couenant, in respect whereof wee may say with the Apostle,
There is a crowne of righteousness laid vp in store for me. Bellarmin. ad loc. 3.

Contra. 1. By grace indeed we are made profitable, because it is not in vaine in vs, but not pro- 1.
fitable to merite or deserue any thing; but profitable, in that we are not unfruitfull: as the Apostle sheweth, Tit. 3. 8. 14. 2. Our Saviour speaketh here of seruants, and there of such as are in the state of grace; for before grace, we are not obedient seruants, but stubborn enemies: So Ambrose saith, vpon this place; Agnosce te seruum plurimis obsequijs deseruatum, neq; te iustus si bene fecisti, quod facere debuisti: Acknowledge thy selfe a seruant diuerly bound, neyther boast, if thou haue well done, that which thou oughtest to do, in 17. Luc. But we cannot do any thing well of our selues, but by grace: Ergo, euen hauing receiued grace, we are in this sense vnprofitable seruants.

Contra. First, it is true, that God in himselfe is not by our sinnes hindred, or by our righteous- 2.
nesse furthered or profited, Iob. 35. 6. Is thou sinnest, what dost thou against him? if thou be righteous, what ginnest thou vnto him? and therefore good workes properly are said to be profitable to men, Tit. 3. 8.
And, though before men Gods glory be set forth by the seruice of the Saints, yet the profite, vse and benefite thereof extendeth vnto themselues. 2. Wherefore, euen in respect of our selues we are said to be vnprofitable seruants: because by our seruice we deserue no thanks at Gods hands, Luke 17. vers. 9. Doth hee thank that seruant? and thus Ambrose expoundeth; Sicut in seruo tuo gra-tiam non agis, &c. nec in te patitur Dominus vnum vsum esse operis, vel laboris, &c. As thou doest not giue thy seruant thanks, &c. so the Lord doth not suffer thee to haue vse of any one worke or labour, because as long as wee liue, we must alwayes worke; in 17. Luc. The vse then and profite of our seruice, wherein wee are said to be vnprofitable, is referred to our selues. 3. Bernard shall here answere for vs, writing vpon these words, When yee haue done all that is commanded, say yee are vnprofitable seruants: Sed hoc iniquius propter humilitatem monuit esse dicendum: plane propter humilita-tem, nunquid contra veritatem: You will say, we are taught thus to speake for humilitie: indeed for humilitie, but not against the veritie? serm. de triplic. euilod. 4. He answereth well, that wee cannot challenge the crowne and reward by our workes, but, ex gratuito pacto, of Gods gracious couenant: which is none other thing, then we our selues affirme: the crowne of righteousness, whereof S. Paul speaketh, dependeth not vpon the merite of our workes, but of Gods gracious promise: and so Bernard expoundeth the Apostle, 2. Timoth. 4. 8. There is laid vp for me a crown of iustice, &c. Est ergo, quam Paulus expectat, corona iustitie, sed iustitia Dei non sua, iustum est enim vixisse quod lebet, debet autem, quod pollicitus est: & hac est iustitia Dei, de qua presumit Apostolus, pro-missio Dei: There is then a crowne of righteousness, which the Apostle doth expect, but of the righteousnesse of God, not his owne: for it is iust that God should render that he oweth, and he oweth what he promised: this is the Iustice of God, whereof the Apostle presumeth, euen his promise, lib. de liber. arbit.

4. Bellarmin. Eternall life is said to be the grace of God, because our merites whereby eternall 4 life is procured, are of grace: for otherwise eternall life is as well the stipend of iustice, as death is the stipend of sinne: Bellarmin. resp. ad loc. 4.

Contra. 1. This is a most corrupt glosse, by grace to expound workes: for the Apostle maketh a disunction and opposition betweene workes and grace, Rom. 11. 6. If of grace, then not of workes, for then grace were no more grace. And if it be answered, he meaneth workes of nature, not of grace:
the Apostle saith againe, Tit. 3. 5. Not by the workes of righteousness, but by his mercie hee saved vs: Here euen workes of iustice and grace are opposed to mercie and grace: wherefore grace and workes being so diuers, the one cannot be contained in the other.

Secondly, Augustine saith, Non pro merito accipies vitam aeternam, sed pro gratia, &c. Thou shalt not haue heauen by merite, but by grace: ira. 2. in loqu. This were no good disunction, if me-rite could be contained in grace. And againe he saith, Deus videtur vitam aeternam iniquum debitum reddere, sed fidei debitum: God seemeth to giue eternall life as due; but due vnto faith, which is the grace of God, &c. ibid. Due, not to the merite of faith, but the grace and gift of faith. Thus better doth he vnderstand the Apostle, that life eternall is the gift of God, then this corrupt glosse.

Thirdly, Bernard saith, Merita omnia Dei dona sunt, & ita homo magis propter ipsa Deo debitor est, quam Deus homini: All our merites are Gods gifts, and so a man rather for them is a debter to God, then God to man, de annunt. Mar. serm. 1. Therefore our good workes cannot merite of God, seeing

ing he meriteth of vs, because he giueth vs grace to bring forth good workes.

5. Our afflictions indeed are not worthie in themselves of heauen, because they are but short, and the reward is eternall: but yet, as Christs passions being but short, for the worthinesse of his person, were equiualent to euermlasting punishment, so our afflictions for the worthinesse of charitie, are worthie of euermlasting glory: as the Apostle sayth, 2. Cor. 4. 17. Our light affliction doth worke vnto vs an eternall waight of glorie: Bellarm. 3. argum. 6.

Contra. 1. It is not farre from blasphemie to ascribe the like force to charitie in making our temporarie workes equiualent to the eternall reward, as to the dignitie of Christs person in the execution of his passion to be worthie to satisfie for euermlasting punishment.

Secondly, the Apostle in saying, Our affliction worketh, &c. expoundeth himselfe in the 18. vers. While we looke not on the things that are seene, but on the things which are not seene: which is the office of faith: affliction then as it sheweth our faith, is said to worke, not as the cause, but as the way and meane: and the Apostle saith no other wise then Saint Peter, 1. Pet. 1. 7. That the triall of your faith, may be found vnto your praise, &c. Affliction then worketh, as the triall of our faith: and it worketh no other wise, but because it shal be found, and God wil not forget the seruice of our loue. Thirdly, otherwise the Apostle saith directly, that the afflictions are not worthie, &c. that is, not at all worthie of so great a reward: So Ambrose expoundeth, Quid possumus dignum facere premijs celestibus? what can we do worthie of the heauenly reward? what merit can man bring, that this mortall should put on immortallitie? Indigna sunt huius temporis passiones ad superuenturam gloriam: the passions of this life are vnworthie the glorie to come, serm. 20. in Psal. 119. So also Gregorie; Beata vita nullo potest equari labor, nulla opera, passiones nulla: To blessed life, no labour, worke, suffering can be equall, in Psal. 142. Bernard; Quid sunt merita omnia ad tantam gloriam? What are all our merites to so great glory? serm. 1. de annunt. Mar.

6. Bellarm. Faith doth indeed exclude their reioicing, that glorie in themselves and their owne strength, but not that reioicing whereby we reioyce in our workes and merites by grace, resp. ad loc. 7.

Contra. 1. Faith excludeth all reioicing euen in good workes wrought by grace: for the Apostle saith, that reioicing is excluded by the law of faith, and not by the law of workes: if faith then exclude reioicing, we must reioyce in nothing but faith. 2. Rom. 4. 2. The Apostle saith, If Abraham were iustified by workes, he hath wherein to reioyce, but not with God: he speaketh of Abraham as a faithfull man, and of his workes, as good workes; euen at that time when he beleued, and it was counted to him for righteousness; as it followeth in the next verse. 3. Bernard also saith, Perfecta est securus gloriæ est, cum veremur omnia opera nostra, sicut testatur Iob de seipso; omni iustitia nostra non aliud esse quam pannum menstruata: then our reioicing is perfect, when we seare all our workes, as Iob testifieth: all our righteousness is as a stayned clout, serm. de triplic. gradu. A man then is not to reioyce in any of his workes, no not in his righteousness. 4. S. Paul further saith, Ephes. 2. 9. Not of workes, least any man should boast himselfe: hee must not boast of workes: and what workes, the Apostle sheweth in the next vers. 10. We are his workmanship created in Iesu Christ to good workes: Ergo, we must not boast nor reioyce no not in good workes. And thus notwithstanding all these cauls, I trust it evidently appeareth by these Scriptures alleaged, that our workes are no way meritorious of life euermlasting.

Argum. 4. S. Paul saith, Faith is counted to him for righteousness, that worketh not, Rom. 4. 5. If it be of grace, it is no more of workes, for then grace were no more grace: If of worke, then not of grace; for then worke were no more worke, Rom. 11. 9. We see that the righteousness of faith or of grace, and the righteousness of workes, cannot stand together, nor be matched one with the other.

Our aduersaries haue here two euasions: First they graunt, that the beginning of our iustification, which they call the first iustification, is meere of Gods grace, neither can we haue any acceptable workes before we are iustified: but in the second iustification, which is the increase of the former iustice, a man may merite by good workes, Rhemist. Rom. 2. 3.

Ans. This is but a late and new deuice of the first and second iustification: as afterward we wil shew in the proper place. The Scripture teacheth vs, that not onely the beginning of our righteousness, but the finishing and perfecting of it, is onely by grace in Christ, Ephes. 2. 5. 6. When we were dead in our sinnes, he hath quickened vs together in Christ, by whose grace ye are saved, and hath raised vs up, and made vs sit together in heauenly places: We see that this saluation by grace bringeth vs vp to heauen: Ergo, both the first and second iustification are of grace, for they can bring vs no further then to heauen.

Rhemist. 2. Workes done of nature without, or before faith, cannot merite: but workes done by Gods grace may, and are ioyned with as causes of saluation.

Ans. Not onely the workes of nature, but euen of grace also are excluded: Wee are saved (saith the Apostle) by grace through faith, not of workes: And then hee sheweth what workes, namely good workes, such as the Lord hath ordayned for vs to walke in, Ephes. 2. 9, 10. Ergo, works workes also of grace, wrought in vs by the spirit of God, are shut out from being any causes of our saluation. I conclude with Augustine, vpon those words of the Psalme, Let the Lord alway be magnified: Peccator est magnificetur, ut vocet: confiteris? magnificetur, ut ignoret: iam iustus uiuit? magnificetur, ut regat: per seueras usque ad finem? magnificetur, ut te glorificet: Art thou a sinner? Let God be magnified in calling thee: doest thou confesse thy sinnes? let him be magnified in forgiving them? doest thou line well? let him be magnified in directing thee: doest thou continue to the end? let him be magnified in glorifying thee. God is as much to be praised for all things wrought after our calling and conuersion, as for mercie shewed before: All then is wholly to be ascribed to Gods grace and mercie: nothing is left for our merite or desert.

Bernard hath of this matter an excellent speech: Si à Deo voluntas est, & meritum; Deus igitur auctor est meriti, qui voluntatem applicat operi, & opus explicat voluntati: Alioqui, si propriè appellantur ea, quæ dicimus nostra merita, ipsi quadam sunt seminaria, occulta predestinationis inbecia, futura felicitatis præfagia; via regni, non causa regnandi; denique quos iustificauit, non quos iustos inuenit, magnificauit: If our will bee of God, then also our meriting: for God is the author of the merite, in applying our will to the work, and fitting the work to our will: otherwise to speake properly, our merites so called, are but the seedeplat of our hope, the signes of predestination, and the forerunners of our happines, the way to the kingdome, not the cause thereof: lastly, whom God hath iustified, not whom he found iust, he glorifieth. What more euident testimonie can we haue against meriting of heauen? Bernard retaineth the name, but denieth the thing.

Concl. Arausican. can. 18. Debetur merces bonis operibus si fiant, sed gratia, qua non debetur, præcedit, ut fiant: A reward is due to good workes, if they be done; but grace, which is not due nor of debt, goeth before, that they may be done. All therefore is to be ascribed to grace.

Now whereas we doe alleage many testimonies of the Fathers against merites; Bellarmino would shift vs of with this answere, that they speake of man, qualis est sine gratia Dei, as he is without grace, that he cannot merite by his owne strength: I will therefore shew out of the Fathers, that even a man in the state of grace cannot merite.

Ambrose de uocat. gent. lib. 1. c. 5. Nulla tam præclara opera existere, quibus hoc, quod gratis tribuitur, per retributionis indicium debeatur. There are no such excellent workes, to the which, that which is freely giuen, should by way of retribution be owing, &c. if to no excellent workes, then not to the workes of grace of man is God endebted.

Augustine cont. Pelag. artic. 3. De meritis in hoc seculo Christianus extolli non debet, quia nemo hic sine peccato est, quicquid ergo in hac uita consecutus fuerit, donum est, non meritum, &c. A Christian must not be lifted vp for his merites in this world, because no man here is without sinne, whatsoeuer he hath in this life is a gift, not a merite, &c. he speaketh of Christians that are vnder grace.

Bernard, Querant alij meritum, nos gratiam inuenire studeamus; Maria non pretendit meritum sed gratiam querit: Let other men seeke for merite, let vs studie to finde grace: Marie pretendeth not merite, but seeketh grace, &c. Serm. in nativ. Mar. Marie was in the state of grace, and yet depended not vpon any merite.

The holy Martyrs haue most confidently sealed this trueth: Alexander Seton Martyr: They that preach that workes doe merite, doe make workes the tree, which are but the fruite of iustice, wrought by him that is already a iust man: Christ was promised to be our onely iustifier: God sayd to Abraham, In thy seede shall all people be blessed; he said not in thy seedes, or in the workes of thy seedes, but in thy seede, that is Christ. Again, the same holy Martyr and Preacher thus witnesseth most confidently: He that can shew me in any Scripture, that workes doe merite, or be any meanes to our iustification: for the first Scripture, I will, without any further iudgement, lose both mine eares; for the second, my tongue; for the third, my necke: Fox. pag. 1206. Yea this holy Martyr, though no Scripture were shewed him, neither shall euer be shewed, yet he most constantly gaue his life in the defence of this truth. But in defence of popish merites, I haue not heard of any that hath aduentured so farre.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, CONCERNING the name of merite.

The Papists.

Bellarmino* would beare vs in hand, that the name of merite is either contained in Scripture, or so. Error. Collected from the same: Lib. 5. de iustific. 2.

Argum. The places of Scripture, which he pretendeth for prooffe hereof are these.

1. Ecclesiast. 16. 12. He iudgeth a man according to the merite of his workes.
2. Heb. 13. 16. With such sacrifices, promeretur Deus, God is merited.
3. The Scripture maketh mention of dignitie or worthines, which is the same that Merite is: 2. Thess. 1. 5. That ye may be counted worthy of the kingdome of God: Apocal. 3. 4. They shall walke with me in white, for they are worthis.

4. There

4. There is often alſo mention found in Scripture of reward: Matth. 5. 12. Your reward is great in heauen. 1. Corinth. 3. 8. Every man ſhall receive his wages according to his labour. And in diuers other places; as Genef 15. 1. The Lorde ſaith to Abraham, I am thine exceeding great reward: But where there is a reward, there merit goeth before.

The Proteſtants.

1. Auf. Firſt, the Greeke text readeth onely merito, according to their workes, not the merit of their workes. Secondly, and in the ſame place he ſaith, As his meritis is great, ſo is his puniſhment: ſo that mens good workes are rewarded not of merit, but of mercie. Thirdly, neither is it all one to ſay, according to their workes, and after the merit of their workes, as he might haue learned out of Gregorie alleged before; Alind eſt ſecundum, alind propter opera reddere: It is one thing to render according, and another to render for workes, in Pſal. 142. Fourthly, if wee had no other anſwere, the authoritie of this booke bindeth vs not, being no part of the Canonically Scripture.

2. The word is inſpectum, God is pleaſed: as Hebr. 11. 6. the ſame word is vſed: Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: We graunt that God is well pleaſed with good workes, as proceeding from our faith in Chriſt: for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ. 15. Let vs by him offer the ſacrifice of praiſe. By faith then in Chriſt God is pleaſed with our ſacrifice: what is this to merit?

3. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith: That you may be counted worthe: Digni habeamini. This worthines then is onely by imputation of Chriſts worthines. Secondly, they are worthe to haue white robes: becauſe their robes are made white in the blood of the Lambe, Apoc. 7. 14. and the Lambe onely is found to be worthe, Apoc. 8. 4. 9. The worthines of the Saints is none other, but the worthines of the Lambe, accounted theirs by faith: for if they be worthe, then is not the Lambe onely worthe.

4. Firſt, the reward is counted of fauour as well as of debt, Rom. 4. 4. Pſal. 103. 4. Which crowne ſhee in mercie. Secondly, ſeeing God himſelfe is our rewarder, how is it poſſible, that man can merit God? Auguſtine ſaith, Filius hominis non meruiſſe ut dei filius eſſet: That the ſonne of man merited not to be the ſonne of God: de corrept. & grat. c. 11. Euen ſo neither can man merit to haue God. Thirdly, further S. Ambroſe writing vpon that parable, Matth. 20. where the laſt hired labourers receiued as much as the firſt, that did endure the heate of the day, concludeth thus: Ve intellego donum ſe gratia, non operum accepiſſe mercedem: That they may vnderſtand that they receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of their labour: de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. c. 3. Thus we ſee, that out of the Scripture there can be no ſhew made for the vie of this word merit, being aſcribed to the workes of men.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE diſtinction of merits.

The Papiſts.

81. Error.

They make two kindes of merit: Meritum de congruo, merit of congruitie: ſuch are the preparatiue workes before iuſtification, as were the prayers and almes deedes of Cornelius, Act. 10. which though they be not ſimply meritorious, ex debito iuſtitia, by the due debt of iuſtice, yet they deſerue at Gods hands of congruitie, becauſe he doth graciouſly accept them, Act. 10. ſect. 5. The other kinde, they call Meritum de condigno, merit of condignitie, when the reward is iuſtly due by debt: ſuch are the workes done in the ſecond iuſtification, which are truly meritorious, and worthe of heauen, Gabriel. Biel. & hemiſt. Rom. 2. ſect. 3.

The Proteſtants.

Firſt, we vtterly denie any ſuch merit of condignitie: for Saint Paul ſaith, That the afflictions of this life are not condigne of the glorie to come, Rom. 8. 18. Condignitie then is wholly remoued and taken away.

Secondly, a reward of congruitie in ſome ſort wee graunt, but neither for any thing done before faith or iuſtification: for it is impoſſible without faith to pleaſe God, or doe any thing acceptable vnto him, Heb. 6. 6. Neither is it of congruitie for the merit of our workes: but it is (congruum) it is agreeable to the mercie and iuſtice of God in reſpect of his promiſe graciouſly made in Chriſt, to reward the faithfull obedience of his ſeruants: ſo then the congruitie is on Gods behalfe, not in reſpect of our workes.

We are iuſtified, ſaith the Apoſtle, gratis per gratiam, freely by grace, Rom. 3. 24. Ergo, there is no merit either of congruitie or condignitie, ſeeing all is done freely.

In Pſal. 5. 5.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quid ille latro attulerat de ſaue ad iudicium, de iudicio ad crucem, de cruce in Paradisum? I pray you what merit did the theefe bring with him from the priſon to iudgement, from the iudgement place to the croſſe, from the croſſe to Paradife? Here was neither merit of congruitie, nor condignitie.

THE FIFT PART, OF THE MANNER OF MERITING.

The Papists.

Our workes (they say) are pleasing and acceptable vnto God, euen after the same manner, that Christ and his workes were; Tepper ex Tisleman doc. 11. err. 14. Christs paines of their owne nature, compared to his glorie, were not any whit comparable, yet they were meritorious and worthy of heauen, not for the greatnes of them, but for the worthines of his person: So our workes, not of their owne nature, but as they are of grace, are meritorious of the ioyes of heauen; Rhemist. Rom. 8. 18.

The Protestants.

First, it is a great blasphemie, to say, that Christs passions in themselves deserued not that glorie, which he hath purchased for vs: neither that there was any comparison betweene them: for then, how could he haue fully satisfied the wrath of God? Christ hath payed the ranfome for our sinnes: We are redeemed with his precious blood, as of a lambe vnspotted, 1. Pet. 1. 19. His blood was the price of our redemption: therefore of it selfe meritorious. It was not in respect of Christ, of grace; but of merit in him: Vnto vs his redemption is of grace, Rom. 3. 24. Wherefore his passion being the passion of the Soune of God, was a full satisfaction, and worthy desert of that glorie, which he hath purchased for vs.

Secondly, it is another great blasphemie to match and compare in the way and manner of meriting, Christs workes and ours together. For first, there is no merit at all in vs vnto saluation: we haue no merits but Christs, and are saued onely by faith in him, not by workes, Ephes. 2. 8. Secondly, by your owne confession, our workes are not of their nature meritorious, but of grace: but Christs workes were of themselves full of merit, without any externall helpe, or accession of grace: for in himselfe did all fulnes dwell, Coloss. 1. 19.

Augustine very well sheweth the great difference in the way of meriting betweene Christ and vs, thus writing: Quantum interest cum duo sint in carcere inter reum & visitatorem eius: illum causa promittit, illum humanitas adducit: sic in ista mortalitate nos reatu tenemur, Christi misericordia defendit: Looke what difference there is, when two are in prison together, betweene the prisoner, and his friend that commeth to visite him; the one is there of necessitie, the other commeth of good will: such difference there is betweene Christ and vs: for when wee were detained in the prison of this mortalitie, for the guilt of our sinnes, Christ came in mercie to visite vs. How can there now be any proportionable or like way of meriting, in the guiltie prisoner, and the innocent and friendly visiter?

THE SIXT PART, OF THE QUALITIE and condition of merits.

The Papists.

Bellarmino saith, that the good workes of the righteous, are properly and verily meritorious of eternall life, euen, ex condigno, of condignitie, or worthines, in the highest degree: Bellar. c. 16. and that non solum ratione pacti, sed operis, in respect of the worke, as well as of the couenant or promise.

Argum. 2. Timot. 4. 8. Saint Paul saith, that God the iust iudge shall giue him a crowne of glorie: but it is the part of iustice to giue vnto euery man as he hath deserued: the Apostle therefore worthilie deserued this crowne: it was of iustice, not of mercie: Bellarmino. ibid.

The Protestants.

Ans. His crowne laid vp for the Apostle, was both of mercie, in that the Lord graciously promised it: Iam. 1. 12. He shall receiue the crowne of life, which the Lord hath promised to all, that loue him. It was also of iustice: Iustum est (saith Bernard) vs reddat, quod debet; debet autem, quod pollicitus est: It is right and iust, that God should pay what he oweth: now he oweth that which he hath promised. All therefore was of Gods mercie toward the Apostle, not of his desert. Gods iustice in keeping his promise, respecteth not any desert in man, but dependeth vpon the constancie and truth of his word in himselfe.

Argum. Saint Paul saith, Rom. 8. 18. That the afflictions of this life are not condigne of the glorie, &c. Ergo, there is no such condignitie.

Bellarmino answereth, that in their owne nature they are not worthy, but as they proceed from the grace of God, they are, cap. 18.

Contra. 1. The Apostle speaketh in this place of no other sufferings, but those which are wrought by grace in the children of God: as ver. 17. Suffer with Christ, that ye may be glorified with him.

M m m m

Therefore

Therefore the Apoſtle excludeth euen ſuch ſuffrings, as are wrought by the ſpirit. 2. Grace or fauour, and deſert cannot ſtand together: Rom. 4. 4. To him ſhis workes, the wages is not counted of fauour, but by debt. Wherefore if heauen be merited, it is of debt, grace and fauour is excluded: therefore to ſay, that workes are meritorious by grace, and that their worthines and condignitie is partly of grace accepting, and partly of the worke deſeruing, is to affirme contrarie things, and to match things of diuers and vnlike nature together.

Herein alſo hee may be ouerthrowne by his owne poſitions: Firſt, he ſaith that God doth reward, ſupra condignum, aboute the worthines or condignitie of our workes, cap. 19. then it will follow, that there is no ſuch condignitie, becauſe the reward exceedeth their worthines: but betwene the wages and the worke, there ſhould be an equalitie. Againe, heauen is the greateſt reward that can be, and therefore if God doe giue a reward beyond their deſert, heauen is no deſerued, for a better reward than heauen there cannot be.

Secondly, Bellarmino confeſſeth, that neither the grace of iuſtification, cap. 21. nor the gift of perſeuerance to the end, or a mans reparation after his fall, can be merited, ex condigno, of condignitie: much leſſe can the kingdome of heauen be ſo merited, which is a more excellent thing, than any of the other: our glorification farre exceedeth in excellencie our iuſtification and perſeuerance: if the leſſe then cannot be ſo merited, neither can the greater.

The author of the Sermons de tempor. ſer. 10. Cum dies iudicij adueniet, et ſi coronam non meremur accipere, vel ad peccatorum indulgentiam mereamur peruenire, &c. When the day of iudgement ſhall come, if wee deſerue not to receiue the crowne, let vs deſerue to attaine at the leaſt to pardon of our finnes, &c. Ergo, it is more to merit the crowne, than to merit forgiuenes: but this cannot be merited by their owne confeſſion: Ergo, not the other.

We haue witneſſe of a Synode of their owne: Senonenſ. ſynod. decret. de fide. 16. Faciet tandem miſſe recordia dei unicuique locum iuxta meritum operum ſuorum, non absoluta condignitate quidem, (neque enim condigna ſunt paſſiones, &c. Rom. 8. 18.) ſed gratuita magis & liberali re promiſſione, &c. At the length the mercie of God ſhall make a place to euery one according to the merit of their workes, not by an absolute condignitie, (for the afflictions of this life are not condigne, &c. Rom. 8. 18.) but rather by a gracious and liberal promiſe, &c. Ergo, our workes are not properly ex condigno, meritorious.

Diuers alſo of the Schoolemen are of the ſame opinion, that good workes, ex condigno, of condignitie, are not meritorious of life eternall: Sir Thom. Waldenſ. tom. 3. de Sacramental. c. 7. Durand. in 2. ſenten. diſt. 27. qu. 2. Gregor. in 1. ſenten. diſt. 17. qu. 1. artic. 2.

THE SEVENTH PART, WHETHER ANY confidence is to be reposed in merits.

The Papiſts.

84. Error.

Fiſt, Bellarmino ſaith, that the truſt which the righteous haue in God, ariſeth not onely of faith, but ſpringeth alſo from their merits: lib. 5. de iuſticiat. cap. 7.

1. Argum. 1. Timoth. 3. 13. They that haue miniſtred well, get themſelues a good degree, and great libertie or confidence in the faith: Confidence or truſt is then wrought in vs by our faithfull ſeruiſe.

2. Rom. 5. 4. Patience bringeth forth experience, experience hope.

3. Hebr. 10. 32. 35. Ye endured a great fight of afflictions, caſt not therefore away your confidence.

4. If our heart condemne vs not, wee haue boldnes toward God: Ergo, our confidence ariſeth vpon our workes: Bellar. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

1. Anſ. WE denie not, but that by a ſanctified life, and good workes, we may grow vp to the aſſurance of our election, yet not by the merit or worthines of the workes, but as they haue relation vnto faith, whereof they are liuely ſignes: for to ſpeake properly, it is faith whereby we haue peace toward God, Roman. 5. 1. And in this place the Apoſtle ſaith, They haue confidence in the faith, which is in Chriſt: Their confidence is grounded vpon faith, vnto the aſſurance whereof they are conducted and guided by their faithfull ſeruiſe.

2. All theſe depend vpon the ſecond verſe: By whom we haue acceſſe through faith vnto this grace, &c. and not ſo onely, but we reioyce in tribulations. All theſe then are rehearſed, as fruites iſſuing from our faith, reioycing in tribulaſion, experience, hope. Againe, hope maketh not aſhamed, verſ. 5. becauſe the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts: but this loue of Chriſt wee know no otherwiſe than by faith: Ephes. 3. 17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith: then it followeth, verſ. 19. and that ye may know the loue of Chriſt, &c.

3. This confidence ſpringeth of faith, verſ. 32. After ye had receiued light, ye endured a great fight: and therefore verſ. 22 it is called iniquitatem, the aſſurance of faith.

4. The peace of conscience worketh confidence, and faith bringeth this peace of conscience, Rom. 5. 1. And in this place, Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall love his brother, in truth, and shall before him assure our hearts. The living in the truth, which is faith, is the ground of this assurance; the way whereby to know it, is by love. These places will hold no water for them.

Arg. That works of themselves give us no assurance, but as they have their efficacy from faith, Saint Peter teacheth vs. 2. Epist. 1. 10. Give diligence to make your calling sure in doing these things: and what things he meaneth, it is before shewed, next to joyne to your faith, various, much diverse knowledge worketh then breede no assurance or confidence, but as they are joynd with faith, and assure our from the same. Rom. 5. 1. Being iustified by faith, we have peace toward God: Peace and confidence in such from justification by faith: Hebr. 10. 22. The assurance of faith. Faith then glucth assurance.

Belearnine againe faith, that our confidence ariseth not onely from good workes, but that our confidence and trust may be reposed also in our merits: so that in his opinion, it hath both the beginning from thence, and againe hath recourse thither. And thus merits (falsely so called) shall be both the efficient cause of our confidence, as also the matter or object thereof, wherein it should rest and be reposed.

1. Argum. 1. Timoth. 4. 7. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, &c. henceforth is laid up for me a crowne of righteousness, &c. Saint Pauls confidence and assurance of life eternally grounded vpon his meritorious workes. Reformation

2. Nehem. 5. vers. 19. Remember me O Lord in thy goodness, according to that I have done for this people.

3. Psal. 78. 26. The Lord rewarded me according to my righteousness. And thus merits (falsely so called) shall be both the efficient cause of our confidence, as also the matter or object thereof, wherein it should rest and be reposed.

Ans. Saint Pauls confidence is not builded vpon his owne workes, but vpon the righteousness of God, and sureties of Gods promises: which God the righteous Iudge (saith the Apostle) putteth us to a bar day: As Bernard saith: Est ergo, quod Paulus expectat ob omnia iustitia, sed iustitia deum sua: hec est iustitia, de qua presumit Apostolus, promissa dei. It is the crowne of righteousness, which the Apostle looketh for, but not of his owne, but Gods righteousness: the promise of God is the righteousness, whereof the Apostle presumeth: de his meritis. Saint Pauls confidence then is in the promise of God, not in his owne merits.

2. Nehemiah saith, Remember me in thy mercie. And chap. 12. Remember me O Lord concerning this, and pardon me for thy great mercie: vers. 3. Remember me O Lord by thy goodness. His confidence was then not in his workes, but in Gods mercie.

3. First, David speaketh not of his righteousness toward God, but of his innocencie against Saul: and who doubteth, but that the testimony of a good conscience, and the innocencie of a heart, doth make vs bold and confident against our enemies? But the question is of confidence toward God, in which respect David saith, vers. 20. The Lord is my rock, I shall not be troubled. He doth here trust in his owne innocencie, but not in his owne righteousness, for he doth not say, I shall not be troubled, because I am righteous, but because I am innocent. His confidence (that is faith) wherein he walked, and the perswades of his heart, which is taught by faith (for by faith God purifieth our hearts, Act. 15. 9.) that made him confident: which his confidence of faith, was indeed sealed vnto him, and confirmed by his godlie life.

Argum. Saint Paul vicerly disclaimeth and renounceth his owne workes, hee counteth all things but losse and dung in respect of Christ: that he might be found in him, we haueing the same by his grace, then hee barmeth his faith in Christ. Philip. 3. 8. 9. Paul therefore trusted not to his workes, hee will put no confidence in doing. Againe hee saith, I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I thereby justified. 1. Cor. 4. 4. Therefore he hath no confident opinion in himselfe, but his confidence is stayed vpon the loue of God in Christ Iesus.

Bernard well saith: Discipulus de seipso omnia industria, omnia opuscula, omnia merita: Let vs learne to distrust our owne industrie, or rather our merits: in fest. Paul. serm. 2.

Prebend. alter meritum, nisi iustitiam deo debemus, ponere in domino spem nostram: Let another prebend meritis, is good for me to cleaue to God, and in the Lorde to put my trust: in Psal. 90.

ded into three parts, of prayer, fasting, almes deedes.

THE FIRST PART, OF PRAYER.

The severall questions are these: First, of the fruits of prayer. Secondly, of the condition and qualitie of prayer. Thirdly, of the order.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE FRVITS.

Such fruites of prayer, as wee learne out of the word of God, wee most willingly acknowledge. First, it comforteth the soule being in heavines: If any be afflicted, let him pray, Iam. 1. 11. Secondly, it obtaineth wisdom for vs, and all spiritual grace, Iam. 1. 5. Thirdly, by prayer the good creatures of God are sanctified to our vse, 1. Tim. 4. 5. Fourthly, by prayer we are preserved from all spirituall danger, Luk. 22. 31. 32. I have prayed for thee Peter, &c. And other such fruites and vses prayer hath: But these fruites following we doe refuse.

86. Egor.

Bellarmine maketh these two fruites of prayer: that it is satisfactorie, and meritorious. Argum. 1. For the first he reasoneth thus: Every good laborious worke is satisfactorie: prayer is a laborious worke: Ergo, it is satisfactorie.

Ans. 1. Though one man may satisfie and recompence another, yet no worke of ours can worke any satisfaction before God: but Christ onely by his death, hath made satisfaction for vs all: All things are set at peace, through the blood of his crosse, Coloss. 1. 20. 2. Again, whereas they must be good workes, whereby God should be satisfied, seeing God is the giver of every good gift and worke, and all our good workes proceed from him, he thus should be satisfied with his own, which were no satisfaction. 3. Further, prayer is no laborious work to the spirituall man, though it be to the flesh: for in the inner man there is a spirituall delight in all good things, Rom. 7. 21. 4. And what if it were laborious: as though God delighted in the punishment, sorrow, and travail of his children, as the Idolatrous Priests of Baal conceived of their Idoll, that by launcing of their flesh, they should be the sooner regarded and heard.

Argum. 2. That prayer also is meritorious, he would thereby proue it, because God is said to reward them openly, that pray secretly: Matth. 6. 6. his reason is this, reward is of merite, prayer is rewarded: Ergo, it is of merite.

Ans. The proposition is not true, for reward may as well be of fauour, as of desert: He that giveth has a cup of cold water, shall not lose his reward, Matth. 10. 42. Heaven is not merited by so small a gift: this reward then is of mercie: wherefore this place sheweth, that prayer is not in vaine, but is accepted of God, that it is meritorious it proueth not.

The Protestants.

First, prayer is not satisfactorie: no imperfect thing can satisfie before God, but our prayers are imperfect, Rom. 3. 26. We know not what to pray as we ought: Ergo. Again, that onely satisfieth God, whereby his wrath is once for euer appeased; neither need that satisfaction often to be repeated: the reason is, because if God be once satisfied, he is not mutable, he so continueth. But prayer must often be repeated, Onely Christ hath once for euer, &c. Heb. 10. 14. he hath once for all appeased the wrath of God, which satisfaction cannot be repeated: Ergo, the death of Christ is onely satisfactorie: prayer is not. Augustine speaking of Peters repentance, which was tempered (no doubt) with prayer, saith: Lachryma legu, satisfactorium non legu: I weede of Peters teares, but of no satisfaction: de tempore, foris. 11. 7. See more of this, contra. 1. 4. quest. 7. part. 4.

Secondly, prayer is not meritorious, nor any other religious act done by vs: where merite or desert is, there some what is performed to him, at whose hands we deserve: But by our workes, prayer, almes deedes, or whatsoever, we profite not the Lord: as Iob. 35. 7. If thou be righteous, what givest thou unto him, or what receivest he at thy hand? vers. 8. Thy wickednesse may be as a man, as thou art, and thy righteousness may profite the summe of man: Ergo, prayer doth not merite at Gods hand.

Again, we must not pray, as the heathen did, Matth. 6. 7. but they thought to be heard for the merite of their long prayers: Ergo, it becommeth not Christians to pray with any opinion of merite to be heard. Further, that cannot merite at anothers hand, the benefit wherof wholly redoundeth to our selues: But prayer is wholly for our benefite; we doe pray for such things, as we neede, Matth. 6. 8. therefore it cannot merite before God. We haue also a direct place in Scripture against the merite of prayer: Daniel 9. 18. We doe not present our prayers before thee for our owne righteousness, but for thy great mercies.

Bernard

Bernard saith well: Considerare debet is, qui orat, in seipso duo res: pro suis meritis nihil se accepturum putare, sed de Dei misericordia impetraturum: He that prayeth must consider two things in himselfe, that he thinke not to receive any thing for his owne merites, but onely for the mercie of God. In Psalm 91.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE CONDITIONS REQUIRED IN PRAYER.

First, that we pray in chastitie, without wrath, 1 Tim. 2.8. Secondly, we must pray with the devotion and intention of the heart: God will be worshipped in spirit, Ioh. 4. 24. Thirdly, we must persevere and continue in prayer: 1 Thess. 5. 17. Pray continually. Fourthly, we should pray onely for things necessarie, Matth. 6. 32. Thou shalt saye, father, who art in heaven, thou hast neede of all these things: These and such other conditions prescribed in the word of God, we holde to be necessary in prayer: but these following we refuse.

First, Bellarmine affirmeth, that it is not requisite to pray with faith; whereby we beleene and are perswaded, that God will heare vs: but it sufficeth onely in generall to beleene, that God is most mightie and most mercifull, bountifull and willing, to grante our prayer, if there be no defect in vs. David, when he prayed for the life of his child, was not assured, that God would heare him: for he saith, Who can tell, whether God will heare my voice or not, when the child shall live: 2 Sam. 12. 22. Belarmine sayes, Sanctus Paulus prayed doubtfully, that the pricke of the flesh might be taken from him: for he prayed of faith, and yet beleaved not, that he should obtaine that he prayed for, for then it should have been a false faith, seeing he obtained not his request: Ibid.

Indeede, when we pray for temporall things, we have no warrant otherwaie to receive them: Belarmine saith, God heareth them to be good for vs: but for spirituall blessings, we may pray absolutely with all assurance and confidence to be heard in Gods good time: As David, though here praying for the temporall life of his sonne, be not sure to obtaine; yet when he prayed for some spirituall grace, as for the forgiveness of his sinne, Psalm. 6. 1. he is assured, that his prayer is received, ver. 9. The Lord hath heard my petition, he will receive my prayer. This difference betwene the request of things spirituall, and temporall, Augustine well noteth: Sanitatem quis petit, cum agrotat: et tamen forte adhuc ei agrotare vitale est, potest fieri ut hic non exaudiat: at vero cum illud petit, ut deus deum vitam mereatur, securus est salutis: A man asketh health when he is sicke, and is not heard, for it may be good for him yet to be sicke; but when thou prayest for eternall life, be secure and out of doubt for this matter, thou shalt have it, but the time is not yet.

S. Paul also prayed infinitely, even thrice, and therefore he prayed with faith, not doubting: for though in that particular he was not assured to be heard, yet he doubted not but that God would graunt to him that which was needfull; and therein he was heard: for the Lord said, My grace is sufficient for thee: So our Sauour prayed for the passing away of the cuppe of death, there he was not heard; yet he was heard in general, in that he submitted his humane will to his Fathers will, and was heard in that which he feared, Hebr. 5. 7. Shall we therefore inferre, that Christ prayed doubtfully?

Argum. That weought to pray confidently with a lively faith, nothing doubting; but that God will graunt us all things, to wit, all which we aske in Christ, the Scripture evidently testifieth: John 1. 5. I am the light of the world, who that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. James 1. 5. If any of you lacketh wisdom, let him aske of God, who giveth to all liberally, and without reproch, and it shall be given him. This confidence in our prayers, how great, as we see from faith, nor from any certaine and doubtful hope, as the Iesuits seeme to affirme.

Christ saith, whoever shall come to the father in my name, he will receive him: Ioh. 14. 21. here is the ground of our confidence in prayer, the promise of God in Christ Iesus, therefore all doubting must be removed.

Chrysostome saith well, Si dixeris, nisi accipies non recipiam, pro fus accipies: If thou saist, I will not receive, thou shalt receive: that I aske, thou shalt surely receive: John 14. 21.

Ephraim upon these words, Jacob 1. 8. Et benedixit illis, dicens, Pax sit vobis, et misericordia patris nostri, qui est in cælis, pax sit vobis. We must be perswaded, that we shall be heard in heaven: John 1. 12. Whoever receiveth him, he will give him the right to become the son of God, who abideth in him, who receiveth him, who receiveth him, who receiveth him.

Secondly, Belarmine saith, that he that prayeth must not be in any deadly sinne, but come with a pure heart and inherent righteousness: for God heareth not sinners, unless it be extraordinarily.

rily sometime, or when they begin to repent them of their sinne, whereof notwithstanding they have no certaintie, cap. 9. Argum. Psalm. 66. 18. If I regard wickedness in my house, the Lord will not heare me: Ergo, the prayer of wicked men is not heard.

Ifay 1. 15. Though ye make many prayers, I will not heare for your hands are full of blood.

Ansu. WE grant, that they which delight and continue in their sinne, are not heard of God, Prou. 15. 8. The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord: yet it followeth not, but that the sinner, which repenteth him of his sinne, though his conscience be not yet fully cleared, may pray vnto God aright, and be very sure that his prayer is heard.

Argum. This is proued by Dauid's experience: Psalm. 32. 5. I acknowledged my sinne before thee, neither did I hide mine iniquitie, &c. and thou forgavest the punishment of my sinne: the prayer therefore of penitent sinners is infallibly heard, which Bellarmine denyeth. We haue not onely the examples of holy men, but the promise also of God, for the hearing of sinners prayers: as it appeareth by Solomons prayer made at the dedication of the temple, with the which God was pleased: a part of which prayer is this, that if they, which haue sinned, returne and pray vnto God, and confesse their sinnes: Then heare thou in heauen, saith Salomon, 1. King. 8. 49. God was pleased with this prayer of Solomon, and euery part thereof.

Angustina saith, Si peccatores Deum non exaudiret, frustra publicani aculeos in terram demitterent, & postea suum percutiens diceret, Deus propitius esto mihi peccatoris: If God did not heare sinners, in what should the Publicane casting his eyes down vnto the ground, and knocking vpon his breast haue said, Lord be mercifull to me a sinner. Luc. 18. 13.

Bellarmino answereth, that sinners are heard praying for any spirituall or temporall gift, when they are in the way to repentance, as the Publicane was: but then they are heard, Nam ex misericordia, sed ex misericordia: Not of iustice as worline, but of Gods merke: neither are they heard certainly or infallible.

Contra. 1. Neither is the most righteous man heard for his righteousness, as Daniel was a righteous man: yet he prayed thus, Dan. 9. 18. We present not our supplications before thee for our own righteousness, but thy great mercies. 2. The Publicane was heard certainly being a sinner, so are all other praying in faith, as our Saviour saith, Mark. 11. 24. What soeuer ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye shall receive it, and it shall be done vnto you.

THE THIRD QUESTION OF THE ORDER

and manner of Prayer:

It hath these severall parts: first, of the time and number of canonicall houres: secondly, of the matter of prayer: thirdly, the manner fourthly, of the persons.

THE FIRST PART OF CANONICAL HOURS

canonicall houres.

90. Error.

They haue their nocturne houres, and diurne or day houres appoynted for prayer: In the night: In the day they obserue the prime, the first houre, the third, the sixth, the ninth, and the twelfth: and they haue their complin immediately after the evening or twilight.

Argum. These canonicall houres the Iesuite would warrane by the example of Dauid, who prayed God seven times a day, Psalm. 139. Dauid also kept his nocturne. At midnight will I rise vp, and praise thee, Psalm. 119. Thou shalt heare my voice in the morning, Psalm. 124. In these houres also the greatest mysteries of our redemption were wrought by our Saviour Christ: as in the vespertine, or twelfth houre he instituted the Sacrament, at complin he was taken, in the prime led to Pilate, in the third houre condemned to the sixt crucified, in the ninth he gave up the Ghost: these houres therefore are consecrate by Christs example vnto prayer: Bellarmino. cap. 1. §. 1.

Ansu. 1. First, we denie not, but that at all times and houres both of the day and night, it is lawfull to pray, so oft as we are aright disposed thereunto, as the Prophet Dauid said.

Secondly, further we also grant a politike vse in the Church of set houres for prayer, both publicly in the Church, and priuately in families, for order and decencie sake; so it be done without any superstitious opinion of the houre and necessarie limitation of our prayers thereunto: and in this sense we refuse not the counsell of the author of the Epistle ad Timotheum, which goeth vnder Hieromes name: Quoniam nullam prorsus horam a spiritali profectu vacuam esse conuincimus. Although though it be not convenient; that any houre should be void of spirituall exercise, yet there should be some determinate and appointed number of houres, quo plenius Deo vacet, & qui se ad summam meditationem quasi lege quadam continent: in the which you should more fully be vacant for God, and which by a law should bind you to a greater intention of the minde: I thinke the morning the fittest time for this; and the greater part of the day, vsq; ad horam tertiam, till the third houre, or three a clocke, &c. Here are three reasons giuen of set houres, which wee mislike not. 1. That we may set al other businesse aside, and be vacant onely for God. 2. That the houre comming, we may prepare our selues more zealously to pray. 3. That the morning be chosen, as the fittest time of the day: But of the vespertine and complin and prime, here is no mention.

Yet it followeth not, that our prayer should be tied and limited vnto certaine houres. Neither hath Dauid any such meaning, in saying, seuen times a day, he meaueth, that often times in a day he prayed God: Verf. 97. He meditated in the law of God continually: And Psal. 55. 17. these seuen times, he reduceth to three times, Evening, morning, and at noone will I pray: he kept therefore no certaine time. Further, if they stand so strictly vpon Dauids example, why do they not keepe their nocturne houres? as Dauid saith, he rose at midnight, and his eyes presented the night watches Psal. 119. Their nocturne watches are too painfull for them.

Secondly, concerning the example of Christ, wee say that not onely these houres, but euery houre of the day and night was consecrated with some vertuous act of his; that as Leo saith of some small dayes, that if we should keepe all dayes holy, wherein Christ did any notable thing, Omnia tempora, continuatim erunt deputanda festis: All times should be festiuall: so if all houres should be obserued for prayer, wherein Christ wrought any part of our redemption; then we should do nothing else but pray. See our reasons against their popish nocturnes and canonicall houres: Controv. 6. quest. 6. part. 3. & controv. 9. quest. 8. appendix. ad 4. partem.

8. Ambrose saith notably vpon these words, I presented the morning light, Psal. 119. Verf. 144. Qui ergo Dominum deprecatur, non debet prescripta precipue tempora praestolatur, &c. sed semper in corde se Christum, semper in ore se Christum: He that prayeth to the Lord, let him not stay as it were, for the prescript times; but let Christ be alwayes in his heart, alwayes in his mouth, serm. 19. in Psal. 119.

They are not themselves agreed concerning the time of their canonicall houres; as for completorium, the complin, Rabanus holdeth, that it should be celebrate hora undecima in the eleventh houre, that is the houre before Sunne set, the last but one, lib. 2. de instit. Cleric. c. 8. Smaragdus Abbas saith horam duodecimam, that the twelfth, that is the last houre of the day, belongeth to Compluy controv. ad cap. 16. reguli S. Benedicti. The rest do generally hold, that Complin is in the beginning of the night.

THE SECOND PART OF THE MATTER of diuine seruice and prayer.

IN the matter of their seruice wee take exception against two partes of their seruice chiefly. 1. Error. First, wee mislike the reading of the fabulous stories of their fained liues in stead of the Scriptures, which onely ought to be read in the Church; as it may thus appeare: Nellius & Sara did read from morning to midday onely in the booke of the law: The Iewes did read the Prophets onely in their Synagogues vpon the Sabbath day: Act. 13. 27. and Act. 15. 21. And Christ sendeth vs to whether but to the Scriptures: Search the Scriptures, Iohn. 5. 39. See the consent of antiquitie: Concil. Laodicen. can. 59. Non oportet libri extra canonem legere. Carthage. can. 17. Placuit ut prout Scripturas canonicas nihil in Ecclesia legatur sub nomine diuine Scripturarum: It was decreed, that nothing beside the canonicall Scriptures, should be read for Scripture in the Church.

Gelasius also thus decreed of this matter: Græca sanctæ scripturæ, secundum antiquam consuetudinem, singulari cautela, in Ecclesia Romana non leguntur, quia & eorum qui scripserunt, nomina ignorantur, & multa superflua, non minus apta scriptæ sunt: The decrees of the Martyrs, we haue provided, not to be read any more in the Romane Church, as aforetime; because their names are not knowne that writ them, and there is much superfluous and vniuse matter there written: decret. de Apostolicis. Yet for all this the Iesuits would heare vnderstand, that it is a commendable vse of the Church to read such stories still: Bellarmine. cap. 14.

Secondly, we condemne their idolatrous and blasphemous song, called (Salus Regina) endited to the honour of the Virgin Mary; but to the dishonour of Christ.

They call her in this song, matrem misericordie, the mother of mercie: which is a title proper vnto God, to be called the father of mercie: 1. Cor. 1. 3.

They call her our life: but Christ onely is the way, the truth, and the life, Iohn. 1. 4. 6.

Another title is (delectio) our sweetnes, or comfort: but the Lord our God, onely is the God of all comfort: 1. Cor. 1. 3.

5. This song calleth Mary our hope: But the Scripture holdeth them accursed that make man their confidence, Ierem. 17. 5.

6. They pray vnto Mary in this song, Post hoc exilium Iesum attende; that shee would shew vnto vs Iesus after this life: contrary to the Scripture; for God the father bringeth vs to Christ, Iohn 6. 44. and it is the office of Christ to shew himselfe to vs, Ioh. 4. 21. It is great Idolatrie then to ascribe this office proper vnto God, to any other: yet notwithstanding all these blasphemies, this song is defended by the Iesuite: cap. 1. y<sup>e</sup>

Bellarmines answer is here most absurd.

1. Mary is called or saluted by the name of Queene; as all other Saints are; Matth. 5. 12. Blessed are the poore in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heauen, lib. 1. de bon. operib. 13. and she more singularly is called a Queene; being the mother of the King of kings.

Contra. 1. If Mary be no otherwise a Queene then all other Saints are, as it is said, Apo. cal. 1. 6. He hath made vs Kings and Priests; then every faithfull woman in earth is a Queene as well as she. 2. Why do you then robbe other Saints of this title; and giue it onely to her, if it be common to the rest? 3. We are all indeed Kings and Priests, but vnto God, that is, spiritually, by faith, we are not made kings one to another. 4. As Mary was the mother of the King of kings, so was she the mother of God; if the first make her a Queene, the second must make her a Goddesse; and seeing Christ was a King, while he liued in the flesh, and is noted to haue beene obedient to his parents, Luke 2. 51. hee should haue done his mother wrong, in not giuing vnto her the name of Queene, which was due vnto her.

2. She is called the Mother of mercie, because she was the mother of Christ, by whom we obtaine mercie: and for that she prayeth dayly for mercie for vs, and obtayneth, ibid.

Contra. 1. Christ also is called the Sonne of Dauid, and the sonne of Adam, Luk. 3. 38. say also, that Adam and Dauid were likewise Fathers of mercie; as Mary obtaineth no mercie for vs: he only is our aduocate for mercie, that is the propitiation for our finnes, 1 Iohn 2. 2. Mary, while she liued, had need of mercie herselfe; acknowledging Christ to be her Saviour, Luke. verse 47.

3. She is called life, because she was the mother of Christ our life, and by him made the mother of all that liue spiritually; as Eua was the mother of all liuing the naturall life, Bellarmines ibid.

Contra. 1. It is agreat blasphemie to say that Mary is to the mother of the spiritual life, as she was of the naturall: what is this els, but to make Mary the Saviour of the world? 2. The propagation to be Christs mother spiritually, Christ giueth to all faithfull believers and followers, Matth. 12. 50. Will you say also that every faithfull woman that spiritually beareth Christ, is life.

3. Ierusalem, which is from above, is the mother of vs all: Galath. 4. 26. The Church of God is the mother of the spiritual life: haue we then two mothers? 4. Christ saith, I am the way and the life, Iohn 14. 6. If Mary be the life, maketh also the way.

4. Shee is called the sweetnesse, because of the innumerable benefites wherewith she continually comforteth the afflicted, Bellarmines ibid.

Contra. 1. The Prophet Dauid saith, Psal. 3. 8. Tuffe land for how sweet is the Lord, blessed is he that trusteth in him; will you haue also the Virgine Mary trusted in, or so trusted in, as that they are not blessed, that trust not in her? 2. Christ saith, Iohn 14. 16. I will pray the Father, &c. he shall giue you another comforter. Doth he meane his mother shall be this comforter, or will you make two comforters, whereas Christ will send but another beside himselfe: how then is the Virgine Mary become a comforter of the afflicted? 3. S. Paul saith, God is our comforter, 2 Cor. 1. 3. Is not God sufficient to comfort the afflicted; but yett must also make the Virgine Mary a comforter? miserable comforters are ye, that driue vs to such comforts.

5. We may trust in men, so that we chiefly trust in God: as Christ saith of the Iewes, *There is none which accuseth you, save Moses in whom ye trust*; Iohn 9. 31. and thus also may we trust in the virgine Mary, Bellarmines ibid.

Contra. 1. By trusting in Moses, our Saviour understandeth Moses law or Moses writings, so to beleue Moses, is to beleue Moses writings: Iohn 5. 46. 47. And where it is said, Ad. 1. 20. Moses hath in euery thing testified him; is to be understood of Moses person, or Moses doctrine. And thus the Iewes themselves shew how they trusted in Moses, Iohn 9. 29. Moses disciples, we know that God spake by Moses: their trust then was in his doctrine. 2. That God onely is to be trusted in, the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 73. 25. *Whom haue I in heauen, but thou? S. Ambrose well saith, writing vpon these wordes, 1. Cor. 1. 1. *Whom haue I in heauen, but thou? S. Ambrose well saith, writing vpon these wordes, 1. Cor. 1. 1. *Whom haue I in heauen, but thou?

6. Like as S. Paul saith to Timothie, 1. Tim. 4. 16. Take heed, unto thyselfe, and them that heare thee: and S. Iames 5. 20. He that hath bene conuicted of his sinne, &c. shall saue a soule from death: as men may saue others by preaching, prayer, conuicting, so the Virgins prayer prayer is shewed to shew vs Christ by her intercession; Adhuc in illis.

Contra. 1. If Maria do shew you Christ by her mediation, then other Saints, whom yee make your mediators, do as much yee you do not pray in these termes vnto them. 2. Men as instrumentall meanes by their preaching and prayers are said to saue others, because these are duties prescribed, and commanded in the word: as Preaching, 1. Timothy 4. 16. Take heed vnto doctrine: Prayer, Iam. 5. 16. Pray one for another: but where haue Maria any such office committed to her to shew vs Christ, or to be a Mediator to that end? 3. Christ saith, I will shew mine owne selfe vnto him: Iohn 14. 21. what need we then a Mediator to him, to shew himselfe? Yea, and he himselfe is our Mediator herein: Father I will, that they which thou hast giuen me, be with me, &c. that they may behold my glory, Iohn 17. 24. Do yee thinke that Christ is not a sufficient Mediator of himselfe, but that you must ioine another with him? Thus we see, notwithstanding all these shifts, and mistie conceits, that they cannot bring any good defence or excuse for this their idolatrous song of (Salve Regina.)

Now let vs see what testimonie wee haue from themselves: Espece thus rehearseth out of Agobertus de Sacramentis lib. 3. c. 13. Multi aliqui erroris verba per imperitiam precatores effundunt, &c. in quibus multa reperitur contra catholicam fidem: Many in their prayers vniuersally do utter erroneous wordes, &c. wherein many things are contayned, contrarie to the Catholike faith, discrep. lib. 1. c. 11.

3. Nicolaus Clamengius thus complained in his time: Qualiter huc temporis legunt sacra diuinitatis Canon, &c. How in these dayes the diuine law is read, is manifest: vis sola librorum capitula recitantur, &c. scarcely the titles of the bookes are read: I know a Cathedrall Church in this Kingdome, wherein, when the actes of the Saints are rehearsed, from the beginning to the ende, when as they come to the reading of Scripture, Lector singulis lectionibus vix quatuor lineas explet: the reader hardly endeth foure lines: ex citation. Espece ibid. This was another fault in the popish leurgie, that they excluded the reading of Scripture.

4. Lodouicus Pines lib. 2. de corrupt. altib. giueth this testimonie of their legend: Quam indigna diuina & hominum sanctorum historia, quam nescio cur auream Legendam appellant, cum scripta sit ab hominibus ferrei oris, plumbei cordis: quid facilius deus potest illi libris, &c. How vnworthie a storie both for God and men, which I see no reason, they should call a golden legend, seeing it was made by a man of iron lips, and a leaden heart: what can be said to be more filthie then that booke? &c. Yet out of this booke the greatest part of the lessons vpon the Saints dayes were taken: Thus their leurgie was filled with lies and fables.

5. Ludouicus lib. 3. de interpret. scriptur. c. 3. reporteth these words of Agobertus Bishop of Lions, Antiphonarium corruptissimum, amplexus, quae superflua, leuia, falsa, blasphemosa, ridicula, phantastica multa continentur: We haue corrected the Antiphonary, cutting off many things that seemed superfluous, light, false, blasphemous, ridiculous, phantasticall, &c. Is not here a goodly beadrowle of the vertues and singular qualities of their holy leurgie? and these are the complaints of their owne side: and therefore we can iudge no lesse, but that their popish prayers and songs are ridiculous, blasphemous, superstitious, &c.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE MANNER of their Church-service.

Concerning their Church musicke, and the singing of their service, we haue shewed our opinion before, where we entreated of the Canon of the Masse: We do not condemn the commendable vse of singing in the Church, which serueth to many good purposes, but wee onely would haue the abuse reposed: the chiefe faulces committed in popish Church musicke are these.

1. The yrkesome length and tediousnesse thereof, produced with their multiplicitie of vnedifying songs and lessons: which abuse hath beene much complained of in time past: apud scriptoris lib. 3. cap. 1. In multis Ecclesijs faciunt lectiones adeo prolixas in matutinis, quod ferè nullus audiat totas matutinas, & siquis voluntarius ibi, dormit: In many Churches they make their lessons so long a morning seruice, that few tary the whole; and they that stay, fall asleepe.

2. Their songs are set forth in an vnedifying tongue, contrary to Saint Pauls rule, 1. Cor. 14. But of this matter we haue already entreated at large, Contron. 1. appendix. ad certam questionem: so that we need not to handle it againe here.

3. They sing that, which is not to be sung, as the lessons and lectures out of Scriptures, and prayers, which are to be said, and not sung: as Hierome saith; Non decet orationem canere: hee that prayeth must not sing: prefation. lib. 2. in Habacuke.

The Apostle also distinguisheth prayer and singing, Is any afflicted? let him pray: is any merry? let him sing, Iam. 5. 13.

Council.

Concil. Bracarenf. 1. 30. Adiacus, on which certain of our ancient fathers have written: Ecklopfelatus: That no part of the olds Testament should be sung in vers. The decret is against the singing of lessons. Other corruptions and impositions in their singing service we have noted before, in the treatise of the canon of the Mass, whether we return the Reader.

THE FOVRTH PART OF THE PERSONS THAT are bound to the Canonical hours.

91. Епос.

THis dutie, saith Jeremie belongeth onely to Monkes, and those which are of the Clergie.

Answer. First, the argument followeth not, because the Levites then were deputed to the office of singing, that therefore the Clergie is onely bound to doe it now: for that legall distinction between the Priests and the people, is now taken away: And Christ hath made vs all Kings and Priests now, Apocal. 1. 6. to offer vp the spirittuall sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving. Secondly, the Levites did not onely sing the songs of the Church, but they as more skilfull men, were appointed to moderate the voyce of the people; who did sing together with the Levites, 1. Chron. 15. 28. All Israel (not the Levites onely) brought vp the Arke with the sound of instruments, chap. 16. 36. Let all the people say so be in, and praise the Lord. Thirdly, your Monks, either are, or ought to be, no Priests, but lay men; and are not therefore of the Leviticall order, and yet you permit them to sing Psalmes: why may not other lay men doe the like? Fourthly, you graunt that all things should be done in the Church in order: and therefore that it is the office of the Minister to moderate the assemblies of the people in their Christian exercises of giving of thanks, and prayer: But notwithstanding the people may ioyne with their Pastor, both with voyce and consent of heart, in the common Psalmes and prayer, so that all things be done decently, and in order.

Argument. The People in Dauids time did vs. to praise God together with the Levites, 1. Chr. 16. 36. In Nehemiab his time, at the dedication of the Temple, the people praised God together with the Levites, chap. 12. 38. I appointed you great companies to give thanks: and the one went on the right hand of the wall, &c. And in these companies were the people, vers. 38. halfe of the people was vpon the wall. The leuitate also brought in Dauids example, who praised God seven times a day, for the warrant of his canonically hours: But Dauid was neither Monke nor Priest: wherefore the office of praise and thanksgiving belongeth not onely to such.

THE SECOND PART OF FASTING

the particulars whereof follow.

94. Еггсг.

First, they hold that the holy time of Lent, as they do fondly call it, as though any time in their Lent were holier than another, is an Apostolike tradition, warranted by the example of Malar, Elias and our Saviour Christ, that fasted 40. dayes. Oberrist. March 4. fol. 2. Bellarm. hb. 2. de bono oporio. cap. 14. And to argue more vaine of this point, they shew that it is not gauged to any pleasure
Bellarmino farther then seven causes of the institution of Lent.

1. That Christians may solemnly repent for the finnes of the whole yeere.
2. That they may be prepared to receive the Communion at Easter.
3. To fulfill that saying of Christ, Matth. 9. 15. When the Bridegrome shall be taken away, then shall they fast.
4. That they may be prepared to celebrate the feast of Christs passion and resurrection.
5. That they might fast and pray, for such as were newly converted to the faith, which were baptized at Easter.
6. That wee might consecrate by fasting vnto God the tenth part of our life, for 20. dayes and the tenth of the yeere.
7. That hereby wee should imitate Christ, so peere as wee can, that fasted 40. dayes and 40. nights: Bellem. cap. 16.

The Protestants.
1. Ans. If I shall it then suffice a man once in the yeere to repent for his sins? Is not the Lords prayer daily to be sayd, wherein wee pray for remission of finnes, which cannot be obtained without repentance? Secondly, or was it Lent, when Peter exhorted the people to publike repentance, Act. 2. 38. Repent and be baptized. Thirdly, Quid enim quod differas, ut plura peccata committas? Why should you deferre your repentance, to commit more sinnes, saith Ambrose de penit. lib. 2. c. 11. This therefore could be no cause of the institution of Lent.

2. In the Primitive Church they received the Communion often, even euery Lords day at the least: Act. 20. 7. The first day of the week, (which is the Lordes day) they came together to eate bread. Saint Ambrose: Accipe quotidie, quod tibi quotidie profuit: qui non meretur quotidie accipere, non meretur post annum accipere: Receiue that daily, which thou halt vse of daily: hee that is not fit to receiue daily, is not fit after a yeere: de sacram lib. 5. c. 4. If Lent were instituted vpon this occasion, it was no Apostolicall institution: for then the Communion was ministred often, and not onely at Easter.

3. First, that saying of Christ was spoken onely to his Apostles, that enioyed his carnall presence. Secondly, if it be largely taken, then the Montanists did come neerer to the sense, that obserued the Lenton fast straight after Christs ascension. Thirdly, or if they will expound the taking away of the Bridegrome, of Christs death, by this reason they should not fast before the celebration of the passion, but after.

4. First, by this reason, we must haue a Lent also before the Natiuitie, and another before Pentecost, seeing these also are great feasts, and a preparation ought to goe before. Secondly, this proueth Lent not to be Apostolicall, seeing the feast of Easter was not then vniiformly obserued, nor many yeeres after. Thirdly, the Sabbath was as great a festiuall as any beside, being immediatly instituted of God: yet one day of preparation sufficed for that.

5. First, we haue now no Catechumens, or Conuerts from Paganisme: therefore by this reason, the Lenton obseruation should cease, hauing no vse that way. Secondly, neither did the Apostles deferre the baptisme of Conuerts til Easter, but baptized them, as occasion serued: Act. 2. 38. S. Petrus saith at the feast of Pentecost, Repent and be baptized, &c. Wherefore this reason sheweth, that Lent was not Apostolicall.

6. First, if 36. daies be the tenth of the yeere, why do you obserue 40. daies for the Lenton fast? Secondly, these fellowes will set God to schoole, that hee should rather haue taken the tenth day for the Sabbath, than the seauenth; so strict they are in tithing of dayes. Thirdly, not the tenth day, but euery day of our life ought to be consecrate to God; as Ambrose saith of Iob: Sauitius Iob quotidie pro filiis offerebat sacrificium: Holy Iob euery day offered sacrifice for his sonnes: de sacram. lib. 5. c. 4.

7. First, Ambrose serm. 23. Quadragesima quadraginta duos dies habet, &c. Lent hath 42. dayes according to Moses 42. mansions: serm. 34. He deriueeth this obseruation from Noahs flood, quia tot dierum spatium pluuia defluerunt: because so many dayes the raine was in falling, &c. If this bee so, then is it not grounded vpon the imitation of Christ. Secondly, Moses fasted 40. dayes, and Elias; yet none in the old law did institute a fast vpon this example: neither are wee to ground the like vpon Christs miraculous abstinence now. Thirdly, that fasting of our Sauour Christ, and the holie Prophets was miraculous, and no more to be imitated, than Christs walking on the sea, or raising of the dead, as Augustine saith: Non tibi dicit, non eris discipulus meus, &c. Hee saith not, thou shalt not be my disciple, vnlesse thou walke vpon the sea, or raise the dead, but learne of me, because I am humble and meeke. Again he saith, Non ergo, quia Christus statim post baptismum ieiunauit, tanquam regulam obseruationis tradidisse credendus est, sed plane illo exemplo docuit ieiunandum esse, quando forte acriore lucamine cum tentatione configitur: In that Christ fasted after his Baptisme, it is not to be thought, that he gaue vs a rule to obserue, but taught vs by his example, that then wee must fast, when we are more strongly tempted.

George Mars holy Martyr thus witnesseth: Let the fasting of Christ while hee was tempted in the wilderness, be vnto vs an example of sober lining, not for the space of fortie daies, (as the Papists doe fondly fause of their owne braine) but as long as we are in the wilderness of this wretched life.

Further, that the obseruation of Lent was no Apostolike tradition, it appeareth, because it was not vniiformly kept of the Church a long time after them: for as Irenaeus witnesseth, some fasted one day, some two dayes, some fortie houres day and night: but if it had been necessarily inioyned and prescribed by the Apostles, such varietie of custome could not haue sprung vp: at the least, not haue been suffered in the Church. Again, Epiphanius saith, that the Wednesdayes fast was an Apostolike tradition; as likewise to obserue the feast of the sixe daies of Easter, with bread, salt, and water: which obseruations are not kept amongst the Papists themselues, yet haue they as good testimonie of antiquitie to be Apostolike traditions, as the Lent fast. Thirdly, in Augustines time, there was no necessarie enforcement for euery man to keepe Lent: Si aliquis (saith he) seruare non potest, eleemosyna sine ieiunio bona est: If any man be not able to fast, almes without fasting is good and profitable. Wherefore seeing the Lent fast was then voluntarie, it is euident, that it was not an Apostolike prescription, which should haue bound all men necessarily.

Tha:

Psal. 30.

tempor. 62.

That Lent is no Apoſtolicall tradition, it further appeareth, both becauſe of the vncertaine preſcript of the time, as alſo the diuerſitie of the manner in keeping the ſtrict time of Lent.

As touching the firſt, it was decreed: Concil. Aurelianenſ. 4. can. 2. Ut quadageſima equaliter ab omnibus teneatur, non quinquageſima, aut ſexageſima: That fortie dayes ſhould be obſerved for Lent, not fiftie, or threeſcore. Agathenſ. can. 12. Ut omnes in quadageſima exceptis diebus dominicis ieiunent: That every man ſhould faſt fortie daies, excepting the Lords dayes. Gregorio the firſt, Quadageſimali ieiunio 4. dies addidis, to the fortie dayes faſt added foure dayes more. Par. 3. diſt. 3. c. 16. Teleſphorus Biſhop of Rome decreed, Ut 7. hebdomadas plenas ante paſcha omnes clerici à carnis ieiunent: That Clergie men ſhould faſt ſeven whole weekes before Eaſter, that is 49. dayes. Diſt. 4. c. 4. Concil. Triburienſ. can. 58. They which had committed murther, were inioyned thrice in a yeere to faſt fortie dayes, before Eaſter, before S. Iohn Baptiſts day, and before the Natiuitie. And thus wee ſee ſome faſted fortie dayes, ſome fortie ſauing the fixe Lords dayes, ſome 44. ſome 49. ſome 120. dayes, that is three Lents.

Further, thus it is extant in their own decrees: Diſtinct. 4. c. 6. Gregor. Sacerdotes à quinquageſima propoſitum ieiunandi ſuſcipiant: The Priests muſt begin to faſt from the 50. day: contr. par. 3. diſt. 3. c. 6. Quadageſ. non quinquageſ. ſeneatur.

Diſtinct. 76. c. 8. Quadageſima ieiunij contriſtaremur: Wee muſt ſorrow with the faſt of fortie dayes. Ambroſ. ſerm. 23. Quadageſima quadraginta duos dies habet: Lent hath 42. dayes.

Diſt. 76. c. 10. Poſt paſcha, &c. After the Paſch to Pentecoſt, they that will may faſt: quia Antonius, Paulus, & ceteri patres his diebus in eremo leguntur abſtinuiſſe, neque ſoluiſſe abſtinentiam, niſi tantum die dominico: Becauſe Antonie, Paul, and other fathers are read to haue faſted theſe dayes, neither to haue looſed their faſt, but onely vpon the Lordes day, &c. Here is another Lenton faſt from the Paſch to Pentecoſt tolerated.

Par. 3. diſt. 5. c. 16. Gregor. Sex dies dominici de abſtinentia ſubtrahit, &c. Sixe Lords dayes are taken from the faſt, and ſo there remaine but 36. and to fill vp the number of fortie dayes, he borroweth foure dayes from the weeke before.

Ibid. c. 25. Quadageſimam abſtinentia celebramus, cum bene vivimus, &c. We keep the Lenton faſt, when we liue well: ex Auguſtin. By this decree there ſeemeth to be no neceſſitie of the Lenton faſt at all. And this difference we finde for the time of Lent.

The like diuerſitie is to be ſeene in the manner of the obſervation: Liberini decreed, that the husbandall Lent long ſhould abſent himſelfe from his wife. Concil. Triburienſ. can. 35. That no Iudge ſhould keepe aſſiſes in Lent time: Yet the contrarie is praſtiſed euen among the Papiſts: Taletan. 10. cap. 1. Quadageſima nihil conuenit, de ſanctorum ſolemnitatibus celebrari: That no Saints dayes ſhould be kept in Lent: Yet the Annuntiation falleth in Lent, which they make a feſtiuall of our Ladie. Nicolaus 1. de bellis. can. 4. That all Lent time they muſt abſtaine from warre. Sabguſtad. cap. 19. Ut dum poenitens quadageſimam ieiunet, non migret à loco ad locum: That while the penitent man keepeth his Lent, he ſhould not trauell from place to place.

Befide: Cod. lib. 3. tit. 12. leg. 6. Tempore quadageſime criminalis cauſa non agitanda: In Lent time criminall cauſes muſt not be handled.

Canſ. 22. qu. 5. c. 17. Non iurandum à ſeptuageſima: From Septuageſima Sunday till Eaſter no man muſt ſwear.

Canſ. 33. qu. 4. c. 3. Diebus ieiuniorum nullus coniungatur uxori: No man muſt in the faſting dayes haue companie with his wife.

C. 8. Non nuptias celebrare: It is not lawfull to celebrate mariage.

C. 9. Nec natalitia martyrum: Nor the Saints dayes.

C. 11. Nec conuiuia facere: Nor to make feaſts in Lent.

Par. 3. diſt. 1. c. 50. Non niſi veſpertina hora ieiunium ſoluant: The faſt muſt not be looſed till the euening.

Thus by thoſe vncertainties it may appeare, that the Lenton faſt is an humane inuention, rather than an Apoſtolicall institution: for then it ſhould haue remained alwaies the ſame, without any addition, or alteration: the contrarie whereof we haue ſeene.

The Papiſts.

97. Error.

2. A Second abuſe in their faſting, is to appoynt preſcript times, neceſſarily to faſt in, as in Lent, on Friday, Saturday, and vpon Ember dayes, which are preſcribed for the foure ſolemne times of giuing orders: And this alſo they ſay, is an Apoſtolike tradition, Act. 13. 3. They faſted and prayed, and layd their hands vpon them, Rhemif. ibid. Bellar. lib. 2. de bon. operib. in par. tioul. cap. 17. 18.

2. Belarmine alſo groundeth the foure quarters faſts vpon the example of the Iewes, Zach. 8. verſ. 19. that faſted the fourth, fiſt, ſeuenth, and tenth moneths: but Chriſtians ſhould not be inferior to them in faſting.

3. Likewise, Act. 27. 9. where Saint Luke ſaith, ſayling was now in jeopardy, becauſe the ſeaſon was paſſed.

passed. Bellarmine would have this understood not of the fast of the Jewes, but of the solemn fast of the Christians in the tenth moneth: Bellarmine 1.9. cap. 20. 1. 22.

4. Other fasts also he vrgeth, as the fast of Advent, the fast in Rogation weeke, the Vigill fasts, or on Saints euees, as very ancient, and commendable, and fit still to be retained, cap. 20. 1. 22.

The Protestants rebulke this saying of Bellarmine 1.9. cap. 20. 1. 22.

Ans. 1. For prayer and fasting to be vsed at such times as Ministers are ordained, we doubt not: but it is an Apostolike tradition, because we finde it written in the Acts of the Apostles: but it was fasting from all meate and drinke, which the Apostles vsed, not abstinence from flesh onely, as vpon your Imber dayes. Neither doe you obserue thole dayes of fast for any such purpose: for your Imber dayes are kept amongst you, though there be no orders giuen in the whole dioces.

2. It is not fit that Christians should imitate the superstitious fasts of the Jewes: such as these were not commaunded of God, but inuented and taken vp by themselves: as the Prophet Zacharias reproveth them, Zach. 7. 5. When ye fasted and mourned in the fift and seuenth moneth: did ye fast for me? Again, those fasts were taken vp among the Jewes vpon speciall occasions: the fast of the fourth moneth, because then the citie was broken vp, Iere. 52. 6. 7. of the fift, when the temple was destroyed, Iere. 52. 12. of the seuenth, when Gedaliah was slaine, Iere. 41. 1. of the tenth, when the citie began to be besieged, Iere. 52. 4. But seeing that the Christians haue no such occasions, as these were to the Jewes, they haue no reason to keepe the like fasts. 3. Origene to this point saith well: Paulus dicit, &c. Paul saith, if thou wilt obserue any one of the obseruations of the law, thou art subiect to the whole laue: Quis ergo obseruat ieiunia, ascendet iter in auiam ad Ierusalem. Hee therefore that will obserue their fasts, let him goe vp thrice a yeere to Ierusalem; Han. 9. in Leuitico.

4. Saint Luke describeth the solemn fast of the Jewes, which was about October, when as sayling began to be ieopardous, as both Chrysostome and Oecumenius do interpret it: And where as Bellarmine saith, that Saint Luke wrote an historie for the Christians, not for the Jewes: it is true, but yet he distinguisheth the times by the feasts of the Jewes: as Act. 20. hee nameth Pentecoste yeare hee refuseth not by way of description to vie the Hebraey names, as of Calist and Pollux, Act. 18. 11. which was the badge of a ship.

5. As touching these set times of fast, there hath been great diuersitie and vncertainie in the Church, whereby it appeareth to be a merie humane constitution.

Concerning the foure solemn fasts of the yeere: first, at the first there were but three; Calist under their foure, dist. 76. c. 1. Secondly, they were appoynted to be celebrated, the first weeke of March, the second of Iune, the third weeke of September, the fourth weeke of December: ex Synodo Moguntina dist. 76. c. 1. Thirdly, after this another rule was made, Synodus Constantiensis that if the Calends of March fell out vpon Friday, Saturday, Sunday, the quarter fast should be kept the second weeke of March: and so vpon the like occasion, the third weeke of Iune, the fourth weeke of September, &c. Fourthly, Verbanus concilium taketh a new order, that the first time should be in the beginning of Lent, the second in the second weeke, dist. 76. c. 1. Fifthly, Edibertus 2. 23. canonibus singulis mensibus placuit celebrari, exceptis duobus Iulij. & Augusti, ob eorum dierum infirmitatem. &c. Fasti must be kept euery moneth, except Iuly, August, which are butaine moneths. Sixthly, Concilium Generalis 2. Sequentis die post Pentecosten, & calendis Nouembribus per triduum ieiunetur: Let them fast threeday after Pentecost, and in the Calends of Nouember for three dayes space: Seueridly, 7. canonibus 2. 18. Post quinquagesimam Magna charta hebdomada ieiunetur: postea usque ad calendas Augusti ter in Septimana. &c. After Pentecost the Monkes must fast a whole weeke; and then all the Calends of August thrice in a weeke, September whole; in Nouember thrice in a weeke; in December till the Nativitie euery day. Eightly, Motifruensis 9. 304. feria S. Martini usque ad natalem secundam, quartam & sextam ieiunetur: From S. Martini day (which is the 11. of Nouember) vntill the Nativitie, let them fast Monday, Wednesday, Friday.

If all these times be laid together, we should doe nothing else but fast all the yeere long: Thus it falleth out, that when men leaue the simplicitie of truth, and certaine direction of the word to follow, they owne inuentions, they erre infinitely, and wander they know not whither.

6. Prescript and set times of ciuill abstinence fro some meats, for the benefit of the Common wealth, as your Lent and Imber dayes, are still retained in England, and no otherwise, wee condemne not: But to appoynt ordinarie times of necessitie and religious fasting, without speciall cause, was of the ancient Church accounted here in Mouantes, Euseb. lib. 5. cap. 18.

This also was the practise of the Church of God in the old Testament, vpon speciall occasion; not at set and ordinarie times, to inioyne publike fasting, as the Prophet saith; Blow the Trumpet in Zion, sanctifie a fast, call a solemn assembly: Joel 2. 15. which sheweth that their publike fasts were not vnuall and ordinarie, but especially sanctified, and solemnely proclaimed.

7. As for the fixed and set fasting dayes in the weeke, in Augustines time, onely the Churches of Rome kept the Saturdayes fast, all the East Churches, and many of the West observed it not. And whereas some alleaged, that Peter fasted vpon Saturday, being the next day, which was the Lords day, to encounter with Simon Magus, Augustine saith, it was opinio plurimorum, the opinion of many, quam tamen falsam esse perhibent plerique Romani: yet many of the Romanes hold it but for a fable. And so he generally concludeth, concerning prescript dayes of fasting: Quibus diebus non oportuit ieiunare, & quibus oportuit, precepto Domini vel Apostolorum non inuenio definitum: Vpon what dayes we ought to fast, vpon what dayes not, I finde it not defined by any precept giuen by our Lord or any of the Apostles, Epistol. 86.

Council. Colonienf. pari. 9. cap. 4. Ecclesia liberum facit quolibet tempore quibuslibet vefci, modo id vel charitas, vel necessitas suadeat, adhibito tamen vtriusque medici si prelo sint, aut saltem alterius, ieiunia consilio: The Church giueh libertie to eate all things at all times, where charitie, or necessitie requireth, with the counsell of both Phisitions, or at the least of the phisition of the soule: Ergo, prescript times of fast by this Councell are not allowed, where all things at all times are lawfull to be eaten.

7. And concerning the Saturdayes fast, it is directly forbidden in y<sup>e</sup> fixe general Trullan Council. can. 15. Si quis inuentus fuerit in sancto dominico vel sabbato ieiunans, si Clericus deponatur: If any man fast the Lordes day, or the Sabbath day, if hee be a Clergie man, let him be depofed; if a lay man, let him be put from the Communion.

Likewise, can. Apostol. 65. Ieiunium diem dominicum aut Sabbathum, vno tantum dempto, deponitur: He that fasteth th Lords day, or Saturday, one day onely excepted, let him be depofed.

How dare then Innocentius contradict the Apostles Canons, thus decreeing, epist. 1. c. 4. Sexta feria & sabbato perpetuo ieiunandum esse: Friday and Saturday must be kept continually fast.

Honor. 3. doth also contradict this decree: That if the day of the Natiuitie fall vpon Friday, it should not be kept fast: decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 46. c. 3. how then doth Innocentius decree stand, perpetuo ieiunandum, that we must fast Friday for euer?

8. It is euident; that this prescription of fasting dayes is contrarie to the doctrine of the Apostle: Galat. 4. 10. Te obserues dayes, moneths, times, yeeres: so they fast certaine dayes euery weeke; and certaine moneths euery quarter, and certaine times euery yeere, as in Lent: and they obferue also for yeeres the yeere of Iubile.

Origene well saith, Hom. 9. in Leuitic. Si vis ieiunare solummodo, Christiane, omne tibi tempus aptum est totius anni: If thou wilt fast according to Christ, all the time of the whole yeere is fit, &c. And Hom. 10. in Leuitic. Est certe liberis Christianis per omne tempus ieiunandi non obseruantiis superstitionis, sed virtutis continentie: It is Christian libertie to fast at any time, not of a superstitious obseruation; but of a vertuous continencie.

Hierome also: Vtinam omni tempore ieiunare possimus, &c. I would we might fast at all times, as the Apostles did in Pentecost, and vpon the Lords day: dist. 76. c. 11. This superstitious adding of times and dayes to fast; disliked these fathers.

The holy Martyrs haue witnessed this truth: Thomas Euseby, Henry Ramsey, Thomas Thirland and others, put to death, for saying, that the appointing of dayes for fasting, and abstaining from flesh vpon fasting dayes, and especially in the time of Lent, is not allowable by Gods word, but is hypocrisie, and that men ought to haue libertie at all times to eate all kinde of meate: Fox pag. 1975.

The Papists.

3. A third abuse in popish fasting, is the difference that they make betweene meates and drinks: as the forbidding of flesh-eating vpon fasting dayes for more holines; and the eating of egges, butter, and cheefe in Lent; as it was decreed at Luxerna in Heluetia, ann. 1524. Abstinence also from some meates vpon certaine daies for religion, is warranted by the R<sup>em</sup>ants; as God prohibited Adam the eating of some fruites in Paradise for obedience; and in the law for signification, Annot. 1. Timoth. 4. sect. 6.

Bellarmino being here charged, that the Papists differ very little from the old Heretikes the Tartarians and Manichees, which condemned the eating of flesh as vncleane in it selfe; would thus excuse the matter.

First, they condemne not flesh absolutely, because out of Lent they allow it. Secondly, and in Lent to those that are sicke. Thirdly, and though some Monkes, as of Bennets order and the Carthusians doe altogether abstaine from flesh; no man is compelled to be of that order; neither doe they iudge or condemne others that eate flesh, Bellarmino cap. 14.

Answ. First, that which the Manichees counted alwaies vncleane, the Papists in times prohibited hold to be vncleane: what else moued B. Stokes to cause poore Frebarnes pigge to be buried in Finsburie field, for the which his wife longed? See afterward Err. 99. they are therefore halfe Manichees. Secondly, neither did the Manichees compell any to be of their sect, and as Augustine saith, Escaurum usum discipulis permisit: They allowed their disciples to eate flesh: cont. Adimant. cap. 15. as the Carthusian Monkes allow others. Thirdly, this sheweth they count flesh vncleane, because because they vse other delicate meates with wine and spices, which doe more prouoke lust, than flesh doth: as Augustine writeth of some: Ipsa vasa in quibus cocta carnes, &c. They feare as vncleane the vessels wherein flesh is fod, but they feare not the immoderate filling of their bellie. Serm. 57.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, now Antichrist sheweth himselfe in his colours, making it as lawfull for him, to forbid the vse of some meates for religion, now vnder the Gospell, when God hath made them all lawfull and free, as God himselfe might forbid the vse of some, for obedience in Paradise, or signification in the Law. Secondly, Saint Paul calleth it the doctrine of diuils, to command to abstaine from meates, 1. Timoth. 4. 3. Again, Let no man condemne you in meate and drinke, Colos. 2. vers. 16. The Rhemists answer, that the Apostle speaketh in the first place against those heretikes, that condemned meates as euill by creation, such were the Manichees: and in the second, against the Iudaicall obseruation of meates. But they onely prohibit the vse of some meates for the chastising of the bodie.

Ans. First, not onely the Manichees and other heretikes preferred some meates before other, as more holie, but euen the Papists also in the prescript times of their fasts doe command to abstaine from meates for pietie and religion: and therefore they are counted most holie amongst them that neuer eate flesh. And Durand testifieth, that fish in interdict dayes, is rather vsed than flesh, because flesh and not fish was accursed in the dayes of Noah. Yea they command abstinence from meates vnder paine of damnation: what is this else, but with the old heretikes to condemne the creatures of God themselues? Secondly, the popish prohibition of meates, is no lesse superstitious, than was the Lewes: For they prohibited such meates also, as by the law were counted vncleane, as to eate beasts that died alone, or were torne with beafts, or strangled, or touched any vncleane beast, as likewise they inioyned penance to them, that did eate or drinke, where a dogge or cat had lapped, or a mouse had been drowned, and such like, Falk. annot. 1. Timoth. 4. fil. 6.

Durand lib. 6.

Thus Pope Zacharie giuing instructions to Boniface, forbiddeth him to eate, Ciconias, & Lepores, Serpentes, and Hares or Conies: and as touching Lardum, Larde or Porke, he giuerh counsell, that it should not be eaten, priusquam super fumo siccetur, aut igne coquantur, before it be dried in this smoke, or boyled with fire.

So Synod. Trullan. can. 67. Damnauimus eos, qui cuiuscunque animalis sanguinem aliqua arte condunt, & sic comedunt: We condemne those, that doe dresse the blood of any beast by arte, and so eate it. A graue decree for a Councell to forbid the eating of puddings. Vormation. can. 63. Si potestas daret manducarent, carnes eorum comedere non licet, usque dum macerantur per annum: If twine chaunce to eate a carion, their flesh must not be eaten, till they haue been dried a yeere.

I pray you how farre are they now from the superstition of the Lewes? Nay they goe beyond them: for the legall difference of meates for signification, was instituted of God for those times: but this superstitious distinction of meates vnder the Gospell, which giueth vs the free vse of all the creatures of God, which are sanctified by the word and prayer, 1. Tim. 4. 5. is brought in by Antichrist, who is an enimie vnto God.

3. Neither doe they abstaine from flesh and other meates for chastising of the flesh: for they permit the vse of all other meates vpon their fasting dayes, that may prouoke lust, flesh only excepted, as the eating of spices, and other daintie and delicate confections, the drinking of wine, and all kinde of fish. Euen like as Augustine reporteth of the Manichees, that would drinke no wine, nor eate flesh: but in stead of wine, they had Pomorum nouumillorum expressos succos vini speciem satis imitantes, atque id etiam suauitate vincentes: The sweete liquor of pleasant fruites like to wine in colour, but excellling it in sweetnes: and for flesh they had their straunge and exquisite fruits, with great varietie of dishes, seasoned and strawed with pepper. This was the Manichees fast: and this is the popish custome in their fastings at this day.

cap. 13.

Hereof Hierome thus complained: ad Neopitian. Audio quosdam aquam non bibere, nec vsei pane, sed sorbitiunculas delicatas non calice sorsere, sed concha: I heare how some will drinke no water, nor eate bread, but yet drinke not out of a cup, but in a shell more delicate supplings.

Decret. 30. c. 13. Signis carum manducantem ex fide cum religione: If any man condemne one eating of flesh in faith, with religion, let him be accursed, &c. But the Papists condemne one eating flesh in Lent. Ergo.

Decret. distict. 41. c. 1. Fieri potest, ut sine aliquo vitio cupiditatis sapiens preciosissimo cibo utatur, &c. It may so fall out, that a wise or godly man may vse a most precious meate, without any vicious lust and affect sinne in eating course herbes, &c. Sanius quisque maluerit pisce vesci mora domini, quam lenticula, &c. A man were better to eate fish as Christ did, than Lentles with Esau, &c.

Cabilonens. sub Carolo, can. 35. Ille magis parsimonie seruire censendus est, qui sibi non solum quarundam rerum perceptiuos, sed delectationes corporis penitus interdixit: Hee is thought to be more giuen to parsimonie, which doth not onely reframe from receiuing some things, but euen from the pleasures tures of the bodie. Council Colonienf. part. 9. cap. 5. Admonendus est populus, cum ieiunandum erit non minus prelixa & sumptuosa de piscium fercula, quam carum vitanda; bellaria item illa, magis quam carnes inflammantia: The people must be admonished, that when they fast, they ought no lesse to refrain from the long and sumptuous seruices of fish, as from the flesh dishes, and from those iunckers, that do inflame no lesse than flesh. But our aduersaries are farre off from keeping these rules in their fasts.

George Marfo Martyr, thus witnesseth: In this poynt doth our superstition exceede the superstition of the Iewes, when we abstaine from one thing, and fill our bellies with another: Fox pag. 1570.

Lawrence Staple persecuted because he vied to eate egges on Friday, and thought it was no great offence vnto God, pag. 1043.

Now if our aduersaries forbear some meates for chastisement of the bodie, why might it not be as lawfull to eate butter, and egges, in the time of Lent, as vpon other fasting daies: but that they make difference of the times, as one being holier than another, and so also a difference of meates, some being more agreeable to holie times, than other?

Wherefore to conclude this point: ciuill abstinence from flesh, as for policie sake, and the better maintenance of the Common-wealth, that there should be a vent for fish, as well as for flesh, and that every man might liue of his trade and calling: as also for the health of the bodie, to abstaine from hurtfull meates: as likewise to keepe a temperate and sober diet, and to take heede of surfetting and drunkenesse: these kindes of abstinence, in making difference of meates, we will like not: but for pietie or religions sake to distinguish them, it is to too great superstition.

Our arguments further out of Scripture against the difference of meates, are these.

1. Matth. 15. 11. That which goeth into the mouth, defileth not the man.
2. 1. Corinth. 10. 25. Whatsoeuer is sold in the shambles, eate ye, asking no question for conscience sake.
3. Coloss. 2. 20. If ye be dead with Christ from the ordinances of the world, why are ye burthened with traditions, touch not, taste not, handle not?

4. 1. Timoth. 4. 3. Forbidding to marrie and commanding to abstayne from meates, the Apostle callethe the doctrine of diuels: Ergo, a difference of meates for religion or conscience sake is superstitious.

1. Bellarmin. Meates properly defile not the soule, but by reason of the concupiscence ioyned with them; as in gluttonie, drunkenesse and disobedience.

Contra. 1. In gluttonie, drunkenesse, the concupiscence cometh from within that defileth, namely the insatiable greedinesse of the flesh: otherwise it is not the quantitie or qualitie of the meate which entreth that defileth. 2. Likewise disobedience proceedeth from the heart, comprehended vnder euill thoughts, Matth. 15. 19. Out of the heart proceed euill thoughts: but disobedience to superstitious and vnlawfull precepts is no sinne; such as are these in commanding abstinence from meates for religion.

2. Yet S. Paul forbiddeth flesh offered to idols to be eaten, if it offend the conscience of our weak brother, 1. Cor. 10. 29. much lesse would he haue the Church-fast broken, to the griefence of others, Bellarmin. c. 8.

Contra. 1. Not the breaking of superstitious lawes, but the obseruing rather doth minister offence: still he beggeth the thing in question; that the superstitious inhibiting of eating of flesh is a lawfull constitution of the Church. 2. If then flesh may be safely eaten at all times, but where our brothers conscience is offended, it is not simply vnlawfull: neyther do wee denie, but that in this Christian libertie, respect is to be had to our brothers weaknesse: as the Apostle saith, 1. Corinth. 10. 29. Why should our libertie be condemned of anothers conscience? 3. Hereupon we inferre that there ought to be no other restraint of eating of flesh for religion, but the conscience of him that may be offended.

3. 4. In both these places the Apostle condemneth those, which did forbid flesh; as vnlawfull of it selfe, as though by the very handling thereof they were defiled, Bellarmin. ibid. respons. ad. 3. 5.

Contra. 1. In the first place the Apostle speaketh of such, as with a shew of holinesse refused to taste meate: but there is no shew of holinesse. but it is meer prophanesne absolutely to condemne meates, and a plaine doctrine of diuels, 1. Tim. 4. 1. therefore the Papists that place holinesse in not touching or tasting of flesh, and would not seeme simply to condemne them, are here signified. 2. In the second place the Apostle speaketh generally of all that forbid meates for any doctrine or religion: whenas they make it vnlawfull, to receiue them with thanksgiving, and refuse them. 1. But thus do the Papists, forbid meates for religion and doctrine, so that the creature of God is refused: Ergo. 2. The Apostle maketh but two impedimentes of not receiuing and eating meates: Want of faith and knowledge; Want of thanksgiving: but with them it is not lawfull for belecuers, and such as giue thanks, to receiue Gods creatures: therefore they are these forbidders. 3. Againe the Apostle speaketh of the last times, and of such as should make a generall Apostasie from the faith: this doth most fitly agree to the now present popish Church: the old heretikes heretikes the Tatians and Manichees, were about a thousand yeres agoe, and neuer any heretikes swarued more vniuersally in the whole body of religion from the faith, then they do.

Origen shall conclude, Abstinere a cibis, quod Deus creauit ad percipiendum gratiam in illis, non potest Deo: To abstayne from meates, which God hath created to be receiued with thanksgiving, cannot be acceptable to God: Rom. 9. in Leuitic.

Augustine: Non propter porcum, sed propter pomum mortem primum homo inuenit; & Esau propter suum propter gallinam non propter lentisculam perdidit: The first man found death, not for eating flesh, but for fruit: Esau lost his birthright, not for capons, but for corne: Gal. 3. in Iohn. Ergo, there is no difference to be made of meates for religion.

The Papists.

Fourthly, their religious kind of fasting they hold not to be a general abstinence from all meates and drinks, but onely from some certaine kindes, as from flesh, and wine, as Timothee refrained from drinking of wine; and in stead thereof vsed water; 1. Timoth. 5. vers. 23. Rhemist.

Daniel for 3. weekes space abstayned from flesh and wine, Dani. 10. 3. Bellarm. 2. 3.

The Protestants.

Answ. First, for chastising of the body, it is lawfull to abstaine either wholly for a time, or in respect of the quantitie or qualitie of the meates, which may more prouoke carnall lustes, not in the prohibition of the whole kind, as the Papists do of all flesh, be it neuer so grosse or small in quantitie: Likewise it is lawfull for chastising of a mans body to abstaine from any kinde, as of wine, fruites, spices, flesh, so that the vse of them be not forbidden, as though in the very abstinence there were religion, Fulke. ibid. Daniel abstayned from pleasant and lasciuious meate to be the better prepared for that heavenly vision; Timothee refrayned the drinking of wine, to keepe his body in subiection: but neyther of them placed any religion herein; for hee afterward by the aduise of the Apostle did drinke wine: and so Augustine in the like case saith, Quanto honestius est, ut qui &c. How much more honest a thing is it, that he which for the infirmities of his stomacke cannot drinke water, should vse wine moderately, Serm. 157.

Secondly, but the true and properly religious faste of Christians, is a generall abstinence from all meates and drinks, during the time of such fasting: Either 4. 16. Nehem. 9. 4. Where the manner of their fast is described: how the law was read vnto them foure times in the day, and as oft did they worship the Lord and confesse their sinnes. It was the custome of the Church also in Augustine time, in the dayes of faste, not to abstayne onely from flesh, or some certaine kinde of meate, as the Papists vse, but altogether to continue fasting till the euen. Rogo vos (fratres) (saith he) De tempore, serm. 66. iusto sacratissimo tempore, exceptis diebus dominicis, nullus prandere presumat: I pray you, brethren, that in this holy time, none of you presume to dine at all, except it be vpon the Lords dayes.

So likewise was it concluded; Concil. Aurelianens. can. 22. quadragesima ab omnibus aqualiter terminatur: sed neque per sabbata absque infirmitate quisquam soluat quadragesimale ieiunium, nisi tantummodo dominico prandeat: Let the Lent or 40. dayes fast be kept indifferently of all, and let no man, no not vpon the saturdayes vniuersally for infirmities sake breake his lenton fast, vniuersally he take his dinner vpon the Lords dayes onely. Their fast then vpon other dayes, was continued from morning till night, without taking their dinner: Ergo, they that will keepe a true religious fast, if they are able, ought for the time wholly to abstayne.

Bellarmino here seemeth to consent with vs, propounding this proposition to proue, unicum in die ieiunium esse, &c. That there should be but one refreshing in a fast; & that to be supper, cap. 2. this he taketh vpon him to confirme by Scripture, as Iudg. 16. 26. They fasted all that day till the euening: 1. Sam. 3. 31. David would eate no bread till the Sunne went downe: he alleageth also to the same purpose diuers testimonies of the fathers: thus farre he agreeth with vs, but afterward he turneth cat in pan (as we say) and alloweth the contrarie practice in the popish Church, that vs to take their dinner in their fastes: But Augustine flatly reproveth this abuse, Ad dist. 14. in die publico ieiunio velle prandere, vnde dilectionis adiutor: Thou seest another, that a publique fast being ioynted, will take his dinner: yadmonish him in loue, de tempore. serm. 102.

George Marston holy Martyr: We neuer reade that the Iewes euer toblet it for a fast to abstayne from flesh, and to eate fish, or white meate, Fae. pag. 1570. col. 2.

Fifthly, they erre, in affirming fasting to be a meritorious worke, Rhemist. 1. Corin. 13. vers. 3. 2. And immediatly and properly a part of Gods seruice, Bellarmino. lib. 2. de bono operis. c. 11. Bellarmino thus reasoneth out of Scripture: 1. Luc. 2. 37. Anna serued the Lord with fasting and prayer night and day: 1. Rom. 12. 1. I beseech you brethren, giue your body a living sacrifice acceptable to God, &c. which is your reasonable seruice of him. Fasting then, by the which the body is mortified, and made a sacrifice, is a seruice acceptable to God: 1. Sam. 7. 6. The people fasted and prayed, and God was pleased: 1. Reg. 2. 1. That by his fasting faſting did mitigate Gods wrath: the Ninivites by their faſting appeaſed Gods wrath: Ergo, faſting is ſatisfactorie and meritorious, Bellarm. cap. 1.

Anſw. Firſt, we doubt not, but that faſting is a worke acceptable to God, being referred to the right end, aſto chaſtiſe and humble the bodie, 1. Cor. 9. 27. and to make our prayers more fervent, 1. Cor. 7. 5. But otherwiſe there is no holines or vertue in faſting of it ſelfe; neither is it by the worke wrought of any merite or worthineſſe: For our prayers, which are a more principall worke, then faſting is, yet of themſelves by any worthineſſe in them, are not regarded of God: for Salomon ſaith, When thou heareſt, haue mercie, 1. King. 8. 30. It is of the Lords mercie, that our prayers are heard, not of any worthineſſe in them.

Now for our further anſwere in particular: 1. Anna her ſervung of God, conſiſted chiefly in her prayer, vpon the which her faſting waited as an handmaid, to make it more fervent.

2. We denie not, but that faſting is a very good meane to helpe to mortifie the fleſh, and to make it ſervicable to God; and ſo an exerciſe by faith acceptable to God: but it followeth not, that immediatly and properly it is a part of Gods ſervice, which conſiſteth in the inward worſhip: the Apoſtle ſaith, bodily exerciſe profiteth little, 1. Timoth. 4. 8. that is, of it ſelfe without faith and godlineſſe, it is not auayleable.

3. Firſt, beſide the faſting of the people, they ſhedde teares in ſuch abundance, that they are ſaid to haue drawen water: they alſo confeſſed their finnes: their prayers and teares made their faſting acceptable: but they were ſo farre from ſatisfying God, that for all this they were afraid, and deſired Saul to crie vnto God for them.

As concerning Abah, how could he ſatiſſie or merite, being a man ſold to worke wickedneſſe, 1. King. 2. 1. 2. 5. and ſo without faith? his temporall repentance was rewarded with a temporall reward: this was of Gods mercie, not of his merite.

It was not the act of faſting in the Ninivites, but their true repentance ioyned with it, that pleaſed God, Jonas 3. 10. God ſaw their workes, that they turned from their evil wayes, &c. Neyther did their repentance ſatiſſie: for they were fearefull and doubtfull, verſ. 9. What can ſay if God will turne it was therefore Gods acceptance, they haue no confidence in their repentance.

The Proſtants.

Ov contrarie arguments, that faſting is not a worke meritorious or ſatisfactorie, nor properly the ſervice of God, out of the Scripture are theſe.

Argum. 1. 1ſay 58. 5. Is this ſuch a feſt, this I have choſen, that a man ſhould afflict his ſoule for a day?

2. Ioel 2. 13. Rent your hearts, and not your cloathes: it is not then the affliction of the fleſh, but the contrition of the heart that God requireth.

3. 1. Tim. 4. 7, 8. Exerciſe thy ſelfe to godlines, for bodily exerciſe profiteth little, godlines is profitable to all things.

4. Luk 18. 12. The Pharifee alleaging his faſting is not juſtified.

5. Coloſſ. 2. 23. S. Paul calleth the religion, which is in not ſparing the bodie, idolatrie, a voluntarie worſhip, deuſed of man.

1. Bellarmin. The Lord doth not ſimplie reiect faſting, but onely ſuch a faſt, as is not ioyned with pietie and iuſtice: c. 12. reſp. ad. 1.

Contra. You haue answered well: for if faſting without godlines and iuſtice profite not, then it is not in it ſelfe meritorious, neither hath any force, but by the faith and true contrition of the heart: iuſtice it ſelfe, and true contrition, which giue ſtrength to faſting, are not meritorious, much leſſe is faſting it ſelfe.

2. The renting of the garments is not ſimplie forbidden, but when it is not accompanied with the contrition of the heart, Bellarmin. ibid.

Contra. 1. Neither doe we ſay that faſting is forbidden ſimplie, but that in it ſelfe it is the leſſe principall, and without the deuotion of the heart not at all accepted, and therefore it hath no merite, hauing no life, nor force of it ſelfe. Contrition of the heart meriteth not: for Dauid ſacrificing a contrite heart vnto God, Pſalm 51. 17. yet prayeth for mercie, verſ. 1. Ergo, much leſſe doth faſting merite, which is quickened by the deuotion of the heart.

3. By bodily exerciſe either may be vnderſtoode faſting without almes or mercie, or the exerciſe of the bodie: ſuch as champions vſed in their fight: which was vnprofitable to attaine any thing in the next life, Bellarmin. ibid.

Contra. 1. By godlines cannot properlie almes be vnderſtoode, or any other externall or bodily action: for the Apoſtle oppoſeth godlines to bodily exerciſe: but that which is contrarie or oppoſite to bodily, is ſpiritual. 2. Yet admitting this expoſition, faſting cannot be meritorious, ſeeing it hath no power without almes, which neither are themſelves meritorious: with ſuch ſacrifice indeede the Apoſtle ſaith, God is pleaſed, Hebr. 13. 16. but offered vnto God through Chriſt, verſ. 15. 3. What need had S. Paul to giue Timothee warning to take heede of bodily exerciſe, being being so weake, and full of infirmities, that he giueth him counsell afterward to drinke wine?

1. Tim. 5. 23. by bodilie exercise then, he vnderstandeth all externall seruices, and outward ceremonies, not tending to aduancing by faith, 1. Tim. 1. 4. which also include superstitious pharisaicall fasting.

4. The Pharisee was not iustified because he thought to be iustified by his fasting, but because he boasted of his workes and despised others, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. The Pharisee is not onely reiected for his disdain and contempt to the poore Public-cane: but for his hypocrisie in setting forth his owne righteousness, which notwithstanding he thanketh God for after a sort. First, the occasion of the Parable doth insinuate so much, vers. 9. He speaketh this Parable vnto certaine that trusted in themselves, that they were iust and despised others: they trusted to be iust toward God by their workes, and also despised their brethren: here are two fautes, both which the Pharisee was infected with. Secondly, this appeareth by the contrarie in the Publicane, who pleadeth for mercie, as the other stood vpon merite. Thirdly, so Ambrose expoundeth, Verecundia prelati Publicanum, qui ne oculos audebat lenare ad celum: Modestie preferred the Publicane, who durst not lift vp his eyes to heauen: Offic. 1. 2. 18. The Publicane humilitie was toward God, in not presuming to lift vp his eyes to heauen: therefore the Pharisees pride was toward God in boasting of his workes.

1. Will worship is not opposed to that which is not written, but to that which is not grounded vpon reason: for though it be not commaunded, if it be reasonable, it is no Will worship.

2. The Apostle reprobeth them for their immoderate fasting, not yeelding necessarie things to the flesh. 3. They did abstaine of a superstitious opinion, in abhorring flesh as euill and vncleane in it selfe, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. The Apostle expoundeth himselfe, vers. 22. Which are after the doctrine, and commandments of men: so that it is a Will worship which is after mans, and not Gods commaundement:
therefore all worship not prescribed in the word, is Will worship: and this Will worship had a shew of wisdom, and so of reason, yet was a voluntarie seruice.

Secondly, this is not the thiefe thing that is reprehended, the not sparing of the flesh (for herein the Apostle sheweth, consisted their shew of wisdom) but for that they followed the doctrines of men, and neglected the commaundement of God, concerning the internall worship: and the not sparing of the flesh, is expounded, the not satisfying of the flesh, which of it selfe is not so euill a thing: beside many of their Monkes and Heremites haue offended this way, in pinching and pining their bodies, by their immoderate fasting to death.

Thirdly, the Apostle speaketh of those, which of Iewish superstition, rather then heathen prophanenes abstained from meate. First, there had bin no shew of wisdom, in condemning the creatures of God simple. Secondly, he telleth them the elements of the world, vers. 20. which the Apostle expoundeth to be the ceremonies of the Iewes, Galath. 4. 9. 3. vers. 17. they were such ceremonies, as were shadowes of Christ: but these were the Iewish, not heathen obseruances.
Thirdly, he saith, vers. 20. ye are burdened with traditions: which traditions, he saith were fastened to Christs Crosse, vers. 14. which were the traditions of the lawe, not of the Gentiles.

Augustine saith very well, Si vultis bene scire, a cibis, ante omnia ieiunemus: et a vitis. Quid prodest, pallidum esse vultum, si odio et inuidia limescat? What doth it helpe to fast from meate, if we fast not from sinne? What auaileth it to be pale and wan with fasting, if thou frettest with hatred and enuie? Ergo, the externall or outward acte of fasting of it selfe is litle or nothing worth.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 47. Non existiment Christiani sola carnis abstinentia se Deo gratos esse, cum meminerint primos homines, qui carnem nondum gustauerant, ob vita nequitiam dilatio delictos: sed cum abstinentia carnis, ceterorum ciborum moderationem et perpetuam sobrietatem coniungant. Let not Christians thinke, that they are accepted of God, onely for their abstinence from flesh, when they may remember, that the men of the olde world, that tasted no flesh, were for the wickednesse of their life destroyed in the flood: but let them ioyne with their abstinence from flesh, the moderate vse of other meates, and the perpetuall sobriety of their life.

This truth the Martyrs haue sealed, that our fasting, nor yet any thing else that we doe meriteth at Gods hand. George Marsh Martyr, holdeth it to be Iewish to thinke, that we doe God great pleasure when we fast, pag. 170. In this faith died Iohn Wurne, that we obtaine nothing at Gods hands through our workes, pag. 181. col. 1.

S. Hierome saith, Causa ne si ieiunare caperitis, putetis iam sanctum habere vinum virtutis adiumentum esse, non perfectio sanitatis: providendum est ne cum licita condonamus, hoc tibi illicitorum securitatem faciat:
Take heede, when thou beginnest to fast, that you thinke not your selfe to be holy: this vertue is a helpe, it is not the perfection of health: take heede, least in condemning things lawfull, you be secure in vsing vnlawfull: ad Colaniam: Ergo, fasting is not meritorious.

Strictly, and lastly, they grievously offend in their fastings, in laying so streight and hard a yoke vpon mens shoulders, as charging them vnder paine of damnation to keepe their fasting daies, making it deadly sinne, yea, heresie to transgresse them, as one Lawrence Staple was troubled and persecuted, Anno 1531. because in Lent hauing no fish, he did eate egges, butter and cheese: Nay they were so cruell, that hardly they suffered women in childebed to haue any flesh in their houses, as Anno 1532. Two young girls were constrained to abiure, because they were found vpon Saint Peters euen eating broath made of mutton; their mother lying in childebed. How was poore Frebarne tossed to and fro, and brought into great danger, because a Pigge was found in his house in Lent time, for the which his wife longed.

Argum. That Ecclesiasticall lawes enioyning fasts for religion do simply binde in conscience, Bellarmine would thus proue out of Scripture.

1. Jerem. 35: 14. The Rechabites are commended for keeping the institution of Ioudab their father, not to drinke wine.

2. Hester. 9: 23. Mordecai instituteth a new fast to be obserued for euer.

3. Zachar. 8: 19. There is mention made of foure fasts; of the fourth, fifth, seuench, tenth moneths, which were not commaunded of God.

4. Act. 15: 29. Abstinence from strangled and from blood is enioyned by the Apostles to be obserued of all the Church, Bellarmino 7.

1. As for First, the institution of Ioudab was according to the law of the Nazarites, prescribed Numb. 6: that were to drinke no wine nor strong drinke by Gods precept, and therefore it did binde the Rechabites in conscience: but now there is no such lawe of abstinence given by Christ vnder the Gospell, and therefore the argument followeth not. Secondly, neither did the Rechabites hold themselves so bound in conscience, but that by necessity they might be dispensed with: for one of their fathers precepts was, to dwell in tents, vers. 10: yet because the host of the Assyrians was in the land, for that time, they came and dwelt in the citie.

2. First, we reade of a feast instituted yeerely to be celebrated by Mordecai, not of a fast. Secondly, yet we doubt not but that the Magistrates may enioyne a publike religious fast, as Heslin did, chap. 4: 16, which is not a prohibition from flesh meate, but a generall restraint of all meate, not for lesse and stunted times, but vpon extraordinarie occasion. This maketh nothing for their ecclesiasticall intinctions, for the perpetuall restraint of some kinde of meate onely.

3. First, those fasts mentioned in Zacharie are reproved by the Prophet, Zach. 7: 5. Did ye fast vnto me? Secondly, Zach. 8: 19. He saith onely that the fasts shall be turned to ioy and gladnes: which is no approbation of them, but onely a declaration and promise, that the like calamities shall not fall vpon them, as before, by occasion whereof they tooke vp those fasts: such were the sacking of the citie, and destruction of the temple. Thirdly, in their fasts they abstained wholly from all meate, weeping and separating themselves, Zachar. 7: 3. and their eating and drinking is opposed to their fasting, vers. 6: what is this to popish fasting, which is not a totall abstinence, but from some kinde onely?

4. First, Ecclesiasticall gouernours haue not like authoritie now to make lawes to binde the conscience, as the Apostles had. Secondly, they did not inhibit things strangled for any religion in the abstainer, but for the conscience of others, namely the Iewes that might be offended: which we hold to be the only religious restraint of not eating. Thirdly, this constitution of the Apostles was but to endure for a time: how doth this then warrant a perpetuall yoke of abstinence for religion to be layd vpon the Church?

The Papists. First, no positive law not grounded vpon Scripture, can so binde any man, that in the breaking thereof hee shall sinne deadly; and of this sort is the fast of Lent and other daies for religion, which were ordained without warrant of Scripture: Lambert ad articul. 17. pag. 14 10. Ciuill and politike lawes for the restraint of flesh at certaine seasons, made by the godly and wise Magistrate for the benefit of the Common-wealth, not for any religion, are in conscience to be obeyed so far forth, as we by the law of God are bound in conscience to obey the Magistrate in all lawfull things: but simply they do not binde the conscience in respect of the thing commaunded. Seeing the rest of the Sabbath being commaunded of God, might yet vpon necessarie cause be broken, how much greater liberty ought the people to haue had in the obseruation of these daies which were only inioyned by men: yet was it counsed an heynous sin, to eate flesh vpon a day interditt, and a small offence or none to violate the rest of the Sabbath.

Secondly, S. Paul could see no such necessity of fasting and abstinence, when he willet Timothy drinke wine, and no longer water, for his infirmities sake, 1. Tim. 5: 23. But if there were religion in fasting and abstinence, it ought not to be intermitted for bodily health.

Further, the Apostle calleth these the precepts and commaundements of men, Touch not, taste not handle me; which things perish with the vsing. Coloss. 2. 21. they concerne not the conscience: but Gods precepts in religious matters doe not perish with the vsing: but in the keeping or breaking thereof, the conscience is either accused, or excused.

Saint James also saith, Iam. 4. 12. There is but one Lawgiuer, that is able to saue and to destroy: Ergo, men haue no power to make lawes to binde mens consciences, either to saue them by keeping thereof, or destroy them by breaking.

Canon. Apostol. 68. Si quis impediatur imbecillitate corporis, non tenetur ieiunare quadragesimam: If any be hindred by the weaknes of their bodie, they are not bound to keepe the Lenton fast. Celeniens. part. 9. cap. 4. Ecclesia liberum facit quolibet tempore quibuslibet vesci, modo id vel charitas, vel necessitas suadeat: The Church giueth libertie at all times, to eate all manner things, if charitie or necessitie require. Synod. Moguntin. cap. 47. Tempora ieiunandi, prout salubritati corporum & animarum expedire videbatur, ab ecclesia ordinata: The times of fast were ordained by the Church, as it was thought meete for the health of bodie and soule. Men therefore are not bound to fast, if thereby their health be empayred: for no man euer hated his owne flesh, as S. Paul saith.

In Augustines time there was no such strict necessitie of fasting: Qui ieiunare non praeualet, in domo sua preparat, quod accipiat: He that is not able to fast, let him prepare in his house for his owne eating. And againe, Si possibilitas non fuerit ieiunandi, sufficiat elemosyna sine ieiunio: If a man haue not possibilitie to fast, in stead of fasting, it shall suffice to giue almes: sermo. de tempor. 62. What is become now of your Lent and Imber dayes, which you prescribe as necessarie to bee kept of all?

THE THIRD PART, OF Almes deedes.

The difference betweene our aduersaries and vs is chiefly in these two poynts: first, concerning the fruits and benefites, that come by giuing of almes. Secondly, of the manner.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE fruits of Almes deedes.

The Papists.

First, Bellarmine saith that almes deedes are meritorious; they doe merit eternall life.

100. Error.

Argum. Matth. 25. Receiuet the kingdom prepared for you: for when I was hungry you gaue mee meate, &c. Bellarm. cap. 4. lib. 3. de bonis operib. in particular.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, this place prooueth not that almes deedes merite heauen: but it rather sheweth, that Christ in mercie crowneth the charitable workes of his children: heauen is giuen though not for their good workes, yet according to their good workes: this kingdom was prepared for them before the beginning of the world, vers. 34. before they had yet done any almes deedes: therefore they could not merit that which was prepared for them, and giuen them, before they had done any good thing.

Argum. Rom. 6. 23. Life eternall is the gift of God through Christ: If it be a franke gift, then is it not merited. No man can merit by doing that which was his dutie to doe: Luk. 17. Doth the master thanke his seruant, because he did that, which was commanded vnto him, I trow not? If the master be not bound to thanke his seruant, because hee did no more than his dutie, much lesse is the Lorde bound to reward vs. But all our almes deedes, and whatsoeuer else, that wee doe, are but of dutie. Ergo.

Augustine saith: No potestis fratres, quia facienda sunt quotidie adulteria, & quotidianis elemosynis mundanda sunt, ad illa scelera maiora non sufficiunt elemosyna vs illa mundant: Thinke not brethren, that ye may commit adulterie daily, and by daily almes be cleansed, Almes are not sufficient to purge those great finnes, de 10. Chord. cap. 11. If almes are not auailable to purge our finnes, much lesse to purchase heauen for vs.

The Papists.

Almes deedes are a disposition vnto the grace of iustification proceeding from Gods motion, and by his speciall helpe.

101. Error.

Argum. 1. Prou. 15. 28. By mercie and faith finnes are purged.

2. Luk. 11. 41. Giue almes, and all things are cleane vnto you.

3. Luk. 19. 8. When Zacharius had said, halfe of my goods I giue to the poore, Christ saith vnto him, This day is saluation come to thy house.

4. Act. 10. 4. The Angell saith to Cornelius, Thine almes and thy prayers are come up into remembrance brance before God: send therefore to Ioppa, and call for one Simon. Cornelius by his almes obtaineth faith: Bellarm. lib. 3. de bonis operib. cap. 4. 5.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, there is no such text in the Hebrue, nor yet in the old Latine copie: as may appeare by the annotations in the margin of the vulgar Latine vpon this place: yet adunt the reading: it is faith working by almes that purgeth sinnes, and not almes it selfe.

2. Our Sauour is to be expounded by the verse going before, Luk. 11. 39. To make cleane the outside of the cup, &c. but the inward part is full of rauening, &c. Our Sauour then teacheth them how to make the inside of the platter cleane also from couetousnes by the contrarie vertue of liberalitie: he speaketh not of cleansing the heart before God, but how to cleanse their outward acts before men, and to make amends by their almes for their greedie rauening. In like sort Daniel aduised the King to breake off his sinne of mercilesse crueltie by almes and charitie, Dan. 4. 24. So then couetousnes is cleansed or broken off by almes and mercie, as drunkenness and surfetting by abstinence. This exposition Bellarmine himselfe misliketh not, cap. 3. obiect. 1. Againe, Origen expoundeth it thus: Like as Christ saith here, giue almes of that which is within, &c. so Mat. 23. 26. he saith, cleanse first the inside of the platter: that is (saith he) the heart: Qui facit elemosynam ut gloriam ab hominibus consequatur, &c. He that giueth almes to get the glorie of men, doth cleanse the outside of the cup, &c. & quicquid boni fecerit homo non ex conscientia munda, &c. And whatsoeuer a man doth not of a good conscience before God, he cleanseth the outside of the cup, but inwardly he is full of euil, Hom. 25. in Matth. So in this sense our Sauour sheweth in what manner the Pharisees should giue almes, with a cleere and sincere conscience, and so the heart being cleane, all their outward acts should be cleane. This place then maketh nothing for iustification by almes before God.

3. First, Christ signifieth, that saluation was come to the whole house and familie of Zachew, because he himselfe was alreadye the childe of Abraham. Secondly, for before this Christ had looked vpon Zachew as he looked vpon Peter, and called him first and inspired him with grace. So Hierome well interpreteth: Christus Zachew latentem in arbore, quasi in peccatorum tenebris obrutum solliciti ut eum perditam requirit aspectu, & venire cunctantem vocat: Christ doth carefully seeke Zachew as a lost sheepe with his sight, lying hid in the tree as in the darknes of sinners, and foreslowing to come hee calleth him: de duob. filiis. Zachew almes then was a fruit of his calling alreadye begun, not a preparation to his calling.

4. Neither was Cornelius without faith: for he feared God, and prayed continually, Act. 10. 2. But prayer is a fruit of faith; Iam. 1. 5. The prayer of faith: From this faith proceeded his almes, which faith was afterward encreased and confirmed by the preaching of Peter.

Argum. But that almes being without faith, are no disposition or preparation to iustification is euident: first, Hebr. 11. 6. Without faith it is impossible to please God. Secondly, Hebr. 13. 15. By Christ we must offer vpon sacrifices, by the which God is pleased. Thirdly, Tit. 1. 15. Vnto the pure all things are pure: And our hearts are purified by faith, Act. 15. 9. Wherefore almes are impure, if the heart be not first purified and cleansed by faith. Fourthly, Rom. 3. 24. We are iustified freely by grace: Gratis per gratiam: If gratis, freely, then our workes as almes deedes are no preparation, motiue or insinuation thereunto, for then it should not be freely.

And whereas Bellarmine speaketh of almes hauing Gods speciall helpe, this is no other but the helpe of grace and faith, that is, Gods speciall assistance; as Saint Paul saith, Our ability or sufficiency enen to thinke that is good, is of God; Ambrose also saith: Pleni & veraciter confitenda est gratia dei, de cuius hoc primum munere est, ut auxilium ipsius sentiat: Fully and truly the grace of God must be confessed, of whose gift this is first, that his helpe is felt or perceiued: Ambros. epistol. 34.

Council. Arausican. 2. can. 25. Hoc salubriter profitemur & credimus, quod in omni opere bono non nos incipimus, &c. This we safely professe and beleue, that in euery good worke we doe not begin, and afterward are helped by Gods mercie: sed ipse nobis nullis precedentibus meritis fidem & amorem sed prius inspirat, ut qua sibi sunt placita, implere possimus: But he without any merits of ours before going inspireth faith and loue, that we may fulfill those things which please him, &c. Ergo, faith is first inspired before we can doe any thing that pleaseth God.

Decc. parti. 1. qu. 1. c. 26. Gregor. Vbi Christus non est fundamentum, nullum est boni operis adificium: Where Christ is not the foundation, there can no good worke be in the habitation: Ergo, almes goe not before iustification, because the building is not before the foundation.

The Papists.

102. Error.

Thirldly, almes deedes are a sufficient satisfaction for our sinnes before God.

Argum. Tob. 4. Almes doe deliuer from death, Bellar. cap. 4.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, the authoritie of this booke, being not Canonically, bindeth vs not. Secondly, almes deliuer from death, and suffer not to goe into darknes: that is, thereby we finde fauour among among men, and are preferred from daunger: So Toby expoundeth himselfe: Thou laiest vp a good store for thy selfe against the day of necessity, vers. 9. that is other men, which were before by him relieved, shall now in the time of his necessitie succour him: and not suffer him to perish in penurie and darkenes. So also Ecclesiasticus, lay vp thy almes, They shall keepe thee from affliction, chap. 29. 12. They shall keepe a mans fauour, vers. 13. They shall fight for thee against thine enemy, better then the shield of a strong man: This it is then to be deliuered from death, and darkenes, namely from outward perill and danger among men: if these Apocryphall bookes doe yet ascribe more vnto almes deedes, as making them available to redeeme our finnes, which is contrarie to the Scripture, we doe refuse them.

Argum. Psalm. 49. 7. A man can by no meanes redeeme his brother, he cannot give his ransom to God, vers. 8. Soprocious is the redemption of their soules: All soules are of alike price, and are redeemed alike, a man cannot any way redeeme another mans soule, and so consequently not his own: almes deedes therefore haue no force to redeeme the soule: they are of too great a price.

Augustine thus writeth: Fateor, quia peccavi, &c. sed penitentia mea non sufficit ad satisfactionem 3 sed certum est: quod misericordia tua superat omnem offensionem. I confesse I haue sinned, but my repentance sufficeth not to make satisfaction, but thy mercy exceedeth all my offences, lib. meditation. cap. 39. tom. 9. If repentance worke no satisfaction, much lesse almes deedes, which are farre inferior vnto it.

This also is the confession of the holy Martyrs, that there is no satisfaction for sinne, in our owne workes. Iohn Warne Martyr, I doe beleue, that my finnes are forgiven onely through Iesus Christ, of whom I professe, that I haue my whole and full saluation, which cometh not thorough our workes, but freely by grace: so the Apostle saith, that thorough the blood of his crosse, he hath reconciled all things in heauen and in earth, Coloss. 1. For. p. 1. 81

THE SECOND QUESTION OF THE MAN

ner in distributing of Almes.

That almes ought to be giuen, first cheercfully, the Scripture teacheth vs, God loueth a cheerefull giner, 2. Cor. 9. Againie readily without any delay: Say not to thy neighbour goe and come to morrow, if it be in thy power to giue him now, Prou. 3. Further, we must giue bountifully, when occasion serueth, and other mens necessitie requireth, 1. Cor. 8. 4. to their power; and beyond their power they were willing, 2. Cor. 8. 3. These and other such conditions are to be obserued in christian almes, but we deny this that followeth.

The Papists.

Almes must be done, intentione placendi Deo, with an intention to please God thereby. Argum. Matth. 6. 2. Our Sauour Christ reprobeth the Pharisees, because they gaue almes to haue praise of men: but we must giue our almes in secret, that God may reward vs, vers. 5. As they seeke the praise of men, so we must seeke the praise of God: Beilarm. cap. 13.

The Protestants.

Ans. Our Sauour Christ biddeth vs not in this place in giuing our almes to propound, and set before vs the praise and reward of God: but onely to take heede of the praise of men, and to shunne the same by giuing in secret: the praise or reward at Gods hand followeth vpon this simplicitie and singlenes of heart in giuing of almes: but we must doe well for conscience sake, not onely for hope of reward: although we graunt that our almes deedes are well pleasing and acceptable vnto God through Christ: Hebr. 13. 16. With such sacrifice God is pleased: Yet we ought to doe them of dutie, without any other respect.

Argum. If Magistrates must be obeyed for conscience sake, Rom. 13. 5. not for feare of punishment or hope of reward: if seruants must yeeld obedience to their masters in singlenes of hart and with good will, Ephes. 6. 6. much more for very conscience sake must we serue the Lord: if they must be obeyed for the Lords sake, much more the Lord for his owne sake. But now if in giuing almes we respect the reward at Gods hands, then doe we it not of conscience, nor for the Lords sake, but for the rewards sake.

Augustine saith: Da de quo dederat tibi Deus: ipse te diuitem fecit, ergo illi reade, quod summisit: Giue of that, which God gaue to thee: he made thee rich; therefore render to him his owne: Homil. 47. We are bound therefore of dutie to giue, which is sufficient to moue vs, without respect to the reward.

Bernard also saith notably: Causa diligendi Deum Deus est, modum sine modo diligere: non sine premio diligimus Deum, nisi absque premio intuitu diligendum: God himselfe is the cause why wee loue God: hee is not beloued without a reward, yet is hee to bee loued without respect had to the reward.

104. Error.

The Papists.

Lastly, the Remonists charge vs very vntruly, to be enemies to good workes: and most shamefully affirme of vs, that we condemne them as vnclane, sinful, hypocritical; in c. 2. to the Romans, sect. 3. and it is the generall accusation of the Papists against vs, that we preaching only faith, haue destroyed good workes, and slaked mens charitie and deuotion thereunto.

The Protestants.

This is an vncharitable slander, and a most false accusation, that the doctrine of faith is a destruction of manners: or that we, preaching iustification onely by faith, do hinder good workes: for first, for the doctrine it selfe, though we affirme, that faith onely iustificeth; yet we also vrge good workes as necessarie fruites, and lively testimonies of our faith. Secondly, concerning our selues; we do continually call vpon the people to shew their faith, by their workes: wee say with S. Paul, that they, which haue beleened in God, might be carefull to shew faith good workes, Tit. 3. 8. and let ours also learne to shew forth good workes for necessarie uses, that they be not vnfruitfull, uerse 14. Yet the same Apostle teacheth iustification to faith onely without workes, Rom. 3. 28. We also say with Hierome, Inter Christianum & Gentilem non fides tantum debet sed visa distinguere; & diuersam religionem per diuersa opera monstrare: Betweene a Christian and a Gentile, not faith onely, but our life must make a difference; and wee must shew a diuers religion, by diuers and differing workes, Hieron. ad Celantium. Thirdly, that it may appeare to all the world, how shamelesse the men are in forging vntrue reportes of vs, I will by particular instance of some speciall charitable workes, done vnder the Gospell, and especially within these fourtie yeeres of the happy raigne of our blessed Soueraigne, briefly shew, that the doctrine of faith hath not bene among vs vnfruitfull.

And to begin with the raigne of K. Edward of blessed memorie; what worke can they shew done in the time of superstition, equall to that excellent foundation of that good Iosias of three hospitals in London, erected for the poore, namely, Christs hospitall, S. Thomas hospitall, and Bridewell? the first for poore and friendlesse children, to bring them vp and instruct them: the second for the maymed and impotent poore, to heale and refresh them: the third for valiant and sturdie vagrants, to discipline and correct them.

But of all other times, (thanks be giuen vnto God) this space of fourtie yeeres profession of the Gospell, vnder the leading and direction of our happie Deborah, hath excelled: I cannot rehearse the hundredth part of such fruites as the Gospell hath brought forth in this land: I would they were come to my knowledge, that I might make some memorials of them: I will onely testifie that I know, and giue an instance of that place, which I in affection loue, and in dutie owe deuotion vnto, namely, the Vniuersitie of Cambridge: wherein the charitable beneuolence, bountifull liberallitie, large expences, bestowed 1. in the founding and erecting of Colledges: 2. augmenting some already erected, with larger reuenues: 3. the adorning and beautifying of the buildings, within the compasse of these 40. yeeres, may compare with any time of the like or longer continuance in any age.

First, there haue been of late within lesse then twentie yeeres by many, two famous Colledges rayased out of the ground: the one called Emmanuel Colledge, founded by the right honourable Sir Gualter Mildmay, consisting of a Master and twelue fellows, 24. schollers, and 10. poore schollers: whereof 7. fellowships were giuen by the founder, by Sir Robert Iermyn 1. Sir Francis Hastings 1. M. Skinner 1. M. Taylor 1. M. Fuller 1.

The other erected by the honorable Countesse of Suffex, called Sidney Colledge, consisting of a Master and 10. fellows, and diuers schollerships mainteined by the gift of the founder: and since encreased by a fellowship of Sir Iohn Hart gift of London.

Secondly, these Colledges haue bene augmented and encreased in reuenues.

To Peter-house, fixe Bibleclarkships giuen by the honorable Lord Edward Norwiche: three by M. Witham: one by the most reuerend the L. Archbishop of Canturburie that now is: three Bibleclarkes and one Fellow by D. Pearne late Master of the House: six fellowships and foure Bibleclarkships by the vertuous and charitable Lady Marie Ramsey of London.

Clare Hall by the gift of Edward Leeds sometime Master of the House maintaineth 20. Schollers.

Pembroke Hall hath beside the foundation one fellow and two schollerships, and a Greeke Reader, by the liberalitie of Archbishop Grindall: one schollership by the gift of Iane Cox wife of the late reuerend Bishop of Elie of good memorie: feuen schollerships giuen by Thomas Wais: one schollership by M. Marshall.

Bennet Colledge hath 2. fellowships and 15. schollerships added to the foundation, by Mathew Parker Archbishop of Canturburie, beside a goodly Library, and diuers rich pieces of plate, giuen vnto them by the said right reuerend Prelate.

Trinitie Hall is encreased to 6. schollerships, beside the foundation, by the liberalitie of Mathew Parker, Gabriel Duane, Henry Harrie, Humphrey Busbie.

Cain

Cains Colledge maintained by D. Cains liberalitie, three fellowships, twentie schollerships by Joane Traves of London widow, foure schollerships; by Hansrey Baskin one; by Maurice Far- ter one schollership, by Richard Milner one fellowshipp, by the liberal gift of Jedea Franklin, twelue schollerships, and six fellowships.

Queenes Colledge, by Sir Thomas Smith his gift enjoyeth two fellowships, with a Geometric and Arithmetike Reader.

Christs Colledge the sacred Colle of Theologie hath one fellowship, & three schollerships founded by B. King Edward; by Sir Godfrey Mildmay it enjoyeth a yeerly pension of twentie pounds, whereby a Preacher is maintained, and a Greeke Reader, to each of them foure pounds being allowed, the residue is for the maintenance of six schollers. To this societie Master Bunning a right Worshipfull and Christian Gentleman hath lately assured fortie markes by the yeere; whereof fifteen pound is allotted for these schollers, five pound for a preacher, and five pound for the maintenance of common fires; the rest to be distributed at the discretion of the house.

In Saint Johns Colledge six schollerships founded by the right Honourable Ladie Mildred
Burghley, three schollerships by Sir Henry Burghley of London, one schollership by Mistres Fran- cis Iermyn, thirtie pound by the yeere given by the thrice Honourable Sir William Cecil late Lord
Treasurer, and the most worthy Chancellour of that Vniuersitie.

Magdalen Colledge hath bene encreased with three fellowships, and six schollerships by Sir Christopher Wray his gift late Lord chiefe Iustice; with one schollership, by Edmond Grindell the late most Reverend Archbishop of Canterbury; with three schollerships by Master Robert of Norfolke and by the bountifull gift of Master Spensley of Lincolne, it receiveth fortie pounds yeerly.

Trinitie Colledge hath encrease of 25 pound of yeerly revenue by Thomas Alie, and of seven pound ten shillings, by Mistres Francis Iermyn.

In the thirde place for the cost and charge of building; Emanuel Colledge was builded with no lesse summe then of 2750. pound.

The building of Sidney Colledge cost 2600. pound.

The translating of the edifices of Trinitie Colledge is valued at the charge of 4000. pound bestowed by the liberalitie of the most Reverend the now Lord Archbishop of Canterbury; the right Honourable the Earle of Essex now their loving Chancellor; Master Vincens Skinner; Doctor
Nisill the Master of the said houses; Doctor Barrow; and at the commendable and worthy charges of the said house.

The beautifull enlarging of Saint Johns Colledge will surmount to the summe of 3700. pound, at the charge of a most Honourable personage, that desireth not yet to be knowen or seen in this charitable worke: whose noble liberalitie is so much the more worthie of eternall memorie, which seeketh to approue it selfe rather by secret charitie vnto God, then by outward ostentation to the world.

Other Colledges also haue bene much enlarged and beautified in their buildings; as Cains Col- ledge, Magdalen, Bennet Colledge, Peter house; the particular summes whereof came not to my hands; the charge of these together could not be so little as 2000. pound, beside Queenes Col- ledge, where the Masters lodging hath bene lately very much enlarged and beautified, partly at the charge of Doctor Tyndall Master there, Deane of Ely; and of the house, to the summe foure or five hundred pounds: So that I account, that in the Vniuersitie of Cambridge there hath bene bestowed in the edifices & buildings of the Colledges not so little as 10000. pound: The encrease of the yeerly revenue will arise, if it be laid together, to twelue or thirteene hundred pound or thereabout: So that within the space of these fortie yeeres, the whole accession and encrease in the buildings and revenues of the Colledges in Cambridge, will draw verie neare to fortie thousand pounds. I thinke for so much time, we may compare with the like space of yeeres in a ny age whatsoeuer: I speake of the Vniuersitie of Cambridge. And I doubt not, but the like might be said for our famous sister the Vniuersitie of Oxford: but neither had I readie any such particular direction, or could presently procure it, for this, as for the other: and I thinke, though those worthe foundations haue had most bountifull benefactors, yet they were without the compasse of this time, wherein I giue instance. Yet I cannot here omit to make mention of some worthe coste bestowed in that excellent Vniuersitie now in the time of the Gospell: as in the enlarging of Martine Colledge, with a goodlie peece of newe building by the prouident care of the president there, and liberall charge of the house.

And now of late I am certainly enformed of the bountifull disposition of diuers honourable and worshipfull persons in adorning and augmenting the Vniuersitie librarie there: to the finishing of which worke there hath bene given by the right Honourable Earle of Essex an hundred and fiftie pound; by the Lord Vicount Mountague an hundred pound; by Sir Robert Sidney an hundred pounds; by M. Bodlie of London bestowed in repaying of the said librarie five hundred 0000

pound, beside by the said worshipfull and well disposed Citizen an hundred markes by the yeere is intended for the maintenance and keeping of the said library.

Other godly workes done in that Vniuersitie, I am forced to omit, because I know them not. Neither doe I professe in this place to set downe all other worthie workes and foundations of hospitals, almshouses, free schooles, which haue bene erected since the time of the gospell in this land; wherof I much desire that I might haue attained to any certaine knowledge, that they might also haue bene remembered: I haue onely heard of a goodly hospitall erected by the late Lord Cobham at Cobham in Kent: of another at Greenwich by Master Lambry: one at Westminster by the Ladie Daker: one at Algham in Hertfordshire by Master Platt: a free schoole founded by Sir John Harr. Neither can I heere conceale y<sup>e</sup> worthie foundation of an hospitall, with a free schoole at Croydon, raised from the ground by one rayted vp of God for the good of many, a most reuerend prelate before named; which said hospitall is founded for the reliefe and maintenance of thirtie poore folke or aboue, with a warden and ouerseer: to the which is annexed a free schoole, with a Master and an Vther: the reuenue laid to the house, and intended to be laid, is estimate at two hundred pound yeerely: the edifice of the hospitall with the chappell built in most comely manner, is thought to haue cost not so little, as two thousand pound: for this so christian and acceptable a worke done to the honour of Christ, and the reliefe of his poore members, we are much to thanke God, that hath stirred vp the hearts of so reuerend a person, to adorne his honourable profession with such a charitable act.

And further, the Citie of London hath abounded to Gods glorie with such examples: Sir Thomas Gresham beside the erection of an hospitall, hath founded a Colledge of Readers, wherof three are of Diuinitie, Law, Physicke; and foure other for the liberall sciences; to each of them is allowed yeerely fiftie pound, with a most beautifull house appointed to that vse.

By the Merchant Taylors also was built, & so by them maintayned, an hospitall in East Smithfield: another by Master Cure sometime the Queenes Sadler in Southwarke: By Master Smob the Queenes Embroderer another at Lambert hill: By Master Balbasar the Queenes Constabler likewise an hospitall euen now erected at Totnam by London.

Many other hospitals, almshouses, free schooles, haue bene in euery corner of this land built to Gods glory, since the flourishing of the Gospell and Christes truth amongst vs: all which, if they were numbred together, a whole booke would not containe the names of them; those, which I for want of knowldge haue omitted, are before God remembered.

It hath bene also credibly told me, that one Master Sutton of Cambridgeshire, whom God hath blessed with a great measure of substance, is purposed to erect a goodly foundation for an hospitall, and to endowe the same with more then a thousand pound by the yeere: whose heart as God hath moued to so godly a worke; so I wish vnto him all strength & good direction for the accomplishing thereof: that if it would please him by the worthie example of that Honourable man Sir Gualter Mildmay, to see his charitable purpose effected in some good sort, while he liueth, & to employ part thereof for the maintenance of learning in the Vniuersitie adioyning, or where else it pleaseth him, I thinke nothing could be wanting in so Christian an enterprise: who by this means shall both shew himselfe a faithfull steward of his Masters goods, and be a worthie example to all other rich men.

These and many other such charitable workes doe glister as pearles, and the workers thereof, doe shine as starres amongst vs: their religious actes are as the pomegranates in Aarons priestly garment, and themselves as the tinkling bely hanging thereon, doe sound abroad the praises of the Gospell: Those godly benefactors, whom I for want of knowledge haue not remembered, are before God registred: and they which are not here mentioned in the lines of this lease, their names are written in the booke of life. And this I trust may serue for a full and sufficient answer to the Rheimists vniust accusation, that we condemne good workes: though we abound not in fruite, as we should, yet (God be thanked) we are not fruitlesse: and so I conclude with that saying of Hieronimus Veneratio Dei non proficit ad salutem, nisi precepta creatoris implueris: The veneration of God doth not profite, whete the obseruation of his precepts doth not preuaile, Hieron. Fabula tom. 4. And heere an end of this Centurie.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR ROBERT CECILL

KNIGHT, PRINCIPALL SECRETARIE

TO THE QUEENES MAIESTIE

Master of the Court of Warrles, and of her Maiesties most honorable privie Councell.

Right Honorable, as the first fruits of my labours I presumed to present to your honorable father of worthie memorie; so these my latter travellies, I have been bold to offer to your Honors view: and as in the first edition of this booke, among other notable patronies of learning and religion, your name was remembered, so I thought it not fit, that the same should now be omitted. Your Honor vouchsafed to patronize this worke in the infancy thereof, the growth also and encrease, of right is yours. He which in seede time scattereth with his hand, is worthie in the reaping season to fill his bosome: as then I sowed to your Honor, so now I reape: the fruits then but greene, are now by Gods blessing, as by the comfortable Sunne-shine, brought to some ripenes: then I did but promise, and now in some measure (I trust) I have performed: the labour is mine, the honor yours. It is our part to finde out, your Honors to defend the truth, and to maintaine by authoritie, that which wee labour out by our industrie; wee discover error, your Honors destroy it; to vs it belongeth to confute it, to the Magistrate to confound it: and as Augustine saith, Nos pro vobis orando pugnamos contra invisibiles, vos consilio pugnatis contra visibiles inimicos: We fight for your Honors by our prayers against the invisible, you fight by your counsell and authoritie against the visible enemies.

And I have been the bolder to write to your Honor of the Controversies of religion, who both do know and are able to understand them; and are not only (I trust) exercised, but expert in them: and I doubt not but that your Honor retaineth, as the ancient name, so your fathers excellent iudgement in religion: and as you succede him in our ward dignitie, so to be like him in the love of the veritie. As Ambrose well saith, Prerogativam generis morum magis similitudo sibi vendicat, quam ordo maiorum: The likenes in manners, rather than the descent of the elders, doth chalenge the prerogative of blood. That is true nobilitie which is ioynd with sinceritie: vertue in affection sheweth a noble condition: and he is worthily exalted; that is not with any unworthie vice assaulted: and he is justly honoured, that honoureth him by whom he is honoured. I trust of you both it may be said, as Hierome writeth of noble Nebridius: Affluentiam diuitiarum materiam habuit virtutum: The measure of his wealth was the matter of vertue: the store of his goods did make a proofe of his goodnesse.

But concerning the matter of this treatise, I haue laid open, and made bare and naked as it were, the whole bodie of Papistrie; their errors I haue descried, their heresies condemned, their canils confused, their hypocrisie discovered, their superstition reuealed. All their ensounded opinions, vnfauourable errors, vntrue positions, I haue collected together and reduced to foue Centuries, that is so many hundreds: and as Hierome saith, writing against Iouin. Proposui aduersarij sententias, & de tenebrosis libris eius quasi de foueis serpentes protraxi, neque sinam venenosum caput, spiritus maculosi corporis protegi: I haue propounded the aduersaries sentences, and haue drawne them forth of his darke bookes, as the serpents out of their holes, neither will I suffer the adders poisoned head to lurke in his speckled bodie. lib. i. cont. Iouinian.

Concerning the manner of handling these questions, as the aduersarie seeketh vnder the shadow of scripture to hide his errors, so I haue laboured by the light thereof to disperse their darknes: they (as Augustine saith) Quzrunt de medicina vulnus, & de scripturis conantur torquere vinculum, vnde laqueum mortis inciiciunt animarum suarum: They make the salve a sore, the plaster a plague, they wrest the scripture to make a draach to drinck their owne soule. As they play with the backe of scripture, so I haue turned the edge against them: as they would draw a clowde ouer the light, so I by the beames thereof haue chased away the mist: where they sucke payson, we finde pearles; where with they would wound men with error, wee winde our selues out of their snares: And as Hierome wil saith, Diuinis vocibus debeo in modum Dauid citharizantis lenire furorem pectoris tui: I with the diuine voyce of Scripture, as Dauid playing vpon his Harpe, must alleuie their rage, and with diuine melodie assuage their furie.

If any man thinke this labour superfluous, and that our faith ought not to be drawne to questions and that controuersies breede rather contention, than bring contentment, and tend rather to diuision, than tender edifying; and that consent in faith is better, than contention about faith, and vnitie to be preferred before variance: I answer, health is better than wounds, and soundnes than sickness; yet the bodie when it is wounded, must be healed; so error when it is spread, must be dispersed, and heresie set a foote must be confused; and payson infecting must be kept from spreading. Peace is to be embraced, but where the truth is not defeated; vnitie is to be desired, but where the veritie is not defeated; and loue to be maintained, where religion is not impugned. And here I say againe with Hierome, In vno tibi consentire non potero, vt parcam hæreticis, & me catholicum non probem, si in ista causa est discordiæ mori possum, tacere non possum: In this one thing I cannot consent vnto you, to spare an heretike, and to proue my selfe no Catholike; if this be the cause of our discorde, I had rather dye, than hold my my peace, &c. And againe, Sic inter nos vna fides, & pax illico sequetur: Let there be one faith among vs, and peace will soone follow.

Further, I haue in this first and last centurie specially laboured in setting forth the holy sufferings of Christ not only in bodie, but in soule for our redemption, which truth I haue maintained by warrant of scripture, and consent of the fathers, against the caualious objections of Bellarmine, and our English Rhenists, but especially of one Feuardentius a Frier of Paris, who hath of late stepped forth, and boldly denied, that Christ did feele in his soule the wrath of God kindled against our sinne: Dialog. 5. de Christo patient. pag. 443. and that Christ did beare the punishment due to our sinnes onely in his bodie, pag. 448. confut. 8. The contrary truth, that Christ did beare our whole punishments both in bodie and soule, I haue proved by the Scriptures: not doubting to say with the Prophet, that Christ did make his soule a sacrifice for sinne: With our Saviour himselfe, that his soule was heauie to death, and that he felt himselfe in that instant forsaken of God: With Saint Paul, that Christ was made a curse for vs. To this doctrine the fathers giue testimonie: Origen, Data anima Christi in redemptionem pro multis: Christ's soule was giuen to be a redemption for many. Cyrill: Carnem suam in redemptionis precium pro omnium carne dependit, & animam suam similiter pro omnium anima redemptionis precium constituit: His giue his flesh a price of redemption for the flesh of all men, and his soule like wise bee appointed a price of redemption for all mens soules. Ambrose: Repleta est malis anima mea, anima mea vniuersae, non diuinitas: My soule is filled with euils, my soule, not my diuinitie, &c. And againe, Hoc obtulit Christus, quod induit, induit, quod ante non habuit: Christ offered that which he put on, or took of man, and he took that he had not before. Hierome: Quod nos debebamus pro nostris sceleribus sustinere, ille pro nobis passus est, ex quo perspicuum, sicut corpus flagellatum, ita animum verè doluisse: That which we should haue sustained for our sinnes, he suffered for vs: whereby it is euident, that as his bodie was whipped, so his soule was truly grieved. Augustine also hath testifies vpon these words, Psal. 20. 3. Holocaustum tuum pingue fiat, Let thy burnt offering be fat and well liking: Deus crucem qua totus oblatus es Deo in latitiam resurrectionis conuertatur: God turne thy crosse, wherein thou wast offered whole (both in bodie and soule) vnto God, into the joy of the resurrection, &c. This then hath bin the faith of the holy Prophetes, Apostles, and the ancient confessors of the faith, that Christ both in bodie and soule payd by his a vne sufferings the punishment of sinne due vnto vs: therefore as Ambrose well saith: Quanto maior est iniuria, tanto maior debetur gratia: The greater Christs iniurie, so much more bounden are we in duty, and for him to ascribe the whole worke of our redemption to Christs bodily sufferings, and so to exclude his spirituall tentations, what is it else, but as Hierome saith vpon another occasion, Christum honorifica afficere contumelia?

Now I returne vnto your Honor, whom I make not a beholder only, but a controller of this combat; not a witnesse of our fight, but a iudge, as Augustine well faith; Or, non solum vt caram legentis impendas, sed censuram corri-gentis assumas: I pray you not to be a reader of my words, but a corrector of the work. I am well assured, that I haue throughout maintained the truth: and if in the manner of the handling thereof I chance to misse, I say againe with Augustine: Nonquam errari tutius existimo, quam cum in amore nimio veri-tatis erratur: I thinke a man cannot erre better, than in the too much loue of the truth.

As your Honor is well perswaded, so we hold you a parrone of the truth, and as God hath giuen you fauour with your Prince, and honour with men, so we trust it shall make for the aduancements of Gods glorie, the setting forth of the truth, and maintenance of religion and learning. Hierome thus reporteth of one Nebridius a noble man in his time in great fauour with the Emperour: Quicquid ab imperatore pofcebat, elemosyna in pauperes, precium captiuorum, misericordia in afflictos erat, vnde ipsi principes libenter prestabant quod scie-bant non vniuersis pluribus indulgeri: Thus honour & fauour employed to Gods glorie and the common good is encreased, and firmly established. Nehemias in making request for the temple, lost not but gained fauour with his King: but I need not, neither doth it become me thus to write to your Honor, of whose wisdom and moderation the whole land hath experienced. And I may say, as Hierome in the like vseth this comical speech: Vix dum dimidium dixeram, iam intellexi-rat: I say no more, then with Augustine: Perseuerate in eo, quod estis, proficite ad id quod eritis: Let vs perseuere in that wee are, and proceede to that, which by Gods grace we shall be. I wish to your Honor all perfection of vertue with God, and encrease of fauour with men, both strength to continue that you are, and grace to attaine to that perfection of wisdom, counsell, vertue, which you desire, and we all expect: that your honourable endeouours may be acceptable to God, gratefull to her Maestie, profitable to all. Thus fearing to be troublesome to your Honor, I conclude with that saying of Hierome: In te nunc puta cunctorum ora, oculosque conuersos, & ad spectaculum vite tue totam conse-disse Angliam: verum quid ego de hominibus ago, Deus ipse cum omni angelorum militia certamen tuum expectat, huic tanto spectaculo videquem animum, quam debeas asferre virtutem: All mens eyes are vpon your Honor, the whole land is settled to behold your life: not men onely, but God and the Angels expect your faithfull service: to this so great expectation God will (we trust) giue you a minde and vertue answerable: who will reward their labour eternally, that serue him in the warfare of this life faithfully. Amen.

Your Honors readie in all dutie to be commaunded in Christ,

Andrew Willes.

THE TWENTIETH GE- NERALL CONTRO- VERSIE.

WE have now, through Gods gracious assistance, entreated of all those questions, wherein wee dissent from our aduersaries; both as touching all the offices of Christ, his Propheticall office, kingdome and Priesthood: as likewise concerning the benefits purchased by the death of Christ, the benefits of our redemption, and saluation. Now, in the last place we are to prosecute such matters in question betwene vs, as doe concerne the natures of Christ: and this treatise containeth three Controuersies. First, of the humane nature of Christ. Secondly, of his diuine nature. Thirdly, of them both considered together.

THE FIRST PART OF THIS CONTRO- uersie, concerning the humane nature of Christ.

This part is diuided into these questions. First, of the vbiqutie of the humanitie of Christ. Secondly, whether he encreased in wisdom. Thirdly, whether he suffered in soule. Fourthly, whether he descended into hell. Fifthly, concerning the place of hell.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE VBIQUTIE of the bodie of Christ, whether his humanitie be euery where.

The Papists.

They doe seeme in wordes mightily to impugn this opinion of the Vbiqutaries, as they are 1. Error. called, which doe erroneously hold, that the humanitie of Christ is euery where, as his Deitie is, and that the proprieties of one nature are really imparted vnto the other: whereupon it followeth, that the humanitie of Christ is euery where, because it is verily vnited, and made one person with the Godhead in Christ. This opinion the Papists would be thought to detest & abhorre: and Bellarmine bestoweth great paines by sundrie arguments to confute it: as by diuers places of scripture, Matth. 28. He is risen, he is not here, vers. 6. Iesus said, Lazarus is dead, and I am glad for your sakes, that I was not there, Ioh. 11. 4. Ergo, Christ, as he is man, is not euery where. Againe, the opinion of the Vbiqutaries doth ouerthrow the article of Christs ascension: for if Christs bodie be euery where, as they hold, he can neither ascend nor descend: Beilar de Incarnat. verbi. lib. 3. cap. 11. 12.

The Protestants.

It is true Catholike and sound doctrine, that the humane and diuine nature are truly vnited in Christ, and doe make but one person, or hypostasis, neither by confusion of the natures, nor conuersion of one into the other, but by vnitic of person: for as the bodie and soule make one man, so God and man is one Christ. And the better to vnderstand this mysterie, wee must set downe these three positions.

1. Though the two natures in Christ be so vnited, that they make but one person, yet neither the natures are confounded, nor yet the proprieties: but as Christ is both God and man, so there is in him a double power, will, and vnderstanding, one humane and created; the other diuine and vncreated.

2. By reason of this vnion, all the excellent graces of the spirit in the highest degree, and a-boue measure, are given and bestowed vpon the humanitie of Christ, Ioh. 3. 34. but such notwithstanding, as destroy not his humane nature; but are qualities created, as his humanitie also was created.

3. There is also a mutuall communication of the proprieties of both natures each to other, though not really in respect of the natures: So we say in Concrete, in the concrete, that is, taking the whole person of Christ, that Christus homo, that is, the man Christ is omnipotent, is euery where; and Christus Deus, that is, Christ being God, dyed for vs, was buried, rose againe; but in the abstract abstract it is great blasphemie to say; that the Godhead of Christ dyed, was buried, or rose againe, or that the humanitie of Christ is omnipotent, or in euery place.

The Vbiquitaries now hold, that there is a reall communication of the proprieties of both natures: and therefore doubt not to say, that the flesh and bodie of Christ is euery where in all places at once. The Papists in outward shew are enemies to that opinion: but in deede, and in truth, as it shall now appeare, they are not farre off from being in the same error.

First, the same arguments which they yrge against the Vbiquitaries, doe returne vpon themselves: for although they will not say, that Christs bodie is euery where, yet they hold that it may be in a thousand places at once, yea and more to, if the Sacrament be at once in so many places celebrated: for Christs bodie is really and verily in the Sacrament. But those places alleaged, He is risen, he is not here, and the rest, doe proue that Christ can be but in one place at once. This their opinion also is against the article of Christs ascension, and abiding in heauen till the day of iudgement: for if the same bodie wherein Christ sitteth in heauen, be in the Sacrament; either when he is present in earth, he is absent in heauen, contrarie to the scripture, Act. 3. 21 which saith, The heauen must containe him till that all things be restored: or else, if he be in both places at once, they must needs make his bodie infinite, and so destroy the nature of his humanitie, which can be but in one place. If they say it is another bodie and flesh, which Christ by his diuine power maketh to be present in the Sacrament, that were much more absurd: for then Christ should haue many bodies, and other flesh than that which was borne of the Virgin Mary. We see then they are not farre off from the opinion of the Vbiquitaries.

Secondly, the Rhemists doe approoue that argument, whereby Hierome proueth that the Saints may euery where be present at their bodies and monuments: They follow the Lambe, whither soeuer he goeth, Apocal. 14. 4. but the Lambe is in euery place: therefore they that be with the Lambe Christ, be present euery where. Whereupon it followeth, that the Lambe Christ in humanitie must be euery where: for how can he be present else in innumerable places at once, where any reliques or monuments of Saints are? Neither can they excuse this vbiqutarie presence of the humanitie of Christ and the soules of Saints, by their agilitie and celeritie: because they can quickly passe from one place to another: for if they must be present at their monuments, whensoeuer they are called vpon, they must of necessitie be often in many places at once: for in one and the same instant, men may resort to their monuments which are in diuers places farre asunder. Thus they are driuen not onely to graunt an vbiqutie or omnipresence of the humanitie of Christ, but euen of Saints also: which those whom they call Vbiquitaries would neuer graunt.

Thirdly, the bodie of Christ is visible and palpable now in heauen, and hath a place according to the quantitie of his bodie: Bellarmino confesseth as much, cap. 12. But that bodie which is in the Sacrament hath none of these properties, it is neither seene, nor felt, neither hath a place according to the quantitie of a bodie, for they close it vp in small round cakes. Wherefore destroying these properties of the humanitie of Christ, they may as well, and doe in effect, take away the other, namely, the being of Christs bodie in one place: for it is as proper to the bodie of Christ to be seene and felt, as to be in one place at once.

Fourthly, Bellarmino grauntech, being vrged with that argument, that Christs soule was in Paradise after his passion, and therefore not in hell: hee confesseth, that it was not impossible that Christs soule should be in two places at once, lib. 4. de Christi anima, cap. 15. Yea he saith, that Christ may, if he will, turne all the world into bread, and the bread so made conuert into his flesh; and so his bodie may be as well in euery place of the world, as now it is in the Eucharist, lib. 3. de incarnatione, cap. 11. What great oddes now, I pray you, is there betwene the opinion of the Vbiquitaries and of the Papists? but that they say, that the bodie of Christ is euery where ordinarily by the power of the Godhead: the other say, his flesh is in many places at once by a myracle. The one saith, Christs bodie actually is in euery place: the other saith, it is actually in many places at once, and may be in all places, if Christ will: which is true in respect of his omnipotent will, if Christ would destroy his bodie: but we are sure Christs will cannot be contrarie to it selfe, to destroy his owne bodie. We confesse then with Hierome: Stultum est illius potentiam vnus corpusculi paruitate finiri, quoniam non capit cælum, & tamen qui vbique erat in filio hominis totus erat: in omnibus locis versabatur, cum Thomas in India, &c. It is a foolish thing, that the power of Christ should be determined in the smallnes of a little bodie, whom the heauen is not able to receiue: and yet he that was euery where, was all and whole in the sonne of man: in all places hee was conuersant, with Thomas in India, Peter at Rome, with Andrew in Achaia, Paul in Illyricum, &c. tom. 4. Marcell. All this wee acknowledge to be true of Christ as hee is God, according to his owne promise made to his Disciples, I am with you to the end of the world, Matth. 28. 20. But to imagine Christs bodie to be in all places, or many places at once, is to limit his power and presence within the compasse of his bodie, which Hierome here saith is a foolish matter. The Master also of the Sentences saith well: Christus

Sci oblique et non recte, sed quantum ad naturam referatur, totus ad hypostasim: Whole Christ is every where, but not wholly: whole is referred to his person, whollie to his natures. lib. 3. diffinit. 23. lier.

THE SECOND QUESTION, WHETHER OUR SAVIOUR CHRIST did verily encrease in knowledge and wisdom, as he was man.

The 1. q. 1.

Christ, they say, in the very first creation of his soule, and from his conception, was endued with the fulnes of all wisdom, grace, and knowledge: neither can he be said properly to have encreased in any of these gifts.

Ans. 1. Christ was annoynted from his mothers wombe, and then the spirit of God was vpon him: for the Angels that appeared to the shepherds call him Christ. Luk. 2. 11. And Iohn saith, That word was made flesh, full of grace and truth, 1. vers. 11. Therefore euen then he had receiued all abundance of grace and knowledge, Bellarmin. de Christi anima lib. 4. 2.

Ans. 1. We grant, that our Saviour was the Iesus and the Christ euen from his Natiuitie: not that then he actually straightwaies entered into those offices, or receiued plenarie power of all the graces of the spirit in his humanitie, but because he was euen from his mothers wombe conecrated and appointed thereunto: for it no more followeth, because he is called Christ, that he then had his actuall annoynting fully, then that, because he was called Iesus from his Natiuitie, he had actually performed our redemption. The full annoynting of the spirit was fulfilled in his Baptisme, when the holy Ghost came downe in the likenes of a Dove: and then beginning to preach, in his first sermon at Nazareth, he shewed the accomplishment of the prophetic of Esa. The spirit of the Lord is vpon me, &c. Luk. 4. 18.

2. Neither doe the words of Iohn import so much, as they gather, That word was made flesh, and dwelt amongst vs, full of grace and truth: which is not to be vnderstood onely of the very first assuming of the flesh, but of the dwelling of the word in the flesh amongst vs, and so appeared to be full of grace and truth. As it followeth, Iohn 1. 16. Of his fulnes haue we receiued grace for grace: this receiuing of the fulnes of Christ, was not performed in his infancie, but afterward by his holy doctrine and preaching, and the Apostle saith, That when he ascended vp on high, he led captiuitie captiue, and gaue gifts vnto men, Ephes. 4. 8. We denie not but that this fulnes of grace was in Christ in his first incarnation, yet after encreased and made more full in his humane nature.

Argum. 2. Christ was the Sonne of God in his verie incarnation, and euen then was the humanitie perfectly vnited to the Godhead: therefore immediately vpon this vnion and coniunction of both natures in one person, must needs follow the fulnesse of grace in the humane nature. Againe, Adam was created in perfect wisdom, therefore much more the second Adam. Bellarmin. cap. 4.

Ans. 1. If presently vpon the vniting of the two natures together, it had beene necessarie that the humane nature of Christ should haue receiued whatsoeuer by the presence of the diuine nature was to be conferred vpon it, then Christ straightwaies must also both in bodie and soule haue beene glorified: for it cannot be denied, but that as the bodie of Christ after the resurrection receiued more glory then before: so also his soule being the other part of his humanitie, was more glorified. By this it is euident, that the humanitie receiued not at once the fulnes of all grace and glory in the first vniting of the Godhead.

2. Adam was created perfect in bodie and soule: and if Christ therefore ought to haue his fulnes of the gifts of the soule in his natiuitie as Adam had his in the creation, why ought he not also to haue had a perfect bodie, as Adam was created withall? Wherefore as it was no dishonour to Christ to growe vp in stature of bodie, so neyther was it to encrease in the gifts of the minde.

Againe we confesse, that Christs soule in his perfect growth was farre more excellent then Adams in his perfection of creation. 3. In the first instant of his conception we doubt not also, but it exceeded in heavenly grace all the soules that euer came into the bodie by natiuitie: yea and Adams soule likewise, if it had beene sent into the like bodie. 4. and the like equiualent perfection being admitted in Christs soule, proportionable to their state: yet as Adams soule should haue encreased, if he had not fallen; so Christs soule being most perfect in that infantile estate might and did receiue a greater fulnes.

Argum. 3. First, Christ created his owne soule. Secondly, he himselfe by his diuine power infused knowledge and grace into it: therefore at the first he gaue vnto it the very fulnes and perfection of knowledge. Thirdly, Christ is the head of men and Angels, therefore he had a most wise soule, it is not fit that the head should be lesse wise then the members. Bellarmin. c. 4.

Ans. 1. We denie not but that Christ, if it had pleased him, could have created himselfe a most perfect soule that should not have received afterward any accession of knowledge: but it pleased him to be herein like vnto vs, that as he grew vp in stature of bodie, so likewise to encrease in the inward graces. 2. As he created himselfe a soule; so likewise he made his owne body; as he infused grace to his soule; so he did give life to his flesh: yet it followeth not, that Christ did or was to make at the first incarnation a perfect bodie to himselfe. 3. We acknowledge notwithstanding the soule of Christ in his growth and perfection to have beene most wise, and exceeding the wisdom of the soules of any of his members: for God gave not him the spirit by measure, Iohn. 3. 34. as others haue.

Ques. That Christ was euen from his birth and first conception perfect God; and perfect man; we do assuredly beleue, and that, in the very incarnation, the diuine and humane nature were vnited together. And we graunt, that the Lord Christ might haue created to himselfe a soule full of all wisdom and knowledge, as he might haue made himselfe a perfect bodie: but seeing it pleased him to be borne of a woman, and first to dwell in the bodie of an infant, we doubt not to say, as the Scripture teacheth vs, that he also encreased in wisdom.

Ans. He was so in things that to his brethren, only shew excepted, Heb. 5. 14. 15. Ergo, he grew vp and encreased in knowledge, according to the manner of men, which may be done without sinne; and he was like vs in all things, which concerned the perfection of nature, and the worke of redemption: for if he should haue beene like vs in all things; then could he not haue beene borne of a virgin, nor free from the rebellion of the flesh, Bellarmine. c. 3.

Ques. 1. He did not take vpon him the perfection onely, but the imperfections also of our nature: as he might haue received without sinne, as in the bodie hunger, thirst, wearines; in the soule, sorrow, fear, &c. It was requisite euen to the worke of our redemption: that he should be like vs in every respect both in soule and bodie without sinne: That he might be mercifull, and a faithful high Priest in things concerning God: Heb. 2. 17. 3. From this similitude of Christ with vs, sinne is excepted, Heb. 4. 15. and so both the cause of sinne which is originall corruption, and therefore Christ was to be borne of a virgin, and the effects of sinne, as is the rebellion of the flesh; which could not any way be fastened vpon Christ being free from sinne.

2. The Scripture saith plainly, which cannot lye, that Iesus grew vp and encreased in wisdom and stature, Luke 2. 52. And least they should answere, that this encreasing was onely in the opinion of men, it followeth, And in fauour with God and men: he encreased in wisdom, stature and fauour, not onely in shew before men, but in truth before God: and as verily and indeed he grew vp in stature, so also in wisdom.

3. Christ testifieth of himselfe, that neither the Angels nor the Sonne of man, as he is man, knoweth of the day or houre of his coming to iudgement, but the father onely, Mark. 13. 32. Ergo, Christ as he was man had not at once all fulnes of knowledge. Bellarmine thus expoundeth this place, Filius quæritur nescire, quia non sciebat ad dicendum alijs: The sonne is said not to know because he knew it, not to reueale it to others, but to keepe it secret to himselfe.

Ans. First, then by the same reason, the Angels doe know it also: but that they are charged not to declare it to men: for the text saith, that neither the Angels, nor the Sonne of man knoweth the time. Secondly, in this sense also the father might be said not to know it: for neither hath he reuealed it to any. Lastly, although we doe affirme according to the Scripture, that the childe Iesus did increate in the gifts of the minde, as he did in the stature of his bodie; yet we do put great difference betwene him, and all other children that euer came into the world: for as his conception and birth were not after the common manner; (for he was conceived by the holy Ghost, and brought forth without trauell and labour: as Augustine saith, Nec concipiendo libidinem; nec pariendo perpressa est dolorum: In conceiuing she felt no carnall desire; in bearing she suffered no paine:) so likewise, the holy and blessed babe, in the constitution both of bodie and soule excelled the common condition of all other infants: for as he was void of original sinne, so he was without the effects and fruits thereof, which do shew themselves in children: for neither suffered he the like pangs and infirmities in bodie, being in his infancy, as other children do, that are vexed and tormented in bodie: neither was he subiect to the vnreasonable and brutish motions of the minde, which are in children. Therefore Augustine saith, Hanc ignorantiam & animi infirmitatem, quam videmus in parvulis, nullo modo fœviri in Christo parvulo suspensum: This kind of ignorance & infirmities of minde, which is in children, I cannot thinke to have beene in the babe Christ. And what ignorance and infirmities he meaneth, afterward he expresth, Cum moribus irrationabilibus perturbatur, nulla ratione, nulla imperio cohibetur: When their brutish & vnreasonable motions come vpon them, they are ruled neither by reason, nor any other gouernment. These infirmities both in body and soule we deny to haue beene in Christ: and yet we doubt not to conclude, that, as Christ grew in stature of body; as Augustine saith, Mutationes etiam perpositi voluit ab ipsa excorsus infantia: He passed through through the ages of mans life, beginning with his infancie: So likewise, as the Scripture saith, hee encreased in wisdom; Luk. 2. 52.

The testimony of Cyril is here most notable, De incarnat. Domini cap. 12. Deus verbum humanitatem suam more suo proficere permittit: & quasi paulatim diuinitatis sue voluit gloriam declarare, & cum corporis aetate sua extendit, corporale quidem augmentum, & profectus gratia & sapientia humanitatis magis manifeste commendat: ipsum Deum verbum per suam naturam perfectissimum conseruatur, non operum profectus sapientia vel gratia: God the word suffered his humanity to grow, and by little and little, as the age of his bodie encreased, so it pleased him to shew forth his diuine power: the growth of the bodie, and his encrease in grace and wisdom belong to his humane nature: as he was God he was most perfect, and needed no encrease. Hence we gather this argument: As Christ encreased in bodie, so in gifts of the minde, but he verily did grow in bodie. Ergo.

Saint Aphrasa: Sensu hominis proficit, sicut scriptum est, & Iesus proficiebat aetate & sapientia, profectus aetatis, profectus sapientia; sed humana, aetas non diuinitatis, sed corporis est: Ergo si proficiebat aetate hominis, proficiebat sapientia hominis: sapientia autem sensu proficit, quia a sensu sapientia: sensu ergo proficiebat humanus sensus, ergo suscepit humanum. He encreased in the sense or vnderstanding of man, as it is written, Iesus encreased in age and wisdom: the encrease of age, is the encrease of wisdom, but humane; for age is not of the diuinitie, but of the bodie: therefore if he encreased in the age of man, he encreased in the wisdom of man: but wisdom encreaseth by sense, for wisdom is of the sense: wherefore humane sense encreased in him, and he tooke vpon him humane sense: ib. de incarnat. c. 7. Ambrose thinketh, that Christ verily encreased in wisdom, not in the opinion of men only, as the Master doth gloss vpon him: ib. 3. dist. 13. iter. E. His reasons are these: first, hee exempteth nothing from encreasing but his diuine nature, then all the rest encreased. Secondly, as hee encreased in stature of bodie, so likewise in wisdom. Thirdly, his wisdom encreased as his sense and experience encreased; which was verily and in deede, not in opinion onely.

Hierome: Virginitas laus. Dominus noster, qui nobis viuendi exemplum reliquit, proficiebat non aetate tantum corporea, sed sapientia & gratia, &c. Our Lorde, who left vs an example of liuing, did encrease not onely in his bodily age, but in wisdom and grace, before God and men, &c. Here also are three reasons: first, Christ encreased to giue vs an example: but wee must not encrease onely in opinion. Secondly, hee encreased not onely in bodie, but in soule: Ergo, hee encreased in soule. Thirdly, before God and men: but there is no encreasing before God in opinion onely.

Origen also vpon these words, Iesus encreased in wisdom & stature, Luk. 2. 52. Quis est hominum? &c. There is no man, but doth encrease in stature, this is no great matter to be written of Christ: therefore vnderstand aetate anime proficiebat, hee encreased in the stature of his soule: whereupon the Apostle vnderstanding this stature to be vnderstoode of the inward man, writeth: Vos ita uos alios: together to a perfect man, in the measure of the age of the fulnes of Christ, Ephes. 4. 13. Han. 122 Leuitic. He doubteth not to affirme, that wee must encrease and grow in the inward man, as Christ did; Ergo, he did verily and in truth encrease.

AN APPENDIX, OF THE MANNER of Christs birth.

The Papists.

They say, Christ came out of his mothers wombe, the clausure not stirred: as he passed thorow the doores when he came in to his disciples, the doores being shut, Ioh. 20. 19. and as hee passed thorow the stone, arising out of the Sepulchre, Rhemist annot. Iohn 10. sect. 2. Bellarm. de Ecclesi. lib. 4. cap. 9.

The Protestants.

1. It can neuer be proued, that Christs bodie came either thorow the wood of the doores, or thorow the stone of the Sepulchre, or clausure of his mothers wombe. And concerning the last, the Scripture is euident to the contrarie, where it is said, that our Sauour Christ was presented to the Lord, according as it is written: Every male that first openeth the matrix. &c. Luk. 2. 29. 2. Wee graunt, that both the birth of Christ, his rising out of the graue, his coming in, the doores being shut, was straunge and miraculous, because one substance gaue place to another for a time, and after the passing of his bodie, the place remained whole and shut as before: but not in the very instant of passing. The red sea gaue place to the Israelites while they passed, and closed together againe: so did the prison doores open miraculously to the Apostles, Act. 5. 19. An incredulous Iew seeing the eare of Malchus so soone healed, would not haue thought that Peters sword went between it and his head, as we are sure it did: So we say concerning the birth of Christ, that the place gaue way while hee passed, and closed vp afterward againe as before. Augustine bringeth in Christ, thus speaking: Ego uiam meo itinere preparavi: and a little after, transiit uero ille.

luis non est corrupta virginitas: I made a way for my selfe out of the wombe: neither by my passage was her virginitye lost. Christ had a way out of his mothers wombe: but if the claufure had not given place, there had been no way made. Again he saith, Spatia locorum tolle corporibus, namquam erunt, & quia nunquam erunt, nec erunt: Take away space of place from bodies, and they shall be no where; and if they be no where, then are they not at all. But the Papists in saying that Christ went thorow the very substance and corpulence of things, doe take away from his bodie his proper place: for two substances cannot be in one place, and therefore they destroy the nature of his bodie.

Gaij decret. Iacuit in sepulchro, & revoluto lapide monumenti tertia die caro resurrexit: He lay in the graue, and the third day, the stone being rolled away, his flesh rose againe. This decree saith, that Christs bodie went not thorow the stone, but the stone was first removed.

But this matter I haue entreated of at large before, Controvers. 13. art. 17. argum. Pap. 2. whither I referre the reader.

THE THIRD QUESTION, WHETHER

Christ suffered in soule.

First, before I come to the handling of this question in the severall parts thereof, I will lay open the slanderous and malicious accusations, which the Papists charge this opinion with, and especially one Frier Fenardentius, that hath directly of this argument written against Master Caluine, that worthie Minister of Christ of blessed memorie. And against this Frier, together with Belarmine and the Rhemists, I purpose to deale ex professo, in this question. If any other from amongst our felues haue therein written somewhat diuerly from the common opinion, I leaue them to their owne best thoughts: and being desirous to maintaine peace, and not to encrease domestical contentions, I say with Hierome writing to Augustine: Non audeo scribere contra Episcopum communionis mee.

fall. 4.

First, then he chargeth Caluine and others, as though they should denie Christs prayer and request in the garden to be holis, iust, righteous: Fenard. de Christo patiente. p. 415. p. 418. First, Master Caluine himselfe confesseth, Affectus in Christo vitio caruisse: That Christs affections were without fault, being framed to the obedience of God: in cap. 11. Joann. vers. 33. And Christ took upon him mans affections, but without any disorder. Secondly, where M. Caluine then is alleaged to say, Christi votum correxisse, that Christ did correct his vow, which he brake into through griefe; and, inconsiderate effluxisse, and that it came from him inconsiderately: in cap. 12. Joann. vers. 27. though this speech seeme somewhat hard, yet hee is to be expounded by himselfe, and not his wordes to bee so much pressed, as his meaning to be accepted: for Caluine is farre, from charging Christ; with any imperfection or corruption in his desire: but doth interpret himselfe, that Christ prayed, ex sensu carnis, from the sense of his humane nature, and of a unceare humane desire, which may without sinne wish to escape griefe and trouble, conditionally so it may stand with Gods will, as here our Sauour prayeth. Thirdly, Master Beza may very well explicate Master Caluines meaning: whole wordes and sense cannot be misliked, where he saith, that these wordes of our Sauour, Yet not my will, &c. are not a correction, but the explication of the condition: neither doth this shew a repugnance or contrarietie of Christs humane will, and Gods, but onely a diuersitie: Beza. annot. in 26. Mat. v. 39. As Damasceus well saith, in contrarietate voluntatis, non in iditate voluntatis: Christ prayed not with a contrarie will, but proper to his humane nature: lib. 3. de fide. cap. 14.

Secondly, Caluine is charged to say, that Christ had forgotten, that he was sent to be the redeemer of the worlde, and that he refused to accomplish the worke of our redemption: Fenard. p. 423. 426.

Master Caluines wordes are these, that Christ through the vehemencie of his agonie remembered not, or thought not vpon the heavenly decree: Pater non reputaret in ipso momento, &c. That he did not thinke in that moment, that he was sent, but lege, with this condition to be the Sauour of the world: in cap. 26. Matth. v. 39. And againe in the same place: Mediatoris officio defungi, quantum in se est, renuit. He refuseth, as much as in lieth, or in his humane nature to doe the office of a Mediatour.

First, I here say with Augustine, if Master Caluine should seeme to any somewhat to exceede in termes: Nunquam errari iustus existimo, quam cum amore nimio veritatis & reuelatione falsitatis errator: I thinke a man cannot erre more safely, than in the too much loue of the truth, and reiecting of falsehood.

Secondly, Master Caluine is very farre himselfe from charging Christ with any such forgetfulness or unwillingnes: for thus he saith: Quia non desistis mundi esse seruator, &c. Because hee neuer ceased to be the Sauour of the world, he was alwaies endued with an heavenly power to the fulfilling of his office: neither can it be, that he should forget those, which doe commend their saluation vnto him: in Luce. 23. 43. how then could he be forgetfull of himselfe, and his own office?

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Master Caluine further expoundeth himselfe in these very words: first, he saith, In ipso momento, in that very moment onely, and quantum in se est, in respect of his humane nature, Christ prayed, that the cup might passe, his humane nature now fullie shewing it selfe: so that this passion in Christ proceeded onely from his humane infirmities; and it was but for a moment, Christ in that very instant remembering himselfe: Ioh. 12. 27. What shall I say? Father save me from this houre, but therefore came I into this houre.

Fourthly, Saith Augustine saith as much: Hec humana voluntas erat propria aliquid & priuatum: This was his humane will, praying now for somewhat proper and priuate to himselfe, per. 12 in Psal. 32. If it were priuate that he prayed, then it was beside the publick office of the Mediatorship. And againe, Psal. 97. Ostendit hominis voluntatem, sed in illa voluntate permixta erat primum et ostendere videtur: He shewed the will of a man, and if he had continued in that will, his heart had not beene bright. So then Augustine affirmeth, that for a moment Christs humane will desired something priuate: Caluine saith no more.

Damasceus also saith, that Christs humane will, being first tempered of his naturall infirmities, was afterwaerd strengthened by his diuine will, and receiued courage against death: lib. 3. de fide. 18. Wherefore Feuudent. theweth his Frierly cauilling spirit, in wresting that as spoken of Christ absolutely as he was the Mediator, which onely brake forth from his humane infirmities, yet without sinne; and maketh that to be as a settled disposition in Christ, which was but a momentarie passion.

Thirdly, he chargeth Caluine, as though he should say, that the bodily death of Christ profited nothing: and therefore he taketh vpon him to proue, that the bodily death of Christ did much for the saluation of mankind: which no man is so impious to denie.

First, these are Caluines words: Nihil alium erat, si corpus tantum inerte de finibus fuisset: Nothing had beene done, if Christ had onely performed a bodily death: lib. 2. Instit. c. 16. §. 10. He denieth not the profitable and necessarie vse of the bodily death; but saith it was not auailable alone without the soule. The Frier himselfe saith in effect as much: Dicitur quod pater, tales fuerunt pater, quos non tantum secundum corpus, &c. Such were the paines which Christ onely suffered not for vs according to his bodie, which without the soule is altogether impassible, but in the soule also.

Secondly, Damasceus saith, The soule being passible, doth suffer together with the bodie, lib. 3. de fide. cap. 26. If then the bodie without the soule is impassible, and the soule doth suffer with the body, why is Caluine blamed for saying, that Christs bodily death onely had not beene auailable?

Thirdly, Master Caluine himselfe every where magnifieth the bodily death of Christ: as he is alleged by Feuudent. Quisquis nutritum sibi esse capit Christi carnem, &c. Hee that desireth the flesh of Christ to be his nourisher, must consider the same offered vpon the crosse, as the price of our reconciliation: in Luc. 22. vers. 16. How then is hee not ashamed to charge him with so notorious a lye, as though he held the bodily death of Christ altogether vnprofitable?

Fourthly, Feuudentius slandereth Caluine, as though hee should say, Christum omnia reprobis & damnatis debita supplicia perussisse: That Christ did beare all the punishments due vnto the reprobate: p. 443. And thereupon inferreth, that whereas these foure are the punishments of the reprobate: 1. That they shall for ever want the vision or sight of God. 2. They shall for ever be perpleued with the horror of a guiltie conscience. 3. By their sinne fault, they are deprived of all the gifts of the spirit. 4. In stead of vertues, they are defiled with all wickednesse: p. 446. 447. He would by Caluines sentence force all these vpon Christ.

Contra. 1. Though in some sense Christ may be said to haue suffered the paines of the damned, though not all, nor in that manner, as they suffer them; yet, because the Scripture so speaketh not, I could wish, for feare of offence, that such phraeses had beene forborne: that neither the aduersarie should haue caught any aduantage thereby, nor the weak conscience taken offence.

2. That Christ notwithstanding did beare some punishments due vnto the reprobate, as desolation for a while and dereliction, the Scriptures (we see) doe warrant it.

3. Whereas Caluine saith: Us deponderet omnes, quae ab illis expectanda erant poenae, &c. that hee might pay all punishments to be required of them: Instit. lib. 2. c. 16. §. 10. he meaneth, as Augustine in the like case expoundeth the word omnia damna not singula generatim, but genera singulorum, not euery paine in particular, but in generall: as by all punishments, the kinds of all punishments are vnderstood, that is in the bodie, and soule, though not euery particular punishment in the bodie and soule.

4. Caluine himselfe excepteth the manner: Exceptis quod doloribus moris, &c. he saith he excepted, that Christ could not be held in the sorrowes of death, as the reprobate are: lib. 1. The punishment then, which Christ did beare, and the reprobate suffer, differ in the perpetuities: wherefore the Frier impudently doth object the two first punishments produced, which doe include a continuance and perpetuities for euer.

5. Caluine according to the Scriptures professeth, that Christ in all his actions & punishments was immaculate and without sinne: such punishments then of the reprobate, as are not suffered without sinne, of the which sort are the two last rehearsed, Christ by the sentence of Caluine is to be freed: so then none of these foure punishments can be fastened vpon Christ in Caluine's iudgement: so that the Frier is sent away here with a flea in his care.

fall. 8.

Fifthly, he objecteth, that Caluine should affirme, that Christ doubted of his eternall saluation: These are Caluine's words, testetur lib. 2. c. 16. sect. 12. Some will crye out against me, as though I did give anie inimicis to Christ: Quia minimis consensum autem fuerit cum de anima salute timere: Because it is not con- venient, that he should feare the saluation of his soule: Fenard. p. 478. First, Master Caluine is flat of a contrarie iudgement, that Christ neuer doubted his saluation, neither did his faith faile: in eius deo cruciatus illius fuit eius fides: in his greatest perplexitie his faith was not violated: fixa fides fidei in corde, his faith stood firme in his heart: in c. 27. Mat. ver. 46. He might be ashamed therefore to presse Caluine's words against his owne meaning.

Secondly, timere, to feare, is not dubitare, to doubt: for feare may proceede from the infirmite of nature without sinne, but doubtfullnes springeth of diffidence or distrust. And here Damasce helpeth vs with a very good distinction of feare: There is phobos, a naturall feare; and a feare, deus, that proceedeth of diffidence or distrust: the first was in Christ; as the Apostle saith, Hebr. 5. 7. He was heard in that he feared, but not the second: Damasc. de fid. lib. 3. c. 23.

Thirdly, why doth not the Frier open his throat against Ambrose, who doubteth not to say of Christ: Dubito illi non finem, nisi si capitis dubitatio desperet: His doubting doth strengthen vs, lest thou, when thou beginnest to doubt, shouldst despayre: de incarnatione. c. 4.

fall. 9.

Sixtly, another lye wherewith the Frier slandereth Caluine is this, that he should say, that Christ was, reissa peccator, a sinner indeed: non tantum nostrorum, sed proprium peccatorum reum, not guiltie onely of our sinnes, but of his owne: p. 464.

First, Caluine onely saith: Oportet enim fuisse ad dei tribunal, ut eorum nostrorum malefactorum reum. He was to stand before Gods iudgement seate, as guiltie of all our sinnes. Hee tooke vpon him our person, and vnder tooke our sinnes, as the Prophet saith, Isay. 53. 6. God hath layd vpon him the iniquitie of vrrall: And the Apostle saith, He was made sinne for vs, that knew no sinne, that we should be made righteous by him: As we are sinners in our selues, yet made righteous by imputation of his righteoutnes: so Christ being righteous in himselfe, was a sinner for vs, and in our person by imputation of our sinnes. This is neither heresie nor blasphemie.

Secondly, Damasce hath a distinction to this purpose: that there is an appropriation naturall and personall; the naturall appropriations in Christ are such, as he receiued together with our nature: the personall, which agreed not to him, but as he tooke vpon him our person, as to be forsaken, to be accursed, lib. 3. de fide. c. 35. so Christ in our person stood as guiltie before God.

fall. 10.

Seuenthly, he challengeth Caluine to say, Quod Christum Deus exhorretet, detestaretur, &c. That God hated, detested and abhorred Christ: Fenard. pag. 468. Caluine saith not so, but thus; Sperio Christum exhorret, quasi Diu detestetur, &c. It so seemed vnto Christ (for that moment) as though God were his aduerarie: 1. 2. 6. Mat. 26. Now it is one thing for God to be an enemy indeed, another to be seke and feared for a time as an enemy: Iob complayneth in the bitterness of his soule of God: *He reuerberet me deus, et deus meus in ira sua, Iob. 39. 1. Though Iob so feared, yet neither was God his enemy, nor he as one of Gods enemies, yet beloved of God: so Christ was alwayes the beloved sonne of God, yet in that instant, the punishment of our sinnes lying vpon him, hee felt the wrath of God as of an enemy. This is agreeable to the Apostle, who sayth, that Christ vpon the crosse hath staine hatred to himselfe, Ephes. 2. 16. but otherwise, how hath he staine it, but by bearing it for vs. 3. Beza saith, Galas. Quod mirum si maledictum est Deus, quod adit Deus, &c. No maruell, if that be cursed of God, which God hateth: Christ then vndergoing the curse and malediction, did beare also the hatred. Here then these considerations are necessarie, 1. that Christ was not wholly or finally accursed, hated or forsaken of God, but ex parte, in part, and for a time: 2. that it was rather in Christs sense and feeling, then in Gods reiecting of him. 3. that Christ in himselfe was alwayes beloved and blessed of God: he stood onely accursed for vs by reason of our sinnes layd vpon him: as Augustine saith, *Benedictus in iustitia sua; maledictus ob peccata nostra: Blessed in his innocencie, cursed for our iniquitie, lib. 14. contr. Faust. ad c. 12.

fall. 11.

Eightly, he believeth Caluine to say, Pateris reissa filium suum, cum pateretur, de seruiss: That the father did truely and indeed forsake his sonne, when he suffered, pag. 472.

Caluine so saith not: his wordes are these; *Abjectionem Dei mente concepit, sicut sensum distabat: He conceived in his minde, that he was alienated from God; according to his present sense and feeling: in c. 27. Mat. ver. 46. Nec vero scilicet conqueitur se a patre derelictum: Neither doth he faintly complaine that he was forsaken of God, in lib. 2. c. 16. sect. 12. It is one thing to be indeed forsaken finally and totally of God; another, so to thinke and conceiue for the time: *David said in his haste, I am cast out of thy sight; Psalm. 31. 22. Yet was hee not cast wholly out: for it followeth, Terribili bearest the voyce of my prayer: So Beila witnesseth in 15. Mare. Et homo loquitur meos circumferens metum, quod in periculis positi a Deo non desisti patiamur: Hee speaketh as a man bearing about in himselfe our feare; because being in danger, wee thinke we are forsaken: The same faith Caluine, and no otherwise, that Christ truly complained in his owne sense, that he was forsaken of God; yet God in his eternall purpose neuer did forsake him.

In the ninth place, the Frier objecteth, that Caluine should affirme, that Christ despayred: pa- Error seu gin. 480. Caluines wordes are these: Abfurdum videtur elapsam Christo desperationis vocem. It fall. 12. may seeme absurd, that a voyce or word of desperation fell from Christ; the answer is easie, that this desperation proceeded from the sense of the flesh; Luc. 22. 27.

First, Frier Fernandus needed not to haue taken such exception against Caluine for these words, seeing his fellow Frier Ferns hath the like: nay, he sayth more, Nam solum supplicium a nobis meritum, verum etiam desperationem nostram in se transiit: Christ did not onely take vpon himselfe our deserued punishment, but also our desperation: And againe, Vi desperationem desperationem, morte morte, infernum inferno vinceres: That he might ouercome desperation with desperation, death by death, hell with hell, lib. 4. in Matth. 27.

Secondly, he reporteth M. Caluines wordes otherwise then they are: for thus he writeth: Sed absurdum videtur Christo elapsam esse desperationis vocem: solatio facili est, quoniam sensus carnis existimans apprehenderet, fixum tamen stetit fidem cum in corde, qua Deum presentem intus est, de cuius absentia conqueritur: It seemeth absurd, that a voyce of desperation should fall from Christ: the solution is easie, although the sense of the flesh did apprehend destruction, yet faith was fixed in his heart, wherby hee did behold God as present, of whose absence hee complaineth. And againe, Discrimen notauimus inter naturae sensum, & fidei notitiam, &c. We haue noted a difference between the sense of nature and the notice of faith: so that nothing hindreth, but that Christ both in his mind might conceiue an alienation of God, according to his common sense, and yet together by faith, did hold or reueyne God to be mercifull: Thus wee see, how maliciously this Frier elippeth, and eulleth, changeth and turneth Caluine's wordes, contrary to his owne minde: he is farre from ascribing despayre vnto Christ; but onely affirmeth that he was tempted of the infirmities of his flesh: Cum desperatione luctatus est, non cecidit victus, neque vniuersi qui desperari sunt possunt Deum appellari sumo: he did wastle with despayre, but was not ouercome; for they that are desperate cannot call God their God, in Matth. 27. 46.

Damascone affirmeth as much, that Christ was tempted of his naturall infirmities, but strengthened by the diuine will: and these were, the words of his naturall feare or infirmities, lib. 3. de fide. 18. And though from vs such words cannot proceede without sinne, yet we must so thinke of the integritie of Christs nature, that he had the very force and fulnesse of humane affections, yet without corruption, though we be not able to iudge of it: as Augustine saith, that we cannot iudge de moribus sanctorum; of the manners of the Saintes by our senses, Sicut de ciborum suauitate ferri non debet non fatimur, wee do not suffer those that are sicke of fevers, to iudge of the taste or sweetnesse of meate: contra. Paul. 12. 12. If we must not measure the acts of the Saintes by our owne, how much more vnable is the corruption of our flesh to comprehend the perfection of Christs humane nature: So then it is euident, that this is but a frierly trick, and slowe delusion either Caluine or any other Protestant beside chargeth Christ with despayre.

In the tenth place this doctrine is charged with a great absurditie, or rather blasphemie, that Error seu fall. 13. Christ should suffer the death of the soule or the second death. Fernand. p. 453. lin. 3. which is contrary to the Scriptures: which euery where testifie of Christs eterna life, & gaue life to the world, Ioh. 1. how then could he die the death of the soule? Fernand. 297. l. 19. 20. It is also contrary to reason: for seeing as the departure of the soule is the death of the bodie, so the departure of God is the death of the soule: as Augustine saith, de verb. Apostol. 1. cor. 13. Christ being personally vnited to God, could not die the death of the soule, Fernand. pag. 474. lin. 19.

Thirdly, the fathers make but two deaths of the soule: the first is paine in this life, the other damnation in the next, but neither of these agree to Christ: Augustine saith Epistol. 99. Cor. 1. 1. Christus; nullo mortificatus peccato, vel damnationis puniuit, &c. Surely the soule of Christ was neither mortified with sinne, nor punished with damnation; for which two causes the death of the soule is vnderstood: and Augustine saith, Quia Christi in forma doloribus non torquabatur: Christs soule was not tormented in hell; Fernand. pag. 457. lin. 26.

1. Contra. First, we willingly giue consent to these Scriptures, reasons, and fathers, that Christ cannot be said in any such sense to die the death of the soule, either by sinne or damnation, eyther by voluntary or necessary separation from God: therefore all that labour may be spared, to accumulate reasons, or multiple testimonies of fathers, to free Christ from such death of the soule, which without blasphemie cannot be affirmed of Christ.

Secondly, though the conclusion be granted, yet the premisses are too weake to enforce it: first, it followeth not, Christ is life in his soule: Ergo his soule died not: as it is no consequent, Christ's bodie geueth life, Ergo, it died not: the contrarie rather is inferred, that Christs flesh by dying, gaue life to the world, Iohn 6. 51. Secondly, it is no good argument, Christs soule was never separated but personally vnited vnto the word, Ergo, it died not: for his bodie was alwaies personally vnited to the soule concretis, though not numis, as Damasce saith, cap. 27. Hypostaticallie, though not localie: so likewise was the bodie alwaies personally vnited to the Godhead, euen then, when it lay in the graue, yet the bodie dyed.

Thirdly, neither doe we much presse or vrgg this phrase of speech, that Christ dyed the death of the soule. First, because we finde it not so euidently vsed in Scripture. Secondly, and we haue other phrases as fit to expresse the sufferings of Christ in soule. Thirdly, and for that it may giue occasion of stumbling to the weake, and of gaine saying and exception to the contrarie minded.

Lastly, yet notwithstanding, because some in defence of this truth haue so spoken and written, I will briefly shew in what tolerable sense Christ is affirmed to die in the soule: and that there is another death of the soule, then either by sinne or damnation.

First, as the bodie is not said onely to dye, when the soule departeth from it, but when it is pressed with dangerous and deepe afflictions, which threaten death: so in like sense the soule may be said after a sort to die, not onely, when it is finally separated from God, but perplexed and troubled with the horror and feeling of Gods wrath and indignation. The first is proued by S. Paul, 1. Cor. 15. 31. He there saith, I dye daily: that is in respect of his great afflictions and persecutions, that threatened death: otherwise the bodie by the separation of the soule dieth but once, and not daily. Thus Christ then in some sort is affirmed to die in soule, not in any separation made betwene his soule and God, but in the feeling and fearing of Gods indignation, which in the reprobate is the forerunner of their final separation.

Secondly, whereas the Lord threatneth Adam thus: In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die, ye shall die he saith: Genes. 2. 17. This must be vnderstoode of the death of the soule: as Felix, epist. ad Petrum, Antiochen. expoundeth it: Adam quo die comedit ex ligno in ipsa secundum animam moriuit, nam ipsius corporis mors post 930. annos contigit: Adam the same day he did eat of the tree, died according to this soule; for the death of his bodie followed 930. yeares after: and this death of the soule which Adam incurred, was not his sinne, but caused by it, for his disobedience in eating was punished by this death: this death of his soule was a punishment of the first death by sinne: And S. Ambrose well noteth this difference betwene, morte mori, and vita mori: vita mori quod uiuit corpore, sed aeterna mori sui. He in liuing dieth, that liueth in bodie, but dieth in his aife or worke: as the Apostle saith, 1. Tim. 5. 6. She that liueth in pleasure is dead, while she liueth: but to die the death, to die both in bodie and soule: de paradiso. Neither was this death of the soule, whereinto Adam fell actuall condemnation for euer; for Adam was not condemned by faith in Christ: Ergo, by this death of the soule, a third kinde is signified, namely, the feare or debt, horror or danger of the proper death of the soule, which is condemnation.

Thirdly, this threatning of Adam, Then shalt thou die the death, was truly performed in Christ: but this death to Adam threatned be the death of the soule, and not of the bodie, as I haue proued, because Adams bodie died not in that day, &c. how could the death of Adams soule be truly performed in Christs bodie? so that this maketh a strong argument, to proue a kinde of dying in soule in Christ: that death which was to Adam threatned, Christ suffered: I thinke this will be confessed, that it was truly performed in Christ, but not in his bodie, Ergo in his soule: And so it followeth in the epistle of Felix before alleaged: Itaque Deus donum dedit ut non fecit, sed uoluit facere. Adam ut virginis uera sumpsit, ut uitam perditur totum saluum faceret: God gaue not halfe a gift, but he tooke whole Adam of the virgins wombe to saue the whole, that was lost: the reason thus he doth: to redeeme the whole, Christ must die in the whole, for he tooke the whole to redeeme the whole; if it had not been needfull to die or suffer in the whole, he needed not to haue taken the whole: but Christ redeemed the whole, Ergo he died in the whole. Thus when it appeareth, how both without feare of sinne or damnation a kinde of death may be affirmed to haue been suffered by Christ in his soule: which phrase of speech notwithstanding vpon the reasons before alleaged, I wish rather to be more sparingly vsed, if not altogether forborne and discontinued.

Thus haue I shewed what vntrue accusations this holy truth of the sufferings of Christ is charged with, and how it is againe discharged: for we neither affirme, 1. that Christs prayers in the Garden were vniust or vnholie, but sober, temperate, godly, onely shewing his humane desire to escape death, yet conformable to his fathers will. 2. Or that Christ was forgetfull of his office. 3. Or that his bodily death profited not. 4. Or that Christ suffered all the punishments of the damned and reprobate. 5. Or that Christ doubted of his saluation. 6. Or that he was venial, and in deed a sinner. 7. Or that God in deed hated, and detested Christ. 8. Nor yet that Christ was indeed forsaken of God. 9. Nor that Christ despaired. 10. Nor that he suffered the true and proper death of the soule. These ten seuerall challenges, whereby they practise to make this doctrine trine odious, I have answered: and all those blasphemies, which they would fasten vpon vs, and Christs holy cause, we wipe them off, as Paul did the Viper, without any hurt to our cause, no more than the Viper did to the Apostles hand.

Wherefore, that the truth may appeare to the sight of all men of vnderstanding, I will speake of every thing distinctly, and decide this question of Christs inward sufferings into these considerations following.

1. Whether the bodily passion of Christ were sufficient for the redemption of the world.
2. Of the feare and astonishment of Christ, and the cause thereof.
3. Whether he suffered properly and immediately in soule.
4. Whether he suffered the sorrowes and paines of hell.

And to this question is adioyned, as an appendix, whether hell fire and torment be onely corporall.

5. Whether Christ stood before God, as guiltie of our sinnes in our person.
6. Whether in Christ there were any horror or perplexitie of conscience for the sinne of the world, which he bare.
7. Whether Christ in Gods iustice ought to have dyed for vs as our surtice.

Herunto is added as an appendix, whether Christs blood were giuen to the diuell as a price for our redemption.

8. Whether Christ felt the wrath of God in his soule.
9. Whether he truly complained as forsaken of God.
10. Whether he did beare the curse of God in his soule.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE BODILIE death of Christ were sufficient for mans redemption.

The Papists.

This is affirmed by the Rascalls: Annot. Mat. 27. sath. 3. Bellar. 2. de Christi anim. arg. 1. Fenar. 14. Error.

Dialog. 5. de Christi passione. p. 439. The least droppe of blood, the least teare, the least grone in Christ had been sufficient in respect of the dignitie of the sufferer: Fenar. p. 450. they reason thus.

Argum. 1. The Scriptures euer where ascribe our whole redemption to the death, and blood of Christ: Ephes. 1. 7. It is by his blood redemption through his blood. Coloss. 1. 20. His blood for us peace through the blood of his crosse, &c. Hebr. 9. 12. Christ by his own blood entered once into the holy place:

and euer where the Scripture saith forth the death and blood of Christ: Ergo, that onely was sufficient, without any other suffering: Bellar. lib. argum. 1. Fenar. p. 449.

Argum. 2. If these places be literally pressed, for the sufficiencie of Christs blood only, then all his sufferings before in his life, his hunger, thirst, buffetings, reproches, scourges were superfluous.

Secondly, then his flesh also should be excluded, which is not his blood: for his flesh was our meat: his blood our drinke. John 6. 55.

Thirdly, and seeing Christ shed not onely blood upon the crosse but water and St. John saith, sed sanguine et aqua. John 19. 34. if blood be strictly taken, then the water was spilt in vaine out of his side: wherefore by the blood of Christ by a figurative speech, the rest of his painefull sufferings both in bodie and soule are insinuated.

2. For if blood be taken simple, we shall finde, that it was no part of his death, for his side was pierced after he had giuen vpp the Ghost; yet after he had said, et di. finisset, that is the worke of our redemption: John 19. vers. 30. 34. And so St. Ambrose saith, Post mortem percussus est non ante, ut causae sine voluntate non necessaria, videtur. He was pierced after death, not before, that his death might be voluntary, not necessarie.

In death his crosse was embred with his blood before, which the nails forced from his hands and feete, and the thornes from his temples, and the whipping before from his side: but that blood which issued forth with water, which St. John especially noteth, came out of his side after the surrendering of his spirit: which was the most notable part of his bodilie suffering: as Origene saith: Petrus apost. fuisse percussum non dicit, aqua, sed sanguine.

Et dicitur in cruce non sanguinem, sed aqua prodire. He said the crosse had been smitten, in had yielded no water, and Christ being stricken, brought forth the fountaines of graces of the new Testament: How. 11. in Ezech. 47. vers. 1. et 2.

3. Neither is this vsuall in Scripture: by one part to expresse the whole: as when the world is said to be made by sixe dayes: John 1. 9. the soule is vnderstood for Christ took on him a soule without a bodie. Likewise Hebr. 1. 3. et 4. bodye etiam dicitur videtur certainly a bodie with a soule also: and he took the nature of flesh and bone, Hebr. 2. 14. et 16. that is both humane flesh and soule: and he was made of the seeds of Dauid according to the flesh, Rom. 1. 3. The Apostle hereby expresseth the whole humane nature of Christ: In like manner in the death of Christs bodie, suffering of his flesh, shedding of his blood, even the passions of his soule are comprehended.

4. Wherefore, as in these places alleged, we read the blood of Christ, or the blood of the crosse, could not be described: as the blood of the propitiatorie sacrifice must be the blood of the sonne of God: this the sacrifices could not point at, nor yet the inuisible sufferings of the soule. If the proposition be not general, then the argument concludeth not consisting al of particulars. 2. We graunt also the conclusion, if it be but particular, not of the whole true sacrifice, but of a part: for we confesse that the blood of Christ was a part of the true sacrifice, but not the whole: chule then, which you will: if the proposition be general, we denie it; if particular, it concludeth not.

Secondly, we denie the assumption: 1. For in the sacrifices of the Law there may be found somewhat, which may represent the suffering of Christ in soule: as Leuitic. 16. 8. there were two hee goates presented vnto the Lord, the one of them was sacrificed, the other sent into the wilderneffe, vers. 21. The scape goate may signifie Christs soule, which died not vpon the crosse as his bodie did. 2. Again, the holocausts or burnt offerings which were wholly consumed and burnt vpon the altar, may broken the whole and absolute offering of Christ in soule and bodie.

Thirdly, though the scape or line goate were not sacrificed to death, yet was he presented before the Lord, vers. 8. reconciliation was made by him, vers. 10. the iniquities of the people layd vpon him, vers. 21. So although Christs soule died not, as his bodie, yet was it in the proper sufferings thereof a meane of reconciliation together with the bodie.

4. What though some of the Fathers expound the scape goate to bee the wicked of the people: yet all are not of that minde, neither the same alwaies hold that sense: as Origen thus expoundeth, Hom. 9. Leuitic. Si ira ascendit in cor tuum, si inuidia &c. paratus esto, ut abigaris in eremum: If anger rise into thy heart, if enuie, cast it forth, and send it as the scape goate into the desert, &c. Hee expoundeth the scape goate not to bee wicked men, but carnall affections in good men.

5. It is manifest that the scape goate was a figure of Christ: for as the finnes of the people were put vpon the head of the goate, vers. 21. so God did lay vpon Christ the finnes of vs al, Isai. 53. 6. and the priest by this scape goate did make reconciliation: wherefore it is but wrested to signifie the wicked: wee must take heede that the Fathers fantasies leade vs not from the euident sense of Scripture.

6. Origen himselfe that is alleaged applieth the scape goate vnto the crosse of Christ, Hom. 9. in Leuitic. In eo quod dicitur, quia affixit cruci suae potestates, sortem in eis apponens completis, & tanquam homo paratus abduxit in eremum: In that it is said, he fastened the powers to his crosse, &c. he fulfilled in them the lot of the scape goate, and as a man readie or prepared carried them into the wilderneffe. Thus Origen referreth the accomplishment of that figure of the scape goate to the crosse of Christ: who in respect of his bodie, that died, was not that homo paratus, that readie messenger: Ergo, in respect of his soule.

Fifthly, in what sense the sacrifice of the crosse is called an holocaust, Saint Cyprian sheweth serm. de passion. Sine hoc holocausto poterat deus tantum condonasse peccatum, &c. God without that holocaust might haue forgiven so great sinne, &c. And elsewhere he giueth the reason, why he calleth it an holocaust: Christus totum effudit spiritum in cruce ut nos respiraremus, quicquid erat humoris aquae reliquum expressit ut nos ablueremur, quicquid resederat in corde sanguinis emisit, ut nos confirmaremus: Christ did shed forth his whole spirit vpon the crosse, that wee might be refreshed; the water that was left in his bodie he sent forth, that we might be washed: the retidue of his blood came forth, that we might be cleansed. Thus Christ then made an holocaust or whole sacrifice of himself, both in his spirit and in his blood.

Argum. 2. The Sacraments of the Gospell doe set forth vnto vs the memoriall of Christs passion: but they represent not the sufferings of Christs soule, but onely the passion of his bodie: Ergo, his bodily passions were sufficient, Beilar. cap. 8. lib. 4. de Christi anima, argum. 3. Periculi. p. 440. artic. 11.

Ans. First, for the proposition, if Christs passion be taken for the effect of Christs crosse in the remission of finnes, it is true, that the same is sealed vnto vs and set forth in the Sacraments: but if by Christs passion all the necessarie parts, circumstances and concurrences of Christs crosse be implied, the proposition wanteth his due waight: for therein is not represented the Godhead of Christ, which was the onely vpholder of his crosse: nay, all the visible parts of the crosse are not expressed in the Eucharist, as the water, which issued out of Christs side. 2. The visible parts then of Christs crosse are represented by the elements, and in these visible parts spirituall graces and effects: the inuisible power of his Godhead and the spirituall sufferings of his soule cannot so well by terrene elements be described.

Secondly, for the assumption: 1. it is not true that the bodie and blood of Christ onely are represented in the Eucharist: for the bodie and blood of Christ is not set before vs as dead flesh or blood without a soule: for Christ dyab non no more, Rom. 6. 9. If then the life and soule of Christ is signified together with his bodie and blood, why not the suffering also of the soule? 2. Saint Iohn (whom I alleaged before) sheweth how the soule is resembled by the blood: Sanguis pro anima, sicut transfiguratum est in Mose: The blood is taken for the soule, as it was prefigured in Mose in 17. 1. and Corinth. 3. And therefore it is called vinum sanguinis, the cup of his blood: and by the cup cup is signified not onely the bodily sufferings of Christ, but his soule sorrowes: as when he prayed to his father, that the cup might passe, he did not meane onely his bodily death, but his spirituall agonie also.

3. Thirdly, the argument may be returned thus: In Baptisme is sealed vnto vs the true propitiation for our sinnes: in Baptisme is sealed onely the blood of Christ shed for vs signified by water: Ergo, the blood of Christ onely without his flesh or bodie is the true propitiation. What other answer can here be made, than the same which was given before, that either all the circumstances and concurrences of Christs passion are not set forth in Baptisme, but the effects onely, or that by one part of the crosse the rest are expressed?

Argum. 4. The Rhemists seeme to frame an argument from the nature of a testament: Christi death (say they) was necessarie for the full confirmation, ratification and accomplishment of the new testament: Annot. in Hebr. 9. vers. 20. where if their meaning be, that Christs death was necessarie to the confirmation of the testament, and that without it could not be ratified, wee willingly yeeld: for as the Apostle saith, a testament is confirmed when men are dead, Hebr. 9. 17. But if they will further presse this similitude, and reason thus: A mans death is sufficient to confirme his testament, without any other sufferings in soule, therefore Christs bodily death was sufficient to confirme his testament: we doe then further answer as followeth.

Answ. First, similitudes must not be forced to agree in euery point, as in this example there is great difference betweene the testaments of men, and the testament of Christ: first, the reason why mens testaments stand is given in the lawe, Quia aliud velle non possunt: Because they can now will no more; Constantin. Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. l. 1. but Christ is able to will still. Secondly, it is a rule in law, that Scripta voluntas dispositio valet, non enuntiatio: A written will is of force in disposing, but not in affirming, Diocletian. Cod. lib. 3. tit. 3. l. 10. that is, whatsoeuer is affirmed in a will, is not alwaies receiued; but whatsoeuer is bequeathed or disposed, standeth: but it were blasphemie to say, that Christs testament doth not hold affirmatiuely. Thirdly, by the law a will standeth not, si liberos praeieteris in tabulis, if a man doe passe by his sonnes in his will, and bequeath them nothing, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 1. l. 2. leg. 1. Alexander. yet Christ in his testament reiected the Jewes, and receiued the Gentiles: yet who will say, that his will herein standeth not? Fourthly, if any man did contra legem testari, aut iuri publico derogare, did make a will contrarie to the publike lawes, it was of no force, Diocletian. Cod. lib. 6. tit. 23. leg. 1. But Christs testament did derogate and abrogate the ceremonial lawes of Moses, yet notwithstanding remaineth in force. Fifthly, the Apostle saith, the will of men is of no force, as long as hee that made it is aliue, Hebr. 9. 17. but Christ now liueth, and henceforth dieth no more, Rom. 6. 9. yet his testament is in force, though much be presumed in the world against it, as Augustine saith: Mortuus sine sensu iacet, & valens verba ipsius, sedet Christus in caelo, & contradicitur testamento eius: in Psalm. 2. 1. A man lieth dead without sense, and his last words stand; Christ sitteth in heauen, and yet his testament is contradicted. Sixthly, in some cases by the civil law a will vnwritten preuailed against a will written: Cod. lib. 3. tit. 36. leg. 5. Alexander. If a man in his testament did bequeath or award his seruant to bonds, and afterward change his mind, licet non scripserit, valebit, although hee wrote it not, it shall stand: but nothing that is vnwritten ought to be receiued against the written testament of Christ. In these and many such other points Christs testament and mans testaments doe differ: they therefore must be made to agree onely, wherein the Apostle compareth them, that as touching the death of the bodie, it is necessarie for the confirmation both of mens testament and Christs: but as concerning the spirituall paine of the soule the reason is not alike, there is no cause or necessitie thereof toward the constitution of a mans will, as there was in Christ toward the finishing of the sacrifice of the new testament.

Secondly, the Apostle concludeth, that no death, but of the bodie, is necessarie for the confirmation of a testament: which we graunt, and further acknowledge that Christ onely died properly in his bodie: the proper death of the soule (which is either by sinne or damnation, in the finall separation of Gods fauour) Christ died not: such a death and damnation of the soule who is so blasphemous to attribute to Christ? in confuting that, which no man denieth, labour may well be spared. And therefore as Hierome saith, Non possum te existimare victorem, nisi aduersarium videre vulneratum: He cannot haue the victorie, that doth not wound the aduersarie, Apolog. ad Parmenach. Therefore these darts, which they cast in the ayre, Forward. p. 453. pierce not our cause, neither can those strokes wound the bodie, that touch it not.

Thirdly, the Apostle by this similitude onely inferreth, that without the death of the bodie a testament is not ratified: as vers. 18. neither was the first ordained without blood: So without Christs death the new testament could not be confirmed. doth it therefore follow that nothing else is required? Many things beside the bodily death must concur to make a mans testament: first, he must be sana mentis, of a sound and perfect minde; and therefore a mad man, except hee haue discreta interualla, some intermission of his fits, cannot make a will, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 22. leg. 9. Secondly, Pupillus non potest testari: A pupill, that is vnder the government of others, cannot make a will: ibid.

ibid. tit. 21. leg. 18. Iustinian. Thirdly, Filius familiaris non potest: A sonne that is vnder his father can not: ibid. tit. 22. leg. 11. Fourthly, Si testes non fuerint in conspectu testatoris, &c. If the witnesses be not in the sight of the testator, the will is not good, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 23. leg. 9. Diocletian. Fifthly, Si compellus sit testari, &c. If a man be compelled to make a will, it is not good, lib. 6. tit. 34. leg. 11. Sixtly, Mutus non potest, nisi sciat scribere: A dumbe man by the Ciuill law cannot make a will, vnlesse he can write, lib. 6. tit. 12. leg. 10. Iustinian. These conditions and many beside, are required as necessarie for the constitution of wils: so that the death of the bodie is not onely sufficient to adde strength to a will, though without it, it standeth not in force. In like manner without the death of Christs bodie the new testament was not ratified; and yet not onely by it: the innocencie of Christs birth, the righteousness of his life, his obedience in his sufferings vpon the crosse must concur with his death to establish the new testament. Wherefore the argument followeth not, the new testament was confirmed by Christs bodily death: Ergo, hee suffered not the terrors of soule.

Fourthly, if this reason conclude any thing, it taketh away all compassion, sorrow, and affection in the soule of Christ, (which they themselves graunt, Fenard. p. 452. lin. 25.) as well as the terrors of conscience: for if the bodily death be sufficient for the establishment of the testament, then the soule neede not any way to bee affected at all. So then they may here say as Hierome, though not in the like case: Nostri contra nos dimicat armatura: Our owne weapons doe fight against vs: ad Ioann. Hierosolymitan.

Arg. 5. Christ was more effectuall to saue vs, than Adam to condemne vs, Fenard. p. 383. cons. 4. p. 453. lin. 20. But Adams flesh by the which sinne entred, was sufficient to destroy vs: Ergo, so must Christs flesh be to redeeme vs.

2. Againe, the Apostle saith, Rom. 5. 19. As by one mans disobedience many are made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous: This obedience of Christ was in his death, Fenard. ibid. Ergo, by the obedience of Christ to death we are made righteous.

1. Ans. First, the assumption is false, if it be vnderstood so, that Adams flesh onely infected his posteritie: first, it would follow hereupon, that the flesh is the seate of sin, which is a popish error, and maintained by Bellarm. de stat. peccat. lib. 5. c. 7. vid. supra contr. 18. qu. 4. per. 5. Discaies and other outward infirmities are the infection of the bodie, but sinne is properly the infection of the soule: for seeing sinne is a spirituall euill, and the flesh but a terrene and earthie vessel, how can it be, that sinne should be propagated onely by the flesh?

2. The Scriptures are contrarie: Genes. 5. 3. Adam begat a childe in his owne likeness after his owne image: was this image in the bodie onely, and not in the soule also? whereby is vnderstood, that Adam begot a sonne in the like sinfull and corruptible state, Ioh. 1. 13. Which are borne not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, &c. Where is the fleshly Will, whereof men are borne, but in the soule? Ioh. 3. 6. That which is borne of the flesh is flesh, that which is borne of the spirit is spirit: By flesh here is signified the vnregenerate part both of the soule and bodie: whatsoever then is fleshly and carnall in vs, whether in soule or bodie, is borne of the flesh: and so sinne propagated by them both.

3. Obiect. Then it will follow, that the soules of men, as well as their bodies are deriued from their parents, if originall infection be propagated by both.

Ans. First, I say with Augustine thus writing to S. Hierome of this very matter: Ille de animarum nouarum creatione sententia si hanc fidem fundatissimam non oppugnat, (i. de originali peccato) sit & mea; si oppugnat, non sit & tua: This sentence of the creation of new soules, if it do not impugne this grounded faith, (that is, of originall sin.) let it be my opinion also, if it do, let it not be yours neither: So I say, that if it did necessarily follow, if soules be created of God; that pollution should come onely by the flesh, I had rather leaue that vncertaintie, then go against a certaine truth: for what were thisels, but to extenuate originall sinne, and in effect to make it no sinne at all; seeing it is the soule, not the flesh, that sinneth: as the Prophet saith, Ezech. 18. 20. The soule that sinneth shall die.

Secondly, neyther is it necessary to graunt, that soules should be deriued from the parents, if sin be propagated both by the bodie and the soule: S. Augustine sheweth how, lib. 3. de liber. arbit. c. 20. Quod si syllabum in singulis fuerit unita, conuenientiss. est, ut multum meritum prius esset natura sequenti, ut bonum meritum sequentis natura est prioris: Though that euery soule should feuerally be made in the bodie, yet it is most conuenient, that the euill merite of the first man should be the nature of the second, as the good merite (that is vertue) of the second is the nature of the first: that is, like as the image of grace reuewed in Adams posteritie, is the same that Adams nature was before his fall: so the euillness in Adam corrupted, is become the nature of his corrupt posteritie.

The Master of the sentences is not here to be refused: Ipsi carnalis concupiscentia causa non est in anima sola, nec in carne sola, ex utroq; enim fit, &c. The cause of carnall concupiscentie is not in the soule alone, nor in the flesh alone, but is made of them both, lib. 3. distict. 17. b.

Like

Like as a fountaine springing vp in a clay ground, presently receiueth of the nature of the ground: this clay water is neyther of the fountaine, for there is no clay; nor of the earth alone, for there is no water, but ioyntly from them both: so is the soule corrupted at the very first coniunction with the bodie: the sinne is not in the soule, which is created pure, nor in the flesh, which is not capable of sinne, but it springeth forth of the coniunction, and commixtion of them both.

How is it like, that Adams flesh should only infect his posteritie; seeing it was not the flesh, that first infected himselfe? as Magister sententiar. thus reporteth out of Augustine, lib. 2. dist. 32. lter. E. Non fuit corruptio corporis, qua aggrauat animam, causa primi peccati, sed pœna; nec caro corruptibilis animam peccatricem fecit, sed peccatrix anima carnem corruptibilem fecit: The corruption of the flesh, which presseth downe the soule, was not the cause of the first sinne, but the punishment: neyther the corruptible flesh made the soule sinfull, but the sinfull soule made the flesh subiect to corruption. Sinne then entered into Adam by his soule first, and then his flesh; and so doth it enter vpon his posteritie.

Secondly, 1. though the crosse and passion of Christ did chiefly shew the obedience of Christ: For he learned obedience by the things which he suffered, Hebrewes. 5. 8. yet his obedience to his Father was seene through his whole life; as Iohn 4. 34. My meat is, that I may do the will of him that sent me. 2. Christs obedience is set against Adams disobedience: As then Adams disobedience signifieth the whole masse of corruption in him, so Christs obedience betokeneth all his iustice and righteousness. 3. So the Apostle expoundeth it himselfe, Rom. 5. 18. calling it the iustifying of Christ. 4. And though his obedience in his death were onely insinuated, where was this obedience, was it not in his will, when he saith, Not my will, but thine be done? and he submitteth himselfe to drinke of the cup, not onely to taste of the bodily death, but to endure all sorrowes beside, that should be laid vpon him.

5. Ambrose evidently declareth his mind of this matter, de uocat. Gentium lib. 1. c. 3. inde (ex hominis prauaricatione) Multiplex corporis animiq; corruptio, inde ignorantia, difficultas, &c. From mans transgression proceedeth the manifold corruption of soule and body, as ignorance, hardnes of vnderstanding, error, mutiles, sacrilegi errors, &c. vaine cares, sacrilegious errors; if ignorance, error be propagated from Adam, then is not this propagation onely by the flesh, which is not subiect to ignorance, error; but the soule onely: Origen also thus witnesseth, hom. 8. in Leuitic. Audi Dauidem dicentem, in iniquitatibus conceptus sum, ostendens, quod quacunq; anima in carne nascitur, iniquitatis & peccatis sorde polluitur: Heare Dauid saying, I was conceived in iniquitie, shewing that any soule whatsoeuer is borne in the flesh is polluted with the filthines of iniquitie and sinne. The soule then in the very first birth is polluted, and so the corruption is spread as well by the soule as the body.

Argum. 6. The least teare, the least groane, the least drop of blood in Christ had been sufficient, because of the excellencie of the person of the sufferer: how much more his whole painfull passion in his bodie? Fenardent. pag. 450.

Ans. First, the argument followeth not; the Sonne of God was able with his blood onely to redeeme vs, Ergo, he thought good so to do: he had been able without his blood, or death at all, in his omnipotent power, to haue saued vs; but it seemed not good vnto him so to do.

Secondly, if Christs blood onely did it, then were these sorrowes of his soule, which you confesse he felt, superfluous: if they were not in vaine, his tear's, his heauinesse, his groanes; then his blood onely without these redeemed vs not.

Thirdly, Bernard reporteth this to haue been the Error of one Abailardus, epist. 191. Cur redemit nos per sanguinem, cum potuit per sermonem? Why did hee redeeme vs by his blood, when hee might haue done it by his word? Bernard answereth, Quid prodest, quod nos instituit, si non restituit? What had it auayled vs, if he had giuen vs institution, but not restitution? In like sort is it now vrged; what needed Christ to redeeme vs by his soule, seeing he did it in his bodie? we may also answer, Quid prodest si nos restituit, si non plene restituit? What had it auayled vs, if hee restored vs, but fully had not restored vs?

Fourthly, we graunt, that Christ in respect of his great power, might haue redeemed vs not onely without his sufferings in soule, but in bodie also: as M. Caluin saith, Potuit nos Deus verbo, aut numero redimere: God might haue redeemed vs with his word, yea, with a becke: in 15. Iohn. vers. 13. But this was not agreeable to Gods iustice; who had otherwise determined, that his Sonne should pay by his suffering the full price of our redemption: and therefore the Prophet Esaie saith, 53. 10. The will of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. And here Origen hath a very good distinction, Quod ad potentiam Dei omnia possibilia, quod ad iustitiam Dei possibilia solum, qua iusta sunt: In respect of Gods power, all things are possible; in respect of his iustice, those things are onely possible, that are iust: in Matth. 23. 35. So in respect of Gods power, Christ needed not to haue suffered, but in his bodie: but in regard of his iustice, it was not possible, but that Christ in himselfe should beare the whole and entire punishment due vnto our sinnes.

Lastly, whereas the fathers doe most worthily amplifie the bodily sufferings of Christ, and the death of his flesh, denying that he dyed in soule, and to this purpose they may easily be produced: Our answer is this: 1. That concerning the death of the soule, we willingly condescend, that it is not to be admitted in Christ. 2. If the fathers vrge the blood of the Crosse, and the offering of Christs flesh, they must be vnderstood according to the phrase of the Scripture, which by one part setteth forth the rest: and Christs blood is especially mentioned, because it was the most visible and conspicuous part of his passion. 3. Yet not one of the fathers can be brought forth, which denieth Christs suffering in soule. 4. Nay, they do witnesse and testifie for the same: as Cyrril saith, Necessitas erat cum suo corpore adunatum ei animam dolere, ut dum timebat passiones subitam cernicem Deo submitteret: It was necessarie that his soule should be grieued with the bodie, that while he feared his passions, he should submit his necke vnto God, de incarnat. vnigen. c. 7. If Christs blood strictly taken had sufficed, the griefe of the soule had not beene necessarie. And if it be answered, that hee meaneth the griefe of the soule, arising from the suffering of the body: I say further, 1. that if it were so, yet this griefe is somewhat els beside his blood, which was before affirmed to be sufficient: a sufficiencie is without the necessitie of other things: but hee saith there was a necessitie of the griefe of the minde: Ergo, without it there was not a sufficiencie. 2. He meaneth a deeper griefe, feare and suffering, then arising from the suffering of the bodie: he feared his passions; but the passion of his bodily death he feared not; that had beene great weakenesse: and he was heard in that he feared, Heb. 5. 7. but in respect of his bodily death, that it might passe, hee was not heard: therefore it was a greater griefe and feare that perplexed his minde.

The Protestants.

THAT the bodily death of Christ was not the whole suffering and sacrifice of his Crosse, neither in respect of Gods iustice the whole and full price of our redemption; though in respect of Gods power, lesse might haue sufficed; thus we shew it:

Argum. 1. That which Christ tooke, he offered: Christ tooke not the body or flesh of man onely: Ergo, he offered not his body onely.

Ans. If any thing be here denied, it will be the proposition, which is further thus confirmed.

First, the Apostle saith, Heb. 2. 14. For as much as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, hee tooke part with them, that he might destroye borowh death, &c. and that he might deliuer all them, which for feare of death were all their life long subiect to bondage: from this place I reason thus: that which Christ by his death deliuered vs from, he tooke part with vs in: but hee deliuered vs not onely from the death of the bodie, but from the feare and bondage of the soule: Ergo, herein hee tooke part with vs.

Secondly, they are S. Ambrose words, Hoc obtulit Christus, quod induit: Christ offered that, which he tooke or put on, de incarnat. c. 7. Ergo, he offered not his flesh onely, because he tooke it not alone.

Thirdly, he giueth this reason in the same place: Qua erat causa incarnationis, nisi ut caro, qua peccauerat per se redimeretur: What cause was there of his incarnation, but that the flesh, that had sinned, should be redeemed by it selfe? The reason standeth thus: 1. That which Christ tooke of mans nature, he tooke to redeeme by suffering in it: but Christ tooke not onely the flesh of man, but his soule: Ergo, he redeemed mans soule, by suffering in it. 2. That part of man, which had sinned, must be redeemed by it selfe: not mans flesh onely, but his soule also had sinned: Ergo, not the flesh onely, but the soule must be by it selfe redeemed.

Argum. 2. The second reason I take out of Cyprian; and it is framed thus: That which Christ offered vpon the Crosse, he suffered in: Christ offered not his body onely: Ergo, he suffered not in body onely.

First, the proposition of first part is proued by the Apostle, Heb. 9. 25, 26. Not that he should offer himselfe often, &c. for then he must haue often suffered: So then there is no offering of Christ without suffering: and therefore he is said to haue offered a sacrifice for sinnes, Heb. 10. 12. But a sacrifice is not offered without suffering: for the sacrifice was first killed, and then offered.

Secondly, S. Cyprian proueth the assumption; as I haue alleaged him before, lib. de duplic. Martyr. who applieth that place of Iohn, 1. Epist. 5. 8. There are three that beare record in earth: the spirit, water and blood; vnto the oblation of Christ vpon the Crosse: Triplex à Christo testimonium accepimus, &c. We haue receiued a threefold testimonie from Christ; of the spirit, water, and blood: Tantum offudit spiritum, &c. He did send forth his whole spirit, that we might be refreshed; the water, that we might be washed; the blood that was left, that we might be confirmed: So there was nothing in Christ, that was not poured out vpon the Crosse; his soule first and spirit; then all the moisture and blood left in his body: Christ then offered not his bodie onely vpon the Crosse: for he further said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: Ergo, he suffered not onely in body.

Argum. 3. That which Christ tooke of our nature, hee sanctified in himselfe, Heb. 2. 11. Hee that sanctifieth, and they which are sanctified, are all of one: Our reason then standeth thus: that which Christ sanctified in himselfe, hee sanctified by suffering in it: So saith the Apostle, Heb. 2. 10. that Christ was consecrated through afflictions: and by the same meanes did Christ sanctifie himselfe, whereby we are sanctified: Ioh. 17. 19. For their sakes doe I sanctifie my selfe, that they also may be sanctified: But we are sanctified by Christs oblatiō vpon the crosse, Heb. 10. 14. With one offering hath he consecrated for ever them that are sanctified. The proposition then is true, that Christ was sanctified by his suffering and offering vpon the crosse, but both his bodie and soule was sanctified: Ergo, hee suffered not in bodie onely, but both in bodie and soule. This reason and euery part thereof is grounded vpon Scripture.

Argum. 4. Christ offered the true sacrifice of himselfe in the true tabernacle: his bodie alone is not, but bodie and soule both are this true tabernacle: Ergo, hee offered himselfe a sacrifice not in bodie onely, but both in bodie and soule.

First, the proposition is affirmed by the Apostle, Hebr. 8. 2. that Christ is a minister of the true tabernacle, that is, by the offering of himselfe who is both the Priest, the sacrifice and tabernacle.

Secondly, the assumption is thus prooued: first, his humane nature is called the true tabernacle, because it is not to bee shifted or chaunged, as the old tabernacle was, but to remaine for ever; and in this sense though the flesh of Christ was the true tabernacle, because it was incorruptible, yet his soule more properly: for his flesh was layd aside, and put off by death, but his soule remained with him still: herein then it was the true tabernacle indeede, being eternall and immortall. Secondly, Heb. 9. 11. It is called a tabernacle not made with hands, which God pight & not man, Heb. 8. 3. This more properly agreeth to his soule: for though his flesh was borne of a virgin, and so brought forth without the helpe or hands of man, in respect of the common birth; yet receiued he his flesh of his mother, ouershadowed by the holie Ghost: but his soule was immediatly and wholly sent from God, and so this tabernacle was not at all pight by man. Thirdly, that is the true temple and tabernacle, wherein the holie Ghost dwelled bodily, as the Apostle saith, Col. 2. 9. In him dwelleth the fulnes of the Godhead bodily: but the Godhead dwelt not only in Christs bodie, but in his soule: Ergo, both made this holie temple, and true tabernacle. Fourthly, to this purpose Augustine thus resembleth the holy soule of Christ, he calleth it vas vnguenti, the vessell of the holy oyntment, of the spirit; & tanquam ferrum ignitum; and as an yron red hot, in euery part thereof receiue the fire: so was the fulnes of the Godhead in the soule of Christ, de Trinitat. unitat. cap. 3. It followeth then, that seeing not the body and flesh of Christ onely make the true tabernacle, but his soule also, and that in the true tabernacle the true sacrifice of atonement was offered, that Christ offered not this sacrifice in his bodie onely.

Argum. 5. If the bodily sufferings of Christ had been sufficient, then his other sufferings in his soule had been superfluous; as the heauinesse of his soule, where he saith, My soule is heauie vnto death, Matth. 26. 38. his sighs and groanes, Ioh. 11. 38. his feare, Heb. 5. 7. But these and the like passions in Christ, were not superfluous: for the Prophet saith, Ilay. 53. 11. He shall see of the trouble of his soule: Ergo, his bodily sufferings were not alone sufficient.

Argum. 6. We will reason ex confessoris: It is graunted by the rest, that Christ also beside his bodily sufferings had inwarde feare and griefe: Bellarmin. cap. 8. respons. ad argum. 3. Ut redemptio esset copiosa, voluit etiam penam meritoris, & timoris subire: That the redemption might be the more full, Christ would vndergoe the paine of griefe and feare. Fenardentius thus confesseth, p. 455. Tantum concepit de his tristitiam, &c. Christ conceiued such sorrow and griefe for the sinnes of the world, ut omnium vere resipiscantis anima penitentiam exsuperauerit, &c. that he exceeded the griefe and sorrow of a soule truly penitent. Againe, Tanta animi penitudine dolet, ut par ei nemo unquam fuerit: He was so much grieved in his soule, as that no man was euer equall to him. These sorrowes in Christs soule, were neither bodily, nor yet procured by his bodily paines, being occasioned by the sinnes of the world: This being then their owne confession, how can they ascribe our redemption wholly to the bodily sufferings of Christ, vnlesse they will make those other afflictions of Christ either fained, or superfluous, which farre be it from any Christian heart to thinke.

Argum. 7. The Fathers iudgement against the sole bodily sufferings of Christ, I haue alleaged before: as Cyrrill. resp. ad argum. 7. Ambrose argum. 1. Cyprianus argum. 2. and so I will conclude this place with another sentence of Cyprian: Sine hoc holocausto poterat deus tantum condonasse peccatum, sed facilius venia laxaretur habens peccatis effrenibus, quā etiam Christi vix cohibens passiones, &c. God could haue forgien vs our great sinne without this holocaust, or whole burnt offering: but then the facilitie of pardon would haue let loose the raines vnto vnroly sirs, which are hardly restrained by the passions of Christ. Out of this sentence I obserue first, that Cyprian calleth Christs sacrifice an holocaust, an whole suffering, which could not be of one part onely, but of both: for that is not whole, which wanteth a part. Secondly, he granteth, that God in his infinite power could haue found out forgiveness of sins by some other meane, but it pleased him otherwise: that by the manifold passions, which were layd vpon Christ for our sinne, wee should be brided from committing the same. And so we conclude;

1. If what Christ tooke of the nature of man, he offered vpon the crosse;
2. If Christ suffered in all that, which he offered;
3. If that by his sufferings he sanctified the whole nature of man;
4. If in the true tabernacle of bodie and soule he offered the sacrifice;
5. If all other grieues and sorrowes, which Christ endured in his soule should be superfluous;
6. Seeing it is confessed by the aduersarie part, that Christ had greater sorrowe in his soule, than euer any man had;
7. The Fathers likewise set forth the holocaust or whole offering of Christ: Then it doth necessarily followe, that Christs sufferings and smart in his flesh onely wrought not our redemption; which though in themselves, in respect of Gods great power, had been sufficient, yet it so stood with Gods iustice and euermlasting purpose, that his sonne in his owne person, should make a full satisfaction both in his bodie and soule for our finnes.

THE SECOND PART OF THE FEARE AND astonishment of Christ, and the cause thereof, that it proceeded from the very feare and feeling of Gods wrath, which Christ did beare and endure for our finnes.

THE OBJECTIONS AND CONTRARIE arguments answered.

The Papists.

First, their opinion is, that the feare and agonie of Christ proceeded not from any feeling of Gods wrath or indignation, but humani sensus mortem exhorrescentis affectum, &c. offensus: But he onely shewed the affection of humane sense fearing death, Fenard. p. 436. sic Bellarm. cap. 8. resp. ad argum. 6. They reason thus:

Argum. 1. There are other causes of Christs heavines, feare, and agonie: First, the reiection of the Iewes. Secondly, the dispersion of the Apostles, Bellarmin. resp. ad argum. 8. Thirdly, the lamentation for mans sinne: Omnes verè respicientis animæ penitentiam exasperant: He went beyond or exceeded the greatest repentance of the soule that may be, Fenard. pag. 455. Fourthly, the feueritie and iustice of God vpon him the Redeemer of the world, Fenard. p. 436. lin. 13. Fifthly, hee feared death in his humane sense, Fenard. p. 430. Ergo, Christs feare and agonie arising of these causes, can not be assigned to any other.

Ansiv. First, the argument followeth not: these were the causes of Christs agonie: Ergo, the other was not: for they may all stand well together: that the consideration of these forenamed causes might moue Christ; and yet the feeling of Gods heauie wrath and displeasure for sin moue and trouble him much more.

Secondly, that Christ was heauie for the reiection of the Iewes, and dispersion of his Apostles, though it be graunted for reuerence to the Fathers; Hilarie, Ambrosi, Hierome, that so thinke; yet it concludeth not against vs: first, at other times those thoughts for the Iewes, and his Apostles troubled Christ; as Matth. 23. vers. 37. he prophesieth with griefe of the desolation of Ierusalem: Ioh. 17. 1. he had commended his Apostles to the protection and keeping of his father: so that though they should be disperfed by his death, yet hee knew they should be gathered together againe and strengthened: as he saith of Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not, Luc. 22. vers. 32. Christ therefore for that matter was settled. Secondly, but now it is eident, that Christ is properly touched with some inward object: in that he prayeth the cup might passe from himselfe: how could either the reiection of the Iewes, or the dispersion of his Apostles be this cup? Thirdly, he prayeth but that his blood might passe from him, Mark. 14. 35. but neither the reiection of the Iewes, nor the dispersion of his Apostles fell out in that houre or instant. Fourthly, Christ was heard in that he feared, Heb. 5. 7. but he was not heard in this, that the Iewes should not be reiectid, nor his Apostles disperfed: Ergo, this was not that hee feared. Fifthly, though the Fathers conceit here be admitted, it concludeth not against vs: for none of them affirme, that Christ onely was troubled for these causes pretended.

Thirdly, Christs sorrow and lamentation for sinne by way of compassion or commiseration, caused not this agonie: first, for so he wept at other times for the sinne of the cite, Luk. 19. 41. he wept onely drops of water, not drops of blood, as now: but if it had been the same cause, it would haue then brought forth the same effect. Secondly, Christ speaketh here of an houre, to the which this griefe was peculiar: but to sorrow in compassion, was at all houres and times in Christ, and ought to be alwaies in Christs members. Thirdly, if Christ onely had sorrowed for the finnes of other in compassion, what needed he to haue been comforted by the Angell? Luk. 22. 43. the object therefore of this griefe was inward. He sorrowed not now by way of compassion, but hee sorrowed for sinne by way of appropriation: our sinnes were now as appropriated to his person, and thus godly sorrow for sinne, among other effects in the soule, hath feare and punishment. 2. Cor. 7. 11. then consequently in the soule of Christ, there was feare and chastisement for our sins now his by imputation, which is the same thing we affirme.

Fourthly: first, if the presence of the Maiestie of God were the cause of Christs feare and agonie in his prayer, why did not the like agonie fall vpon him, at other times, when hee presented himselfe before the Maiestie of God in prayer? Secondly, and Christ being innocent, iust and perfect, what cause had he to tremble in the presence of God in respect of himselfe, seeing that the Saints his members haue such confidence to stand forth boldly in Gods presence? Isay. 8. 18. Behold, (saith the Prophet) here am I, and the children which thou hast giuen me. Thirdly, Christ feared then and trembled before God as a Iudge, readie to execute wrath against sinners Gods wrath then is cause of this agonie, which is the very poynt by vs maintained.

Fifthly, if Christ feared his bodily death and corporall affliction about his strength, hee feared more than Saint Paul, 1. Cor. 10. 13. God is faithfull, which will not suffer you to be tempted aboue that you are able. If Christ feared the separation of the soule from the bodie by death, hee should haue shewed himselfe weaker than his members. Augustine saith, Paulus seruus exultat, cupio dissolui, &c. Christus imperator tristis est: Paul the seruant desireth to be dissolued, and to be with Christ; and is Christ the Captaine heauie? in Psal. 93. And as for the separation of the humanitie from the diuine nature, if any man say Christ feared it, hee is in a great error: for the bodie still lying in the grane was hypostatically vnited to the Godhead, as Damasene soundly saith, idcirco non separatur diuinitas a humanitate: The diuinitie remained inseparable from them both: de fid. lib. 3. c. 27. Hee neuer feared therefore the dissolution of the vnitie of his person.

Argum. 2. If the sense and feeling of Gods wrath was the cause of Christs agonie, they must cease with the agonie; for the cause remaining the effect also must continue: but his agonie ended in the garden, his hellish sorrowes (you say) endured vpon the crosse: Ergo, they were not the cause. And if the things which Christ afterward suffered, as his whipping, piercing of his hands and feete, and death it selfe did not amaze or astonish Christ; how much lesse did the feare and griefe thereof perplex him in the garden, which were but simplicia praecidia, but forerunners only, of his sufferings that followed: Edward p. 424. conf. 4.

Ans. First, Christs feare in the garden proceeded not from the expectation of his bodily sufferings that followed, but as they were accompanied with the wrath of God: that which then hee feared and trembled at, he afterward felt in his soule, namely the wrath of God: and vpon the crosse he was no lesse perplexed, but indeede more vehemently touched in soule, when hee cryed out he was forsaken, than before in the garden. And as Crysostome well saith, Christus pluribus in morte vexatus doloribus, quam amosus tragardi scribere possunt experiantur: Christ being vexed with more sorrowes in his death, than all tragicall writers can describe, gaue vp his spirit: Hom. 31. in Matth.

Secondly, for further answer to the argument: first, the proposition followeth not, that the cause should cease, when the effect ceaseth; the cause indeede leaueth working, when the effect stayeth; but it hath still a being: Like as in the bodie vexed with tertian or quartan feuers, there is an intermission of the fits for a time, yet the same cause still liueth and reigneth in the bodie, which when it beginneth to worke againe, the fits are renewed; so is it in the vexation and agitation of the minde. Secondly, 1. for the assumption, we say that there was in Christ an intermission of that inward perplexitie and vexation of his soule, that fore fit and agonie being past, which was afterward renewed vpon the crosse. 2. The grieues and comforts of the soule doe ebbe and flow, compared in this behalfe to the waues of the sea, Psal. 42. 4. when one is lit vp by the wave he seeth the comfortable light; when he is cast downe, he beholdeth nothing but darknes. 3. This was Iobs case: first in griefe he complaineth, Iob. 19. 11. be conuersus me as one of his enemies: then againe he receiueth strength, verf. 25. I know my redeemer liueth: after this his soule is cast downe againe; Iob. 30. 21. Thou turnest thy selfe cruelly against me. 4. Augustine very fitly thus resembleth this matter, writing vpon these words of the Psalme 10. Palpebrae dei: The eye-lids of God do examine the sonnes of men: Intardum clausis dei oculis exercentur ut querantur; interdum aperti illuminantur ut gaudeant: Sometime they are exercised or troubled, when God shutteth his eyes, that they may seeke; sometime they are illuminate with his open eyes, that they may reioyce. As is then the shutting and opening of the eyes; so sometimes the soule is obscured with griefe, sometimes lightened with ioy. In Christ then as the agonie ceased, so there was an intermission of the inward terror that caused it.

Argum. 3. Christs answer to Caipha, his prayer for his enemies, his promise to the theefe vpon the crosse, his commending of his spirit to God, doe shew that Christ was not all this while al-

nished: ſe: Bellar. lib. 4. de Chriſti animæ cap. 8. argum. 2. & Fenardent. p. 425. 6. Thus they conclude, that Chriſt was not amazed or aſtoniſhed at all with the feare and feeling of Gods wrath.

Anſw. Firſt, there is none that affirmeth, that this amazing or aſtoniſhment of Chriſt continued ſo long together, from the beginning of his agonie to the end of his paſſion. Maſter Caluine ſaith onely, In ipſo momento non reputabat: In that moment he did not bethinke himſelfe, in 26. Mat. verſ. 39. S. Peter giueth a reaſon, Act. 2. 24. that it was impoſſible that Chriſt ſhould be held of the ſerues of hell, as their vulgar Latine readeth.

Secondly, the anſweres then of Chriſt at his examination, condemnation, ſuffering, doe ſhewe that hee was not then as a man amazed or aſtoniſhed: for in the beginning of his agonie in the garden he was afrighted and perplexed; but this his aſtoniſhment continued not in that meaſure, hee ſoone recovered himſelfe: As Origen writeth, Non ſcriptum eſt. quia panis, vel triſtans eſt. ſed cepit pueri: piſi guſtant tantum dolorem, impij guſtant tantum fidem. Hebr. 6. 5. It is not written, that he was afraid or ſorrowfull, but began to be afraid: the godly onely taſte grieve, the vngodly onely haue a taſte of faith: in Matthæi. 35.

Thirdly, neither neede it ſeeme ſtraunge, that our Sauour ſo ſoone *correſt*eth, or rather *direct*eth his naturall infirmities, ſaying, not my will, &c. for as Auguſt. ſaith, Si in illa voluntate permaneret, virg, prauum cor offendere videretur: If Chriſt had continued in his firſt will or deſire, he had ſhewed an heart not aright, in Pſal. 93. Therefore it became Chriſt forthwith to ſubmit his naturall infirmities to Gods will and pleaſure, being free from all ſinne and diſobedience. Alſo Damaſcene confeſſeth, that Chriſts will was firſt in ſeipſo aduersus mundum, tempted of his naturall infirmities, and by and by ſtrengthened by the diuine will.

Fourthly, the children of God are often ſoone recovered from the gulfe of griefe: as Iob in the ſame place, chap. 19. 11. 25. as I euen now alleged, is an example of comfort, and diſcomfort. Dauid with the ſame breath ſaith, I am caſt out of thy ſight: And againe, Thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer, when I cryed vnto thee, Pſal. 31. 22. If the members of Chriſt ſo ſoone ouercame thoſe brunts of griefe; it is no marueile if Chriſt were thought not altogether rid, yet eaſed of it and reſreſhed. Yet notwithstanding, if it be graunted that this perplexitie of Chriſt did hang vpon him ſtill in ſome meaſure, from the beginning of his agonie vntill his death, as Origen ſeemeth to thinke: Non ſemper, ſed vſque ad tempus mortis in me eſt, vt cum mortuus fuero peccato, moriar & vniuerſa triſtitia: This heauines is not alwaies in me, but vnto y<sup>e</sup> time of death, that when I am dead to ſin, I ſhall be dead to al ſorrow, Hom. 35. in Matth. All this being admitted, yet Chriſt might both pray in faith, and confidently commend his ſoule vnto God, and make wiſe anſweres vnto his perſecutors: Firſt, his faith failed not in his agonie, though his carnall ſenſe were afrighted and aſtoniſhed, and therefore hee might and did effectually pray. Secondly, the vehement fittes of his agonie were ſometime ſlaked and intermitted, and as the terme of the law is, though in another kinde, as men naturally diſquieted in their minde, may haue dilucida interualla, lightſome ſeaſons, when they come to themſelues, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 22. leg. 9. So Chriſt in this ſupernaturall aſtoniſhment, had ſome ſpaces of intermiſſion. Thirdly, this agonie and combat which he had with the wrath of God, did not make him the more vnfit in his carriage to men; but that he might and did exhort his Apoſtles, reprove and refute his aduerſaries: like as Iob, though he complained of the terrors of God in his ſoule, Iob. 6. 4. yet knew well how to anſwere the deceitfull and comfortleſſe obiections and oppoſitions of his friends; ſo Chriſt in this agonie hauing to doe with God, not with men, though toward God he were aſtoniſhed in his ſenſe, his faith ſtill remaining ſound, yet toward men he was notwithstanding moſt readie and expert in his heavenly anſweres and oracles.

Argum. 4. Firſt, Chriſts prayers were meritorious: Precibus & meritis patrem nobis taleſq; propitium reddidit: By his prayers and merits he made his father well pleaſed with vs. But what merit could there be in his prayer if he were aſtoniſhed? Fenard. p. 421. conf. 12. lin. 4.

Secondly, Quæ conſtantia, &c. What conſtancie, what fortitude of minde, if through feare and aſtoniſhment Chriſts memorie failed? Fenard. p. 423. conf. 2. lin. 7.

But Chriſt ſhewed in his agonie, faith, conſtancie, fortitude, obedience: Ergo, he was not aſtoniſhed.

Thirdly, if Chriſt feared his fathers wrath, then hee doubted: ſo Fenardentius inferreth vpon Caluines wordes, that becauſe hee ſaith, Chriſtum timere, that Chriſt did feare, therefore hee doubted, p. 458.

Fourthly, Saint Peter ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for vs, leauing for vs an example that we ſhould follow his ſteppes, 1. Pet. 2. 21. but it were hard for vs, if Chriſt were aſtoniſhed with feare, and ſo beſide himſelfe, therein to imitate him: this place of the Apoſtle is vrged by the Frier, p. 361. conf. 4. lin. 4.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. if Chriſt had continued ſtill amazed and afrighted, and not eſſoone recovered himſelfe, the firſt argument might haue ſome colour, but the ſhortnes of that brunt nothing hindered his meritorious working. 2. It was a meanes rather to encrease his merite, in that he yeelded not to this naturall feare and infirmities, but in wrestling against it, and subduing his humane will to Gods will, his obedience became meritorious. 3. Yet I further boldly say, that euen this feare and astonishment of Christ being without sinne, and all other his naturall infirmities, of hunger, thirst, wearinesse in the bodie, feare, griefe, with the like in his soule, were meritorious: as Hierome well saith, Manifestum ei esse poteris, qui Evangelia sollicita mente perlegeris, quomodo & cibis & potus eius & deambulatio, & vniuersa quae gessit in corpore salutem hominum procurarint: It may be manifest to him that carefully readeth the Gospell, how that Christs meate and drinke, his walking and all which he did in his bodie, did procure our saluation, rom. 4. de fil. prodig. 4. Christ amazed, astonished, merited not indeed for himselfe, neyther did he at any other time els: but for vs euen then and there he merited.

Secondly, 1. there was no dis tempered humor in Christ; but euen in his agonie, his heart was settled, his faith firme and fixed, without any distrust, or despaire. 2. It is vntrue, that there can be no faith, obedience, constancie, fortitude, while a man is in a traunce or astonished; for Peter shewed both, Act. 10. when hee fell into a traunce: First his faith, vers. 14. I haue neuer eaten any thing vnclane: his obedience, vers. 15. in that he rested notwithstanding in the answer of God, submitting himselfe thereunto. 3. Christ continued not in this astonishment long, but presently plunged out of it: and therefore all his prayer while, he was not in this traunce; but as on the one side he was assaulted in his humane sense with feare and griefe; so he recovered himselfe by his faith, and encountred with that brunt of sorrow: so the Apostle saith, that Iesus for thy ioy that was set before him, endured the Crosse: Heb. 12.2. And Cyrill thus witnesseth, Sanguineo sudore madefiens, nostra natura in se expressit imbecillitatem, ne nos in desperationem caderemus, si quum omnia mortem praesentem intuent, horrorem natura senserimus, &c. Christ dropping with his bloodie sweate, did expresse the imbecillitie of our nature, least we should fall into despaire, if we feele the horror of nature, when all things threaten present destruction, de duplic. Martyr. Christ then felt our sorrowes, but fainted not, he was distressed, but despaired not, vexed, but not vanquished.

Thirdly, the argument followeth not, neither is it true, that feare is more intollerable in Christ then doubting. 1. Damascene vseth a good distinction of feare, lib. 3. de fide c. 23. that there is timor quousque, and mediorum, a naturall feare, such as this was in Christ to decline death; and a feare vnnaturall, which proceedeth from diffidence or distrust, which was not in Christ: all feare hath not distrust, but all doubting is ioyned with distrust and diffidence; therefore there may be feare naturall, where neyther sinne is nor distrust. 2. The Scriptures testifie of Christ, that hee began to be afraid, Marke 14. 33. in dubitatio, but doubtfulness or distrust is no where mentioned to haue bin in Christ: therefore the one was in Christ, and not the other. 3. Origen saith, Proprium est omni hominis primum quidem nolle pati aliquid doloris: It is proper to euey man, first not to be willing to suffer any griefe, &c. In Matth. Tract. 35. Chrysostom. Neque nolle mori carnem reprehensio: Neither is it to be reprehended, if the flesh be vnwilling to die: Ex Epistol. Agathon. ad Constantinum: Thus these Fathers doubt not to ascribe vnto Christ a naturall feare, and desire to escape sorrow, without sinne or doubtfulness.

Fourthly, whereas the reason is thus framed: Christ in his sufferings is to be imitated of vs; but in his astonishment and amazednes, he is not to be imitated, or in that he was beside himselfe: Ergo, he was not in any of his sufferings so astonished or beside himselfe.

Ans. 1. It is deuised onely by them, not affirmed by vs, that Christ, in his agonie, was beside himselfe, which is nothing else, but to be madde: we affirme onely according to the Scripture, that Christ began to bee amazed, and with feare to bee astonished: Mark. 14. 36. So the word in dubitatio there vsed, signifieth. 2. Christ is not to be imitated in all parts of his suffering, neither can be: for who is able to beare such a heauie burthen of Gods wrath and displeasure, as hee did, which caused him to be astonished? Christ is to be imitated, wherein he may be imitated of vs, as he himselfe saith, Learn of me, for I am humble and meeke: so Augustine saith, In Psalm. 90. prefat. In quo imitaturi sumus Christum, nunquid hoc a nobis exigit, ut talia miracula, qualia ipse fecit, faciamus, &c. Wherein are wee to imitate Christ, doth hee require of vs to doe such miracles as hee did? &c. hee saith, Learn of me, for I am humble and meeke. If Christ be not to be imitated in his miracles, then not in this his astonishment: for so to be astonished as hee was, and not faile in faith, was a great miracle. 3. Yet we haue here in Christ, that which is worthy & fit to be imitated of vs, namely his submission and obedience: that though his naturall desire caried him one way, yet he subdued it to the will of God, saying, not my will, but thy will be done: as Augustine saith: Statim fac, quod ideo fecit, ut te doceret, non quod ego volo, &c. Doe it straightway as hee did, to the end to teach thee, not that I will, &c.

Argum. 5. Hilarie may be objected, as he is alleaged by the Master of Sentences, Lib. 3. dist. 15. tit. 9. Nec fieri potest, ut timor eius significetur in verbis, cuius fiducia continuatur in factis: It cannot be, that his feare should be signified in word, whose fiduce is continued in fact, Lib. 10. de trinitate. Hilarie seemeth to exempt Christ from all feare and infirmities, in his bloodie sweate and agonie; rather ther ascribing the drops of blood to his power and diuine omnipotencie, then to his naturall infirmitie.

Ans. 1. Peter Lombard in the same place bringeth in this answer, Necessitas timendi non fuit in Christo: There was not the like cause and necessitie of feare and griefe in Christ, which is in vs, and so he saith Hilarie is to be vnderstoode, not denying feare to be in Christ, but the like cause of feare.

Ans. 2. It is true, that it was not infirmitie in Christ, but power to stand out in this agonie, and to strue against it, euen vnto blood, but yet the beginning of it proceeded of feare: Damasceus saith, that our naturall passions were in Christ, non quoniam, sed quoniam: according to nature, and aboue, or beyond nature: according to nature, in that he had them; but aboue nature, in that he gouerned and moderated them: Lib. 7. de fide. c. 20. So Hilarie saith, Non secundum naturam consuetudinem gessit, &c. He did it not after the custome of nature: for he did gouerne and execute them aboue nature. 3. But otherwise, that his naturall feare and infirmitie gaue beginning to this agonie: Ambrose testifieth: Andi utramque vicem & carnis infirma, & spiritus promptipater, si possibile, transeat calicem, hac carnis est vox; non quod ego volo, habes deuotionem spiritus: Heare both voices, both of weak flesh, and of the readie spirit: Father, if it be possible, let this cup passe, this is the voyce of flesh; not that I will, here is the deuotion of the spirit, lib. 4. in Luc.

THE TRVTH CONFIRMED.

The Protestants.

Christ thorough the very feare and feeling, sight and sense of Gods heauie wrath and displeasure against our sinne layed vpon him, was in an exceeding great agonie, and therein his humane nature for a while was so amazed and astonished, that in that moment, he wished to shunne the cuppe prepared for him for the worke of our redemption; yet so, that he presently conformeth his will and desire, to the will and pleasure of God.

Argum. 1. The Apostle saith, that Christ when he prayed in the daies of his flesh, With strong cries and teares, was heard in that he feared, but he was not heard nor deliuered from his bodily death, Ergo, it was not that which he feared: and so consequently it was the heauie wrath of God in his soule, which he feared.

Ans. 1. Bellarmino answereth, that Christ was heard in that which he desired, namely, that the will of God might be done in his death, or that he might be deliuered from death by his resurrection: resp. ad argum. 6.

2. It may also be answered, that Christ was heard in that he feared, and deliuered from his feare: he felt not then that which he feared: so then if he feared Gods wrath, he was deliuered from it before he felt it: Fenard. to this effect, p. 4. q. 4. con. 4. lin. 11.

3. It will be answered, that deuotio, must be expounded, not feare, but reuerence: and so Bellarmino affirmeth, that Chrysostome, Theophylact, Oecumenius doe so interpret this place, that Christ was heard, pro sua reuerentia, for his reuerence to his Father, Bellarmino. ibid.

Ans. 1. Bellarmino confesseth, that this prayer of Christ, which the Apostle saith, he made with strong cries and teares, is the same which the Euangelists make mention of, when Christ was in his agonie in the garden: Bellarmino. ibid. First, but that prayer proceeded from griefe and feare: for his words shew his griefe, My soule is heauie to death; his gesture, in sweating drops of blood declareth his feare: yet Christ neither grieved at, neither feared the successe of his passion, that Gods will should not bee done in it, or his release from death by his resurrection: Ergo, in these things, at this time, and in this Prayer, hee was not heard. Secondly, the summe of his request is, that the cuppe might passe, which petition hee limiteth in deede with subiection to Gods will; but the passing of the cuppe, cannot bee referred to the resurrection: neither is the passing of the cuppe, the performing of Gods will in the not passing of the cuppe: this were to expound one contrarie by another. Thirdly, that thing against which Christ prayeth, made him heauie, but neither the redemption of man by his death, nor the hope of the resurrection could make him heauie, but rather ioyous, as the Apostle saith, He endured the crosse for the ioy set before him: Hebr. 12. 2. These were not then the subiect of his petition at this time, though I deny not, but Christ continually did pray, both for the finishing of our redemption, and the perfecting of the same by his resurrection: Wherefore seeing Christ was deliuered from his feare, but not from death, therefore death he feared not: as Hierome saith, Erubescant, qui putant saluatorum mortem timuisse, & passionis pauore dixisse, &c. Let them blush at it, that thinke our Sauour feared death, and thorough this feare said, My soule is heauie, &c. In Matth. 26.

Secondly, that fearing is a kinde of inward feeling in the soule, 1. the Scripture confesseth, 1. Iohn 4. 18. Feare hath punishment, et ideo: there can be no payne or punishment without feeling: Luk. 22. 44. confestim & agonia, being set or pitched in an agonie: an agonie is not without feeling.

ling. 2. This is that which Bernard ſaith, that Chriſt had in his life, actionem paſſivam, an action paſſive; and in his death, paſſionem activam, a paſſion active: ſo was this paſſion of feare active, working a ſenſe and feeling in Chriſts ſoule. 3. But feare goeth before griefe, and the ſame thing is not felt which is feared, eſpecially where there is a delivrance from the thing feared. Anſw. 1. Neither do wee ſay that Chriſt felt the ſame meaſure of Gods wrath, which hee feared: for Chriſt might feare to be left comfortleſſe and to be forſaken of Gods helpe in that combate: from this feare he was delivred, for hee was ſupported and upheld in this terrible aſſault, that hee did not ſinke downe in it. 2. So S. Paul prayed, that the meſſenger of Satan, the pricke of his fleſh, might be taken from him, which he obayned not, but a ſupplie of grace was given him, whereby he ſhould ſtand faſt in that temptation; 2. Cor. 12. as S. Paul was heard, not by removing of the temptation, but by giving of grace to overcome it: ſo Chriſt was aſſiſted with the preſence of Gods power, the abſence whereof he feared, and from this feare hee was heard and delivred, but not from all ſenſe and feeling of Gods wrath in his ſoule.

Thirdly, concerning the uſe of the word δραπένη. 1. We denie not, but that both in Scripture and prophane authors, the word is taken for a religious warineſſe, and reuerence. 2. In like manner, it muſt be graunted, that it is alſo uſed to ſignifie feare, both in Scripture, and eccleſiaſtical and prophane writers: firſt, in the Scripture, Act. 23. 10. δραπένης, timens; the Tribune feared leſt Paul ſhould have beene pulled aſunder, &c. Heb. 11. 7. Noe fearing, prepared the Arke: what or for whom the Tribune feared; it ſkillesh not; we onely ſhew the uſe of the word, that it cannot be here tranſlated reuerence, but feare: We graunt alſo that Noah his feare was ioyned with faith, but Chriſts much more; a feare it was notwithstanding, though not diſtruſtfull.

3. Nazianzenus reckoneth δραπένη feare, among the infirmities of Chriſt, orat. 2. de filio: And Theodoret alſo followeth the ſame ſenſe vpon this place.

4. And for prophane writers, Plutarch in Pericle teſtifieth that δραπένη, hee feared the people, when hee ſpake vnto them. Sophocles ſaith, δραπένην κρούς, I am afraid to fall. 5. The circumſtance of the place alloweth this ſenſe: for both before mention is made of his teares, and prayers, and verſ. 8. he learned obedience by the things which he ſuffered: which do argue his feare rather then reuerence. 6. The vulgar Latine in the two places before alleaged tranſlateth the word δραπένης, timens, fearing, and our vulgar tranſlation allowed with priviledge readeth in this place, he was heard in that he feared: the firſt ought to moue the Papiſts; the other ſhould preuaile with Proteſtants, who are not ſuddenly to depart from the received tranſlation.

Argum. 2. If the feare of the death of the bodie had ſo aſtoniſhed Chriſt, and caſt him into ſuch an agony, he ſhould have ſhewed himſelfe weaker then many of his members, the Martyrs, that went boldly without feare to their death: Ergo, it was not the feare of bodily death, that troubled him.

Anſw. 1. This is the difference betweene the feare of death in Chriſt, and others: they do feare of neceſſitie, but Chriſt timuit, quia voluit, feared willingly: and therefore at other times, when he thought vpon his Paſſion, as at the inſtitution of his laſt Supper, he feared not, becauſe then he would not: but now in the garden he beginneth to feare, quia voluit, becauſe he would ſo do, Bellarmin. reſp. ad argum. 3.

2. If Martyrs feare not death, it is becauſe God giueth them greater comfort, this benefite they receiue from Chriſt, Bellarmin. ibid.

3. Chriſtus, ut copioſa eſſet redemptio, &c. Chriſt to make our redemption more full, would alſo take vpon him our feare, Bellarmin. ibid. Chriſt then had greater cauſe to feare, in reſpect of his perſon and office being appointed to be our redeemer.

Contra. 1. Firſt, in ſome ſenſe it is true, that all Chriſts affections were voluntarie, in reſpect of his voluntary aſſuming of our fleſh: as Auguſtine ſaith, Hos humane infirmitatis affectus ſicis ipſam carnem & mortem non humana conditionis neceſſitate, ſed miſerationis voluntate ſuſcepit: Theſe affections of humane infirmitie like as fleſh it ſelfe and death, Chriſt tooke, not by neceſſitie of humane condition, but by the willingneſſe of his compaſſion, in Pſal. 87. but after Chriſt was incarnate, as it was neceſſary he ſhould haue our fleſh; ſo it was neceſſary he ſhould haue the infirmities and affections thereof without ſinne: but as Peter Lombard ſaith, Hanc neceſſitatem habuit, non ex neceſſitate conditionis, &c. Chriſt had this neceſſitie of retayning our affections, not of the neceſſitie of his condition, but willingly: it was now then a neceſſitie in Chriſt, which at the firſt was voluntarie, lib. 3. diſt. 16. liter. a.

2. Another difference betweene Chriſts affections and ours is this, in vs they are violent, and immoderate; in Chriſt they were ſo temperate and ordered, that he alwayes ſubmitted them to the will of his Father: ſo that not the hauing of them, but the moderating of them was voluntarie in Chriſt: So Hierome ſaith, Verè contriſtatus eſt, ſed non paſſio eius dominatur animæ: He truly ſorrowed, but the paſſion did not rule ouer his ſoule, in Matth. 26.

3. Otherwiſe the affections of Chriſts ſoule were as neceſſary, as the infirmities of his bodie, as hunger, thirst, sleepe: els Christ should not haue been like vs in all things, if he had not bene subiect to the same infirmities without sinne: and this were to make Christs agonie to be in shew onely, what needed he to pray against this cuppe, to sweate drops of blood, to be comforted of the Angel, if he had been accessarie to his owne griefe, and might of himselfe as man haue auoided them?

Secondly, as Christ gaue power to his members to die boldly, so much more had he power himselfe to be emboldned against the feare of death. 2. Whereas the Martyrs were armed with his example of patience against death; now should they haue been disarmed with his example of feare and weakenesse, if he had feared onely the death of the body.

Thirdly, 1. Christ had no greater cause in himselfe to feare bodily death, nor so great as others haue, because he was without sinne, and so death to him was without sting; for the sting of death is sinne: but no man els, though neuer so perfect is without sinne. 2. In respect of vs and our redemption, as Christ had greater cause, &c. so had he greater strength to beare it.

Fourthly, the fathers haue allowed and approued this argument, Theodoret vpon that place Hebr. 5. 7. If blessed Paul feared not death, but desired to be dissolued, &c. how did God the word feare death? August. in Psal. 93. Nullomodo formidaret Christus, quod non formidauit Paulus, cupio dissolui, &c. Melior enim esset seruus quam Dominus: Christ in no wise would feare that which Paul feared not; I desire to be dissolued, &c. for then the seruant should be better then the Master.

Argum. 3. Our third argument is taken from the prayer of Christ in the garden, Matthew 26. 39. O my Father, if it bee possible, let this cuppe passe from me; neuerthelesse not as I will, but as thou wilt.

First, here Christ prayeth for a thing, in respect of Gods decree not possible, that the cuppe might passe from him: and therefore afterward he saith, vers. 42. If this cuppe cannot passe away from me, &c.

Secondly, he prayeth for that, which was not granted, that the cuppe of death and sorrow prepared for him might passe.

Thirdly, he prayeth in his humane and naturall desire somewhat diuerslie from Gods will; yet with submission of his will vnto the will of God: what else could cause Christ in this manner to pray against his cuppe and crosse, but the exceeding feare and feeling of Gods heauie wrath, and refull indignation, wherewith he was so amazed at the first and astonished, that in his humane weakenes he was caried (his diuinitie now hiding and repressing it selfe) to desire the passing of that cuppe, which he was to drinke of, for the redemption of mankinde.

Ans. First Fenardentini answereth, that it was not impossible with God to saue his sonne from death; and to redeeme the world without his death or crosse; for Christ saith, Mark. 14. 36. All things are possible to thee. And Hebr. 5. 7. the Apostle saith, He offered prayers to him, that was able to saue him from death. p. 418.

Secondly, againe he saith, Christum rem impossibilem. That Christ did not aske a thing impossible: Vel absolute voluntati repugnans, or repugnant to Gods absolute will: Fenardent. ibid. confutat. 2. So then, hee seemeth thus to take this clause, if it bee possible, that is, agreeable to thy will.

Contra. First, we deny not, but in respect of Gods absolute power, it had been possible for Christ not to haue died, and man some other way to haue been saued; and so the places alleaged are to be vnderstood: but in respect of Gods iustice; which could not otherwise be appealed, then by the death of his Sonne, it was not possible: thus the Scripture speaketh, Act. 4. 13. There is none other name vnder heauen, whereby we must be saued. Reuel. 5. 3. No man in heauen was able to open the booke but the Lambe. Saint Ambrose bringeth in this distinction of things impossible: Aliud secundum naturam: Some things are impossible in nature, but so nothing is impossible to God, Math. 19. 26. Aliud per destinationem immutabilis consilij: Some things are impossible in respect of the decree of Gods immutable counsell, as Hebr. 6. 18. It is impossible that God should lie, Job. 4. de fide. c. 3. and in this sense it was impossible, that Christ should not dye, because God had so determined: and Origen vpon this place, Quod ad potentiam Dei omnia possibilia; quod ad iustitiam Dei possibilia solum; quia iusta sunt: In respect of Gods power, all things are possible, in respect of his iustice, those things are onely possible, that are iust: In Math. 19. 26.

Secondly, that the possibilitie expressed in the first clause of Christs prayer, hath no reference to Gods will, it thus appeareth: first, Christ saith in generall, all things are possible vnto thee. Mar. 14. vers. 36. but if no more be possible to God, than he will; then it would follow, that he can doe no more than he doth, or will doe, which is a great error. Secondly, if this were the meaning, if it be possible, that is, stand with thy will, what needed that limitation, or explanation following, yet not my will, seeing he had expressed so much before? Thirdly, in respect of Gods will, it was impossible the cup should passe: as our Saviour saith, vers. 43. If this cup cannot passe away from me, but what I must must drinke it, why will be done: how could the same thing be both possible & impossible in regard of Gods will: Fourthly, Christ was not ignorant of the will of God, and therefore knew well enough that it was not possible, neither stood with Gods will, that the cup should passe: this clause therefore, if it be possible, cannot be referred to the will of God, but rather to his power.

Secondly, it is replied, that Christ obtained that he asked: first, the Apostle saith, Hebr. 5. 7. he was heard. Secondly, our Saviour saith to his father, John. 11. 42. Thou hearest me alwaies: Fenard. p. 464. col. 4. Thirdly, Origen thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods everlasting wrath did passe both from Christ and vs, and so in that behalfe he obtained that he desired: Orig. in hunc locum.

Contr. First, the Apostle saith, he was heard in or frō his feare: Christ in his humane infirmities (his diuine power for the time withdrawing it selfe) feared a greater measure of Gods wrath, lest he should haue been left alone in it; from this feare hee was heard and deliuered. So then the cup of Gods wrath passed not from him, as in the beginning of his prayer his humane will tempted (as Damasene saith) of his naturall infirmities desired, but from the manner and measure thereof which he feared.

Secondly, Christ was indeede alwaies heard of God, so was he in this place: for though hee was in that moment stirred in his humane desire to wish the escaping of that cuppe (for it is a naturall instinct, and not in it selfe sinfull, to wish to decline every thing that is hurtfull) yet he limiteth this desire, and squareth his will to his fathers: so that this was the summe of his prayer, that howsoever his humane desire wished to escape that cup, yet he was contented Gods will might stand; and so it did, and thus Christ was heard: though not in the sudden wish of humane infirmities, yet in the aduised request of his filiall conformitie.

Thirdly, Origen indeede hath such a conceit: Expediebat omnibus, ut transiret calix ab eo, propterea quod liberat eum saluatore: It was expedient for all men, that the cup should passe from Christ, because hee dranke of it: so hee thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods everlasting wrath passed from Christ and vs, by his drinking of it. This is contrarie to the Scripture: If this cup cannot passe, but that I must drinke of it, why will be done, Matth. 26. 42. Christs meaning was then, that the cup might so passe, that he might not drinke of it: how then could it passe by his drinking and tasting of it? Secondly, Christ feared not eternall vengeance after death, and so everlasting destruction, it were not farre from blasphemie so to affirme: but he was heard in that which he feared: Ergo, herein he was not heard, neither did he desire the cup to passe in that sense, in the appealing of Gods everlasting wrath, which was indeede an effect of Christs crosse, but not of that part of his prayer in the garden, for the passing of the cup: though in the explanation limitation and condition of his prayer I doubt not but that effect is comprehended.

Obiect. If Christ neither feared the death of the bodie, nor everlasting death; what then did he feare?

Ans. I say with Cyprian: Metus ille infirmitatis humana communiorem exprimebat affectum, ut difficultas extremi exitus timeretur: That feare of humane infirmities did expresse a common affection, that the difficultie of the last end should be feared, sermo. de passion. So then Christ feared not the end of his life, but the difficultie thereof, that is, the bitterness of his fathers wrath, and the anguish of soule, that was ioyned with death. To this purpose the ordinarie glosse vpon the third to the Galathians: Inspiciens humilitatem, Christum in ualedictio, quod morti conuictum est, separauit: It is a foolish honoring of Christ to exempt him from the curse, which was ioyned with death, &c. So then it was Gods wrath and curse, which did concur with Christs bodily death, which did so afflict and perplex his soule.

Fourthly, that Christ in his humane desire wished for somewhat, that was not granted; Chrysostome testifieth: Neque uolle, morti carnem reprobari est, quia hoc natura est, ipsa uentem, qua nouit sunt, omnia sine peccato ostendit: Neither is it reprehensible to feare death, because it is of nature, but Christ shewed all that is of nature without sinne: Ex epist. Agathon. ad Constantin. Christ then in Chrysostomes iudgement would in his humane desire haue escaped death (though it was not that onely or chiefly which he feared, but as the sense of Gods wrath for sinne concurred with it) yet did he not escape death. Athanasius is also cited in the same place: Humana uoluntas propter infirmitatem carnis refugiebat passionem, diuina prompta erat: His humane will because of the infirmities of the flesh refused the passion, his diuine will was readie.

Thirdly, it is replied that Christ prayed not contrary to Gods knowne will: First, Christ prayed in faith, and was most assured his prayer should take effect, Fenard. p. 464. conf. 4. lin. 13. Therefore not against the knowne will of God. Secondly, he prayed the same prayer thrice, which had been a voluntarie spurning against Gods will, if he had prayed against it. Thirdly, he taught his Apostles to pray aright, and reprobated the sonnes of Zebeder, You know not what ye aske: much more doth he pray himselfe aright: Fenard. p. 421. conf. 11. Fourthly, if he prayed directly contrarie to the will of God, he had sinned: but his prayers were iust and pure: Fenard. p. 419. conf. 7.

Contra. First this replie is altogether impertinent: First, we say not, that Christs will or prayer was was contrarie to Gods will, but diuers onely from it. Secondly, his whole prayer was not contrarie, or diuers or different, but onely the short motion in the beginning of his prayer was somewhat diuers. Thirdly, though Gods will were knowne vnto Christ, yet in this moment, wherein he stood amazed and astonished, seeing his diuine power and knowledge, by the which Gods will was reuealed vnto him, did now withdrawe and repress it selfe, how could it otherwise be, but that this knowledge and reuelation of Gods will, was for the time as suspended also, and not objected to Christs humane sense, being now fully possessed of this agonie.

Secondly, for answer to the arguments. First, notwithstanding the diuersitie of desire in Christs humane will, yet he prayed in faith, in that he submitted his will in all obedience to his Fathers. Secondly, he might repeate the same request of his naturall desire thrice, because so long his agonie continued, without any repugnance to Gods will, still remembering the same condition, in submitting his naturall desire to his fathers heavenly will. Thirdly, the prayer of the sonnes of Zebedee was rash and ignorant, because it was not conditionall nor limited, but humorous and disordered; failing both in the occasion, which was ambitious; and the manner, which was peremptorie and absolute: but Christ prayed from the feeling and necessitie of his humane infirmity, and with the most obedient condition of his fathers will: and therefore his prayer so begun, and so ended and limited, was neither rash nor ignorant. Fourthly, first he prayed not contrarie to Gods will, but a diuers thing hee asked, yet with a subordination to Gods will. Secondly, it is not sinne for the natural affection to desire to decline that which is hurtfull or contrarie vnto life: as Origen saith, whom I alleaged before: Proprium est omnis hominis fidelis primis uoluisse pati aliquid doloris, &c. It is proper euen to euery faithfull man, to be vnwilling to suffer any trouble, Tract. 19. in Matth. So it was no more sinne in Christ in his humane sense to desire to shun griefe and trouble, than it was for him, being hungry, to comēt to eate of the fruit of the figge tree, where was no fruit but leaues, Mark. 11. 13. Thirdly, but it will be objected, that Christ knew Gods will to the contrary, and therefore should haue sinned in making any such request.

Answer. First, I say with Augustine: Si in illa uoluntate permaneret, &c. If Christ should haue staid in that minde or wil, then his heart might haue seemed not to be aright, in Psal. 93. Wherefore the present moderation of his humane desire, and the submission of it to Gods will, doe free our Saviour from all corruption. Secondly, some doe giue this solution: Non ideo petiit, ut impetraret, &c. He did not therefore aske to obtaine, for hee knew God would not doe it: sed ut membris formam preberet, but to giue his members an example how to submit their will and desire to Gods: scilicet Magister lib. 3. dist. 17. l. 1. c. Thirdly, I answer, that in this very moment Christs humane infirmity being astonished with this vehement object of griefe, and al amazed, did not turne it selfe to consider of Gods secret will and decree herein: Like as Moses and Paul knew very well, that they were both Gods elect ones, and could not finally perish: yet in the excessse of their zeale, beside this their knowledge, they wish one to be raised out of the booke of life; the other to be anathema, that is, accursed for the people of Gods sake, Exod. 32. 33. Rom. 9. 3. Did Saint Paul sitne against his owne knowledge, who hauing first said, that nothing could separate him from the loue of God in Christ, Rom. 8. 38. presently in his great zeale wisheth to be separated from Christ? If this were no sinne in the member, how could it be in the head? Further, wee must consider now of Christ as a perfect man (his Godhead now not shewing it selfe) and that, as Damasceus saith, hee tooke vpon him humanam naturam, a nature of it selfe ignorant, but that it was by the conioyning of the diuine nature enriched with the knowledge of future things; lib. 3. de fide. c. 11. Whereupon our Saviour doubtless not to confesse himselfe, as hee is man, ignorant of Gods secret will, Mark. 13. 32. what incontinencie then is it to graunte, that Christ as man (the light of his diuine knowledge for a time withholding the beames thereof) being plunged in this agonie in his humane sense, did either presently not know or not remember his fathers secret determination concerning his drinking of this cup?

Thirdly, that Christ prayed at the first for somewhat not obtained, and that he desired and willed a diuers thing from his fathers will in that instant: the fathers doe thus testifie: Aug. l. 1. de humana uoluntate erat proprium aliquid & primum orant. This was his humane will praying for some what proper and priuate, in Psal. 32. part. 1. Hieronym. in Marc. 14. Hic ostendit humanam uoluntatem, quia propter infirmitatem carnis recessit passionem, & diuinam, quia prompta est per se se de dispensationem: Here hee sheweth an humane will, which because of the infirmity of the flesh, respecteth the passion, and a diuine will, which is ready to performe the dispensation. Origen l. 2. in Matth. Hac uoluntas, quam dicit, non sicut ego uolo, &c. This will, which hee saith, not as I will, is not according to his diuine and impassible substance, but his humane, and infirme. Chrysost. de epistola Agathæ ad Constantinum. Si in diuinitate dicitur, non potest esse contrarietas, sed carnis uoluntatem ostendit: If it be said of his diuinitie, there is some contradiction: if of his flesh, (not as I will, &c.) there is no offence. These fathers tooke this as a pregnant place to proue two wills in Christ, his diuine and humane, against the Monothelite heretikes: if Christ had then two wills, hee had two desires, and one diuers from the other : it is euident then, that Christ in his humane desire wished somewhat diuersly from his diuine, yet without sinne, because he eftsloones submitted his humane affection to the diuine disposition.

Argum. 4. That Christ was exceedingly amazed and astonished being in his agonie, the scripture euidently testifieth : he began inquietus & admiratus, to be astonished with feare, and to faint or fall away in his soule : for so the words signifie : what else could be the cause thereof, than the present sense, which he had in his soule, of the wrath and indignation of God against sinne ? what else caused him to pray so earnestly, to sweate drops of blood, to be all amazed, to neede to be comforted of the Angell ? the feare of bodily death could not doe it, Christ was not so weake and infirme : if it were not the sense of bodily daunger, it was the feeling of spirituall griefe and terror of soule, which procured it.

Ans. First, the expiation of the sinnes of the world before God, whose iustice was to be satisfied, and the contemplation and beholding of the same in the soule of Christ, caused this great heatines in Christ, and in such measure, ut par ei nunquam fuerit, that no man was euer like him, Feuard. p. 455. lin. 37. So then the presence of Gods Maiestie, and the pittifull beholding of mans miserie, did thus astonish him.

Secondly, the constant continuing of the same prayer three seuerall times, with intermission of time, Feuard. p. 486. conf. 8. lin. 11. and admonition to his Disciples, prooueth he had not forgotten himselfe, Feuard. p. 425. conf. 5. lin. 8.

Thirdly, this religious astonishment, though it might for the present suspend all other thoughts in our Saviour, yet is there no neede it should depriue him of vnderstanding, sense and memorie, Feuard. p. 425. conf. 6. lin. 4.

Contra. First, 1. If the pietie of Christ, or presence of Gods Maiestie had thus astonished Christ, why was hee not at other times astonished, when he came into Gods presence ? as Ioh. 17. 13. hee saith in his prayer, non I come vnathes : and pietie there was alwaies in Christ : if the same cause, why not the same effect ? 2. What cause had Christ to feare the Maiestie of God in himselfe, being the dearely beloued sonne of God, most iust, righteous, holie, but onely as our pledge and suretie, presenting himselfe in our person, to answere our debts ? 3. And if commiseration of human miserie, had striken into him this astonishment, it must 1. follow, that either he was without commiseration at other times, which were blasphemie to say ; or that his commiseration wrought not in him this proper effect, namely astonishment, which were great rashnes to auouch. 2. When Christ wept ouer Ierusalem, foreseeing their vtter desolation for euer, why did not this commiseration then also astonish him ? 3. And where Christ prayeth to be deliuered from that houre, Mark. 14. 35. will they tye Christs pietie and charitie, which they say was now the cause of this astonishment, onely to this houre ? Wherefore these were not the causes now : for at other times they could not haue wanted the same effects.

Secondly, 1. his repeating of his prayer thrice, his admonishing of his Apostles, doe prooue that he had not forgotten himselfe, we graunt ; neither doe we so asseirme, as it is vnderstood ; that Christ had cleane forgotten and was as beside himselfe : he was not so amazed or astonished, but that he had some intermission and breathing time, and comforts mixed with his tentations : neither yet so confounded, as that hee either forgot pietie in his obedience to God, or charitie and pitie in warning his Disciples. 2. The repeating of his prayer thrice for the passing of the cup, his praying to be deliuered from that houre, the comforting of the Angell, doe shew a continuance of the agonie and astonishment ; and the text saith, he was inquietus, confusus, set or settled in an agonie, Luk. 22. 44. you must then either graunt no agonie or astonishment at all, or else continue it all the while of his prayer, as the Euangelists doe.

Thirdly, there is no neede, notwithstanding Christ were amazed and perplexed with the feare of Gods iudgements, and so cast into a most vehement agonie, that hee should be deprived of sense, vnderstanding, or memorie : 1. If his memorie in one point were not extinguished, but overruled or overcast with the vehement sense of his present agonie, must he therefore be wrapped in a totall confusion or obliuion ? 2. In the midst of these stormes hee had some comfortable blasts ; and though death and hell were before his sense, yet he was quickened and reuiued in his spirit. 3. Moses and Paul trauielled with zeale, wished they might be cast awaies ; yet at other times their saluation was manifestly revealed vnto them : shall we conclude therefore that they wanted sense, vnderstanding, memorie ? Thus (I trust) are those obiections answered.

Argum. 5. Lastly, I will produce the testimonie of the Fathers, that Christ was not thus astonished for feare of the death of the bodie : Hilarie lib. 10. de Trinitate. Anne simul mors, qui carnis obuius prodit, &c. pugnanda carnis metus tristis est, cuius aspectu caro post eadem saluatur : Did hee feare to die, which came against the armed troupes ? was he sorrowfull for the pricking of his flesh, who by his touch healed the care that was smitten off ? Augustin in Psal. 93. Non timebat mori Christus, certo diu resurrecturus : Christ did not feare to die, being to rise againe the third day. And againe, in Psal. 100. Non verè ille timebat mortem, qui potestatem habuit ponendi animam, &c. Hee could not verily feare death, that had power to lay downe his soule, and to take it vp againe.

Again, Hilarie saith, Tristis est anima mea usque mortem, nunquid aut tristis est anima propter mortem? alind est usque, alind propter id metueret. My soule is heauie vnto death; doth hee say my soule is heauie for or because of death? it is one thing to feare till death, another because of death: c. 31. in Math.

Ambrose: Non propter mortem, sed usque ad mortem: quia cum conditio corporalis affectus, non formidat mortis offendit. Not because of death, but vnto death, for the condition of his corporall or natural affection, not the feare of deadly affliction doth offend him, in Luc. 12. And our countrey man Beda vseth the very same words, in 14. Mark.

Some other of the Fathers affirme, that Christ non timuit infernum chaos, & torrentes flammæ, that Christ feared not the infernall gulfe, or the scorching flames, Hilarie lib. 10. de Trinitat. Bellarm. resp. ad argum. 7.

We willingly graunt that Christ feared not hell fire, nor euermlasting destruction: those authorities presse not vs, but rather helpe our cause: for if Christ neither feared temporall, nor euermlasting death, as these Fathers witness, and the Apostle saith he feared, Hebr. 5. 7. what then remaineth, but that he feared the cup of Gods wrath mixed with death? And as Cyprian saith before cited, Difficultatem extremi exitus: The difficultie or hardnes of his last passage, that is, in respect of Gods wrath tempered with it.

This then is the summe: first, that seeing Christ was saued frō that he feared, yet was he not saued from death; secondly, so he should haue been weaker than many Martyrs, that were not afraid of the death of the bodie; thirdly, seeing he was so astonished being in his agonie, that hee prayed for the passing of the cuppe, which was neither passible, nor graunted; fourthly, and was so astonished with feare, that his soule fainted within, his bodie did sweate blood without; fifthly, seeing the Fathers confesse, that this agonie proceeded not from any feare of bodily sufferings: it followeth that the feare and feeling of his fathers wrath thus troubled his soule. And thus much of this second part or argument, of the cause of Christs agonie and astonishment in the garden.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER CHRIST SVFERED properly and immediatly in soule.

THE OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

The Papists.

Their opinion is, that Christ did not suffer in soule properly, but either, ex corporis coniunctione 16. Error. & condolentia: his griefe proceeded from the coniunction and fellow-feeling with the bodie, Fenardent. p. 454. or else from the commiseration and compassion that he had for the finnes of his myrticall bodie: for the which, tanta totius cordis paenitudine dolet, ut par ei nemo unquam fuerit: He did so grieue throughout in his heart, that no man was euer like vnto him, p. 455. So hee concludeth, pænas peccatis debitas in corpore portasse, &c. igitur non in anima, that he bare the punishment due to our sins in his bodie, and not in his soule, p. 448. To the like purpose Bellarm. Defixit mentem in omnia tormenta impendentia: Hee fixed his soule to beholde all the torments readie at hand, lib. 4. de Christi anima, cap. 8. resp. ad argum. 3. otherwise hee confesseth no suffering in Christs soule. Let vs see their arguments.

Argum. Fenard. thus reasoneth: First, 1. Pet. 2. 24. He bare our finnes in his bodie on the tree. Secondly, Saint Paul saith, God forbid that I should reioyce but in the crosse of the Lord Iesus, Galat. 6. 14. And 1. Cor. 2. 2. I esteemed not to know any thing among you, saving Iesus Christ and him crucified: but his soule was not crucified. Thirdly, our Saviour said, It is finished, Ioh. 19. 30. Ergo, if all his sufferings were finished vpon the crosse, there remained nothing to be suffered afterward, Fenard. p. 448. 8. 450. 12.

Ans. First, this place maketh rather against them: for the Apostle saith directly, he bare our finnes: the flesh properly is not said to beare sinne, but the soule. Secondly, neither can sinne be here taken for the punishment of sinne onely, but for sinne it selfe: for Saint Peter expoundeth the Hebrue (נאשא) vsed by the Prophet Iay. 53. 4. as the Septuagint do, by the Greeke, propter peccata, which signifieth to beare: so Matthew saith Ubi, he tooke our finnes and infirmities, Matth. 8. 17. as the Hebrue word is vsed, 1. Sam. 17. 34. and Saint Iohn, 1. Ioh. 3. 5. ut tolleres, in, that he might take away finnes: in which sense also the Hebrue is taken Amos 6. 10. Wherefore if Christ to bare our sins, as Peter saith, that he tooke them vpon him, as Matthew expoundeth, and tooke them also away, as Saint Iohn inferreth; then he did not onely beare the punishment, but the sinne also: for hee did not take away, nor take vpon him the punishment onely, but the sinne also. Thirdly, neither can the word propter, sinne, vsed by Saint Peter, signifie properly the punishment of sinne: for S. Iohn saith, faith, that quæritur, is aspiciat: that sin is transgression, &c. 1. Ioh. 3. 4: and the Septuagint vs both these words, expounding the one by the other: Ilay. 53. 5. He was wounded for our sinnes, and broken for our iniquities: sinne therefore doth no more betoken the paine of sinne, than transgression, aspiciat. Fourthly, the Prophet saith, He hath taken our infirmities or sinnes, and carried our sorrowes, Ilay. 53. 4. the punishment or effect of sinne, the second clause of the sentence expoundeth by sorrowes or diseases: so that vnlesse we will make a superfluous repetition of the same thing, in the first clause, sinne it selfe, the cause of these sorrowes, must be contained: and the phrase also giueth this sense: for our sinnes duisti, he tooke, our sorrowes and diseases, ipsum, bairnans, hee did carrie or beare, as Saint Matthew expoundeth. Fifthly, Saint Peter himselfe ioyneth together, the obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Iesus, 1. Pet. 1. 2. the one in his soule, the other in his bodie: and therefore it is farre from the Apostle to exclude the merit of Christs soule by his obedience and suffering. Sixthly, it will be objected, that the Apostle saith, he bare our sinnes in his bodie vpon the tree, and with his stripes iudam, we are healed: which signifie the stripes of his bodie.

1. Ans. First, we graunt he bare our sinnes vpon the tree of the crosse, for that was the very altar where this sacrifice was offered, the field where this battell was fought, and the very theater where Christ was to play the redeemers part. 2. and in his bodie, for his soule was not out of 1. his bodie, when he suffered: 2. and the bodie was the instrument of the soule: 3. and the visible part of his sufferings, and therefore namely expressed: 4. or else by a Synecdoche in the bodie the other part is signified: as where the Scripture saith, a bodie thou hast given me, Hebr. 10. 5. he received not a bodie without a soule: 5. otherwise, when the Apostle speaketh distinctly hee expresseth both parts: Hebr. 10. 10. By the which will wee are sanctified by the offering of the bodie of Iesus: we are sanctified both by the obedient will of Christ in his soule, and by the offering of his bodie.

2. The worde signifieth properly, liuorem, the blewnes or scarres remaining after stripes and wounds, Prou. 20. 30. wherein a figure must be admitted: by one part the whole being expressed: otherwise if Christs scarres and stripes of his flesh only healed vs, then his blood and death should be excluded: And it is no vnusual thing in Scripture, to attribute wounds and stripes to the soule, as Luk. 2. 35. A sword shall pierce thy soule: And 1. Cor. 8. 12. notum, beating or wounding their conscience: there is no reason to the contrarie, but that stripes may be taken in the same sense here. Thus Saint Ambrose: Sicut mors eius mortem abstulit: liuor eius vulnera nostra sanauit. ita maior eius, maiorem nostrum aboleuit: As his death tooke away ours, his stripes healed our wounds: so his griefe abolished ours, lib. 2. de fid. c. 3.

2. Secondly, 1. By the crosse of Christ all Christs sufferings whatsoeuer are signified: 1. Cor. 1. 17. lest the crosse of Christ should be of none effect: all the effectuall sufferings of Christ are contained in the crosse. Saint Peter so vnderstandeth Christs sufferings, 1. Pet. 2. 21. Christ suffered for vs &c. 23. when he was reuiled, reuiled not againe, &c. but all his reuilings were not incident to his crosse properly. 2. Yea in Christ crucified wee vnderstand not onely his bodie launced and whipped, but his soule also with sorrow pierced: and S. Paul must be so vnderstood: whereby (saith he) the world is crucified vnto me, and I vnto the world: Saint Paul was not crucified and mortified in bodie onely to the world, but in soule and affection: so was also Christ crucified. 3. Saint Ambrose affirmeth the same, lib. 5. in Luc. Mens mea in Christo crucifixâ est: My minde and soule was crucified in Christ. He saith not by Christ onely, that is, by the power of his crosse our soule is crucified, but in Christs person our humane soule, which he tooke together with our bodie, was crucified: as the same Ambrose saith in Luc. 22. Suscepit animam meam, suscepit corpus meum: He tooke my soule, he tooke my bodie.

3. Thirdly, 1. This place vrgeth not vs: for we affirme not, that Christ suffered any thing in soule after his death, all his sufferings in soule and bodie were performed vpon the crosse. 2. It rather maketh against them: for seeing it was needfull that Christ should suffer for vs both in bodie and soule; as the Apostle saith, Hee tooke away the handwriting of ordinances that was against vs, which was contrarie to vs, and fastened to the crosse, Coloss. 2. 14. If hee fastened to the crosse whatsoeuer decree was against vs and contrarie to vs, then the decree against our soules, as well as against our bodies: then it will followe, that if Christ fastened not to his crosse this decree against our soules, which must be by suffering in his soule, then hee was to suffer somewhat afterward. Let the Friar take heede of his owne net, our foote is not entangled in it.

1. Argum. 2. First, Genes. 3. 15. The seede of the woman shall break thy head, but thou shalt bruse his heels: Euangelium expoundeth this, by that place Ioh. 1. 14. The word was made flesh: So his meaning seemeth to be this, that that part onely, which was of the seede of the woman, namely the flesh of Christ, was onely brused of the Serpent, Euangelium. p. 276. conf. 8. lin. 17. 21.

2. Secondly, none of the Prophets did write so of Christ, that he should suffer the anger of God in his soule, Euangelium. p. 440 lin. 3. 469. conf. 1. lin. 8. So he thinketh, that the Prophets and Patriarkes beleued the bodily sufferings of Christ onely, and by that faith were faued.

3. Thirdly, Hebr. 10. 12. With one offering haue he consecrated for euer them that are sanctified: with one one offering, that is, of his bodie and blood, not with two offerings, of bodie and soule, Fenardent, p. 449. conf. 10. lin. 6.

Ans. First, 1. Similitudes and allegories doe not conclude certainly in euery point, but wherein the comparisson standeth: as here the similitude is taken from the nature of Serpents, that being trode vpon, doe bite and sting the foote againe of him that presseth them: this similitude holdeth strongly for the victorie of Sathan, to the which end this promise is made to our parents: but if we applie it to other purposes, we shall straine it too farre.

2. Some by Christs heele doe vnderstand his members; as Origen hom. 4. in Psal. 36. Ille nostrum obseruat calcamenum, cui vtiq; nunquam oportet nos nudam praeberet plantam, sed semper esse debemus calcanti pedes in preparatione Euangelij: He doth obserue our heele, to whom wee must not offer our selues barefoote, but shod with the preparation of the Gospell of peace, &c. This I take to be the proper meaning of Christs heele.

3. Saint Hierome also giueth a good exposition of this place: Tradition in Genes. tom. 4. Quid nostri gressu praeediuntur a colubro, dominus conteret Satanam sub pedibus: Because our goings are hindred by the Serpent, the Lord shall tread downe Sathan vnder our feet, &c. By our footsteps may be vnderstood our sinnes and infirmities which giue aduantage to the temptation of Sathan: and this exposition is agreeable also to the Scripture, Psal. 49. 5. Why should I feare, when, iniquitas calcaneorum circumdabit me, the iniquitie of my heeles dooth compass mee? And Job. 13. 26. 27. he calleth peccata adolescentia vestigia pedum, the sinnes of his youth the print of his heeles. In the first place the same Hebrue word is vsed, is the next the same sense of the word is retained.

4. This place also may be expounded by the like, Psal. 89. 51. Probra afficiunt vestigia: They flander the footsteps of thine annoynted. Whereby is signified the continuall practise of Sathan and his ministers, to flander the profession of the Gospell of Christ, whereby Christ is knowne and discerned in the world, as by the prints of his feet: All these expositions are loade, and consonant to the Scripture, and not much varying the one from the other: whether of these we take, this place maketh nothing for the collection enforced.

5. Or if we doe applie it to Christs person, why may not his whole huaitanie be here comprehended, which is the inferiour part to his Godhead: and so this place may be expounded by that Exod. 33. 23. where Moses saw posteriora dei, the backe parts of God: Origen saith, Novissima pars hominis pes: A mans foote is his last or hinder part, in 17. Maith. and so expoundeth this of Christs being in the flesh, when Moses saw him in the Mount. And Augustine likewise: Anteriora facies maiestatis, qua deo equalis posteriora vocantur, quia apparuit in postremo saeculo His fore parts are his face of maiestie, wherein hee is equall to God: his backe parts, because hee appeared in the end of the world, lib. 2. de Trinitat. c. 17. So then by Christs heele or backe parts, his whole huaitanie may be implied, which is but as his backe and meaner parts, in respect of his diuine Maiestie.

6. And this sense the text it selfe giueth, and the force of the similitude: for like as that part is bitten of the Serpent, wherewith he is troden vpon; so Sathan assailed that part in Christ, wherewith he was ouercome: but he ouercame him not onely with his flesh, but with the iustice and innocencie of his soule: as Christ saith, Ioh. 14. 30. The prince of this world cometh, and hath vought in me. And as Augustine saith: Christum iustitia vicit diabolum non potentia: Christ ouercame the diuell with his iustice, not by his power, lib. 13. de Trinitat. cap. 17. And againe, Nec Christus ei aliquid extorsit violento dominatu, sed superauit lege iustitia: Neither did Christ wrest any thing from him by violent subduing, but ouercame him by the law of iustice, de liber. arbit. lib. 3. cap. 10: Wherefore as Christ by the innocencie of his soule, together with his holie and obedient flesh subdued Sathan: so he seeketh to bite and vex him in the same. Whether this text then, be vnderstood of Christ or his members, or both, the argument propounded concludeth not.

Secondly, the Fathers of the law and the Prophets beleueed not onely the bodily death, but the spirituall and soule sufferings of Christ: as Dauid prophecyng of Christ, saith, Psal. 18. 5. Ibe fororues of bell compassed me: but the Prophet Isay of all other saith most plainly, Isay. 53. 10. He shall make his soule an offering for sinne: vers. 11. He shall see of the trauell of his soule, and shall be satisfied: and therefore as Augustine saith: Eadem fides est in illis, qui nondum nomine, sed re ipsa fuerunt Christiani, et in istis, qui non solum sunt, sed vocantur: Moses veteris testamenti minister, bares noni: The same faith was in them, which not yet in name, but indeede were Christians, and in these, which not only be, but are so called: Moses was a minister of the old testament, but an heire of the new, &c. conr. 2. epistol. Pelag. 3. 1.

Thirdly, 1. Christs sacrifice consisting both of bodie and soule is but one entire sacrifice: as in the holocaust and burnt offering of the lawe there were diuers parts of the sacrifice, yet but one whole sacrifice. 2. Where the Apostle exhorteth that wee should offer vp our bodies, 1 Cor. 6. 19. 2, a liuing sacrifice, Rom. 12. 1. doth he meane our bodie without a soule? yet hee calleth it a sacrifice, one, not many. 3. Whereas it is objected, that the Apostle expoundeth himselfe, what one sacrisince he meaneth, namely of his bodie, Hebr. 10. 10. vers. 19. By the blood of Iesus wee may be bold to enter: vers. 20. He hath prepared a way by his flesh. I answer: first, Christs bodie, flesh and blood, are not all one, his flesh and blood are diuers parts of his bodie: then as by these seuerall parts named by themselves we vnderstand the rest; by blood, his bodie and flesh; by flesh, his blood and bodie: so what letteth, but that in these speeches all other necessarie parts of his suffering may be comprehended? Secondly, the Apostle doth chiefly stand vpon the externall part of Christs suffering, as the offering of his bodie, shedding of his blood, because it did more fitly answer to the blood of buls and goates, and the sacrifice of beasts, whereof the Apostle entreateth, chap. 9. 10. Thirdly, the Apostle also speaketh in more general termes: Christ offered himselfe, Heb. 9. 24. Christ was offered, vers. 28. If Christ, if himselfe, how Christ without a soule, how himselfe without a soule? If Christ then being both God and man, is but one, as Leo saith, Vnus atque idem in vtraque forma Christus: One and the same Christ in both formes and natures, epistol. 81. to likewise his bodie and soule being parts of the same nature, doe make but one sacrifice.

Argum. 3. 1. Christ neither tasted nor suffered the death of the soule, as Augustine saith: Quod anima fuit mortificatus Iesus, quis audeat dicere cum mors anima non sit nisi peccatum? Who dares say that Christ was mortified in his soule, seeing the death of the soule is nothing but sinne? therefore hee was mortified in the flesh, quia secundum solam carnem mortuus, because hee dyed onely in the flesh, epist. 99.

2. The Apostle saith, Ephes. 1. 7. Wee haue redemption through his blood, euen forgiveness of sinnes, Fenard. p. 442. conf. 15. lin. 11. 1. Ioh. 1. 7. The blood of Iesus Christ cleanseth vs from all sinne, Fenard. p. 441. conf. 13. lin. 5. If the shedding of the blood of Christ be the iust and full redemption of all sinnes, what neede the sufferings of his soule?

3. Christ suffered wrongfully, 1. Pet. 3. 18. He suffered the iust for the vniust, Fenard. 448. But hee could not suffer the death of the soule wrongfully, because it is Gods immediate action: Ergo, he dyed not in soule.

4. All Christs sufferings were voluntarie: Ioh. 10. 18. No man taketh away my life, I lay it downe of my selfe, Fenard. p. 448. conf. 10. lin. 8. but the death of the soule hee did not willingly suffer, because it is an alienation from God, which cannot be without sinne.

5. Christ is the Lambe that was slaine, Apocal. 5. 9. Fenard. p. 441. conf. 13. lin. 15. but his soule was not killed of the Iewes: Ergo, he was not crucified in soule, neither dyed any other death, beside the death of the bodie, Fenard. p. 440. lin. 4.

6. The Prophet saith, The same soule, that sinneth, shall dye, Ezech. 18. 20. God in spirituall punishments, doth not punish one for another, Bellarmin. lib. 2. de amiss. grat. c. 8. arg. 5. therefore Christ was not spirituall punished in his soule for vs.

Ans. 1. We most willingly confesse, that Christ in Augustines sense dyed not the death of the soule: we approue that sentence of his: Mors domini nostri non fuit anima, sed in carne sola: mors nostra non in carne sola, sed in anima: in anima propter peccatum, in carne propter penam peccati: ille vero, quia peccatum non fecit, nec habuit in anima, non est mortuus nisi in carne tantum: igitur simple eius mors profuit dupla nostra, &c. The death of our Lord was not in his soule, but in his flesh only; our death is not in our flesh onely, but in our soule also; in our soule because of sinne, in our flesh for the punishment of sinne: but he because he did no sinne, neither had any in his soule, died but in his flesh onely, therefore his simple death was profitable to our double death, &c. serm. 181. c. 5. 2. But it followeth not, Christ dyed not in soule, Ergo, he suffered not in soule; or he dyed not this death of the soule by sinne, or damnation; Ergo, hee cannot be said any waies to haue dyed in soule. But I will forbear to vse this phrase of Christs dying in soule, though it may haue a tolerable sense, as I haue shewed before, resp. ad 10. calumniam. Yet Augustine seemeth to me not to denie a sense of death in Christs soule, his wordes are these: first, hauing affirmed Christum non moruisse ut ignem gehenna pateretur, quia hac mors non conditionis est, sed criminis: That Christ deserued not the fire of hell, for this death is criminall, not conditionall. He then propoundeth this obiection: Sed iniquus, mortem dei filius & in anima non pertulit, nec in maiestate sensu: You will say, the sonne of God, did he not suffer and feele death in the maiestie of his soule? & sensu & pertulit, sed participatione morbi alieni non proprietate vulneris sui: He did both feele and beare it, but by the partaking of anothers disease, not by the proprietie of any wound or infirmitie in himselfe, act. cum Felician. cap. 18. But whatsoeuer Augustines iudgement was herein, we simply denie the argument: for it followeth not, Christ dyed not in soule: Ergo, he suffered not in soule.

2. Secondly, 1. I haue shewed before how the Apostle is to bee vnderstoode, when hee maketh mention of the blood of Christ: part. 1. resp. ad argum. 1. that by one part the rest are signified: for if blood be taken strictly, then Christs flesh is excluded, and beside his blood, there issued out also water: all these were necessarie parts of Christs passion: the Apostle then so speaketh of one part, as he doth not except or seclude the rest. 2. It is vsuall in Scripture, by the flesh, to comprehend the whole man not vnregenerate only, but regenerate: as Ambrose interpreteth these wordes of of Christ, The spirit is ready, the flesh is weak, Matth. 26. 41. ¶ In spiritu deum, in homine carnem significat: That he might signifie God in the spirit, man in the flesh. But for more full answer I referre the reader to their place before remembred.

Thirdly, 1. concerning the death of the soule, which could not without iniurie be inflicted vpon Christ, I answer, that this question is altogether impertinent, and the argument superfluous: for we affirme not any such death in the soule of Christ. 2. Yet we are bold to auouch, that God was the author of the afflictions of Christs soule: So the Prophet saith, Isay. 53. 4. He was plagued and smitten of God: Act. 2. 23. He was deliuered vp by the determinate counsell of God. Yea even the terrors and inward afflictions of Gods children proceede from God: Iob. 6. 4. The arrows of God are in me, and the terrors of God fight against me. 3. Yet God is not vniust, neither iniurious, in giuing vnto his sonne this cup to drinke: 1. Because Christ willingly offered himselfe to vnder take this punishment for vs: Psal. 40. 7. Then said I, Loe I come, I desire to doe thy will O God. 2. Because God layd vpon him the iniquitie of vs all, Isay. 53. 6. he being the suretie for our sinnes, was in iustice to satisfie the debt. 3. Because God herein intended the redemption of mankind, not hauing a pleasure in the death of his sonne; as Origen well saith of the tentation of Iob: Non delectabatur, ut Iob torqueretur, sed ut diabolus vinceretur: God was not delighted, that Iob should be tormented, but that Sathan should be conquered, in 2. cap. Iob. 4. The same obiection may be made as well concerning Christs sufferings in bodie, for God also was the author of them: as where the Prophet saith, Smite the shepherd, Zach. 13. 7. yet the Euangelist saith in Gods person, I will smite the shepherd, Matth. 26. 31. Euangelista aiusus est Prophetam verba ad dei transferre personam: The Euangelist is bold to referre the Prophets words to the person of God, Hieron. ad Pammach. Whether God were the author mediately or immediately in respect of iustice, there is no difference: the Iudge that decreeth vniust things, and the writer or executor thereof are alike guiltie of iniustice. Isay. 10. 1. Woe vnto them that decree wicked things, and write grievous things: wherefore if the sufferings of Christ in soule were vniust in respect of Gods decree, his sufferings in bodie should be so likewise; which we confesse notwithstanding in respect of the malice of Sathan, and the Iewes which procured them, and the innocencie of Christs person to haue bin most wrongfull and iniurious.

Fourthly, 1. such a death of the soule, as bringeth with it a separation from God, Christ neither suffered willingly, nor vnwillingly: we denie any such death of soule to haue beene in Christ; and therefore all the obiections, which presse this absurditie, are altogether impertinent. 2. Concerning such passions in soule as we affirme Christ to haue endured, we answer as of the sufferings in his bodie; that he did beare them both willingly: for though in his humane and naturall desire without sinne, he wished the passing of the cuppe, yet conforming his will vnto Gods, he was obedient and willing: this the Scripture testifieth, that Christ prayed, that the cuppe might passe; which sheweth a will in him to haue escaped it: but yet he submitteeth himselfe to his Fathers pleasure: not as I will, but as thou wilt, Mat. 26. 39. Thus the fathers do note 2. wils to haue bin in Christ when he made this request. Asanas. Humana voluntas, propter infirmitatem carnis recusabat passionem, diuina prompta erat: The humane wil for the infirmity of the flesh, refused the passion; the diuine wil was ready: ex apist. Agathon. ad Const. Origen: Capis trepidare, & molles esse non quia trepidauit deitas, sed quia carnis infirmitatem offendit: He began to feare and to be sad, not that his deity trembled, but because he shewed, the infirmity of his flesh: Iob. 3. in Iob. The Latine fathers speake more distinctly: Hieron. in 14. Marc. Hic ostendit humanam voluntatem qua propter infirmitatem carnis recusabat passionem, & diuinam, qua prompta est perficere dispensationem: Here he sheweth an humane will, which because of the infirmity of the flesh refuseth the passion; and a diuine, which was ready to fulfil the dispensation. Ambros. Scias vitam in voluntate esse hominis, quia mortem timeamus; passionem autem Christi in voluntate diuina, ut pateretur pro nobis: Know, that life is in the desire and wil of man, because we feare death; but the passion of Christ in the diuine wil, that he might suffer for vs, Ioh. 21. 18. When thou art old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, & another shall gird thee & lead thee whither thou wouldest not: whereupon Augustine thus writeth, Ad illam molestiam nolens venit, sed volentiam vicit: Peter came vnwillingly to this trouble, but he willingly ouercame it: and this affection not to be willing to die, is so naturall; ut cum Petro nec senectus abstulerit: that it left not Peter in his old age: the like affection and desire he sheweth to haue beene in Christ, when he said, Let this cup passe &c.

Fifthly, 1. the argument followeth not, the Iewes crucified not Christs soule: Ergo, he was not crucified, or did not suffer in soule: for the Iewes onely crucified the externall flesh of Christ: but God gaue him the cup of inward sorrow to drinke: and therefore he prayeth his Father, that the cup might passe, hee prayeth to him to remoue it, that had prepared it; Rom. 8. 32. God is said to haue giuen his owne sonne to death. Augustine: Ille quanti se estimat uide, qui proprio filio non perperci: See how much he esteemed thee, who spared not his owne Sonne: in Psal. 143. 2. This argument may be retorted: for if Christ suffered no more, then the Iewes inflicted vpon him; then he suffered nothing at all in soule, neyther by compassion nor commiseration, which is on the contrary part affirmed.

6. Sixely, 1. the Prophet speaketh not only of spirituall, but of corporal punishments, that this is the perpetuall rule of Gods iustice, that one shall not be punished any way for anothers sinnes: for so was the Prouerbe among the Iewes; Our fathers haue eaten soure grapes, and our teeth are set on edge, Ezech. 18. 2. They complaine not of spirituall and eternall punishment, but of those outward calamities, which they suffered: so then, neyther are children punished temporally for their parents sinnes, vnlesse they continue in the same; for then God will visite the iniquitie of the fathers vpon the children, to the third and fourth generation of them, that hate him, as it is in the second commaundement; if both the fathers and children be alike haters of God: So Augustine saith, Malorum imitatio facit, ut non solum sua, sed eorum quos imitantur, merita sortiantur: The imitating of the euill, causeth that they onely are not partakers of their owne, but of their deserts, whom they imitate, in Psal. 108. Good children of wicked parents, if they be chastised, it is not a iudgement for their fathers sins, to punish them, but Gods louing correction to admonish them. In this sense then, Christ who needed not by any correction to be admonished, should not for vs, no not corporally haue beene punished.

2. The same soule, that sinneth, shall die: this rule also holdeth in Christ, for his soule died not: the sufferings of soule we admit, but not euerlasting death, whereof the Prophet speaketh: for that death of the soule which followeth the sinne of the soule, is euerlasting death; but Christs soule as it was free from sinne, so was it from euerlasting death, or the feare thereof. Thus Augustine also saith, Mortibus corporum legimus quosdam mortuos propter non sua, sed aliena peccata, ubi magis est in dolore cordis plaga uincientium, quam in resolutione carnis pena morientium: animarum uero morte adhuc pro alio non plebitur: By the death of the body we read that some haue died, not for their owne but others sinnes, where it was rather a plague of the liuing in the griefe of their heart, then a punishment of the dead in the resolution of their flesh, but in the death of the soule none dieth for another: cont. aduers. leg. lib. 1. c. 16. This death of the soule then Christ died not.

3. The Prophet also saith, The sonne shall not beare the iniquitie of his father, &c. but euery man shall beare his owne iniquitie: who seeth not, that the Prophet maketh exception of the person of the Mediator: for the Scripture testifieth of him, that he bare our iniquities, Ilay. 53. 11. therefore as he bare our sinnes in himselfe, so also in Gods iustice, he was to beare the punishment for the same: then according to this rule, the same soule, that sinneth, shall dye: so because man had sinned, the man Christ taking vpon him the sinnes of mankind, was punished: thus Origen writeth according to the Scriptures; Christus sine dubio, pro peccato, quod ex nobis suscepit, quia peccata nostra portauit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hostiam: Christ without doubt, for sinne, which he tooke of vs, because he bare our sins, did offer vp in sacrifice his vndefiled flesh, Rom. 3. in Lamentie. As Christ then tooke vpon him our sinnes; so he also answered the punishment.

Argum. 4. The Scripture sheweth evidently, that our soules are redeemed by Christs blood, 1. John 1. 7. The blood of Christ cleanseth vs from all sinne: Fenard. p. 441. conf. 13. lin. 5. the soule is cleansed as well as the bodie, Heb. 9. 14. The blood of Christ doth purge our conscience from dead works. Fenard. pag. 442. conf. 16. lin. 8. the conscience is a member of the soule, Reuel. 5. 9. Thou hast redeemed vs by thy blood, say the blessed Saints in heauen, whose bodies remaine in the earth: Fenard. p. 441. conf. 13. lin. 13.

Answ. 1. All this being admitted, that our soules are redeemed by the blood of Christ, we feare not the consequent, as presently followeth to be shewed; the places of Scripture alleaged directly proue the same; sauing that the collection out of the last place may be excepted against: for those 24. Elders do not describe the state of the Saints in heauen, but represent the Church militant on earth, whose conuersation notwithstanding is in heauen; this first text giueth, 1. vers. 10. We shall raigne on the earth, that is, by their faith and vertue, it is not said in heauen. 2. They are said to be Kings and Priests; which chap. 1. vers. 16. is expounded of the liuing. 3. And indeed the office of our spirituall Priesthood in presenting our prayers vnto God, is more fit and proper for this life, then for the next; in the which, though wee denie not, but the Saints doe sing continually to the prayse of God, as the Angels do, Apocal. 4. 8. and do make their requests vnto God, for the accomplishing of his Kingdome, Apocal. 6. 10. yet the prayer of sayth, which is the speciall object of our spirituall Priesthood, Iam. 5. 15. is onely incident to this life, for the which faith onely serueth. 3. And indeed vers. 9. they seeme to speake of the whole number of the elect, redeemed out of euery kinred and people.

The fathers also thus expound this place, of the faithfull in earth: Beda vpon the 10. vers. Hec is more plainly declared, that the beastes and Elders are the Church, which is redeemed by the blood of Christ, and gathered of the nations. Also hee sheweth in what heauen they are, saying: They shall reigne vpon the earth. Haymo saith, all the Elders are Kings, because they suffer not the tyrannie of vices to rise vp in themselves, &c. while they do this by the Law of vertue, they reigne as it were vpon the earth.

2. We graunt, that our soules are redeemed by Christs blood, but it doth not follow, that they are not redeemed by his soule also, and therefore that his suffering in soule should be superfluous: for by the same reason you might conclude against Christs flesh: our soules and bodies are redeemed by Christs blood: Ergo, not by his flesh: and ye may as well inferre out of these and such like places, that Christ had no soule; as that hee suffered not in soule, because the Apostles still make mention of blood.

3. Cyrril saith, Carnem suam in redemptionis pretium pro omnium carne dependit; & animam suam similiter pro omnium anima in redemptionis pretium constituit: Christ yeelded his flesh the price of redemption for our flesh, and his soule the price of redemption for our soule, de res. fid. ad Theodof. Cyrril speaketh not of the sympathie of the soule of Christ, with his suffering flesh, for all this is but caro pro carne, his flesh giuen for our flesh: but he insinuateth such proper passions of the soule, as are the price of redemption for our soules: he speaketh of the price of redemption in the soule, and in the flesh, not of one and the same price, and therefore not of one kind of passions: though in effect and in the whole all is but one price and one redemption, yet there are diuers partes and members of it.

4. We say then, that though in the vse and application of Christs sacrifice we speake distinctly, that Christs soule was giuen for our soule, his flesh for our flesh, as Cyrril saith; thereby to set forth the proportion of Gods iustice, which must be satisfied with the price both of body & soule, for the redemption of our body and soule: yet we do not seuer nor deuide the power and vertue of Christs sacrifice, but ascribe the redemption of our bodie and soule ioyntly and equally to the sacrifice of his body and soule. After the like maner in the Eucharist, by way of application we seuerally and distinctly receiue the signes and pledges of Christs body and blood, namely the consecrated bread and wine, the vertue notwithstanding whereof is one and the same.

THE CONTRARIE PART CONFIRMED, THAT

Christ suffered properly and immediatly in his soule, and not by way of compassion or fellow-feeling onely with his body.

Argum. 1. That which Christ assumed or tooke of our nature, he assumed to this end, to suffer in it, and by suffering to saue and redeme it.

But he tooke the whole nature of man, both bodie and soule: Ergo, he suffered in both: it will be here answered, that his soule suffered but by way of compassion and sympathie onely with his bodie, Bellarmin. Penard. vbi supra.

Contra. This naturall or compassionate suffering of Christs soule, did not properly make to that part of our redemption, which was to be performed by his soule, neither was absolutely necessarie to make Christs flesh to haue life and sense: seeing the deitie of Christ could haue giuen life, sense and feeling to the flesh, in stead of a soule: as Felicianus the Arrian objected to Augustine, Cur filij Dei habitus insit anima communis animam eius non animaret: Why might not the habite or forme of the sonne of God, in stead of a common soule animate or quicken his flesh? Cont. Felician. c. 13.

1. It is not here affirmed, that the compassion of the soule with the bodie, did not properly belong to our redemption simpliciter, but to that redemption which was to be wrought by the soule:
2. And by way of supposition, because it was not absolutely necessarie, that the soule should be giuen to the bodie onely, to giue life and sense vnto it: because as the Arrians objected Christs deitie, might haue been in steade of the soule: and we see that there may be sense and feeling in the bodie, without a reasonable soule: the motion and feeling belongeth to the sensitiue facultie, not to the intellectuall part: And to this purpose Idolotus Clitonius, a writer of their own flesh this distinction, that, Anima non fuit medium necessitatis, sed congruitatis unionis deitatem cum carne: That Christs soule was not a meane of necessitie, but only of congruitie, to vnite the Godhead with the flesh: Enarrat. in lib. 3. de fid. Damasc. c. 27.

I will further confirme and ratifie our argument thus. First, the assumption is euidēt, and need no prooff, that Christ tooke vpon him both our soule and bodie: the Apostle saith, In illis rebus ita se habuit ut esset homo, Hebr. 2. 17. Therefore hee had both bodie and soule, as we haue. Secondly, concerning the proposition, That what Christ tooke of our nature, he tooke it, by suffering in it properly and immediatly to redeme vs: first, it is confirmed by Scripture, Hebr. 2. 14. Christ took part with them, that he might destroy through death, him that had power of death, &c. vers. 15. That he might deliuer all them, which for feare of death, were all their life time subiect to bondage: hence I reason thus, that, wherein Christ deliuered vs, he tooke part with vs in, he deliuered vs from feare of death: Ergo, he did therein communicate with vs: but this feare was the proper and immediate passion of the soule, namely the feare of death, and Gods anger. And the text giueth this sense: because the feare of this death kept them in bondage: but the feare onely of the bodily death doth not bring vs into such bondage: so is it expounded in the song of Zacharie, Luk. 1. 74. That we being deliuered from the hand of our enemies should serue him without feare: this then is a spirituall feare, from the which Christ did deliuer vs: Ergo, he did communicate with vs in this feare: for the Apostle saith: In that, wherein he suffered and was tempted, he is able to succour vs, vers. 18.

Obiect. If Christ could deliuer vs from nothing, which he suffered not, then he doth not deliuer vs from eternall death, which he suffered not.

Ans. First, the Apostle speaketh not of Christs diuine power, and absolute abilitie, but of the possibilitie of his condition: that wherein he suffered, he is able to succour vs by the feeling of our infirmities, wherewith he was touched, and by the experience which he had in his owne flesh: so the Apostle expoundeth himselfe, Hebr. 4. 5. We haue not a priest that could not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Secondly, though Christ neither felt nor feared euermlasting death, yet he both felt and feared his Fathers wrath and displeasure that causeth it: and so he was not altogether without experience and feeling of our infirmities in that behalfe.

Obiect. If the feare that Christ deliuered vs from, be the feare of euermlasting damnation: this Christ neuer feared: and therefore he did not therein partake with vs.

Ans. It is not necessarie, that Christ should partake with vs in every part and speciall kinde of our infirmities, and in the same manner: but it was sufficient that he tasted of them in such measure and degree, as became the dignitie of his person, and condition, being without sinne: and so we affirme, that though he feared not euermlasting death actually in himselfe, yet he feared and felt the wrath of God, which striketh into vs a feare of damnation.

4. The Fathers also doe thus strengthen our argument. August. Si totus homo perijt, totus saluatore indiguit, totum ergo hominem suscepit Christus. &c. Si animam non suscepisset, animam peccata addidisset sine spe venia maneres: If whole man perished, whole man needed a Sauour, Christ therefore tooke whole man, bodie and soule: if he had not taken our soule, the soule should remaine addict to punishment without hope of pardon, cont. Felician. c. 13. By the same reason Christ must also suffer properlie in soule, because not by taking our soule, but by satisfying in his soule, our soule is deliuered.

Damasene: omnia vltra uultu arduis, in uultu aduersi. He tooke all our passions or affections, to sanctifie them all in himselfe: but Christ was sanctified and consecrate by his death, Hebr. 5. 9. and so doth hee consecrate vs, Hebr. 10. 14. With one offering hath hee consecrated for ever them that are sanctified: Ergo, by his offering of our soule, and suffering in our soule, hath he consecrated our soule and affections.

Ambrose: Suscepit affectum meum, ut emendaret: He tooke my affection to amend it, &c. Now he hath amended it, in that he consecrated it by his offering, Heb. 10. 14. Illud pro nobis suscepit, quod in nobis amplius periclitabatur: He hath taken that for vs, which was most in danger in vs, &c. that is, our soule, as he expoundeth it, de incarnat. c. 7. But Christ hath not otherwise deliuered vs from the danger, but by entring into the danger for vs: this danger of the soule is the feare and feeling of Gods wrath.

Argum. 2. Whereby Adam, and wee euer since do most properly commit sinne, by the same hath Christ the second Adam made satisfaction properly for our sinne: but Adam and wee all do properly commit sinne in our soules, our bodies being but the instruments: Ergo, Christ by and in his soule hath properly made satisfaction.

First, 1. the proposition is confirmed by the Apostle, Rom. 5. 19. As by one mans disobedience we are made sinners; so by the obedience of one, many shall be made righteous: Christ then satisfied for vs by the same wherein Adam disobeyed, and Christ obeyed, that is in his soule: for obedience belongeth to the soule, as Agathangelus ad Constantin. vpon these wordes, Philip. 2. 8. He became obedient vnto death: Quis non intelligat obedientiam humanam competere voluntati: Who doth not vnderstand, that obedience doth belong to the humane will.

2. It will be objected, that Christ satisfied onely by his bodily death, Fenard. p. 400. lin. 4. and therefore not by his soule, because it dieth not: I answere, al Christs painful labors in his life, his hunger, fasting, tentations, whippings, mockings, were meritorious and satisfactory for our sins: without death indeed the satisfactory sacrifice was not accomplished, but not only by the very passion of death; for then the rest should haue beene superfluous: and this to be the Apostles meaning, appeareth by the verse following, vers. 16. Where a testament is, there must be the death, &c. He sheweth onely a necessitie of death, that without death the Sacrifice was not perfected.

3. That there is a kind of dying in the soule, whe it is pierced with griefe, beside the death of the soule either by sin or damnation, is not disagreeing to the scriptures: Simon saith to Mary, Luk. 2. vers.

verf. 35. A sword shall pierce through thy soule: As then the bodie dieth, being pierced with a sword; so the soule may be said to die or languish, when it is pierced with griefe: what else is crucifying, but dying? but the soule is said to be crucified, as S. Paul saith, Galath. 6. 14. I am crucified to the world, when as yet his bodie was alive: So Ambrose doubteth not to say, Mens mea in Christo crucifixa est: My soule was crucified in Christ, lib. 5. in Luc. that is, Christ in his soule was crucified: which he calleth our soule, because he did assume our soule and bodie: as elsewhere he saith, Mens est voluntas, quam suam dixit, mea est tristitia quam meo suscepit affectu: it is my will, which he calleth his, it is my heavinesse, which he tooke with my affections, lib. 2. de fid. c. 3. Yet was it properly and personally Christs soule and will, but ours by communie of nature.

Secondly, for the assumption, 1. howsoever it be admitted, that the bodie is the instrument of the soule, both in sinning and suffering, yet the conclusion is this; that because sinne is committed in the soule principally and properly, therefore the satisfaction must be made in the soule principally and properly: if this conclusion be graunted, we have that we would: for the bodily paines affecting the soule, are not the proper passions of the soule; neither is the soule said to suffer properly, when the bodie suffreth, but by way of compassion and consent. 2. Wee graunt, that in the proper and immediate sufferings of the soule, the bodie also is affected: as when Christ was in his agonie in the garden, his whole bodie was therewith stirred and moved, that it did sweate drops of blood: but it is one thing, when the griefe beginneth immediatly in the soule, and so affecteth the bodie, and when the paine is first inflicted vpon the bodie, and so worketh vpon the soule: there the soule suffreth properly and principally, of which sufferings wee speake; here neither properly nor principally, which is not the thing in question. 3. It is not the reasonable soule, that is affected with the bodie; for it is a ground in Philosophie, (that the soule suffreth not) but onely the sensitiue part: but the griefe that we speake of, which is satisfactorie for sinne, must be in the very reasonable soule, where sinne taketh beginning: and so Ambrose saith, vpon these wordes of Christ, My soule is beaue to death: Ad rationabilis assumptionem anima, & naturæ humana refertur affectum: It is referred to the assumption of the reasonable soule, and humane affection, de incarnat. cap. 7.

2. We confesse, that in the transgression, both Adams soule and bodie did properly sinne: yet not in euery act of the transgression: for Adam committed some sins, wherein the bodie was no instrument; as namely pride and infidelitie: as Ambrose saith, Non Enam cibis flexeras, non mandatorum desistnerat oblitio, sed promissi honoris ambitio illecebrosa decipit: The meat did not turne Eue, nor the obliuion of the commandements did not ouertake her, but the ambitious desire of the honor, which was promised, deceiued her, lib. 4. in Luc. Againe, Peccatum Ada non longe est ab idololatria, preuarius est, se hominem putans Deum: The sin of Adam was not far from Idolatrie, he sinned, thinking that he being man, might be God: in 13. Luc. These sins of pride and infidelitie began in the soule, and had their determination there: in the committing of those finnes, the bodie had no part: indeed with the eare they heard the suggestion of Sathan, but it was no sinne, till in their mind they had consented vnto it: wherefore seeing the first sinne committed was properly and wholly in the soule, for the same the soule must properly and wholly satisfie.

3. Then, because sinne tooke beginning from Adams soule, the satisfaction also must begin in Christs soule: as Ambrose saith, Incipio in Christo vincere, unde in Adam victus sum: I beginne there to win in Christ, where in Adam I was overcome, lib. 4. in Luc. then it followeth, that the sufferings of Christs soule tooke beginning there, and were not deriued by sympathie from the stripes and payne of the bodie. We infer then that therefore Christs soule had proper and immediate sufferings, beside those which proceeded from the sympathie with the bodie, and all Christs sufferings were satisfactorie: Ergo Christ, did satisfie for our finnes properly and immediatly in his soule.

Argum. 3. The Prophet Isay saith, 53. 10. Hee shall make his soule an offering for sinne: Ergo, Christ offered his soule, as well as his bodie. Againe, our Sauour himselfe saith, Math. 26. 38. My soule is very beaue vnto death. It was not the bodily death, which Christ feared; for then he should haue beene weaker then many Martyrs: therefore his soule was verily and properly stricken with heavinesse, not with the beholding of the bodily torments onely.

Ans. 1. It will be here answered, that soule in the Prophet is taken for life; as Iohn 10. 17. I lay downe my soule, that is life, Feward. p. 440. conf. 10. lin. 8.

2. Christ, though he feare death, is not weaker then the Martyrs: for they are ridde from feare, because God doth minister greater comfort vnto them: Sed Christus timuit, quia voluit, Christ did not feare of necessitie, but willingly, for it was in his power not to haue feared: And so Augustine saith, Eum non infirmitate, sed potestate turbatum: That Christ was troubled not through infirmities but by his omnipotencie and power, Bellarm. resp. ad argum. 3. lib. 4. c. 8.

Contra. 1. That, anima, soule is taken for life we graunt; as Plal. 16. 10. Thou wilt not leaue my soule, or life in graue, &c. And Iob. 33. 22. His soule draweth to the graue, and his life to the buriers, yet by this place of the Prophet it must be vnderstood properly for soule: 1. as it may appeare by the next vers. 11. He shall see of the trauaile of his soule, and be satisfied. Here the soule must bee vnderstood properly, and the trauaile of Christs soule is not the instruction of his life, but his suffering vpon the crosse, as it followeth, he shall beare their iniquities: this was the trauaile of his soule vpon the crosse in bearing our iniquities. Again, he shall be satisfied, which was fulfilled, when hee said, consummatum est, it is finished; before his death he was not satisfied, but longed continually for the finishing of our redemption vpon the crosse: Luk. 12. 50. I must be baptized with a baptisme, and how am I grieved, till it be ended? 2. The Prophet also maketh immediate mention of Christs knowledge: vers. 11. By his knowledge he shall iustifie many: but knowledge is an adiunct properly of the soule, not of the life. 3. Vers. 11. He shall beare their iniquities: vers. 12. He bare the sinnes of many: this was not onely in his bodie, but in his soule; as Saint Peter expoundeth, He himselfe bare our sinnes in his bodie, 1. Pet. 2. 24. that is, his soule bare our sinnes in his bodie.

1. Whereas Augustine saith, He was not troubled through infirmities: hee expoundeth that place 11. 33. Christ inuenit or inuenit, troubled or stirred himselfe when hee came to Lazarus graue, that is, was moued in compassion toward him: there is great difference betwene that trouble of Christs soule, and this heauines; there he stirred himselfe to compassion, here hee is stirred of God; that passion proceeded of his pitie and loue vnto man, this is caused by the feare and expectation of Gods wrath. There are passions ordinarie and naturall, as of loue, pitie, which the heart raiseth, and againe alayeth; there are passions extraordinarie and beyond nature, as when God casteth darts and terrors into the soule, Iob. 6. 4. and these the heart hath no power of: wherefore Augustines sentence cannot be applied to this agonie of Christ.

2. Or it is true which Augustine saith, euen of these extraordinarie passions of Christ, which shewed not his humane infirmities onely, but his diuine power, in that he subdued these passions of his humane nature, and subiected them to the will of his father: so that as Damasce well saith, lib. 3. de fide. 20. Our affections were in Christ two wayes, ex vi or ex vi, according to nature, and aboue nature: naturally he desired the cup might passe; supernaturally hee was contented with his fathers will.

3. That Christ procured this sorrow to himselfe, is to make him accessarie to his owne death: his humane will was to haue the cup passe; how then is it true, timuit, quia voluit, he feared, because he was willing to feare? he feared, because it was proper to our humane nature to feare, which he tooke, as Augustine himselfe saith: Ex quo homo, ex hoc & infirmus; ex quo infirmus, ex hoc & orans: As he was man, he was weake; as he was weake, he prayed, Psal. 29. enarra. 2. And if he had not feared and been perplexed indeede, what neede the Angell to haue been sent to comfort him? Luk. 22. 43. Wherefore as Ambrose well saith: Scias vitam esse in voluntate hominis, quia timebat passi, passionem in voluntate diuina, &c. Know that life was in his humane desire, because hee feared to suffer, but death in the heavenly will to suffer for vs, lib. 2. de fide. 3. Wherefore notwithstanding any thing alleaged by Beſarmine, there yet appeareth no difference betwene the feare of Christ and his members, nor any prerogative in the head about the members, if Christ had feared onely the death of the bodie. See before for a more full answer, part. 2. argum. 2. replicas. ad Bellar.

Argum. 4. The Apostle saith, Philip. 2. 7. Christus vniuersi, exinanivit, Christ did emptie or euacuate himselfe: And as Tertullian expoundeth contra Marcion. lib. 5. exhausit, he drew out himselfe; or was exhaust: which is agreeable to the prophesie of Daniel. 9. 26. Messias shall haue nothing. Hence wee conclude, that if Christ were exhaust vpon the crosse, if nothing was left him, that hee suffered in body and soule, that there was no part within or without free from the crosse, but all was emptied and powred out for our redemption.

Again, Heb. 9. 14. Christ through the eternall spirit offered himselfe to God: whatsoeuer was in Christ, did either offer, or was offered, his eternall spirit onely did offer: Ergo, his whole humane nature both bodie and soule was offered. Thus Origen witnesseth in these wordes, Vide quomodo verus pontifex Iesus Christus adsumptio batillo carnis humana, & supposito igni altaris, anima sine dubio illa magnifica, cum qua natus est in carne, adiecto etiam incenso, qui est spiritus immaculatus, medius inter vivos & mortuos stetit, &c. See how our true priest Iesus Christ taking the censor of his humane flesh, putting to the fire of the altar, that is, his magnificent soule, wherewith he was borne in the flesh, and adding incense, that is, an immaculate spirit, stood in the midst betwene the living and the dead, Hom. 9. in Leuitic. He maketh Christs soule a part of the sacrifice.

Argum. 5. Christs loue vnto man in suffering for him, was in highest degree and greatest measure, that could be: as the Lord saith, Isay. 5. 4. What could I haue done any more for my vineyard, that I haue not done vnto it? But if Christ had giuen his bodie onely, and not his soule for vs, hee had not done for vs all hee could, and so his loue should greatly be empayred, and diminished: Ergo, hee gaue his soule also together with his bodie to be the full price of our redemption.

1. It will be answered, that Christ saith, Iohn. 15. 13. Greater loue hath no man than this, when one layeth downe his life for his friends, Beſarm. lib. 1. de baptis. cap. 6. And the Apostle saith, God commended his loue toward vs, that when we were sinners, Christ dyed for vs, Rom. 5. 7. Beſarm. lib. 4. de Christi ani- ma. cap. 8. argum. 1. Christs loue is set forth in his death: A greater loue there cannot be than this: Ergo, his soule suffered not, for that should haue been a greater loue.

2. Christ was the more beloued of God, for giuing his life for vs: Ioh. 10. Therefore doth my father loue me, Fenard. p. 470. conf. 3. Then consequently hee did not lose his fathers loue, in giuing his soule for vs, and bearing his fathers wrath.

Contra. 1. If that sentence of Christ be applied strictly to himselfe, this sense cannot hold: for first Christ dyed for his enemies, Rom. 5. 10. therefore this is not simply the greatest loue for a man to dye for his friends: it is a greater loue for one to dye for his enemies. Again, Moses wished to be rased out of the booke of life, Exod. 34. Paul to be accursed for the Iewes sake, Rom. 9. 3. As Hierome saith, Pro charitate Christi noluit habere Christum: For the loue of Christ hee will not haue Christ, Algas. qu. 9. This was a greater loue, than to lay downe the bodily life onely: but a greater loue could not be in the members than in Christ.

2. The text then must first be vnderstood of that kinde of loue, which was knowne and praised among men: some man might giue his life for his friend; but it was not to be found among men, for one to dye for his enemies: nay the Apostle saith, doubtlesse one will scarce dye for a righteous man, Rom. 5. 7. much lesse for a wicked man: but this loue Christ hath farre exceeded, in that hee dyed for vs being sinners, and his enemies, as the Apostle there sheweth. Secondly, by anima, life or soule in this place, if it be applied to Christ, it is not necessarie to vnderstand the bodily life onely, but the whole state of man: as where Matthew saith, chap. 16. 26. What would it profit a man to winne the whole world, and lose (animam) his soule or life? Saint Luke hath, If wee lose himselfe, Luk. 9. 25. so that a mans soule or life, is taken for himselfe, that is the whole man. So, where Saint Iohn saith, that Christ layd downe his life for vs, 1. Ioh. 3. 16. Saint Paul writeth thus, he hath loved vs, and giuen himselfe for vs, Ephes. 5. 2. Thirdly, what reason is there, that anima, properly signifying the soule, should be taken for the bodie? which interpretation of the word, Bellarmino refuseth and condemneth as coerced: Act. 2. 27. Thou shalt not leane my soule in grane, Bellarmino. lib. 4. de Christi. anim. c. 12. loc. 4.

3. 1. S. Paul saith, that Gods loue is commended herein, that hee dyed for vs, that is, as Saint Iohn saith, Herein wee haue perceined loue, that Christ dyed for vs, 1. Ioh. 3. 16. And chap. 4. 9. In this revelation appeared, or was made manifest Gods loue toward vs: So that indeede by Christs bodily death, being conspicuous and visible (his other sufferings being inuisible and not apparant) the loue of Christ was made manifest. 2. By the death of Christ all other concurrents and adiuncts of his crosse are signified, his stripes, rebukes, blood, sorrow, griefe, and whatsoeuer concurred either in his bodie or soule appertaining to, or accompanying his death: for by all these the loue of Christ was expressed.

Secondly, 1. neither doe we affirme, that Christ lost his fathers loue or fauour, by entring into that agonie: Iob, when hee complained in the anguish of his soule, that God was his enemy, Iob. 30. 21. and Dauid when he layd, I am cast out of thy sight, Psal. 31. 22. had they then lost Gods fauour? 2. Nay, this trauaile and labour of Christs soule was most acceptable vnto God, Isay. 53. v. 12. Therefore I will giue him a portion with the great, because hee hath powred out his soule vnto death, &c. and bare the finnes of many.

Thirdly, we see then notwithstanding these doubts and obiections, that the force of this argument remaineth inuiolable; that the suffering of Christ in soule together with his body, doth more fully and amply commend and set forth vnto vs the loue of God, seeing now, as the Prophet saith, he could not doe any thing more for vs, which he had not done: So I conclude with that saying of Ambrose, in Luc. c. 22. Mirus contulerat, si meum non suscepisset affectum, debuit dolorem suscipere, ut tristitiam vinceret, non excluderet: He had bestowed but little, if he had not taken mine affection: hee ought to take my sorrow, to ouercome my heauines, and not to exclude it:

Beside the testimonies of the Fathers, dispersedly alleaged before in our seuerall arguments and answeres, these also doe witness with vs for the suffering of Christ both in soule and bodie.

Ambrose: Christus ex nobis suscepit, quod proprium offerret pro nobis, ut nos redimeret: Christ hath taken of vs, which he should offer as proper for vs, to redeeme vs, de incarnat. cap. 6. Again, Quicquid induit, obtulit: Whatsoeuer Christ tooke of vs, he offered, de incarnat. c. 6. Ergo, he offered bodie and soule, for he tooke both.

Council. Hispanens. 2. c. 13. vpon these words, My soule is beaue: Anima passionibus obnoxia, diuinitas libera: His soule was subiect to passions, his diuinitie was free, &c. If nothing were free but his diuine nature, then his soule was subiect to the proper and immediate passions thereof.

Hierome: Perspicuum est, sicut corpus flagellatum, ita animam verò doluisse, ne ex parte veritas, ex parte mendacium credatur in Christo: It is euident, that as his bodie was whipped, so his soule was verily and truly grieved, lest some part of Christs suffering should be true, some part false, in 3. cap. 1. Isai. Ergo, Christs soule as properly and truly suffered as his bodie: the soule had her proper griefe, as the bodie had whipping: the whipping then of the bodie was not the proper griefe of the soule.

Fulgentius:

Fulgentius: Totus homo semetipsum tradidit, & totus homo semetipsum obtulit: Whole Christ gaue himselfe, and whole Christ offered himselfe: ad Thrasimund. lib. 3. Ergo, he offered his soule, not onely to suffer by way of compassion with his bodie, as it may be answered: but he offered it as a sacrifice, and suffered all passions whatsoever incident to the soule, as the same author expoundeth himselfe: Quia totum hominem Deus ille suscepit, adeo totius hominis in se passiones in veritate monstrauit, & animam quidem rationalem habens quicquid fuit infirmitatis anima sine peccato suscepit, & pertinuit, &c. Because this God tooke whole man, therefore he shewed in truth in himselfe, the passions of whole man; and hauing a reasonable soule, what infirmitie soeuer of the soule without sinne, he tooke and bare: ad Thrasimund. lib. 3. If Christ then did take and beare all the passions of the soule without sinne, then the proper and immediate griefe and anguish thereof, and not the compassion onely with the bodie.

To these places may be added the testimonies of the Fathers before alleaged: as of Ambrose, respons. ad 1. argum. part. 1. art. 6. & part. 2. Of Augustine, argum. 1. art. 4. Of Damascene and Ambrose againe ibid. Of Origene argum. 4.

Now then to conclude: 1. If whatsoever Christ tooke of our nature, he tooke to this end, to suffer in it properly and absolutely. Argum. 1. If wherein Adam properly sinned, Christ properly must make satisfaction, Argum. 2. if Christ was heauie in soule, verily and in deed, and gaue his soule for our sinne, Argum. 3. if he exinanited and emptied himselfe, and offered his whole humanitie, Argum. 4. if Christs loue should be thereby obscured and empayred, if he with held to giue his soule for vs; Argum. 5. many of the Fathers also affirming the same, that Christ was crucified in his soule, that hee gaue his soule a price of redemption for our soule: who can then doubt of this, but that Christ verily, properly, immediately, suffered in his soule in all the proper passions thereof, as he endured paines and torments in his flesh?

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER CHRIST SUFFERED IN HIS SOULE VPON THE CROSSE THE TORMENTS OF HELL.

THE OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

Art. 17.

THe Rhemists call it blasphemie, that Christ in his soule suffered the paines of hell vpon the Crosse: annot. in 2. ult. sect. 11. Bellarmine also denieth: Christum partulisse dolores inferni: That Christ did beare the sorrowes of hell, lib. 4. de Christi anima. c. 8. resp. ad argum. 5. Fenarientium agreeeth with them, (Christo non fuisse certamen cum inferni doloribus: That Christ in his death, had no combat with the sorrowes of hell. p. 448. 8.

Obiect. 1. The bodilie sufferings and passions of Christ, were sufficiently meritorious, and efficiently satisfactorie for our redemption; therefore such infernall sufferings are superfluous: Fenarientius to this effect, p. 448. 8. and to this purpose they doe amplifie Christs bodilie paines in this manner: he had a most pure, tender, delicate bodie, and a most quickie, liuely, and feeling soule, so that the hurts and wounds, which seeme but light vnto vs, were most grievous and sharpe to him: to adde then any other sufferings to these, were to diminish and empayre the glorie of them, Fenard. p. 453.

Ans. 1. We doe also magnifie and extoll the holy and painfull sufferings of Christ as much as they, and doe glorie in them; and with the Apostle doe reioyce in the crosse of Christ, Galath. 6. 16. And we meditate vpon the grievous torments, which Christ endured for vs in his flesh: as Augustine doth thus excellently describe them: Inuero dulcem natum toto corpore extensum, cerna manus innoxias pio manantes sanguine, candet nudatum pectus, rubet cruentum latus, tensa arant viscera, decora languent lumina, regia pallent ora, procera rigent brachia, crura pendens marmorea, &c. Behold the sweete sonne strayned in his whole bodie, see his holy hands streaming with blood, his white naked breast appeareth, his side is red with blood, his bowels are pent with straining, his beautifull eyes doe languish, his princely countenance waxeth pale, his comely armes are stiffe, his marble legges hang downe: lib. mediat. c. 6.

2. As we doe beholde the manner of his suffering, and the greatnes of his paine, so we acknowledge the price, merite, and efficacie thereof: we doubt not to say with S. Ambrose: Christus ille Naboth, qui vineam sanguine defendit: Christ is that Naboth, that defended his vineyard with his blood: Adhort. ad virginem: with S. Hierome, Flammea illa romphaea custos paradisi in Christi sanguine extincta est: That fierie blade, the keeper of Paradise, is extinct in Christs blood, Episaph. Nepotian. with Bernard: Christus perfollo latere, tanquam confisso sacco precium effudit redemptionis: Christs side being opened, as out of a treasure bagge, issued the price of our redemption: but this extolling of the sufferings of his bodie, is no derogation to the holy conflicts of his soule: neither doth the argument follow: Christ suffered in bodie, Ergo, his soule sufferings were superfluous.

3. We graunt, that the least paine of Christs bodie, and the least droppe of blood had been sufficient, sufficient, in respect of Gods power and the dignitie of Christs person, to haue redeemed vs: as it is in your owne law confessed: extran. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 2. Clemens. 6. Gusta sanguinis medici propter unicum ad verbum pro redemptione totius humani generis sufficit: The least drop of Christs blood for the vnion of Christ to the word, had sufficed for the redemption of whole mankind, &c. As then the least drop of blood had been sufficient, if God had so purposed, yet was not therefore the great streame of blood, that came from him superfluous: so neither doth the shedding of his blood with other paines in his flesh, being in themselves of great sufficiencie, exclude the necessitie of his sorrowes in soule: for it pleased God by the death of his Sonne, not to shew so much his absolute power whereby he could haue saued vs without his death, but his vnspeakable loue in giuing his Sonne for vs, Rom. 8. 32. and the fulnes of our redemption, in that Christ left nothing vndone, that could be done for vs, Isay. 53. 4. So that Christ now hauing paid the full price of our redemption, both in his bodie and soule, we may boldly say with the Prophet: Apud eum est plena redemptio: With him is plentie of redemption, or a plentiful redemption, Psal. 130. 7.

Obiect. 2. In hell these things are to be considered: first, inward and outward darkenes: secondly, lake of fire and brimstone: thirdly, fire vnquenchable. Fernard. 444. conf. 2. Fourthly, the worne and pricke of conscience: fifthly, malediction: sixthly, desperation: Fernard. 446. conf. 5. Seventhly, second death and destruction of bodie and soule for ever: Fernard. 443. lib. 3. But Christ felt none of these punishments: Ergo he suffered not the torments of hell.

Ans. 1. In this question of Christs suffering hell sorrowes, that wee may walke safely and without offence, this first must be premised, that these sufferings and sorrowes be no otherwise attributed to Christ, then as they may stand with the dignitie and worthines of his person, the holines of his nature, and the performance of the office and worke of our redemption: first then for the soule of Christ to suffer in the locall place of hell, to remaine in the darkenes thereof, and to be tormented with y materiall flames there, & eternally to be damned, was not for the dignitie of his person, to whom for his excellencie and worthines, both the place, manner and time of those torments were dispensed with. Secondly, finall reiection, and desperation, with the worne of conscience for his own sinne, agreeth not with the holines of his nature, who was the immaculate lambe, and therefore we doe not ascribe them to him. Thirdly, destruction of bodie and soule, second death, could not fall vpon Christ; for this were to haue destroyed the worke of our redemption, if he had been subiect to destruction.

2. For the worne of conscience, though Christ in himselfe being most holy and harmelesse, was free from it, yet as bearing our person, and taking vpon him our iniquities, he was not exempted, no not from our grieue and sorrow for sinne: so the Prophet saith, he was a man full of sorrowes, Isay 53. 3. And he was smitten and plagued of God, vers. 4. Hierome also doubteth not to applie these words, Psal. 59. 5. My faultes are not hid from thee, vnto Christ: Hec ex persona Christi dicitur; fiddle, qui peccatum non fecit, pro nobis doluit, & peccata nostra portauit, quanto magis nos debemus vicia nostra confiteri: This is spoken in the person of Christ, if he that did no sinne, sorrowed for vs, and bare our sinnes, how much more ought we to confesse our sinnes, &c. he affineth Christ to haue sorrowed for our sinnes, as confessing them to be his owne.

3. First, reiection with desperation, and finall malediction could not be fastened vpon Christs soule: yet the Scripture testifieth, that he was forsaken of God for the present in his sense and feeling, so complaining vpon the crosse, and that he was made a curse for vs, Galath. 3. 13. Christ then was, as the Scripture saith, forsaken, that is, reiected of God and accursed. Secondly, but here diuers necessarie considerations must be had: first, that Christ in the holines of his owne nature was neuer accursed, or reiected, but alwaies beloued of God: but as now our person was appropriated to him, and as he stood a pledge and suretie for vs to pay our debt, so he was for the time reiected and accursed. And to this purpose Damasene hath a good distinction, which I haue before remembered: that there are duo modi, two kinde of appropriations in Christ, unus est naturalis, one naturall and substantiall, the other communis & generalis, personall or habituall: to the first belong all the properties of the humane nature, which Christ verilie voke with his flesh: of the second sort are those, which are attributed to Christ, as bearing our person, in which respect he assumed to himselfe our dereliction and malediction. Damasene lib. 3. de fid. c. 25. Secondly, as Ambrosius hath a distinction of election: that some are elected, Non de praesentia, sed de praesentia iustitia. Not of Gods praesentie, but of their present iustice, Ambrosius 8. ad Rom. So likewise we may say of Christs reiection, that he was neuer reiected in Gods praesentie, but according to the present sense and feeling which was in his soule. Thirdly, thus then the contrarie arguments may be answered: first that this reiection of Christ, neither enforceth desperation, seeing Christ was supported by the innocencie of his owne soule, nor yet a separation from the vnion of the Godhead, seeing this reiection was not finall: so that as Christs bodie was without life in the graue, yet not hypostatically separated from the Godhead, so his soule was a while without feeling of Gods fauour, yet still vniited in person to the Godhead. Secondly, Christ thus being made a curse for vs, was not therefore made vnable to blessing; but the Apostle inferreth a contrarie conclusion, that Christ hath redeemed vs from the curse of the law, being made a curse for vs: because he was accursed for vs, we are blessed through him.

4. Concerning hell flames: first, in that they are not eternall in Christ, the worthines of his person obtained: for his temporall enduring of hell sorrowes was as effectnall and meritorious, as if they had been perpetuall.

Obiect. And why I pray you may not the dignitie of his person dispense with the sufferings of the soule altogether, and that his bodily torments onely might be accepted? Fenard. p. 450. con. v3. an. 7.

Answer. First, the dignitie of his person did beare him out in that, which was not meete for him to suffer, nor fit in respect of our redemption: for if he should haue suffered eternally, our redemption could not haue been accomplished: but for him to suffer in soule as he did in bodie, was neither derogatory to his person, nor preiudiciall to his worke. Secondly, by the same reason by the dignitie of his person he should be exempted also from his bodily sufferings, and so suffer nothing at all: so then the dignitie of his person was so farre forth dispensed with, as yet Gods iustice and equitie in the full redemption of man must be satisfied.

Secondly, 3. For hell flames, though we deny not, but they shall be materiall, though after a spirituall manner to worke vpon the immortall and sicke dying bodies of the damned; yet it must needs be confessed, that all the flames and fire of hell are not corporall and materiall: As that fire was not wherein the rich man was tormented, as Augustine saith, to this effect, Talis flamma fuit, qualis aqua guttula, &c. It was such a flame, as the drop of water, as the finger, &c. lib. 21. de ciuitate. c. 10. 2. That Christ felt in his soule the fierie flames of Gods wrath, which may be called the flames of hell, it need not seeme strange, seeing the Scripture resembbeth the wrath of God vnto fire, Psalm. 89. vers. 46. Shall thy wrath burne like fire? and as Christ baptized with the spirite and fire, Matth. 3. 12: so it was fit he himselfe should be so baptized first, Luke 12. 50. S. Ambrose to this purpose applieth that place, Isay 6. 7. where the prophets lippes were purged with a coale from the altar: Christus velut carbo secundum carnem exussit peccata nostra: Christ as a coale in his flesh burned vp our sinnes. And againe, Sicut habes in Zacharia, vnde hic titio cistius ab igni, & ille erat Iesus indutus vestimento sordido: As you haue in Zacharia, is not this a firebrand taken out of the fire? and this was Iesus clothed with filthie rayment, Lib. 1. de spiritu. c. 9. Thus Christ was first as a brand himselfe, touched or scorched with the fire of his Fathers wrath; and then as the coale from the altar he also purgeth vs.

Thus then we feare not to confesse with the Scriptures and fathers, that Christ bearing our sin in himselfe vpon the crosse, did feele himselfe during that combate, as reiected and forsaken of God, and accursed for vs, and the flames of his Fathers wrath burning within him: so that the honor of Christs passion wee confesse; that our blessed redeemer refused no part of our punishment, but endured the very paines of hell so farre, as they tended not neither to the derogation of his person, deprauation of his nature, destruction of his office.

Thus also is Fenardentius further answered, who maketh these foure the punishments of the reprobate. 1. They shall for euer want the vision or sight of God. 2. They shall euer bee perplexed with the horror of a guiltie conscience. 3. They are deprived of all the gifts of the spirite. 4. In stead of vertues, they are defiled with wickednesse, pag. 446. Of these foure, the first is a dishonor to Christs glorious person; wherein he is perpetually vnited to God, and so cannot euer want the vision of God: the second should be an hinderance to the worke of our redemption: for he could not saue vs from our sinnes, if he were guiltie of his owne: the two last cannot be committed nor had without sinne, and therefore are a disgrace to the holinesse of his nature: wherefore none of these punishments, without blasphemie, can bee layd vpon Christ.

Obiect. 3. First, none in this life are in the true paines of hell: Ergo, neither Christ, Belarminus lib. 4. cap. 8. argum. 3.

2. Hell paines are not meritorious; but Christs passions and sufferings are meritorious: Ergo, he suffered not the paines of hell; Fenard. pag. 421. conf. 10. lib. 3. 4.

3. Hell paynes are euermlasting, there is fire that neuer goeth out or is extinguished; Fenardentius pag. 444. conf. 2. lib. 9. Ergo, Christ was not in those flames.

4. Christ was mightier then hell; he loosed the sorrowes of hell: Ergo, he was not tormented in hell; Fenard. pag. 473. lib. 3. ex Fulgent.

5. The Apostle saith, Rom. 8. 17. If we suffer with him, we shall be glorified with him: we by partaking with Christ in the like passions, shall attaine to be fellowes with him in his kingdome, Rom. 8. 17. non in hunc solum: Must wee suffer then the paines of hell; before we can attaine heauen?

6. S. Peter saith, Christ suffered for vs, leaving vs an example to follow his steppes: this place is vrged by Fenard. pag. 361. 5. If Christ then must be imitated of vs in all things, then in his hell sufferings.

7. Christus

7. Christus est purior cunctis angelicis choris: Christ is purer then all the companie of Angels, Fenard. pag. 454. lin. 12. if Christ were not free from hell, how can they be; seeing he was personatier unitus, personally vnited to the Godhead, pag. 474. lin. 20. as the Angels are not: and if the elect members of Christ are sure they shall not fall from their election, and so consequently not come into hell, much more Christ, &c. Fenard. p. 483. conf. 3.

8. There is no goodnesse, charitie, vertue in hell, therefore Christ full of all grace and vertue, could not be there, Fenard. p. 447. conf. 6.

Ans. 1. The argument followeth not, men in this life cannot feele the true paynes of hell, Ergo, not Christ: for who but Christ did beare the iniquities of men? as the Prophet saith, Isay 53. 6. Fecit in eum concurrere peccata omnium: God made all our sinnes to runne together as in an heape vpon him: who then but Christ could feele and suffer the true punishment of sinne in this life?

2. The true paines, though not the full paynes of hell may be felt in this life; as likewise the true, though not the full ioyes of heauen: first, for the ioyes of heauen, the Apostle saith, Ephes. 2. 6. Hoc habet made vs sit together in the heavenly places in Christ Iesus: What is this els, but euen while we liue, by faith to possesse the very ioyes of heauen? So Paul, not yet out of his body, was taken vp into Paradise, 2. Corin. 12. 4. whereof Hierome thus writeth: Paulo in tertium caelum patuit ascensus, quem neq; ignea illa romphaa ab aditu Paradisi potuit excludere: A way was open for Paul to ascend into Paradise, whom the fierie blade could not shut out, ad Marcellam. Augustine also saith, Tu si vis, caelum eris; si vis esse caelum, purga de corde tuo terram: Thou mayest be heauen, if thou wilt purge earth out of thy heart, and thou shalt be heauen, in psal. 96. Wherefore euen a man while he liueth, may feele the true ioyes of heauen.

If the soule may in this life haue a taste of the true ioyes of heauen, then consequently it may be perplexed with the true sorrowes of hell, though not in that manner nor meature: for if horrible desperation, and a comfortlesse conscience of sinne belong to the true paynes of hell, what did Cain want of the feeling of hell torments, when he said, His sinne was greater then could be forgien, Gen. 4. 13? Augustine saith, Iudex tribunal in mente tua, sedet ibi Deus, adest accusator conscientia, tortor timor: The Iudges tribunall seat is in thy soule, God sitteth there as Iudge, thy conscience is the accuser, feare is the tormentor: in psal. 57. If then in the soule there be a Iudge; an Accuser; a Tormentor; there is also a true taste of the torments of hell.

2. 1. The least paines, which Christ suffered for vs, and the least labour and trauaile, which he endured, were meritorious; his hunger, thirst, fasting, wearines, whippings, buffetings, were in respect of the worthines of his person meritorious, much more the sufferings of his soule. 2. Hell torments in themselves are not meritorious, nor yet the shedding of mans blood; yet in Christ, because of the holines of his person, both the one and the other were full of merit: As Bernard well answered to the like obiection: Nunquid mors innocentis filij tantū placuit deo? Did the death of his innocent sonne so much please God? Non mors, sed voluntas placuit sponte morientis: non requisit deus sanguinem innocentis filij, sed acceptauit oblatum, non sanguinem stitens, sed salutem, quia salus erat in sanguine: Not the death, but the will of him, that dyed of his owne accord, was acceptable: God required not the blood of his innocent sonne, but accepted it being offered; not thirsting for blood, but for mans saluation, which was in his blood, epist. 191. As then these three things, the person of Christ being the sonne of God, his obedience in being willing, his end and intention to saue mankind, made his blood acceptable and meritorious: so also in the foresaid respects his soule merited by the sufferings and passions thereof. 3. Neither by these sufferings was the vnion to the Godhead separated, but the fruition only a while suspended. 4. And it is not thankworthie, simply to wish to be separated from God, but with a charitable affection to wish such a separation, was no doubt acceptable in Paul: who, as Hierome saith, Pro charitate Christi noluit habere Christum: For the loue of Christ would not haue Christ: but in Christ it was truly meritorious.

3. 1. The paines of hell, which Christ suffered, though they were not infinite in time, yet were they of an infinite price and value, for the dignitie of the person that suffered them, his abundance of charitie whereby he suffered them, the great visibilis for the which he suffered them, namely the saluation of man. 2. Otherwise infinitely in time Christ was not to suffer: as Ambrose well saith vpon these words, Rom. 5. 6. Christ dyed, secundum tempus, in time, or according to time: Tempora in mundo sunt, ubi oritur & occidit sol hinc ergo tempus; mortuus est; ubi autem tempus non est, ibi non solus viuus, sed victor repertus est: Times are in the world, where the Sunne riseth, and setteth, vnto this time he dyed: but where there is no time, there hee was found not onely liuing, but conquering: in 5. ad Roman.

4. 1. Christ was not bound of Sathan, though hee encountred with Sathan; neither was hee weaker than hell, because he entred into hell, but mightier, because hee ouercame hell: and as hee destroyed death by his death, Heb. 2. 14. so hee vanquished hell by his hell, which hee suffered in soule. 2. Christ did by his death enter into the strong mans house to spoyle his goods, Matth. 10. 19. And as Raffinus saith in the symbole, which goeth vnder his name: Christus non damno aliquo patitur, tur, sed ut res carcerem ingressus, ut soluat catenas in carcere fuisse dicitur, sed non a conditione, qua catenari illi ut pœnas soluerent, hic ut pœnas absolueret: Christ suffereth not to any losse, but as a King entring into prison to loose the chaines, is said to have been in prison, but not with that condition, that others are; they are there to pay debt, hee to release them of paine and debt, &c. So Christ by entring into death and hell for vs, hath released vs of our paine, and payed our debt, though not as they, which are condemned to hell.

5. Bernard well noteth three things in Christs death: In Christi passione tria specialiter conuenit intueri, opus, modum, causam: It behoueth vs specially to consider in Christs passion the worke, the manner, the cause, sermo de passion. In the cause he was innocent, in the manner patient, in the worke excellent: in his innocencie and humilitie wee must suffer as hee did, that is, not to suffer as euill doers, but for righteousness sake, Matth. 5. 10. We must suffer patiently, as hee did, who being reviled, reviled not againe, 1. Pet. 2. 23. but in the worke of redemption, for the which hee suffered in bodie and soule, wee cannot suffer as hee did; vnlesse you will make men redeemers of soules: nay, who can endure the like bodily sufferings as hee did in euery respect? wherefore in this behalfe wee are not required by the Apostle to suffer with Christ, neither is it possible.

6. 1. The same answer may serue for the next obiection: for the Apostle in the same place sheweth wherein Christ is an example to vs, in his innocencie, there was no guile in his mouth, 1. Pet. chap. 2. 23. in his patience, hee reviled not againe, vers. 23. 2. To the same effect the same Apostle exhorteth vs to bee partakers of Christs sufferings, that is, not to suffer as euill doers, 1. Pet. 4. 15. 3. Saint Augustine sheweth well wherein Christ is to be imitated: Non dixit (Christus), discite a me mundum fabricare, aut mortuos suscitare, sed discite, quia mitis sum: Christ said not, learne of me to make the world, or to raise the dead; but learne of me, because I am meeke, de bon. coningal. cap. 37. To redeeme the world, is no lesse a worke than to make the world: and therefore vnlesse Christ had bid vs to learne of him to redeeme the world, how doth it belong to vs to imitate his meritorious and satisfactorie sufferings both in bodie and soule? 4. Yet wee haue somewhat also euen in Christs soule-sufferings to imitate: that as hee being plunged as it were in the depth of hell, and in the floods of sorrowes, yet was not swallowed vp of the gulfe of despayre, but still trusted vnto God, saying, My God, my God: so wee likewise should be confident in our trouble of minde. And to this poynt also Augustine saith well: Christus exemplum sanis ad permanendum, infirmis ad conualescendum, morituris ad non timendum, mortuis ad resurgendum: Christ is an example to the whole to continue, to the weak to grow in strength, to the dying not to feare, to the dead to rise againe, de Trinitat. 7. 2.

7. 1. It followeth not, Christ is vnited into one person with God, therefore hee did not suffer the paines of hell: for by the same reason he should not haue suffered in bodie: the vnion of his person could haue preserued him from the one suffering and the other, and no man compelled him to vndertake this difficult worke, but his owne vnspeakable loue vnto mankind: so hee saith, Ioh. 10. 17. Therefore doth my father loue me, because I lay downe my life: vers. 18. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it downe of my selfe: If the sonne of God had been constrained to suffer, and for himselfe, then both men and Angels might feare; but as Bernard (before alleaged) saith: Voluntas sponte morientis, placuit deo: The willingnes of him that dyed, pleased God: who offered himselfe to bee the redeemer of the world: Psal. 40. 7. Then said I, loe I come.

2. We neede not maruaile, that the sonne of God doth beare for vs the brunt of hell, who was able to subdue it; we might rather haue mused and maruailed, if either men or Angels had entred into the combat, who must needes haue yeelded vnto it. Augustine here well saith: Mirum esse non debet a deo factum miraculum, mirum esset si homo fecisset, magis gaudere quam mirari debemus, quia dominus noster homo factus est, quam quod diuina inter homines fecit; plus enim ad salutem nostram, quod factus est propter homines, quam quod fecit inter homines: It neede not seeme straunge to vs, that God did a miracle, it were straunge if man had done it, we should rather reioyce and not marueile, because our Lord was made man, than that amongst men hee did diuine things; it is more to our saluation, that he was made for men, than that hee did make such things amongst men, Tract. in Iob. 17. Wee neede not then aske the question, how Christ suffered the paines of hell, and did other great works for vs, but rather reioyce, that God became man for our sakes to doe such things for vs.

3. The Saints of God neede not feare hell, because Christ felt it, but they by his hell sorrowes are deliuered from hell: let them rather looke to this daunger, that would make vs beleue, that the hell sorrowes of the soule haue not yet by suffering them, been satisfied for: for seeing they must be endured, and you say Christ hath not endured them for vs, this will rather strike into the mind a feare of hell, that these sorrowes remaine yet to be suffered, than the meditation of Christs hell in his soule, whereby our soules are deliuered. Wherefore the Saints neede not feare hell flames, because they were kindled in Christs soule, but to be bold against them, because Christ in his soule hath quenched them: so that now, as the Apostle saith, there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Iesus, Rom. 8. 1. And as Saint Ambrose well saith: Ille fletis, ne tu homo digne fletis; lacryma illa non lacrimas, sicut illi non abluunt, dubitatio illa non firmat, ne si tu caperis dubitare, desperes: He wept, that thou O man shouldest not long weepe: those teares wash vs, those weepings cleanse vs, his doubting doth strengthen vs, lest thou, when thou beginnest to doubt, shouldest despayre, lib. 2. de fid. cap. 4. By Christs suffings then both in bodie and soule we are deliuered from the like.

4. And in that Angels are freed from hell flames, it is the fauour of the Creator, and in some sort also the benefit of the redeemer of the world: some Angels fell by their sinne, for whom the lake of fire is prepared, the rest doe stand by grace: for as we vtterly reiect the erroneous conceit of Origen vpon these words, Coloss. 1. 20. To set us peace through the blood of his crosse, the things that are in earth, and the things in heauen: who thinketh that Christ, pro caelestibus hostia oblatum est, was offered a sacrifice for the celestiall spirits in heauen, Hom. 1. in Leuitic. neither doth Augustine fully touch the poynt, applying the redemption of man to the Angels in these three respects: first, because we, which were like to the Angels are reconciled to God: secondly, Quia eorum ruina reficiuntur &c. because their ruines and decays are made vp, with the restitution of the godly: thirdly, Quia illi nobis redeunt in gratiam: because the Angels are become our friends by the redemption, Enchirid. cap. 64. So wee doubt not to say, though the Angels are not redeemed as we are by Christs death, for hee tooke not the nature of Angels, Hebr. 2. 17. yet the benefit thereof for the suretie and preseruatiō of their state extendeth vnto them. As Ambrose well saith: Alius eget misericordia angelus, aliter homo; angelica natura eget misericordia, ne possit errare, & auersa a se dei gratia labatur in vitium; homo propter contritorum seriem peccatorum misericordiam dei querit. The Angel needeth mercie one way, man another; the angelicall nature needeth mercie, least it may erre, and, if Gods grace turne from them, fall into sinne; man seeketh for mercie for sinnes already contracted, serm. 8. in Psal. 119. Likewise Bernard: Qui hominibus subuenit in tali necessitate seruauit angelos a tali necessitate &c. He that helped man in such necessitie, saued the Angels from the like necessitie; hee that in his loue to men made them such, that they should not continue such, by the like loue hath giuen to the Angels not to be such, lib. de diligend. deo. In that the elect Angels then are sure to be preserued from hell, they are therein beholding to the bountifull redeemer, who as he hath deliuered vs from thence; so he preserueth and keepeth them from coming thither.

8. 1. In the local place of the damned, which is properly called hell, there is neither holines, vertue, goodnesse; but thither we send not the soule of Christ: who notwithstanding he felt the sorrowes of hell in his soule, euen the very sense of his fathers wrath against sinne, yet his faith failed not, neither did he lose his confidence, but in that instant, when he complained he was forsaken, he with full trust and assurance said, My God, my God. 2. Then as the ioyes of heauen may be truly, though not fully felt in this life, so may the paines of hell: and thus Christ in his soule while he liued felt them, without any decay or empyring of his holie vertues. Wherefore to vrge vs with the inconueniences, that accompanie the locall place of hell, and the very state and condition of the damned, is too iniurious, seeing none doth, or hath so affirmed.

And further to explaine our meaning, as touching the ioyes of heauen and tormentes of hell in this life: first, a feare of hell which is euermlasting destruction, or any griefe proceeding from that feare, we are farre off from imagining to haue been in Christ: yet this present hell which hee had in his soule, in labouring vnder the heauie burthen of our sinnes and Gods wrath due to the same, we affirme that he felt it and feared it, as the Apostle saith, he was heard in that he feared, Hebr. 5. 7. Secondly, we denie also this distinction, that in this life all that is perceiued of heauen, is either the hope thereof, or the ioy arising vpon that hope: for then it would follow, that there is no ioy of heauen presently had but in hope. An equalitie betwene the ioyes here felt, and eternall blisse to be afterwarde possessed, no man is so voide of sense to affirme; and yet according to the Scripture we say, that we haue more ioy than in hope onely: our Saviour saith, Ioh. 14. 23. If any man loue me, &c. my father will loue him, and wee will come vnto him, and dwell with him: where there is a dwelling, there is a present possession: as Augustine then saith, Caelum (inquit dicitur) mihi sedes est, anima ergo iusti caelum est: Heauen (saith the Lorde) is my seate, the soule then of the righteous (where God dwelleth) is heauen, in Psal. 121. The Wiseman saith, A good conscience is a continuall feast, Prou. 15. 15. where a feast is, there is good cheare present, and not hope or expectation only. Thirdly, wherefore as the ioy of heauen may in some measure, not in hope onely, but in present feeling be perceiued in this life: so also there may be a lively sense of hell, as I haue shewed before, resp. ad artic. 1. of this third generall argument or obiection. And so Origen saith, answering to a question, how God doth now shew vengeance vpon diuels: Super omnia tormentorum genera est, cum videant aliquando verba dei spiram dare, in hoc eorum flamma est, in isto uruntur iudicium: It is beyond all tormentes when they see any man occupied in Gods word, this is their flame, and in this fire they are burned, Hom. 27. in Leuitic.

Obiect. Christ neuer did forget, that he was the Emmanuel, that God said vnto him, thou art my beloued sonne, that all which his father had, was his; hee could not then be gitt of Gods fauour,

Fenard. p. 486. conf. 7. and so consequently not in hell, vnlesse you will say the ioyes of heauen are in hell: and so Christ should be both in heauen and hell at once.

Answ. 1. In the locall place of heauen and hell it is not possible for any neither to be at once, nor yet at sundrie times successiuelly: for there is no passing from heauen to hell, or from hell to heauen: Luk. 16. 26. They which would goe from hence to you cannot, &c. 2. Concerning the spirituall sense of heauen and hell; though in one and the same instant they are not in the soule, yet many times in a very short space the one doth succcede the other: as Psalm. 31. 22. the Prophet saith in his griefe of heart, I am cast out of thy sight; and yet he requieth againe immediatly, and saith, Yet thou heardest the voyce of my prayer when I cryed. 3. Christ was neuer destitute of faith and hope of this ioy proposed; but the sense and feeling thereof was for a while suspended in his soule, while he wrestled with hell: for like as S. Paul by faith alwayes had his conuersation in heauen, Philip. 3. 20. yet sometime minded the necessarie things of this life; as Hierome saith, Paulus Apostolus Paulum eo tempore, quo scribebat, penulam offer tecum, &c. de celestibus cogitasse mysterijs, & non de his, qua vfu communis vitæ necessaria sunt; Doe you thinke the Apostle Paul at that time, when he wrote, Bring my cloake with thee, &c. did thinke of heauenly mysteries, and not of those things, which were necessary for the vse of the common life, lib. 3. aduers. Pelagian. though by faith Pauls soule was in heauen, yet in his present sense he intended worldly necessities: so the soule of Christ being in the present sense and feeling of hell sorrowes, though his faith and hope languished not, might haue some intermission of the ioy conceiued; like as the soule liueth, when the body is asleepe, yet worketh not, as when the body is awaked, to attend vpon the operation of the soule: So Augustine fitly compareth Christs suffering vpon the Crosse to sleepe, Dormiens Christo in cruce, facta est conuex Ecclesia de latere: While Christ slept on the crosse, the Church his spouse was made out of his side, Psal. 16. So though the present hope and feeling of this ioy slept as it were in Christ, yet was it not extinct: it was intermitted, not subuerted; suspended, not excluded, ceasing for a while in feeling, but not dying in being. And thus farre for the answer of these obiections.

THE QUESTION CONFIRMED, THAT CHRIST in Soule suffered the paynes of hell.

BEfore I produce our arguments, I will first declare our opinion: First, this holy trueth of Christs sufferings, is either ignorantly mistaken, or else wittingly charged with some things that no man holdeth. 1. That we should affirme, that Christ suffered in his soule the whole paynes of the damned in hell: and all the punishments due to the reprobate, Fenard. p. 443. This we simply denie, and it is a great wrong to lay it vnto our charge: I haue answered this cauilt before, in the beginning, Err. 7. 2. It is supposed, as though wee should tend Christs soule to the locall place of torment, and vpon this supposition we are vrged with the hellish darkenesse, and fierie flames, and endlesse torments, which are adiuncts to the locall place of the damned, not consequents of the hell, which Christ suffered in soule, Fenard. p. 444. conf. 2. 3. It is conceiued, as though we should enwrap Christs soule within those paines of the damned, which are not endured without sinne, as desperation, indignation, finall reiection, Fenard. pag. 446. conf. 5. Farre be it from vs to haue any such meaning.

Secondly, for the further declaration of our mind, we affirme hell paynes in Christs soule, with these three conditions: that there be neyther indignitas offered to his heauenly person; iniuria to his holy nature; nor impossibilitas to his glorious worke: all such paynes of hell then, as Christ might haue suffered, his person not dishonoured, his nature with sinne not defiled, his worke of our redemption not hindered; we do constantly beleue accordingly by our blessed Sauour to haue been sustained.

Thirdly, because it is expected that leauing generall and ambiguous termes, we should expresse in particular, what sorrowes of hell our meaning is to ascribe vnto Christs sufferings; I will also, for full satisfaction in that behalfe, descend to some speciall points.

In hell then wee consider: 1. the necessarie adiuncts: 2. the effects: 3. the punishment it selfe: The inseparable adiuncts and necessary members of hell are these, 1. The place, which is infernall. 2. The time, perpetuall. 3. Darkenesse vnspokeable. 4. The ministers and torments, the spirits and diuels irreconcilable. 2. The effects are chiefly these two: First, the deprivation of all vertue, grace, godlinesse: Secondly, the reall possession of all vice, impietie, blasphemie. All these we do remoue as farre off from the holy soule of Christ; as heauen is from hell; the East from the West; darkenes from light. 3. The punishment of hell it selfe consisteth in these foure: first, there is an horrible fight and guiltie conscience of sinne: as Origen saith, Quandam veluti scelerum historiam vident ante oculos suos expostam: They see as a certaine storie of their sinnes set before their eyes: this is the worme that dyeth not, Mark. 9. 44. Secondly, they feelee the most iust wrath of God lying vpon them for their sinne; hereof is their weeping, Matth. 8. 12. Thirdly, there there is cruell indignation in them, horrible outcries, blasphemie, fretting, for the horrible torments, which they suffer: hence proceedeth the gnashing of their teeth, Matth. 8. 12. Fourthly, they lie tormented in endlesse payne, without all hope or comfort: and this is the fire, that neuer goeth out, Mark. 9. 44. So then these foure; a fearefull impression of finnes, comfortlesse dereliction, horrible indignation, endlesse desperation; that is, the worne not dying, weeping, gnashing of teeth, the fire neuer going out; do make vp the iust measure of the torment of hell: The two last of these, impatient indignation, violent desperation Christ must needs be freed from, who both patiently endured his Fathers correction, and confidently expected his deliuerance, and restitution: the other two were in Christ, though not as in the reprobate; impression of finnes, not his owne, but ours laid vpon him, and griefe for the same; and dereliction or reiection for the time of his feeling. First, the adiuncts of hell Christ is freed from for the dignitie of his person: it was not fit, that the Sonne of God, the heire of heauen, should be shut vp in hell, or that he should euer be tormented, who is neuer from Gods presence sequestred, or that the light of the world should be closed vp in darkenesse: or he that bindeth the spirits, to be bound of them. Secondly, the effects or rather defects of hell, the necessitie of the worke of Christ doth exempt him from: for if hee had beene eyther voyd of grace, or possessed with vice, he could not haue beene the redeemer of the world; for the want of vertue, he could not haue redeemed others; for the presence of sinne, he should haue beene redeemed himselfe. Thirdly, from fretting indignation, and fearefull desperation, the pietie and sanctitie of his nature doth preserve him: who being without sinne, could neyther by indignation displease his father, nor by desperation destroy himselfe.

Fourthly, thus then we doubt not to deliuer our opinion, that our blessed Saviour, as in himselfe he bare all the finnes of the elect; so he also suffered the whole punishment of body and soule due vnto vs for the same, which we should haue endured if hee had not satisfied for it: and so consequently we affirme, that he felt the anguish of soule, and horror of Gods wrath, and so in soule entred into the torment of hell for vs, sustained them and vanquished them.

Thus that reuerend Pastor and Minister of Christ, in honor of Christs passion hath written, Cum iram Dei sibi propositam videret, quatenus ad eius tribunal totius mundi peccatis oneratus se sisset, necesse illi fuit, profundam mortis abyssum exhorrescere: When he saw the wrath of God set before him, presenting himselfe before Gods tribunall, loaden with the finnes of the whole world; it was necessarie for him to feare the deepe bottomlesse pitte of death: Caluin. in Matth. 26. v. 39. And againe: Cum species Christi obiecta est, quasi Deo aduerso iam esset exitio deuotus, horrore correptus esset, quo centies cunctis mortales fuissent absorpti, ipse autem mirifica spiritus virtute victor enasit: Such an obiect being offered to Christs view, as though, God being set against him, he were appoynted to destruction, he was with horror affrighted, which was able an hundred times to haue swallowed vp all mortall creatures, but he by the wonderfull power of his spirite escaped with victory, Caluin. in Matth. 27. v. 46.

To the like effect, that excellent learned man, hath maintayned the trueth in the name of the whole Church of England, in his answer to the Rhemists: What dishonour was it to our Saviour Christ, to suffer that, which was necessarie for our redemption, namely, that torment of hell, which we had deserved, and which the iustice of God required, that he should endure for our redemption: or rather, what is more to the honour of Christ, then that he vouchsafed to descend into hell for vs, and to abide that bitter paine, which we had deserved to suffer eternally: and what may rather be called hell, then the anguish of soule, which he suffered, when he being yet God, complained, that hee was forsaken of God? Fulk. in 2. Ait. scilicet. 11. This is deliuered by this worthie diuine, as the opinion of the Catholike Church of God, and the true teachers thereof: as may appeare in the title to the booke. Therefore accordingly we confidently affirme, that Christ in soule descended into hell for vs, and endured the bitter paines and torment of thereof, which we had deserved and should otherwise haue payed, if he in his owne person had not satisfied for them.

Fiftly, to remove certaine doubts which may here arise, because it is objected, that the soule sufferings of Christ should haue dissolved the vnion of his person, Fenar. p. 474. lin. 21.

1. As the sense of damnation and separation in Dauid, when he complained he was forsaken of God, Psalm. 22. 1. And cast out of his sight, Psalm. 31. 22. did not extinguish grace or faith in Dauid; much lesse did they in Christ. 2. And we doe distinguish in Christ, inter sensum naturae & fidei certum, Betweene the present sense of his nature, and the knowledge of faith: as that learned interpreter saith, Caluin. in 27. Matth. v. 46. That Christs faith and hope fayled not, though in his naturall sense and feeling he was perplexed. 3. His soule tormented with sorrow, was no more separated from the Godhead, then his bodie yeelding to death.

2. Deeper in despaire and sinfull assaults wee confesse others to haue been then Christ: but such a spectacle of all fearefull and vnspcakable torment in bodie and soule endured without sinne neuer was, as Christ: we must not so extenuate Christs sufferings, which were a satisfaction for all mens finnes, as to make other mens temptations equal to them. This were a great inturie to his passion, and notable vnthankfulness in vs to make so light account of them.

1. Christ suffered that hell, which we should, which was more than the paines of hell metaphorically taken. 2. And hell paines were due vnto vs otherwise, then by contemplation of them; we should not haue knowne or pittied them in others, but felt them in our selues: and Christ by way of pittie and pietie prayed for them that crucified him: Father forgive them, they know not what they doe, Luke 23. 34. But when he complaineth, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me, here is more then contemplation, or commiseration of others; for he speaketh of himselfe, and from his own feeling. Thirdly, if 1. Christ sustained Gods wrath, as you say, then he felt the assaults of sorrow in his soule, there was more then an offer or attempt onely: 2. When Sathan tempted Christ in the desert, he did not conquer him by repelling him at the first, but by fighting with him, and entering into the listes as it were with him, he subdued him. 3. And the Apostle saith, He suffered when he was tempted, Hebr. 2. 18. He was not onely assaulted with temptation in his soule, but encountered with; not tempted onely but suffered: yet we graunt, that some temptations Christ wrestled with, and repelled at the first, not fastening at all vpon him, such as were accompanied with sinne: Cum desperatione luctatus est: As he wrestled with desperation, but was not overcome: Caluist in Matth. 27. v. 46. But such sorrowes of soule which he sustained without sinne, he was not onely assaulted, but for the time possessed with, as the Prophet saith: he was, Vir dolorum, a man of sorrowes, and had experience of our infirmities: and as the Septuagint doe well translate it: ἀνὴρ πένθους A man set in the plague, and knowing how to beare, &c. Christ then had in his soule actuall experience of our sorrowes. 5. Neither doe we say that Christ suffered the same paines, which the damned doe, for they suffer them not without sinne and desperation, nor in the same manner, for they suffer them eternally: but with these two exceptions of iniquitie and eternitie, we say that Christ endured more in his soule, then euer any soule in the world did or could doe.

Sixtly, though we mislike not Caluists sense, where he saith, Christus diros in anima cruciatus damnati & perditionis hominis pertulit: Christ suffered in his soule the horrible torments of a damned and forlorne man: Institui. lib. 2. c. 16. fol. 10. yet we will forbear to vse this phrase, because the Scripture so speaketh not, and least the weake might take offence at it: yet the Scripture vseth words equiualent vnto them, for what else, is derelictus, desertus, forsaken, then damnatus, perditus, for the time to be forlorne and as damned? But this we confidently deliuer as agreeable to the Scriptures, that sinne and perpetuities set apart, Christ more sharply and vehemently felt Gods wrath then any man euer did or shall, yea, we except not the very reprobate and damned. First, because the Scripture saith, that God laid vpon him the sinnes of vs all, 1. Cor. 5. 3. 6. then all the sinnes of the world concurring together, must needs bring with them a greater horror, than the sinnes of one man. Secondly, Christ was more able to beare this burthen, then all men in the worlde, though their strength were ioyned together: so that he alone was able to treade the winepresse of Gods wrath, 1. Cor. 9. 3. Thirdly, Christs hell sorrowes were meritorious, and fully satisfactory for our euerlasting punishment, and therefore in greatnes were to exceede all other, as being answerable to Gods iustice: but no mans sufferings beside haue merite or satisfaction.

Seuenthly, that it may appeare, how Christ sustained the wrath of God, felt the sorrowes of hell, and was as forsaken of God, yet without sinne; there are foure considerations necessarie to be remembered, as the Fathers haue obserued them.

1. Christ is now set before vs as a meere man, his diuine power repressing and withdrawing it selfe: as Ambrose saith, when Christ had cried out, that he was forsaken, Euidens manifestatio testantis Dei secessionem diuinitatis & corporis: An euident manifestation of God contesting the departure of the diuinitie and his bodie: In Luk. 22. he meaneth not a separation of the vnion of the Godhead, but an intermission onely of the operation.

2. Christ must be considered, as now hauing taken our person vpon him, who in himselfe was holy, harmlesse, innocent, yet now for vs presented vnto God as a pledge for our sinnes: as Ambrose saith, Pro me & in me doluit, qui pro se nihil habuit, quod doleret: For me and in me he sorrowed, that had nothing to sorrow for in himselfe, lib. 2. de fid. c. 3.

3. We must make a difference betweene the assurance of faith in Christ, and the sense of his humane nature: who at the same time when he complaineth in his humane sense, yet was firme and stable in faith: as may appeare in that he said, My God, my God; which sheweth his confidence: So Ambrose againe saith, Sensu hominis duxi animum meum esse turbatum; sensu hominis & furis sensu hominis roganti: In the humane sense and feeling I said, My soule is troubled, in humane sense I was hungry, I prayed, &c. de incarnat. c. 7.

4. We must not measure Christs actions according to our owne affections: to imagine, that because we in temptation are distempered, that Christ therefore in this agonie could not be settled: as Augustine fitly vseth this resemblance: Quomodo modum solet accidere, ut quando transmittitur in- bes per obscura uolūta intuemur, eorum caligine sic acies nostra turbetur, ut in contrarium nobis sidera errare videantur, &c. Like as it falleth out, when wee see the clowdes gliding in the ayre in a darke night, they doe obscure our sight, that we thinke the starres goe a contrarie way, de diuers. serm. 13. So the darknes of our mindes, and corruption of our nature is the cause, that wee iudge amisse of Christs holie actions, measuring them by our felues. These foresaid respects then being obserued, and Christ in this maner considered, there can follow no inconuenience, in attributing to Christs soule the sorrowes of hell. But I haue haue stayed too long in the explanation of our opinion: the arguments now follow.

Argum. 1. Psal. 118. 5. The sorrowes of hell, circumdederunt me, did compass me round about. Psal. 88. 3. My soule is filled with euils, and my life draweth neere to hell. Psal. 86. 3. Thou hast deliuered my soule from the neethermost hell. In these places the Prophet speaketh in the person of Christ: and the Papiests doe admit, that the Hebrue sheol, is here taken for hell properly. and not for the graue: therefore against them and in their sense these places do strongly conclude for the hel-sorrowes or sufferings of Christ.

1. For the further strengthening of this argument, first wee doe not say, that Christs soule was oppressed or vanquished of hell, but yet it was more than attempted or assaulted onely: for hee saith, thou hast deliuered my soule from hell, Psal. 86. 13. therefore before hee was in the sorrowes of hell, out of the which he was deliuered, as the Prophet saith, Psal. 124. 7. Our soule is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowler, the snare is broken and wee are deliuered. If the bird had not been in the snare, what neede the snare to be broken to deliuer the bird?

2. First, in these Psalmes there are euident prophesies of Christ: as Psal. 118. 43. Thou hast made me head of the heathen, a people whom I haue not knowne shall serue me: vers. 50. Great deliuerances bee giuen to the King, and sheweth mercie to David and his seede for ever: this eueralting seed of David is to be referred to Christ. Secondly, but because it may be objected, that although some places are vnderstood of Christ, yet it followeth not that these should: I answer, that the very place, alleaged, Psal. 88. 3. is by the Fathers applied to Christ: as that in the next verse, Liber inter mortuos, free among the dead, Augustine applieth to Christ, epist. 99. And S. Ambr. Liber inter mortuos, qui mortis vincula nesciuit, non captus ab inferis, sed qui operatus sit in inferno: Free among the dead, which knew not the bands of death, he was not captiued of hell, but wrought in hell, lib. 3. de fide. 3. Hee knew not the bands of death, to be held of them, or so to be bound as his vertue be hindered. I alleage this testimonie onely to shew, that the Fathers vnderstoode this text of Christ, not meddling here with their opinion of Christs locall descent to deliuer the Patriarkes.

3. First, neither can this place be vnderstood of the locall place of hell: for he saith, Psal. 88. 3. My soule is filled with euils: vers. 15. Thy terrors haue I suffered from my youth: but the Fathers, that hold a locall descent of Christs soule into hell, doe cleere him of all suffering there: as Augustine writeth to this effect, In dolore ibi constitutos liberaſſe non dubito, dolens ipſe non poſſum, &c. I doubt not but hee deliuered others which were in griefe, but hee himſelfe suffered no griefe, epist. 99. Wherefore if neither the locall place of hell be here vnderstood, nor yet the material graue, which is no place for the soule; it remaineth, that this pit, graue, darknes, depth, hell (for all these names in hath) be referred to the sorrowes of Christs soule: as Ambrose againe expoundeth the third verse: Anima mea repleta malis, anima mea utique, non diuinitas: My soule is filled with euils, my soule, not my diuinitie, lib. 3. de fide. 3.

Argum. 2. Another place, which I vrge against the Papiests, is Act. 2. 24. where we read thus, as their vulgar Latine text translateth: Solus doloribus inferni: The sorrowes of hell being loosed, for it was impossible he should be holden of it: the Greeke hath the sorrowes of death, but I presse them with their owne and onely authentike translation, the sorrowes of hell being loosed: but Christ felt not the sorrowes of hell after death: Ergo, he felt them in his soule, while he liued.

Anſw. First, Christ loosed the sorrowes of hell, not because he was held or caught of them, but lest hee might be caught: like as the snare of the hunter may be sayd to be broke, lest in a migh catch or entangle, not because it hath already taken.

2. Christ is sayd to haue loosed the sorrowes or bands of hell, wherewith others were held, and not himſelfe, Bellarmin. lib. 4. de Christi anima. c. 8. resp. ad argum. 5.

Contra. 1. The first exposition is contrary to the text that followeth, vers. 27. Thou wilt not leaue my soule in hell: If Christs soule be not left or forsaken in hell, yet it followeth it was in hell. 2. The word, extremum, to be holden, betokeneth properly, a fast or sure holding, as Matth. 7. 8. Si tenueritis the tradition of the elders: so that the meaning is not, it was impossible hee should be caught, but not held, bound or detained. 3. The phrase of the Scripture is otherwise, Psal. 124. 7. Our soule is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowler, the snare is broken and wee are deliuered; the escaping is out of the snare, as the bird is first taken, and then deliuered. 4. Origen also so expoundeth vpon this words, Cantic. 2. 10. Arise my loue: Surrexi a mortuis fractis mortuorum: et inferni vinculis dissolutis: I rose from the dead the gates of death being broken, and the bands of hell loosed, &c. The bands bands of hell were loosed, as the gates or barres of death broken: but the gates of death were broken, not before Christ entred into death, but after he had yielded to death: so then were the bands of hell loosed after they had fastened vpon Christ.

2. 1. The second exposition is contrarie to the very words: it was impossible for him (he saith not for other) but for himselfe to bee held of them. 2. In the next verse, 25. the Apostle expoundeth himselfe saying, Dauid saith concerning him, &c. he speaketh of Christs person, and not of any other. 3. The Apostle giueth this as a reason, why God raised vp Christ, loosing the sorrowes or bands of death: for him then the bands were broken, who was raised vp againe: but Christ was onely raised vp againe.

Argum. 3. That the whole punishment of bodie and soule which was due vnto vs, Christ our redeemer was to suffer and satisfie for in his owne person. But the torments and terrors of hell, and the vehement sense of Gods wrath, are that punishment which did belong to the soule: Ergo, Christ did suffer the terrors of hell.

Ans. If Christ suffered the whole punishment of hell due vnto vs: then darknes, Fenard p. 444. conf. 2. lin. 10. damnation, malediction, desperation. 446. conf. 5. second death and destruction for euer. p. 453. lin. 3.

Contra. 1. The whole punishment implieth the whole kinde or substance of the punishment, not all the circumstances, and the very same manner: the whole punishment then is the whole kinde of punishment that is in bodie and soule which Christ ought to haue suffered, though not in the same manner and circumstance: neither for the place of hell, locally, nor for the time eternally, nor for the manner, sinfully. The first of these excludeth ytter darknes, which is an inseparable adiunct of the place of hell; the second freeth Christ from eternall damnation; the third doth cleere him from desperation, which cannot be committed without sin. 2. And in making these exceptions doe we otherwise speake, than the Scripture doth, which saith, Heb. 2. 17. It became him in all things to be made like his brethren: will you here take the Apostle short, and inferre, he was therefore like vs in sinne? therefore giue vs leaue to expound our meaning, as the Apostle doth, Heb. 4. 15. He was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sinne. So then like as, when wee say, Christ tooke our whole nature, which is a true Catholike saying, and vsed of the Fathers: Totum hominem deus ille suscepit: God tooke whole man, Fulgens. ad Thrasimund. lib. 3. we meane not, that he tooke our sinfull nature: so in this saying, Christ was to suffer our whole punishment, all such punishments as cannot be suffered without sinne, as desperation, finall reprobation, are manifestly excepted.

3. If you will allow vs this exception of sinne in Christs satisfactorie sacrifice, I trust you will dispense also with the perpetuities, which includeth an impossibilitie: for the Apostle saith, it was impossible, that Christ should be held of the sorrowes of death. Act. 2. 24. and the reason is, because Christ was without sinne, and therefore could not for euer be held in deaths bondage: If then where there is no iniquitie, there can be of punishment no perpetuities, you must also yeeld vs this second exception of perpetuities, because of Christs holines and pietie.

4. For the third exception of the place of hell: first, the holines of Christs person doth exempt him, because it is prepared onely for the diuell and his angels, and the eueralstingly accursed, Matth. 25. 41. Secondly, if Christ by his innocencie is freed from the perpetuities, so is hee also from the very place and obscuretie, because they that are there neuer come from thence, Luk. 16. 26. Thirdly, it is also a question worth the asking, where the site of hell should bee; whether the place make hell, or rather the wrath and absence of God doth not cause it; and whether the diuels be not in hell? S. Peter saith, they are cast downe to hell, and kept in chaynes of darknes, 2. Pet. 2. 4. and Sainte Paul calleth the diuell, the prince that ruleth in the ayre, Ephes. 2. 2. the ayre then is the diuels hell. So Bernard saith, In penam suam diabolus locum in aere isto medium inter caelum & terram sortitus est, &c. The diuell for his punishment is allotted to haue his place in the ayre in the midst betwene heauen and earth, in Cantio serm. 34 And Augustine before him thus expoundeth S. Peter: Adali angeli carceribus caliginis in diem iudicii, ut Petrus ait, seruantur, & iam ponaliter hunc infernum i. caliginosum aërem tanquam carcerem acceperunt: The euill angels are reterued in chaynes of darknes for the day of iudgement, as S. Peter saith, and euen now haue their prison, penally, this infernall and darke ayre, de natur. bon. cap. 32. Yet neither Augustine, nor wee doe thinke, but that the diuels are appointed to a further punishment at the day of iudgement: so the Apostle expresseth 2. Pet. 2. 4. So the diuell himselfe feareth and expecteth: Luk. 8. 31. The spirits desire, not to be sent into the deepe. Thus much Augustine confesseth: Diabolo uita mors preparatur in aeternis ignis toruris. Another death is prepared for the diuell in eueralsting fire, lib. 4. de Trinitate. c. 13. Yet thus much wee haue gained, that, seeing this ayre is the diuels present hell, hell may bee in this world: and therefore it is neither impossible; nor improbable, that the crosse was Christs hell.

5. Like as Christ then is said to beare all our iniquities, Isay. 53. 11. (all is not there expressed: but who doubteth, that he bare all and not onely some) so is hee truly said to beare all our punishment:

punishment: but he bare our finnes without sinne, neither was hee to beare them for ever, nor to carrie them downe to hell with him: in all which manner we should haue borne them, but to fasten them onely to his crosse, Coloss. 1. 11. I forgive vs leaue to say, he did beare all our punishment, though not as we should haue borne it, in thaus, iustly, eternally and willingly, but to finish all upon the crosse, and in such sort, as Gods iustice was satisfied, his person not disgraced, nor his holines defiled, and yet mans saluation fully perfected.

6. And lest this phrase of speech, that Christ suffered whatsoeuer wee should haue suffered, might be thought onely now to be taken vp; Saint Hierome long before hath so spoken and written: Factus est pro nobis maledictum, ut nos liberaret a maledictio, quod enim nos pro nostris debemus sceleribus sustinere, ille pro nobis passus est, &c. He was made a curse for vs, to deliuer vs from the curse: for that, which we ought to haue sustained for our finnes, he suffered for vs, in Isai. cap. 53. And it followeth: Ex quo perspicuum est sic corpus flagellatum, &c. ita animam verè doluisse: by the which it is manifest, as his bodie was whipped, so his soule was truly grieved, &c. But it will be here said vnto vs, that Hierome saith not, Christ suffered all, that was due to our finnes.

Ans. 1. Although an indefinite proposition is not for the most part equivalent to an vniuersall, though it haue not the note of vniuersalitie: as when we say, men are mortall, it is euident, that we meane all: but it is not so properly said, men are good, wise, &c. because these speeches are particular, all are not so. Yea the Scripture so vseth to speake, Iohn. 1. 29. Behold the Lambe of God that taketh away the sinne of the world; I hope all sinne be vnderstood: for there is no sinne for the which Christ dyed not: Mark. 16. 16. He that beleueth, &c. I hope the meaning be, omnis qui credidit, euer y one that beleueth, though the note be not expressed.

2. Saint Hieromes meaning is plaine, that Christ suffered all: for he was made that by suffering, which we are deliuered from: his first wordes doe import; but wee are deliuered from the curse both of bodie and soule: Ergo. 2. He sheweth in the latter part of the sentence, that hee meaneth all both the whipping of the bodie, and true griefe of the soule: and so I hope this testimonie is cleared.

Argum. 4. The Prophet Isay saith, he carried our sorrowes, Isay. 53. 4. that is, all: Ergo, he did beare the sorrowes of hell.

For the further explication of our meaning, and strengthening of this argument: first, though the Prophet doe not put to the signe all, yet Matthew doth, that best knew the Prophets meaning, Math. 18. 16. He healed all that were sicke; that it might be fulfilled, &c. hee sooke our infirmities and bare our sicknesses: If Christ fulfilled the Prophet in healing all sicknesses, then the Prophet spake of all. And againe, Math. 4. 23. He healeth every disease, and every sickness: not some, but all.

2. Christ indeede bare these sorrowes for vs; but they were his sorrowes, not ours; as the words following doe well declare, he was wounded, &c. were not the wounds of his bodie his: so were the sorrowes. 2. If they were our sorrowes, not his, then our owne sorrowes redeeme vs, which I thinke is no good doctrine. 3. Ambrose in deede saith, Dolens domino Iesu non tua sed mea vulnera; quid mirum quod pro omnibus doluit, quod pro vno sinist, &c. Thou lamentest Lord Iesus not thy wounds, but mine (that is finnes) no maruaile if he grieved for all, that wepe for one; 16. 1. de fid. c. 7. The occasion of Christs griefe was the wound of our finnes; but the griefe was his owne: as the griefe was his owne when he sorrowed for Iudas, so was it when he grieved for all. And againe in the same place he saith, Moror eius mororem nostrum aboluit: His griefe did abolish ours: He maketh a manifest difference betweene Christs griefe and ours: therefore Christs griefe in propriety was not ours, &c.

3. Whereas Penardentius by these sorrowes vnderstandeth onely the infirmities of the bodie as hunger, thirst, wearines, &c. lib. 1. c. 11. I answer, 1. The Septuagint translate, hic doluit qui vixit, He bare our finnes. 2. If he refuse the Septuagint, let him take Hieromes exposition, Ille qui peccatum non fecit pro nobis doluit & peccata nostra portauit, &c. If he, which did no sinne, grieved for vs, and bare our finnes, how much more we, lib. 2. aduer. Pelag. 3. If Hierome content him not, Peter interpretation cannot bee refused, who following the Septuagint in the same words and sense saith, He bare our finnes in his bodie, &c. 1. Pet. 2. 24. But he will say, what is this to the purpose? Yes very much; for if the Apostle interpreteth finnes, where the Prophet saith sorrowes, what are they else but the sorrowes of Christs soule for our finnes? 4. If by sorrowes we vnderstand infirmities, I hope the infirmities of the soule shall haue place here, as well as the infirmities of our bodies, seeing Christ tooke all our infirmities, as Matthew expoundeth; and so saith Fulgentius, Animam rationalem habent, quicquid fuit infirmitatis animae sive peccata suscepti & portauit: Christ hauing a reasonable soule, did take also and beare without sinne, whatsoeuer infirmities of the soule: lib. 3. ad Thrasimund. If then he bare all the infirmities of the soule, then the internall sorrow and soule sufferings for sinne.

Argum. 5. I will adde some testimonies of the fathers: Origene maketh Christs hell vpon the crosse: Vnusquisque peccatorum, ob quos Christus iturus ad inferos, porta sunt inferorum: Euer y sinne, for for the which Christ was to goe into hell, are the gates of hell, Tract. 1. in Matth. But I trust no man will say that Christ after his death went into hell, to suffer for our finnes. Again, ille dominabatur in uerbis dicitur daretur ei pro nobis redemptio anima lesu. decepto uidelicet, & exstinguanti, quasi posset dominari eius, & non uident, quod non potuerit sustinere in tenebris eum tormentis: data autem anima eius in redemptionem multis non minus apud eum, cui fuerat data; propter hoc dicit propheta, quoniam non derelinques animam meam in inferno: The diuell had rule ouer vs, till the soule of Christ was giuen him for our redemption; he being deceiued, and thinking that he might also beare rule ouer it, and not perceiuing, that he could not endure to holde it long in torment: but Christs soule being giuen to be a redemption for many, did not stay with him, to whom it was giuen; and for this the Prophet saith, Thou wilt not leaue my soule in hell, Tract. 1. 2. in Matth. Here Origene affirmeth, that Christs soule was tormented in hell, which was not after his death: Ergo, it was while he liued: therfore that Origene saith, that Christs soule was giuen as a price of our redemption to the diuell, and by him tormented, seemeth somewhat hard, and to that end I alleage him not, but onely to proue the hell torments of Christs soule, which is here affirmed.

S. Ambrose thus witnesseth: Qua erat causa incarnationis, nisi ut caro, qua peccauerat, per se redimeretur: quod peccauerat igitur, hoc redemptum est: non est ergo immolata diuinitas Christi, quia non peccauerat diuinitas Christi: hoc obtulit Christus quod induit; induit autem, quod non habuit: What other cause was there of Christs incarnation, but that the flesh, which had sinned, might be redeemed by it selfe; therefore Christs deitie was not sacrificed, because it had not sinned: Christ offered that which he tooke, he tooke that which he had not: de incarnat. 2. 6. Though he giue an instance onely of the flesh, yet his reasons doe also holde for the soule. First, that which was to be redeemed, was redeemed by it selfe, the flesh by the flesh: Ergo, the soule by the soule. Secondly, whatsoever had sinned, was to be sacrificed: Ergo, the soule also which properly sinneth, the diuine nature onely is excepted. Thirdly, whatsoever Christ tooke that hee had not before, was offered: but he tooke a soule as well as flesh. Ergo.

Bernard: Non derelinques animam meam in inferno: infernus quidem & carcer animae, pro conscientia est: Thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell: the hell and prison of the soule is a guiltie conscience, in assumpt. serm. 4. He maketh the griefe of Christs soule his hell. Again, Sunt gradus in ascendendo & descendendo: in descendendo primus gradus a caelo usque ad carnem secundus ad crucem tertius ad mortem: ecce quousque descendit, nunquid amplius potuit? poterat iam certe dicere vox noster, quid ultra debui facere & non fecit There are degrees in ascending, and descending: the first degree in Christs descending was from heauen to the flesh; the second to the crosse, the third to death: behold how farre hee descended, could hee descend any more? surely our King might haue sayd, what could I haue done more, and I did it not? serm. par. 1. 8. He maketh the whole descension of Christ to be finished before and in his death: therefore in his sentence Christs soule descended into hell vpon the crosse, or not at all.

But it will be objected againe out of Bernard, where he saith: Semel ille descendit (i. ad inferos) non sanguis, sed anima, cum corpus pendere exanimis super terram: Hee once descended to hell, not his blood, but his soule, while his bodie did hang without life vpon the earth, Cantic. 7. 5. I answer: first, this word (exanimis) doth not alwaies signifie dead, but astonied, or halfe dead, as we say, exanimis inueni, astonied or halfe dead for feare: so Christs bodie might be said to be as dead, in that long silence vpon the crosse, his body being as exanimated with the grieuous tortures of his soule: I had rather so take Bernard, than to make him speake contraries. Secondly, he saith again, Qui tradidit astra potestates & affixit cruci suae, clares quia super infernales officinas potestatem accepit: Which did tradute the ayrie powers and fastened them to his crosse, it is cleere that he receiued power ouer the infernall regions, &c. in die ascens. serm. 2. If Christ then did triumph and conquer the infernall powers and regions vpon the crosse, what other cause can be assigned of his descension, vlesse we will say, he went thither to deliuer the Patriarkes: but Augustine thinketh, that Abraham and the Prophets were in sinu Abrahae, in the bosome of Abraham, and not in hell, epist. 99. Thirdly, and if it be gaunted that Bernard being carried away with the error of that time, to think that Christ went downe locally to hell to deliuer the Patriarkes, yet hee may very well hold the spirituall descending of Christ to hell by the sufferings of his soule, as I haue shewed: seeing the locall descension was not to suffer, but to conquer.

To these testimonies may be adioyned those which are dispersedly alleaged before: as first, of Ambrose, argum. 1. artic. 4. secondly, Origene argum. 2. artic. 1. thirdly, Fulgentius argum. 3. artic. 1. fourthly, Augustine argum. 3. artic. 4. fifthly, Hierome argum. 3. artic. 6. sixthly, Ambrose argum. 4. artic. 2. Abraham also is an euident witness for vs: who having made mention of Adams double punishment, and the sentence giuen against his bodie, that it should returne to dust, and against his soule, non solum de the death, proceedeth further thus: Ac proinde opus fuit illo ipso indice, qui hoc decretum tulit, ut ipse per se sententiam solueret sub specie condemnationis, in condemnationem se, hunc quoque ad peccatum ostendens, ut hominem deo reconciliaret hominemque totum in libertatem vindicaret: And therefore fore it was needfull that the same Iudge, which made the decree, should by himselfe dissolve the sentence vnder the shew of a man condemned, shewing himselfe vncorrupted and sincere from sinne, to reconcile man vnto God, and restore whole man to libertie, de incarnat. Christi. If Christ, sub specie videntur, vnder the shew of a man condemned, must restore whole man to libertie, and dissolve the whole sentence given both against mans bodie and soule, hee could not present himselfe as a man condemned in soule in the local place of hell; (for there hee suffered not) he followeth then that he shewed himselfe as a man condemned in soule vnder the crosse) rather than

Obiect. It will be answered, that Athanasius saith not he was condemned in soule, and that wee doe wrest him against his minde, seeing he manifestly affirmeth Christs local descension.

Ans. 1. That must be Athanasius meaning, that he was as a man condemned in soule: for there he was as a man for vs condemned, where in himselfe he was vncorrupted and free from sinne: but Christs innocencie was in his soule, therefore there was the condemnation chiefly.

2. He by himselfe loosed the sentence to restore whole man; as by himselfe he loosed the sentence for the bodie by being condemned; and suffering in the bodie; so by himselfe he loosed the sentence against the soule: he must suffer also and be as condemned in soule.

3. We graunt Athanasius doth hold the local descension otherwhere; that nothing hindreth the sense here: for that descension was not to suffer, but to conquer: but this descension and suffering is of a man in shew condemned: for like as the bodie of Christ suffered vpon the crosse, yet afterward triumphed over death in the resurrection; so he might thinke that Christs soule though suffering vpon the crosse, might notwithstanding afterwarde make a more full conquest of hell.

The conclusion of all is this, that seeing the Prophet Daniel before spake of Christ, that the sorrowes of hell did compass him about, argum. 1. and that Christ loosed the sorrowes of hell, where with hee could not be held, argum. 2. and it was necessarie that Christ should sustaine the whole punishment of bodie and soule due vnto vs, argum. 3. seeing also Christ bare all our sorrowes, argum. 4. and the Fathers heerein together witness with the Scriptures; it remaineth that Christ entered in soule into hell, and sustained the very sorrowes thereof for vs vpon his crosse.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE FIRE of hell, whether it be materiall and corporall

THE OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

Bellarmino vseth this as a speciall argument, against Christs suffering in soule the sorrowes of hell, because that hell is not in this life, neither can the flames thereof be kindled here, Bellar. lib. 4. c. 8. argum. 5. And againe, he taketh vpon him to prooue that hell fire is corporall; and so hee imagineth his Purgatorie fire to be, which only worketh vpon soules, lib. 2. de Purgat. c. 11. So that he seemeth thus to thinke, that hell fire, which shall torment mens soules and bodies, is corporall onely and materiall: and that the sence of Gods wrath is no part of the sorrowes of hell, lib. 4. de Christi. anim. c. 8. argum. 5.

Obiect. 1. He reasoneth thus from the Scripture: In every place the punishment of the wicked is said to be fire, and that the Lord shall iudge them, and punish them with fire, which must be taken properly; where no absurditie followeth: and therefore the fire of hell is corporall, lib. 2. de Purgat. c. 11.

Ans. 1. Some places of Scripture doe describe the manner of Gods coming to iudgement, which shall be with fire consuming the heauens, the earth and the mountaines: which we denie not, but that the world at the day of iudgement being a materiall substance, shall be consumed with materiall and corporall fire: as Hierome saith, Ignis dominus totus adueniet: The Lorde shall come all ferie, de saul. diuin. legis: And Ambrose, Teneamus hic positi humilitatem, ut cum vniuersis nostrum venerit ad iudicium dei, ad illos ignes, quos transuri sumus, dicat, videri humilitatem meam: Let vs hold fast humilitie, that when every one cometh to iudgement, to those fires, which we must passe thorow, hee may say, behold my humilitie, serm. 20. in Psal. 119. All this wee graunt: but it followeth not, because the fire of that day shall be materiall, burning but for a time, and consuming things corporall, that therefore hell fire tormenting spirits as well as bodies, shall onely be corporall.

2. Other places make mention of hell fire, but whether it is corporall or spirittuall they shew not: the mentioning of brimstone together with fire, Reuel. 21. 8. doth no more prooue it to be corporall, than, where the Prophet describing hell saith, the burning thereof is fire and much wood, Isay. 30. 33. we may imagine that hell fire is kindled with wood. 2. The Prophet sheweth in the same place what this brimstone is, The breath of the Lord like a river of brimstone doth kindle it.

3. Wee graunt a corporall and materiall fire in hell, but not onely, neither are all hell flames corporall, corporall; but as Bernard saith: In carnis cruciatibus per ignem, in spiritus per conscientia vermem. They shall in their flesh be tormented with fire, in the spirit by the worme of conscience, Mediocris. 21. Mediocris is the middle of the world, as the middle of the world is the middle of the world, so the middle of the world is the middle of the world.

Object. 21. Here diuers Fathers also are alleged to prooue the fire of hell to be corporall and materiall: as Gregorius, Augustinus, Bernardus, Thomas, Gregorius, &c.

Answer. First, Gregorius in that certie talke it is ignem incorporeum, incorporeall fire: but it is answered that Gregorius is falsified: incorporeum incorporeall, being put for corporeum, corporall: for he saith afterward, that this fire doth corporeum torere, burne corporally. And Bernardus doth further answer, that it is ignem scripturam, the fault of the writer, lib. 2. de purgato. c. 11. and Thomas in Summa 2. 2. q. 90. a. 1. Incipit lib. 2. de purgato. c. 11. and our copies, and consequently all booke of Gregorius, have incorporeall here is it like to be the writers fault: it is strange that there should be no true corrected copie of Gregorius.

2. We may rather say, that corporeum continuing after, is crept in for incorporeum, incorporeally. 3. Bernardus alleges Gregorius for purgatorie fire, how can it be the fire of hell, seeing the one they imagine to be temporall, the other is eternall. 4. Admitting Gregorius to be corrupted, yet he is farre from affirming all hell fire and flames to be corporall.

5. Augustinus is alleged by Bernardus, lib. 2. de ciuitate dei. cap. 10. doth shew indeede, how incorporeall spirits in such a marvellous manner may be afflicted with the paine of corporall fire: but he is farre from thinking, that there is no paine of fire in hell but materiall and corporall: nay he concludeth the contrarie, and thinketh it better, that the bodie should be afflicted with fire, the soule with a kinde of sorrow as it were a worme, &c. so that by no means any man thinke the bodie in hell to be such, that they shall not be tormented with the paine of fire.

6. Augustinus himselfe thinketh likewise, that the soules of Lazarus and the rich man, were not in loco corporis, in any corporall place, de Genesi. lib. 8. c. 1. and that the fire whereto the rich man was tormented, was no more corporall, than his tongue or finger, lib. 2. de ciuitate dei. c. 10. And he resolutely concludeth, Substantia inferorum non esse corporalem, sed spiritalem. That the substance of hell is not corporall, but spirituall, lib. 1. de Genesi. c. 3. And he prooueth, that there is an hell by this experiment, because many being terrified in their dreames, metuant ne rursus dormiant, are afraid to sleepe againe, ibid. But this sheweth hell to be rather a spirituall paine, than a corporall. Wherefore Augustinus is farre from limiting hell to a corporall fire or paine, making the chiefe part and substance thereof spirituall.

THE QUESTION CONFIRMED.

THAT THE FLAMES OF HELL FIRE ARE

not only materiall and corporall.

That as the bodies of the damned and reprobate shall be tormented in hell; so it is not unlike, but they shall burne even with a materiall fire vnquenchable, it is very probable: though it be not fit that we should too curiously search into these secrets, which the faithfull shall neuer haue experience of. Augustinus saith well: Melius est dubitare de occultis, quam ligare de incertis. It is better to doubt of vnknowne things, than to strue for vnertaine. It is sufficient for vs to know that hell fire is prepared for the diuell and his angels; and the damned companie. And I doubt not to say with Ruffinus: Siquis negat diabolum aeternis ignibus mancipandum, partem cum ipso aeterni ignis accipiet, ut sentiat, quod negauit. If any man denie that the diuell shall be subjected to euermasting fire, he shall receiue part of euermasting fire with him, that he may feele that which hee denied, &c. But what manner of fire this shall be, it is not so euident: yet we are most sure, that as hell paine shall worke vpon the soule, so there is a spirituall fire and torment, wherewith the same shall be afflicted: which if it be proued, then one of the chiefest arguments faileth them, which is vrged against the hell sorrowes, which Christ felt in his soule vpon the crosse.

Argument. 1. Saint James saith, that the tongue is a fire, which setteth on fire the course of nature, and is inflamed or set on fire of hell, 1. iap. 3. 6. Such as is the fire, such is the flame, the euilles of the tongue is a fire-brand, or flame of hell fire; it is not a corporall or materiall flame; no more is that fire of hell, wherewith it is inflamed.

Again, our Sauour thus describeth hell: Where the worme dyeth not; and the fire goeth not out, Mark. 9. 44. Beside fire, there is the perpetuall gnawing worme of the conscience. So Bernard well expoundeth: Dna mala sunt vermis & ignis, altero roditur conscientia, altero concreuantur corpora. There are two euils, the worme and fire; with the one the conscience is bitten; with the other, bodies are burned, par. serm. 16.

Argument. 2. The rich man is sayd to be in hell torments; and to be tormented in the flame, Luk. 16. 23. 24. but this was no materiall fire, no more than his finger was materiall, or the drop of water;

water, which he craued: so much Augustine confesseth, lib. 2. de ciuitat. dei. c. 10. And that this was a storie done, and not a similitude borrowed, S. Chrysostome testifieth: Parabola sunt, ubi exemplum ponitur, tacetur nomen: Those be parables, when the example is set downe, and the names concealed, &c. But in this place, si uerus est Abraham, uerus est Lazarus, as there is a true Abraham; so there is a true Lazarus, &c. Hence then I conclude, that there is a fire of hell, not materiall.

Argum. 3. The euermlasting fire of hell is prepared for the diuell and his angels, Matth. 25. 41. The diuels are spirits, and cannot properly be tormented with corporall fire: Ergo, their proper punishment is spirituall.

Though it be graunted, as Augustine seemeth to insinuate, lib. 2. de ciuitat. cap. 10. that incorporall spirits may be afflicted with corporall fire, after a miraculous and extraordinary manner, as the soule is afflicted with the torments of the bodie, yet the force of this argument holdeth: for we speake of the proper punishment of diuels: 1. The soule though it suffer by way of sympathie with the bodie, yet hath a proper griefe beside of it owne. 2. Diuels can haue no such affliction by way of sympathie, seeing they haue no bodies to suffer by. 3. That God is able by his omnipotent power to make spirits feeble the paine of fire, we graunt; but because hee can doe it, therefore he doth and will, is but a tillie kind of reasoning. 4. It is as vsuall for the body to suffer with and from the soule, as for the soule to be affected and afflicted with the bodie: the care and griefe of the soule doth sooner weaken the bodie, than the sicknesse of the bodie doth distresse the soule: may not we as well reason from Gods power; that he is able to make a corporall substance, to feeble an incorporall paine, and therefore euen the bodies of the damned shall be tormented with an incorporall fire in hell? 5. But that the diuels haue a spirituall punishment beside the corporall fire of hell (to yeeld so much for this time) it is thus euident; because the diuels are now in torment. S. Peter saith, ibey are in hell, and kept in chaines of darknes, 2. Pet. 2. 4. but in hell they cannot be without paine: but in fire they are not; for they are princes of the ayre, as S. Paul sayth, Ephes. 2. 2. there is their place; as Bernard saith, Elige tibi locū in aere non ad sedendū, sed ad uolandū, ut qui sentasti concutere statum aternitatis panem sentias proptia fluctuationis: Chuse thy place in the ayre, not to sit, but to flit, that as thou diddest trie to shake eternitie, so thou maist be now punished with mutabilitie: de 12. gradib. The diuell then is in the ayre, and now in torment: but in the ayre is no fire, Ergo, hee is in torment without materiall fire. Origen speaketh to the same purpose, cited vpon an other occasion before: that when the diuell seeth a man giuen to studie the word of God, in hoc eorum flamma est, in isto uruntur incendia, here is their flame, and in this fire are they scorched, &c. The fire of enuie then and malice, without any materiall flame, doth scorch the euill spirits.

I omit here Origens reasons against the corporall fire of hell: first, because hell is full of darknes, and the propertie of corporall fire is to lighten or illuminate: but so shall not that fire in hell: Nescio, si ille ignis, qui in futuro seculo incendit, habeat & aliquid, quod illumet: I cannot tell (saith he) whether that fire, which shall burne in the next world, haue any thing to giue light with, Hom. 13. Exod. Secondly, he useth a better reason than this, grounded vpon Saint Pauls words, The things which are seene are temporall, 2. Cor. 4. 18. Necesse est ergo, si uisibilis sit ignis ut sit temporalis: It is necessarie therefore, if fire be visible, that it be but temporall, Tract. 34. in Matth. So hee concludeth hell fire to be inuisible; if it be inuisible, then also incorporall: for it is the propertie of corporall fire to be visible. But I vrge not Origens reasons, I onely produce them: neither doe I relie vpon his iudgement in this point, seeing Hierome noteth this to be one of Origens errors: Gebenna tormenta non ponit in supplicijs, sed in conscientia peccatorum: He doth not place hell torments in punishment, but in the conscience of sinne, Hieron. ad Animum. But neither of them is to bee excluded.

I conclude then with S. Ambrose: Ibi erit stridor dentium, stridor dentium prodit indignantis affectum, ad quod sero unumquengue poeniteat, &c. There shall bee gnashing of teeth, gnashing of teeth bewrayeth an angrie affection, because they repent too late, &c. in 12. Luc. Likewise Augustine, who reckoneth thele among the punishments of liell: Vermis conscientia, ignita lachryma, dolor sine remedio, absentia Christi, qua sola omnibus panis intolerabilior: The worme of conscience, fierie teares, remediless griefe, the absence of Christ more intolerable, than all griefe beside, de triplic. habitac. 2. 2. Ergo, in hell, beside corporall fire, there is spirituall torment.

THE FIFT PART, WHETHER CHRIST AP- peared before Gods tribunall, as guiltie of our sinnes.

FErudentius*, that cauilling Frier, hauing nothing to obiect against this position of Caluin; Opor. Artic. 19. tuit Christum sibi ad dei tribunal, ut eunctorum nostrorum malefactorum reum: It was behoouefull that Christ should stand before Gods tribunall as guiltie of all our sins, Instit. lib. 2. c. 16. ser. 12. He inuerteth, or rather peruerteth the question, and propoundeth to himselfe to proue, that Christ was not reus peccator, was not indeede a sinner: confuting that, which no man affirmeth.

Argum. Iohn. 1. 29. Chriſt is the lambe of God that taketh away the ſinne of the world: Ergo, he is no ſinner; for then he could not take away ſinne. Hebr. 4. 15. he was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne. Hebr. 7. 26. ſuch an high prieſt is become vs to haue, which is holy, harmeleſſe, vndefiled. Fenard. p. 463.

To this ende Bernard is alleadged: electe puer, &c. holy child, what haſt thou committed worthie of ſo great confuſion? truly nothing, Ego homo perditus, totius perditionis tua cauſa exiti: I O man of perdition, was the cauſe of thy perdition. &c. ſerm. de paſſion. p. 465.

Anſw. Firſt, I anſwere the Frier, as Auguſtine did Petilian the Donatiſt, who impudently charged him with a cleane contrarie matter: Quemadmodum ſi mihi diceret, quod ego Petilianus ſum, non inuenirem, quomodo te reſellerem, niſi aut iocantem riderem, aut vi inſanientem dolerem: hoc mihi nunc faciendum eſſe video, ſed quia te iocari non credo, vides quid reſtat: Like as if you ſhould ſay to me, that I am Petilian, I could not finde how to reſute you, but eyther to laugh at your folly, or to grieue for your phrenſie; ſo I muſt do at this time, but becauſe the Frier iſteth not, but is in good earneſt, you know what remaineth: cont. Petelian. 2. 38. Thus dealeth the Frier with Caluſine, charging him with that he neuer held, as if he ſhould ſay to him, that he was Fenardentius not Caluſine, Augu- ſtine would haue iudged this eyther to be fooliſhnes or madnes in him.

2. I ſay with Hierom, Posſum omnes propoſitionum riuulos vno veritatis ſole ſeccare, I can drie vp all thoſe allegations with the ſunne of truth: for we confeſſe Chriſt to be the vnſpotted lambe, to haue beene tempted without ſinne, to be an holy and vndefiled prieſt: far be it from vs to think or ſpeake otherwiſe of Chriſt; he himſelfe ſaith: The prince of this world commeth and hath nought in me: Iohn. 14. 30. and we confeſſe with Auguſtine, Iſte eſt agnus qui in altari crucis hoſtia viuua deo paſtri pro nobis in odorem ſuauitatis oblatus eſt: This is the lambe, which was offered on the altar of the croſſe a liuing ſacrifice vnto God his father for vs to be a ſauour of ſweetnes. ſerm. de tempor. 150.
But all this being confeſſed and granted, that Chriſt in himſelfe was the vnſpotted and vndefiled lambe, it followeth not, but that for vs and in our perſon he taking vpon him our ſinnes, ſtoode as guiltie thereof before God.

THE QUESTION RESOLVED.

Chriſt was in himſelfe moſt holy, moſt pure, moſt innocent, hereunto we moſt willingly ſub-ſcribe: yet notwithstanding, he tooke vpon him the burthen of our ſins, and made our debt his owne, and ſo as our ſuretie preſented himſelfe as indebted for vs, and in our perſon guiltie of our ſinnes: this the Frier denieth, p. 467. 10. But we proue it thus:

Argum. 1. The Prophet Eſay ſaith, He ſhall beare their iniquities, Eſay. 53. 11. How otherwiſe could he beare them, but by laying them vpon himſelfe?

Anſw. By ſinne the prophet vnderſtandeth the puniſhment for ſin, which Chriſt vnderooke.
p. 467. 10. Fenard.

Contra. 1. Saint Peter otherwiſe expoundeth the prophet, 1. Pet. 2. 24. who in his bodie bare our ſinnes, that we being deliuered from ſinne ſhould liue in righteouſnes: as he ſaith we are deliuered from ſinne, ſo Chriſt bare our ſinnes but we are deliuered not onely from the puniſhment of ſinne, but from ſinne it ſelfe to liue in righteouſnes, Ergo.

2. The prophet alſo expoundeth himſelfe: God hath laid vpon him the iniquitie of vs all: verſ. 6.
here iniquitie is taken for ſinne it ſelfe, as the forepart of the verſe ſheweth, we like ſheepe are gone aſtray, &c. and then it followeth, he hath laid vpon him, &c. He ſpeaketh not of our ſmart, but of our fault, not of the terrors of our life, but the errors.

3. Thus Hierom alſo expoundeth the prophet: vpon theſe words, Pſal. 69. 5. My faults are not hid from thee: Hoc ex perſona Chriſti dicitur, ſi ille qui peccatum non fecit, pro nobis doluit & peccata no- ſtra portauit, &c. This is ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt, if he, which did no ſinne, grieved for vs, and did beare our ſinnes, how much more we: lib. 2. aduerſ. Pelagian. Heere Hierom ſaith that Chriſt ſo bare our ſinnes, as he did no ſinne himſelfe, and in ſuch ſort, that he counteth our ſinnes his.

Argum. 2. 2. Cor. 5. 21. He made him to be ſinne for vs, that knew no ſinne, that we might be the righteouſnes of God in him: the Apoſtle ſaith directly, that Chriſt was made ſinne for vs, that is, our ſinne was imputed vnto him.

Anſw. By ſinne here is vnderſtood the ſacrifice for ſinne, or the puniſhment for ſinne, Fenard.
p. 467. ſo Auguſtine and Ambroſe expound it.

Contra. 1. Ambroſe indeed ſo expoundeth, but he excludeth not the other ſenſe, but ſaith hee was offered both a ſacrifice for ſinne, and as a ſinner himſelfe: Chriſtus quoniam oblatus eſt pro pec- catis, non immerito peccatum factus dicitur: Chriſt becauſe he was offered for ſinne, is laid not amiſſe to be made ſinne, &c. And againe, Chriſtus quaſi peccator occiſus eſt, ut peccatores iuſtificarentur apud deum: Chriſt was laine as a ſinner, that ſinners might be iuſtified before God: in 2. Cor. c. 5.

2. The

2. The text it selfe giueth this sence, that sinne is to be taken properly, he is made sinner, as hee knew no sinne: but he knew not sinne properly, not the punishment of sinne: Ergo, he was made sin, not the punishment onely. Againe, as we are made righteousness before God, so is he made sinne; but his righteousness is verely imputed to vs: Ergo, our sinnes are imputed to him: so then as we are sinners in our selues, yet righteous by the imputatiō of his righteousness; so he being mozt righteous in himselfe is made sinne by the imputation of our sinnes.

3. Hierome also thus expoundeth: Deu qui eum dicitur fecisse maledictū ipse pro nobis eum fecit peccatum: God which is said to haue made him a curse for vs, hath made him also sinne for vs: in 3. ad Galat. As the Apostle then saith, he was made a curse for vs; Galat. 3. 13. so was he made sinne: but he was not onely made a sacrifice or a punishment for our curse, but the curse it selfe. Ergo, so was he made sinne.

Wee doe not then say, that Christ was polluted, or defiled with our sinnes, but onely reputed and taken for vs and in our person as a sinner: and thus in charitie we are to vnderstand them, that haue somewhat here exceeded in termes, and not so wrett and turne their words, as though they did meane to blemish Christ with the least touch of sinne: for as Hierome well saith: Quid prodest vulneribus tuis, si ego sum vulneratus, &c. What shal it help your wounds to see others wounded? apolog. 3. aduers. Rufin. so it is no defense or excuse of ones error, to see an other to erre. I find that in the counsell of Basil. sess. 22. this assertion of one Augustine Archbishop of Nazareth was condemned, who should say, Christus quotidie peccat, & ex quo fuit Christus quotidie peccans: That Christ daily sinneth, and euer since Christ was he sinned daily: quam assertionem pia fidelium animas sine horrore audire nequeunt: Which assertion godly eares cannot heare without trembling, &c. although this Archbishop might haue some tolerable sence in this sentence, yet because the speech was vnusuall and offensive, it was miliked: so, though Christ were in our person presented vnto God as guiltie of our sinnes by imputation, yet we wish that all hard and vnwonted phrases of speech be carefully auoided, as to say Christ was the greatest adulterer, blasphemer, &c. because all the sinne of the elect were laid vpon his backe: it is sufficient for vs to say with the Apostle in general, that Christ was made sinne for vs, and not to descend to particulars.

So then I conclude this place with that saying of Saint Hierome: Iesus filium Iosedech quod interpretatur iustus domini, sacerdos magnus describitur vestibus sordidis, qui peccata nostra non fecit, & tamen peccata nostra portauit, &c. diciturq; ei post pugnam & victoriam, auferite vestem sordidam ab eo; ecce abscondite iniquitatem, &c. Iesus the sonne of Iosedech, which is interpreted the Lords iust one the high priest is described with filthie garments, which did no sinne, and yet bare our sinne: and it is said vnto him after the fight and victory, take away the filthy garments from him; behold I haue taken away thy sinne, &c. thus Hierome expoundeth that place, Zach. 3. 4. where we see that our sinnes which were as the filthy garments put vpon Christ, are called his sinnes.

Likewise where the prophet Isay saith, vidimus eum & non habuit speciem & decorem: We sawe him, and he had neither forme nor beautie, Isay. 53. 2. those words Augustine expoundeth thus: Ecce pulcher ille & speciosus pro filijs hominum veniebat ad faciendam, ut sacerdos pulchrum dicitur & hoc quia in scripturis inuenio, ipse factus factus est, &c. Behold he that was the fayrest among the sons of men came to her that was filthy to make her faire: yea I will say further, because I finde it in scripture, hee himselfe was made filthie, &c. in Psalm. 103. part. 1. What else was this filthines which Christ tooke, but the imputation of our sins; for otherwise the iniuries which were offered to his bodie made him more beautifull, in that they commended his patience, in so much that the Centurion confessed he was iust and a good man, Luke. 23. 50. And though the souldiers mocked him, when they cloathed him with purple, and set a crowne of thornes vpon his head, and bowed vnto him, yet they did ignorantly honour, whom they in their heart despised: and so Cyprian expoundeth that place, Cantic. 3. 11. Come forth ye daughters of Ierusalem, and see the crowne wherewith his mother crowned him, of the crowne of thornes, which Ierusalem Christs mother after the flesh set vpon him. Cyprian in symbol. So likewise Saint Ambrose: Illis licet defuit boni operis affectus, deo tamen suum non defuit honor, quia saluatur vix, coronatur ut victor, ut deus & dominus adoratur: Though they in so doing had no deuotion, yet God wanteth not his honour, for he is saluted as a King, crowned as a conqueror, worshipped as God, in 22. Luc.

Lastly, where the Apostle saith, Rom. 8. 3. De peccato damnauit peccatum in carne: Through sinne he condemned sinne in the flesh; Origene thus interpreteth: Christus sine dubio pro peccato, quod ex nobis suscepit quia peccata nostra portauit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hostiam: Christ out of doubt for sinne, which he tooke of vs, because he bare our sinnes, did offer his flesh an vndefiled sacrifice. Hom. 3. in Leuit. And againe, Per peccatum suum, i. carnem in crucem actam in qua nostra peccata suscepit, nos credentes liberauit a peccato: By his sinne, that is his flesh put to the crosse, wherein he had taken our sinnes, he deliuereth vs beleeuers from sinne: Ibid. From this sentence of Origene I gather, 1. that Christs flesh is called sinne, not because it was a sacrifice for sinne, or was punished for sinne, but because it tooke sinne, 2. that we are deliuered from that sinne, which Christ tooke, which was not the punishment of sinne, but sinne indeed. 3. that notwithstanding the bearing of our sinnes in his flesh, yet it was an vnde-filed sacrifice vnto God.

The summe of all this: that seeing all our iniquities were laid vpon Christ, Argum. 1. seeing he was made sinne for vs, Argum. 2. he was clothed with our filthie rayments, Argum. 3. he became deformed and without beautie for vs, Argum. 4. he by his sinne, that is his flesh, wherein he bare our sinne condemned our sinne, Argum. 5. we doubt not to affirme and verely belecue to our endlesse comfort, that Christ was reputed before God, as guiltie of all our sinnes, which he willingly vndertooke, and so satisfied for them for ever.

THE SIXT PART, WHETHER CHRIST WERE GRIE-ued and perplexed in his conscience and soule for the sinnes of the elect, which were laide vpon him.

THE OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

F Euardentius cannot in any case endure this, that Christ should suffer or feele any thing in his conscience: Non in conscientia sua patiendū. p. 449. 10. but onely admitteth an excoessive grieif in Christ, by way of contemplation in beholding the sorrowes of the world: as hauing reckoned vp in particular a great number of sinnes, he concludeth thus: Hec & alia totius mundi scelera illi. eo expianda sibi animo amplectens &c. tantū totius cordis animique paritudine dolet ut par ei nemo unquam fuerit: these and other sinnes of the whole world Christ beholding in his mind to be by him expiated, is grieved with such pensuencesse of minde, as no man was euer like to him, p. 455. So then by way of compassion and contemplation he doth acknowledge Christ to haue beene grieued and not otherwise.

Argum. Speciall reasons and arguments for this their opinion they haue none, but such as haue beene before objected in generall against the suffering of Christ in soule: as Heb. 10. 13. With one offering hath he consecrated for ever, them that are sanctified: Coloss. 2. 20. Pacifying by the blood of his crosse, &c. Perfite reconciliation was wrought by the blood of his crosse, and by one oblation, not many: Ergo, no such grieif or perplexitie was necessarie. Euarden. p. 449. conf. 10.

Answ. 1. Though Christ suffered both in bodie and soule, yet was it but one sacrifice, which the Apostle calleth the sacrifice of himselfe, Heb. 9. 26. for the soule and bodie made but one Christ, yet this sacrifice had diuers partes: as Heb. 10. 10. it is called the offering of his bodie, vers. 19. his blood is mentioned, vers. 20. he speaketh of his flesh; will ye make as many sacrifices, as were parts of Christs sufferings?

2. If ye vrge blood strictly, and ascribe all vnto the blood and nothing else, how will ye reconcile the Apostle in the same place, Coloss. 1. 22. In the bodie of his flesh thorough death: the blood is not his bodie, nor his flesh. 2. The Apostle ascribeth our reconciliation to his death: but his blood was shed after his death, as may appeare, Iohn 19. Christ giueth vp the ghost, vers. 30. and afterward his side is pierced, vers. 34. This is well noted by S. Ambrose, Post mortem percussus est non ante, ut exitus eius voluntarius non necessarius videretur: He was pierced after death, not before, that his death might seeme voluntarie, In Luc. c. 22. Wherefore ye are forced against your wils, by one part of the crosse to vnderstand the rest, vnlesse you will exclude Christs blood. 3. If any man say, though Christs side were pierced after his death, yet he shedde much blood before, when he was whipped, and pricked with thornes, and nayled to the crosse.

Answ. Though we extenuate not the least drops of Christs blood: yet the blood which issued with water out of his side, is especially obserued by the Apostle, 1. Iohn 5. 6. And Bernard saith, Perfossa latere in cruce voluit confesso sacro pecuniam quia latebat in pretium nostra redemptionis effundit: His side being launced vpon the crosse, as if the treasure bagge had bene opened, the money was powred out, that payed our price, in nat. Dom. serm. 2. 4. And where the Apostle saith, Iesus came by water and blood, 1. Iohn 5. 6. if blood be strictly vrged, then the water is excluded, which was also a necessary part of the sacrifice: Christus venit non in aqua solum, sed in aqua & sanguine: Moses in aqua solum venit, vnde & nomen habet, sed non redemit: Christ came not in water onely; but in water and blood; Moses came in water onely, whereof he hath his name, but he redeemed vs not, Bernard. ibid.

3. Some will say, we yeeld you that all Christs bodily sufferings may figuratiuely be expressed by some one part or other, as by blood, flesh, &c. but it were improper thereby to signifie the soule sufferings. Answ. Yet it is not vnusuall, by flesh to vnderstand the soule also, and so consequently by the sufferings of the one to insinuate the passions of the other: as Augustine sheweth against the Apollinarists. Videbit omnis caro, &c. All flesh shall see the saluation of God: where flesh is taken for the whole man, yea for the man regenerate, for carnall men cannot see the saluation of God:

lib. 83. qu. 80. And again, seeing it is euident in Scripture, that Christ had anguish in soule, when he saith, My soule is heauie vnto death; they must comprehend this also vnder the blood of the crosse: or els it is excluded: But Bernard for that excellently saith, Tantum propter nos agabatur, ut non modo passio corporis, sed cordis affectio pro nobis faceret: all was done for vs, that not only the passion of his body, but the affection of his heart should make to our saluation, in die S. Andrea serm. 1.

4. By the crosse also of Christ, not the materiall tree onely, whereon he suffered, or the visible torments which hee endured, but the whole myserie of our redemption, which by his chastisements was punished, is expressed: as S. Paul saith, he will not reioyce but in the crosse of Christ, whereby he was crucified to the world, Galath. 6. 14. It was not the materiall crosse, whereby Paul was crucified, but the spiritual force and efficacie of Christs sacrifice: So in the same place vers. 12. he speaketh of suffering persecution for the crosse of Christ, that is, the Gospel and faith of Christ: So also Augustine taketh the crosse: Nemo potest transire mare huius seculi, nisi crucem Christi portauerit: No man can passe through the sea of this world, vnlesse he be borne vp by the crosse of Christ, &c. and afterward he expoundeth himselfe, Credo in crucifixum, & poteris peruenire: Beleeue in him, that was crucified, and thou maist go through, in Psa. 143. Thus then I truit it is euident, that neither the blood, nor the wood of Christs crosse do abolish or diminish the blessed sufferings of Christ in his soule.

THE QUESTION CONFIRMED.

Christ in himselfe being holy, innocent, vndefiled, was touched with no conscience of sinne; as Augustine well saith, Inter iudicem iustum, & conscientiam tuam, noli timere nisi causam tuam: Betwene the Iust iudge and thy conscience, feare nothing but thy cause, in Psa. 37. yet we do beleeue to our great comfore, that as Christ in great compassion toward vs, did assume and appropriate our finnes to himselfe, making them as it were his owne; so he also in his soule and conscience did trauaile with exceeding griefe and sorrow for our finnes, as for his owne.

Argum. 1. The Apostle saith, Hebr. 2. 17. It became him in all things to be made like vnto his brethren: and Hebr. 4. 15. He was tempted in like sort, yet without sinne: if Christ then had experience of all our tentations and sorrowes, but without sinne; then of the trouble also and perplexitie of conscience, which is in vs, but in him without sinne: so Fulgentius saith; Rationalem animam habens, quicquid fuit infirmitatis anima sine peccato suscepit & pertulit, ut dum humana anima passiones in anima, quam accepit, vinceret, nostras quoque animas ab infirmitatibus liberaret: Having a reasonable soule, whatsoeuer infirmities of the soule without sinne hee tooke and bare, that while hee ouercame the passions of mans soule in his soule which he tooke, he might also deliuer our soules from infirmities, ad Thrasimund. lib. 3. Damascone to the like effect: in tanta uoluntate uti hominis animam sustineret: hee endured our grieues, preparing for vs the victorie ouer them, de fid. orthodox. lib. 3. c. 24. What assurance then should we haue, not to be swallowed vp of griefe, when we are touched with conscience of sin, but that Christ in himselfe ouercame these our tentations? And seeing S. Peter saith, that he bare our finnes, 1. Pet. 2. 24. and the Prophet saith, that God layd vpon him the iniquities of vs all, Isay. 53. 6. how could our finnes be diuorced and separated from their sorrowes? if Christ then truly bare our finnes, he sustayned also the griefe of conscience for them, which is the inseparable companion of our finnes. Therefore as Origen saith, Quoniam semel assumpsit hominem, vitur omnibus quae sunt in homine: Because he once tooke vpon him man, he vseth all, that is in man: homil. 13. in Matth. and S. Ambrose: Munus mihi contulerat, nisi meum suscepisset affectum: ergo pro me doluit, qui nihil habuit, quod pro se doleret: suscepit crucis crucem meam, ut mihi suam laetitiam largiretur, debuit dolorem suscipere, ut vinceret tristitiam, non excluderet: Hee had done little for me, if he had not taken mine affection; therefore he was grieved for me, who had nothing to be grieved for in himselfe: he tooke my sorrow, to giue me his ioy: he was to take my sorrow to extenuate my griefe, not to exclude it: in 22. Luc. S. Ambrose giueth three notable reasons of our griefe in Christ: 1. because if he had not taken all our affections, he had not done for vs what he could. 2. He tooke griefe to giue vs ioy, but ioy of conscience he giueth vs: Ergo, he had griefe of conscience. 3. No sorrow in vs is overcome, which was excluded from Christ, therefore if he had not the contrition and trouble of spirite, we haue no hope to subdue it.

Argum. 2. That heauines and griefe of soule, which Christ had vpon the crosse, and before in his agonie; at other times he had not: for the same griefe would haue wrought the same effects, as to cause him to sweate drops of blood, and to complaine of his forsaking: but Christ before did sorrow in compassion and commiseration, as when he wept ouer Ierusalem: yea and Origen saith, that euen now our finnes are a griefe to Christ; Saluator meus luget etiam nunc peccata mea, saluator meus latari non potest, dum ego in iniquitate permaneo: est tam diu in marore, donec ego perfuso in errore: My Sauour doth euen now mourne for my sinne: my Sauour cannot reioyce, while I of sinne make choyce: he is in sorrow, as long as I am in sinne, Hum. 7. in Lentis. Which is agreeable to the saying of the Apostle, Griens non est spiritus, Ephes. 4. 30. But Christs sorrow vpon the crosse, was not that wherewith he was touched before, and in some sort since: Ergo, it was not a sorrowe onely in compassion or commiseration.

Argum. 3. The Fathers are here very plentifull, beside these testimonies alleaged: First, Hierome, Psal. 69. 5. Tu nosti insipientiam, dominus & saluator noster sub persona assumpti hominis loquitur: Lord thou knowest my foolishnes; our Lorde and Sauour. I speaketh in the person of man, whom he tooke. If Christ doe confesse our sinnes as his owne, then his heart could not be without the griefe of them: as Augustine saith, Quot habes in corde compunctiones facinorum, tot habes ille punitiones confessionum: As many compunctions of sinne as are in the heart, so many confessions there should be. in Psal. 74.

2. Ambrose seemeth to make this the cause of Christs long silence vpon the crosse: Illo silentio passionis suae clamorem omnium in posterum impie votis aboleuit: By the silence of his crosse he abolished all clamors and complaints of the voyce of sinners, serm. 14. in Psal. 119. As hee in silence mourned for our sinnes, and felt the burthen, so hath he stayed for euer the desperate outcries and complaints of his members for their sinnes.

3. Origen: Christus sacerdos est, qui comedit peccata populi: audi scripturam, deus noster ignis consumens: quid consumit deus ignis, nunquid ligna aut stipulam? consumit deus ignis humana peccata, ipse peccata nostra suscepit, & in seipso tanquam ignis ea comedit & absorbet: Christ is the priest, which doth eate the sinnes of the people: heare the Scripture, our God is a consuming fire: what doth God the fire consume, wood, or stubble? God the fire doth consume mens sinnes; he tooke our sinnes, and in himselfe as a fire did deuoure and consume them, Hom. 5. in Levitic. 6. So Ambrose againe saith, Christus velut carbo secundum carnem exussit nostra peccata: Christ was as that coale (taken from the altar, Isai. 6.) which in his flesh, burned, or consumed our sinnes, lib. 1. de spirit. c. 9. And what this inward fire is, the Prophet David sheweth, Psal. 39. 3. My heart was hot within me, and while I mused, the fire kindled. The inward griefe and trouble of soule in Christ was this fire, wherewith our sinnes are consumed.

If then our Sauour Christ was tempted like vnto vs in all sorts, sinne onely excepted, arg. 1. if together with our sinne he bare the sorrowes of sinne, argum. 2. if at other times hee sorrowed in compassion, and commiseration, but vpon the crosse more, arg. 3. if the Fathers affirme, that Christ hath taken our sorrowe to giue vs ioy, that he hath in himselfe as a fire consumed our sins, arg. 4. there remaineth no doubt, but that Christ verily in his soule was troubled and perplexed with sorrow for our sinnes.

THE SEVENTH PART, THAT CHRIST BY HIS death did fully satisfie the iustice of God, and appeased his wrath in paying the raunsome for our sinnes, which he tooke vpon him, together with the punishment thereof, in which respect he is truly said to haue dyed iustly, and as a debtor to the law of Gods iustice for vs.

THE OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

Art. 21.

O Biect. 1. Ezech. 18. 20. The same soule that sinneth, shall dye: from this place Bellarmino inferreth, Iniquum esse, &c. That it is vniust that one man should be punished for another, tom. 5. p. 152. d. Ergo, it was not iust that Christ, though our suretie, should be put to death for vs.

2. Christ dyed for vs of loue, and most willingly without constraint hee layd downe his life for vs: Nemo tamen ita auergetur a me, Iohn. 10. Fenard. p. 427. lin. 6. That which Christ then did of loue, he was not forced vnto by law.

3. Christ must not be considered onely as a faithfull seruant, but as coequall vnto God, &c. such an one was our Mediatour, Fenard. p. 378. conf. 3. lin. 13. 24. If Christ then as a seruant or suretie were bound by the law to dye, how could he be our Mediatour?

4. Christs satisfaction, was plusquam sufficiens, more than sufficient, Fenard. p. 382. conf. 3. lin. 7. therefore he was not bound vnto it by law.

Ans. 1. Where the debt is but of money, the suretie indeede, neither by Gods law nor mans, is compelled to giue life or soule: but where the debt is of bodie and soule, it cannot otherwise be payed in the law of iustice, but by giuing bodie and soule. 2. In some cases by the lawe of God the suretie gaue life for life; as the Prophet sheweth to Abab by this parable: A man was taken in battell, and committed to another to keepe, vnder this condition, If he be best, thy life shall goe for his life, or else thou shalt pay a talent of silver: a price of equall value to his life, that went away: but in the application of this parable, the Prophet leaueth out the talent, because God can not be waged with money, and saith vnto Abah precisely, thy life shall goe for his life, 1 King. 20. vers. 39. 42.

3. First, as the Prophet saith, The soule that sinneth, shall dye: so he saith, every man shall beare his iniquitie: hee may as well conclude, that Christ did not beare our finnes, as that hee was not punished for vs in iustice. Secondly, as the wickednesse of the wicked shall be vpon him, so the righteousness of the righteous shall be vpon him: If he will conclude from hence, that our wickednesse did not lye vpon Christ, hee must exclude the righteous also from the righteousness of Christ. I may say here with Hierome: De presenti compede vicunque erue pedem: You must eftsouones deliuer your selfe of these doubts, and your feete from these fetters. Fourthly, yea, you will say, this is soone done; for it is not inferred from hence, that Christ did not beare our finnes and dye for the same, but not in iustice, as indebted, or bound vnto it. I answer, as it was iust with God to iustifie vs that are of the faith of Iesus, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 3. 26. so is it iust that Christ should be condemned for our finnes: it is as much of iustice, that our finnes imputed to him, should cause his death, as for his righteousness imputed to vs to bring vs to life. So Origen saith, Christus sine dubio pro peccato, quod ex nobis suscepit, quia peccata nostra portauit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hostiā: Christ out of doubt for sinne, which he tooke of vs, because he bare our finnes, offered his flesh an vndefiled sacrifice, Hom. 3. in Levitic. If then the bearing of our finnes caused the sacrifice of Christs flesh, how was it not iust? if it were not iust, it was no cause.

2. First, who doubteth but that both Gods loue and Christs loue vnspeakeable appeareth in his death: as Augustine well saith; Angelus virga tetigit Petram & exijt ignis, sic crux tetigit Christum, & de Petra, quæerat Christus ignis exijt charitatis: The Angel touched the rocke with a rod, and fire came forth: Iud. 13. 19. so the crosse touched Christ, and out of the rocke, which was Christ, the flame of charity issued forth, Ser. de temp. 108. but the argument followeth not, Christ died of loue, Ergo, not in iustice, for loue first caused him to submit himselfe to the lawe: and iustice to pay our debt. 2. Like as the suretie first of loue and good will to his neighbour striketh hands for him, and giueth his word: but then his word being once past, he is bound by law to pay the debt, and he cannot shifte it, Then he is taken with the words of his owne mouth, Prou. 6. 1. 2. So Christ first of loue vndertooke for vs, but this office of loue being once vndertaken, it is now performed and executed of debt. 3. This may be further manifested by this instance: sinne in our first parents was voluntarie, but now in their posteritie it is necessarie: he might haue not sinned if he would, but hauing once sinned, he could not abstaine though he would: he brought himselfe & his posteritie voluntarie into necessarie bondage: as S. Peter saith, Of whatsoeuer a man is ouercome, to the sinne he is in bondage, 2. Pet. 2. 19. So Augustine: Ille sine peccato data est libera voluntas, quam fecit seruire peccato, bonum cum fuerat voluntas serua peccati liberata est per Christum: To Adam was giuen free will, which he made the seruant of sinne, but in vs our will being the seruant of sinne is freed by Christ: de corrept. gras. c. 12. We see then how that which in the election is voluntarie, is in the execution necessarie.

3. But a fitter example we cannot take, then from Christ himselfe: for the first assuming of the humane nature to the Godhead was of grace; as Augustine saith: Quod Christus est unigenitus, equalis patri, non est gratia, sed natura; quod autem in unitatem persona unigeniti assumptus est homo, gratia est, non natura, consensiente euangelio, & gratia Dei erat cum illo: That Christ is the onely begotten sonne, equall to his father, it is not grace but nature; but that man is taken into the vnitie of person of the onely begotten, it is grace, not nature, the Gospell confessing, the grace of God was with him: Tract. in Ioan. 7. 3. But though the assuming of the humane nature was of grace, yet the vnion of the diuine and humane nature is not by grace, as it was concluded, Concil. Constantin. 5. c. 4. Si quis dicit secundum gratiam factam vnitionem verbi ad hominem, anathema: If any man say that the vnion of the word with man, is of grace, let him be accursed: the first assumption of mans nature was of grace, but the coniunction is not of grace, but by vnion of person: the worship now giuen vnto the humanitie of Christ, is not giuen him of fauour and grace, but due vnto him because of his person, as the Apostle saith, Heb. 1. 6. when he bringeth in his first begotten son into the world he saith, let all the Angels of God worship him. In like manner, Christs assuming vpon him to pay our debt was of grace and voluntarie, but now the performing thereof is of debt, and necessarie. So then as the exalting of the humane nature in Christ, was in the first suscepcion of beignitie, but now in the personall vnion and coniunction, is of dignitie: so in the humbling of himselfe to dye for vs, he first shewed his free beneuolence, and then submitted himselfe to iustice and patience.

3. 1. That one may be both a surety and a mediator, the example of Iudah sheweth: who first was a mediator to his father, to intreat him to let Beniamin goe with them, saying, send the boy with me, that we may rise and go, that we may liue and not die: Gen. 43. 8. then he saith, vers. 9. I will be suretie for him, of mine hand shalt thou require him.

2. Who can be a more effectuell mediator, then he that hath payed the debt, of whose faithfulness the creditor hath already experience: as Paul to Philemon is a most efficient mediator for Onesimus, because he was a sufficient suretie: If he hath hurt thee, or ometh thee ought, put it vpon mine accounts, I Paulus haue written with mine owne hand, I will recompence thee: Philem. vers. 18. Then the Apostle boldly maketh his request, vers. 20. yea brother let me obtaine this pleasure of thee in the Lord. So the mediation of Christ is not empayred by his suretiship, but grounded vpon it, his propitiation for our sinnes is the strength of his aduocation: 1. Iohn. 2. 2. We haue an aduocate with the father, and he is the reconciliation for our sinnes.

3. Though other sureties could not be mediators, it is otherwise with Christ, who is both God and man: as man, he is a suretie and suffered for vs; as God and man he is our mediator, and sufficeth for vs: his suffering and satisfaction doth onely concerne his manhood: the Godhead did not satisfie, but was satisfied: therefore as he is a sufferer and satisfactor for vs, so he is not properly a mediator: to the which office both the nature of his humanitie, and power of his diuinitie is required: as Bernard well saith; sicut mediator &c. as our mediator hath ioyned together in one person his humanitie and diuinitie; so euery one of his workes must of necessitie appertaine to one or other nature, &c. Ad hanc scilicet miseria, ad illa pertinet potentia: quicquid ergo miseria passus est, ex homine contraxit; quicquid potenter operatus est, à patre habuit: To his humane nature belongeth his miserie; to his diuine, his power and dignity: what he suffered in miserie, he had of man; what he wrought powerfully, he receiued of his father: serm. de verb. sapient.

4. 1. The argument followeth not, he paid more then we did owe, Ergo, he paid not that which we did owe: rather the contrarie followeth, he paid more, Ergo, he paid the lesse: if a surety in his great abundance will pay twentie thousand, where the debt is but of tennie thousand, is not the debt answered? He that giueth more then measure, pressed downe, shaken together, running ouer, Luke. 6. 38. doth he not giue measure? 2. Christ in respect of the efficacie 1. of his crosse, and 2. dignitie of his person, and 3. innocencie of nature, paid more then the lawe required: For 1. he onely did not redeeme vs, but hath endued vs with righteousness, and so as the Apostle saith, grace superabundauit, hath superabounded, Rom. 5. 20. 2. Neither could the law haue required the sonne of God to haue suffered for vs: and therefore as the Apostle saith, Heroin appeared the loue of God toward vs, because he sent his onely begotten sonne, 1. Iohn. 4. 9. And he was not indebted any thing to the law in respect of his owne innocency: for as Saint Peter saith, he did not sinne, myster was there any guile found in his mouth: and so Augustine saith, Venit ille sine debito, quia sine vilo peccato, & quia non rapuerat exoluens nos à sempiterno debito liberans: He came without debt, because without sinne, and paying that he neuer tooke, hath freed vs from our euerlasting debt. de diuers. ser. 3. Wherefore in respect of the manner and qualitie of Christs sufferings he paid more then was owing, but for the substance of the debt, which was the whole punishment of bodie and soule, he paid the same which the law required. And if Christs satisfaction were more then sufficient; if he suffered more then was requisite: with what face can the Frier denie that he suffered not in soule, which was necessary to our redemption: There cannot be an exceeding where any thing is wanting.

And concerning the fathers which may be obiected, I answer, that they do obserue diuers ends and vses of Christs death, and alleage sundrie causes thereof: as Augustine sheweth these, 1. Gods loue appeareth. 2. the priuledge of humane flesh, seeing our nature is coupled with the diuinity. 3. the grace of God without our merits. 4. we learne humilitie and obedience by Christs death. 5. and the reward of obedience, lib. 13. de trinitat. c. 17. And againe: Potuit reuera angelum armare contra diabolum, &c. God could haue armed an Angell against the diuell: Verum decuit Christum hoc munus obire: But it was meete that Christ should vndergoe this busines, 1. least iniurie might be offered to God, if man should be redeemed by an other, then by whom he was created. 2. seeing Sathan did make himselfe a God in earth: Eum venire oportuit. It behooued him to come, which should worthily be worshipped of euery creature. 3. The iniurie was offered to the second person in the trinitie: Nam Sathanas proximo post deum patrem se adorari voluit: For Sathan next to God the father would be worshipped: ex veter. testam. qu. 113.

Cyprian also rendereth an other reason: Sine hoc holocausto poterat deus tantum condonasse peccatum, sed venia facilius laxaret habenas peccatis effrauentibus, quia etiam vix Christi cohibent passionis: God without this holocaust could haue pardoned so great sinne, but the facilitie or easines of pardon would haue giuen libertie to the raynes of sinne, which Christs passions doe scarcely restrain: serm. de passion. These fathers thus ayming and gesling at the causes of Christs death, denie not, but it was necessary for Christ to die to pay our debt, and consequently that it was iust so to be: as Augustine before saith: Decuit Christum, & oportuit venire: It became Christ, & it behooued him to come. And againe he saith to this effect: though God might haue taken man otherwhere, then from Adams stocke to be the mediator: Sed hominem per eum liberari oportuit, qui esset in genere, licet non in crimine: Yet man ought to be deliuered by him, which was of the posteritie, though not in the same iniquitie. de trinit. lib. 13. c. 17. whence cometh this oportet, it ought to be, or why must Adam be deliuered by Adams seed, but that iustice so required, that man should suffer for mans offence?

Obiect.

Obiect. But it may be thus further objected: If Christ dyed according to the iudice of the law, then the Iewes, together with Pilate and the high Priests, did but that which was iust and so should be freed from the guilt of Christs blood.

Answ. 1. Augustine doth very well resolve this question: Possit et tradidit spem, sed non in finem, sed in perditionem: Christus was delivered by his father, by himselfe, by Iudas: there is one act: how are they discerned? because the father and sonne did this in charitie, Iudas in enuie: in Epistol.

Likewise Origen to the same effect: Dei tradidit Christum propter misericordiam in genus humanum, &c. Iudas propter auaritiam, sacerdotes propter inuidiam, diabolus propter timorem: God deliuered Christ in mercie to man, Iudas in couetousnes, the priests for enuie, the diuell for feare, Tract. 1. in Matth. Wherefore though Christ were deliuered vp by the determinate counsell of God, and in respect thereof his death was iust and profitable: yet the instruments for the execution being malicious are not excusable, but their act against Christ was most vniust and damnable.

The Iewes are so farre from excuse, that euen Pilate, who seemed to haue some reuerence of Christs person, and openly washed his hands, was not innocent. There is greater question made of Pilate's wife, which suffered many things in her dreame of Christ, and acknowledged Christ to be a iust man, and sent word to Pilate to haue nothing to doe with him, Matth. 27. 19. Some do thinke, that the diuell, being in a great doubt what to doe, as hee set the Iewes to worke on the one side to put Christ to death, so hee caused a dreame to fall vpon Pilate's wife, thereby to hinder Christs death: thus thinketh Rabanus in gloss. ordinat. Lyr. with others. But I rather approue Chrysostome's iudgement and Theophylact's vpon that place, who thinke, that this dreame was Gods worke: Factum est somnium non ut Christus absolueretur, sed ut seruaretur vxor: This dreame was wrought, not that Christ should be deliuered, but Pilate's wife saved. Likewise Augustine: In nativitate mundi vxor dedit virum ad mortem: in passione Christi vxor promouit ad salutem: In the creation of nature of the world, the woman bringeth her husband to death: in the passion of Christ the wife doth prouoke the man to saluation, de tempor. ser. 12. l.

Howsoeuer it was with Pilate's wife, who had a good perswasion of Christ, and was guiltlesse of his death: yet Pilate could no way be innocent; he washed his hands in hypocrisie, but his heart was full of crueltie; as Cyprian well saith: *Non excusas, sed accusas, causam tibi faci cum Iudaeis committimus: isti se proditores, tu parricides te condemnas; illi lingua per ferro occidis: Thou dost not excuse but accuse, thou art in the same cause with the Iewes; they by treacherie condemneth themselves, thou by murder and crueltie; they kill him with their tongues, thou with the sword, serm. de passione. So Ambrose: *Pilatus ipse iniquitatis sua testis, qui ore absoluit, corde condemnat; laueris fuit manibus, tamen sanguinem diluit: Pilate is a witness of his owne iniquitie, which doth commend Christ with his mouth, and condemne him in his heart; hee dooth wash his hands, but cleaneeth not his deedes, *serm. 49.

Wherefore if Pilate, who made some semblance of loue and reuerence toward Christ, was yet guiltie of his blood, how much more worthie of condemnation were the Iewes, that with will, word and workes did persecute him to death, and killed the Lord of life, Act. 3. 15. And as Origen well saith: Quantum putas erroris fuit, ipsam principalem omnium vitam rem mortis pronuntiare? How great an error was it, to pronounce the chiefe and principall life worthie of death? Tract. 35. in Matth.

THE QUESTION CONFIRMED.

1. That Christ in himselfe was most holie, innocent, and iust, and in that behalfe most wrongfully and vndefeinedly put to death of the Iewes, wee hold it blasphemie not to acknowledge it: the Scriptures doe testifie, that the Iewes denied the holie and iust one, and killed the Lord of life, Act. 3. 14. 15. And Augustine saith: Domini mortem pro nobis indubitam reddidit, et ideo a nobis non noceret: The Lorde did pay for vs an vndue death, that due death might not hurt vs, ibid. de Trinitat. cap. 13.

2. Again, we most thankfully acknowledge in the death of Christ the most vnspeakable loue of Christ: 1. Ioh. 3. 16. Hec in haec uenit priuatum lous, ut de seipso daret vitam suam: which loue of Christ Augustine thus describeth: Diuina charitas in Christo ad ignoscendum, inter opprobria secura, inter odia benefica, inter iras placida, inter infidias innocens, &c. There was a diuine charitie of Christ in forgiuing, steadfast among taunts, bounteous against hatred, calme against rage, innocent though wronged, serm. 39. de tempor.

3. Our blessed Saviour also most willingly offered himselfe vpon the crosse for vs, and was obedient to the will of his father: Heb. 5. 8. Though he were the sonne, yet learned he obedience: So Bernard saith, saith, Non morte filij, sed voluntas placuit sponte morientis: Not the dying of his sonne pleased God, but that he was willing, epist. 191.

4. All this being confessed, that Christ was in himselfe innocent, toward vs louing and beneficent, in his death willing and patient; yet seeing he as our suretie payd our debts, it was iust before God, that as he in himselfe bare our finnes, so he also should pay the price and discharge the debt, and so answer his fathers iustice.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul saith, Rom. 3. 25. 26. God hath set forth Christ to be a reconciliation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness by the forgiveness of finnes which are passed, &c. to shew an able sacrifice for our finnes, that he might be iust, and a justifier of him, which is in the faith of Iesus: From hence I reason thus; imputation of sinne is vnto condemnation, as imputation of righteousness is vnto iustification: but it is iust with God to iustifie vs by the righteousness of Christ, therefore it was iust before God, that Christ for our sins should be condemned to death. Bernard thus giueth witness hereto: Iustum est, ut reddat deus quod debet; debet autem, quod pollicitus est: It is iust, that God should render that which he oweth; and he oweth what hee promised, lib. de liber. arbitrii. So then as it is iust with God to performe saluation vnto vs in Christ which he hath promised: so it was iust with Christ to pay that debt which he vndertooke to be performed.

Argum. 2. God decreeth no vniust thing: but hee decreed the death of Christ; as Saint Peter saith, he was delivered up by the determinate counsell and foreknowledge of God, Act. 2. 23. God did not onely foreknow it, but decree and determine it: by the determinate counsell, saith the Apostle, Rom. 8. 3: and therefore God is sayd to send his sonne to dye for vs, 1. Ioh. 4. 16. God then was the author of his sonnes death; but he is not the author of euill things or vniust: therefore Christs death in respect of Gods decree was not vniust. Augustine saith well: Deus aliud fecit & ordinauit; aliud non fecit, sed ordinauit: God did or decreed somewhat to bee done, and disposed and ordered it; something hee doth not, but yet disposeth and ordreth, in Psalm. 7. As in this case, the malice of the Jewes God decreed not, but he disposed of their malice to a good end: but the death of Christ he both decreed and disposed. Augustine also saith: Peccatores in malis praesentibus tantum non predestinatos, &c. Sinners are onely foreseene in their euill actions, not predestinate, contr. Pelag. Hypognostic. artic. 6. But Christ was not onely foreseene to dye, but was predestinate thereto: Ergo, it was not euill.

Argum. 3. If Gods iustice be fully satisfied, and his wrath deservedly appeased by the death of Christ, it followeth that Christ died iustly: But the first is euident, because Christ hath by his crosse staine the hatred betwene God and vs, Ephes. 2. 16. and before he dyed for vs, we were the children of wrath, Ephes. 2. 3: Ergo, Christ dyed in respect of our finnes to answer Gods iustice iustly.

The proposition, which is onely doubted, is thus proued: first, nothing can satisfie Gods iustice, but that which is iust: if Christs death then were not iust before God, Gods iustice could not bee satisfied by it. Secondly, heither can any thing please God, or appease his wrath by way of satisfaction, but that which is iust: Christ death pleased God, it was a sacrifice of a sweete smelling sauer vnto God, Ephes. 5. 2. Thirdly, Saint Paul saith, Rom. 8. 3. God spared not his owne sonne: not to spare is of iustice, to spare is of loue and mercie: it was mercie to vs, but iustice in Christ, that he dyed for the redemption of our finnes. Fourthly, Bernard saith, Non potuit expiari Ade peccatum, nisi Christi morte: Adams sin could not be expiated, but by the death of Christ, epist. 191. It could not be otherwise done, because Gods iustice could not otherwise be satisfied: expiation then by death and blood belongeth to Gods iustice.

Argum. 4. None are forsaken of God, or stand accursed by the law iniustly: for God is iust, and the law is iust, hol. 8. good, Rom. 7. 12. But Christ was as forsaken of God in part in the instant of his passion: as he himselfe complaineth, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Mat. 27. 46. he was also by the law made a curse for vs, Galath. 3. 13. Ergo, Christ in respect of our finnes, in the sight of God suffered iustly. Bede witnesseth with vs: Quid mirum si maledictum est deo, quod deus odit, nisi enim deus odisset peccatum & mortem nostram non ad eam suscipiendam & defendendam filium suum mitteret: What marueile if that be accursed of God, which God hateth; for vnlesse God had hated sinne and death, he would not haue sent his sonne to take it, and abolish it, in 3. ad Galath. 3. Christ then stood as accursed before God, because he tooke vpon him that which God hateth, namely our sinne, and death the fruit of sinne.

Argum. 5. These three, utilitas, necessitas, equitas, are inseparable companions: that onely is profitable, which is good and iust: These things are good and profitable, 1. Timoth. 4. 8. but Christs death was profitable; as Caiaphas prophesied, epist. 191. It is expedient profitable for vs that one man dye for the people, and the whole nation perishe not, Iohn 11. 50. Christs death then is both necessarie and profitable, and therefore both good and iust.

Obiect. The afflictions of the Saints are profitable to themselves to correct them, to others for their example, yet are they not iust: as the Apostle saith, It is iust with God to recompence tribulation,

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, THAT CHRIST'S blood was not giuen as a price of our redemption to the diuell.

THE QUESTION EXPLAINED.

ART. 22.

WE graunt, that God by the price of Christs blood deliuered vs from the power of Sathan: but the price was not giuen to Sathan, but payed vnto God: Sathan was but the minister of Gods iustice, and as it were the Iaylor and tormentor that kept vs in feare: and therefore the Apostolic faith, that Christ through death destroyed him that had power of death, that is the diuell, Hebr. 2. 14. hee had power of death no otherwise, than as Gods minister and executioner: by Christs death then we were deliuered from Sathans kingdome; and hee was vanquished vpon the crosse of Christ: as Origene saith, Principalis traditus et triumphatus in ligno: The principalities were traded and triumphed vpon the crosse, Trist. 3. in Matt. 26. So he expoundeth Saint Paul, Coloss. 2. 15. and Cyprian witnesseth: Propterea est ad sanguinem dei filius off Sathana regnum: When they came to blood, Sathans kingdome was destroyed, de duple martyr. So then Sathan was not as compounded with, but confounded by Christs blood; not entreated, but defeated; not hired with wages, but rewarded against his will, to let his prisoners goe: Christ gave nothing to him, but tooke from him, he mayed him not, but wrestled with him; he rendered nothing to him, but reue the captiues from him.

Ruffinus thus inferreth: Non deditur aliquis patitur Christum, sed ut rex carcerem ingressus, ut soluat catenas, &c. Christ suffered not to any losse, but as a King entred the iayle to loose the chaynes: Symbol. Ruffin. If Christ be the King, and death the prison, and consequently Sathan hauing power of death, the Iaylor, how can the King giue a raupome to the Iaylor?

Augustine thus witnesseth: Nescit diabolus quanta bona de illo sunt, et tam cum sanis, sanis intrauit car Inde sanis tradidit Christum, sanis crucifixus, &c. The diuell knoweth not to what good his rage turneth, he raging entred into the heart of Indus, raging hee deliuered vp Christ, and in his rage crucified him: and Christ being crucified the world was redeemed, in Psal. 130. If Sathan received a price to loose him, how doth hee rage against Christ to loose him? if he deliuered him, then was he not deliuered as a price to him.

Saint Ambrose also thus testifieth: Serpens primus crucifigitur reus, et quia primus apud deum peccauerat diabolus, primus crucis sententia feruetur: The Serpent is first crucified vpon the crosse, and good reason, that because the diuell was the first that had sinned before God, hee should first be stricken with the sentence of the crosse, 2. Amb. serm. 75. If Sathan were crucified by the crosse, hee was not satisfied; if he were surprised by Christs blood, then was it not prized to him; if he were as sold himselfe thereby into captiuitie, how could we be bought from him and his captiuitie it could not bee both a compensation of our debt vnto him, and an obligation more surely to binde him: if Christs death were his confusion, he did not then accept it as a condition.

If any of the Fathers haue somewhat written diuersly from this, which is alleged, as I denie not but some of them, as both Augustine and Ambrose do speake to such effect, that Christs blood was accounted as a price to the diuell for our deliuerance, they must not be so vnderstood, as though either God covenanted, or Sathan was contented for that price to let vs goe: but that Christs blood, was in regard of the efficacie thereof as a price; that we thereby were as fully and effectually deliuered, as if wee had bene out of Sathans hand, by a great price giuen vnto him, redeemed. Otherwise if we take the Fathers in thus writing to speake properly, we shall make them each to other, and to themselves also contrarie.

THE QUESTION CONFIRMED.

THAT Christ by his death and the price of his blood hath deliuered vs from the power of darkness and hell it is our holic faith, according to the Scriptures, Coloss. 2. 13. This price was paid vnto God to satisfie Gods iustice, it was not giuen vnto Sathan: for God is the naige, Sathan is the Iaylor, to whom the iudge did deliuer vs because of our sins, Luk. 12. 38. the debt, wherein we stood bound, was vnto our Lorde and transfer, and hee in iustice deliuered vs to the Iaylor, and we should pay all that was due, Matth. 18. 34. Christ came and payd our debt vnto God, not to the diuell: the debt being payd, the Iaylor hath no longer charge nor power to keepe vs in prison.

Argum. 1. The price of our redemption was payd to our creditor to whom we were indebted: the diuell is not our creditor; the Lord absolutely denieth it, Quis est creditor meus, cui vendidi vult? Who is the creditor to whom I haue sold you? Isai. 50. 1. None is our creditor but God, and to him onely wee are indebted, who onely is able to release vs of our debt, as we are taught to pray, Matth. 6.

Matth. 6. 12. Forgive vs our debts therefore the price of our debts was onely payed to God.

2. The price which was tendered and offered for our redemption was giuen to him, to whom the sacrifice of Christs blood, was offered: for the Apostle maketh offerens, and offerens, an offering tender or oblation and a sacrifice to bee all one, Ephes. 5. 2. But Christ did giue himselfe a sacrifice of sweete saour to God, ibid, God forbid, that any man should thinke, that Christs blood was sacrificed to the diuell: Ergo, it was not offered nor giuen as a gift or price to the diuell.

3. Our Saviour Christ is compared to a victorious man, that bindeth the strong man, which is the diuell, and entreth by force into his house, and spoyleth him of his goods; that is, deliuereth them, whom Satan held as his owne proper goods as captiues in prison, March. 12. 29. Christ entered by force, then not by a price; by assault, not by assenting; by warre, not by wages; by fettering the strong man, not by freeing him; by loosing our hands, not by giuing any thing into Satans hands: as Augustine to this purpose is alleagueth by the Master of Sentences, *lib. 4. dist. 19. luer. 1. Vnde nos diabolus tenebat, datus uero est sanguine redemptoris; non enim tenebat nos, nisi diabolus peccatorum nostrorum; ista uero carnae captiuitas: uenit ille, alligauit foris uincula peccatorum, non in domum eius, i. in corda eorum, ubi ipse habitabat, & uasa eius, i. non eripuit: That wherewith the diuell held vs, was taken away by the death of Christ, hee came and bound the strong man with the hands of his death, and entred into his house, that is, our hearts, wher hee dwelt, and tooke away his vessels or goods, that is, our selues, &c. Here is no price offered to Satan, but a force inferred: not any thing giuen to him, but all taken from him. Upon this ground he concludeth thus: *Christus fuit in ara crucis, non diabolus, sed deus trinitatis abans: Christ in the altar of the crosse did offer himselfe, not to the diuell, but to God the Trinitie, dist. 20. luer. 2.

Origen saith: Diabolus tradidit Christum per simonem, ne auileret (genus humanum) de manu eius per doctrinam ipsius: The diuell deliuered Christ for hire, lest mankinde should be pulled from his hand by his doctrine, Tract. 7. Matth. The diuell then expected no pay for mans libertie, but deliuereth by Christs death to keepe him still in captiuitie.

August. in this behalfe maketh Sampson a figure of Christ: Sampson aduersarias suos uarios opprēssit, sic Christi passio interfecit: facta est persequens Sampson dying killeth his enemies: so Christs passion was the destruction of his persecutors, serm. 107. And as the Philistines made themselves sport in Sampsons miserie, which turned to their captiuitie: so saith Augustine, Diabolus triumphauit uictus est, exultauit, quando mortuus est Christus, & ipsa morte Christi uictus est: The diuell was overcome in his owne policie: hee vanquished himselfe, when Christ dyed; but hee was vanquished by his death, serm. 174. So then as Sampson gaue no price to his enemies to be excluded, but vied a prize wherby they were all concluded; he did not promise them any thing to content them, but persuaded by prayer in his death to confound them: so Christ gaue not his blood to Satan to easie for his delight, but to waste his kingdome by our delinerie; not to pay him wages for vs, but to stay his raging against vs.

Againe, the author of the Sermons de sanctis, vnder Augustines name, serm. 18. compareth Christ to Tobias fish: Cuius iecore per passionem affato, fugatus est diabolus: By whole flesh and liuer as broyled vpon the crosse, the diuell was chased away. Christs blood then was giuen no more a price to the diuell, than that fishes liuer (if wee admi the storie for veritie, though not for authoritie) to the vncleane spirit: but I will ground no argument vpon the Apocryphall storie of Tobias, but onely shew the meaning of the Fathers.

Hierome doth more truly and fitly resemble Christ to Ianus, death and the diuell to the whale: Dum assumpti corporis sollicitaris illecebra, & auidis faucibus pradam putas interiora sua aduoco dexte confossa sunt, &c. O death, while thou art enticed with the baite of his bodie, and thinkest to get a pray for thy greedie iawes, thy inward parts are pierced with the hooke, Epitaph. Nopotian. As Ianus was a pray, not a price to the fish to appease the minde: so Christ, though Satan prayed and raged vpon his bodie, was a price to God to assuage his wrath.

To conclude: if then wee are indebted onely to God, not to the diuell, arg. 1. if Christs bodie were only giuen in sacrifice to God, arg. 2. if Christ by his death did forcibly bind the strong man, arg. 3. then was not Satan hired as with a price to let his prisoners goe, neither was Christs blood counted as a ranfome to him for our deliuerance.

THE EIGHT PART, THAT CHRIST IN HIS

soule did truly feele his fathers wrath kindled against him for our sinne.

Enardentius denieth, that Christ had any sense or feeling of Gods wrath in his soule, or that God did shew himselfe as angry towards him for our sinne, p. 469. Artic. 11.

Argum. 1. Christ was alwaies the beloued sonne of God, Matth. 3. 17. God did not chaunge in turning his loue to hatred.

2. God loued him the more dearly for his obedience to death; he was not therefore angrie with him: Iohn. 10. 17. Therefore doth my father love me, because I laye downe my life. pag. 470.

3. If ye say God loued him as his sonne, yet hated him as our suretie, or became a seruant for vs; ye fall into Nestorian heresie, and so make two persons of Christ one beloued, another hated: if ye say, that God was not angrie indeed, but Christ so perswaded; you will coyne a new heresie, that Christ had a false opinion of his father: Femer. p. 471.

1. Ans. 1. Gods temporall wrath vpon Christ doth not eyther chaunge or discontinue his euermourning loue: for with Christs person being holy, innocent, righteous, God was neuer offended: our finnes laid vpon Christ were the object and matter of Gods wrath: a father that doth loue his child dearly, yet may be angrie with his childs faults, and in his anger correct them. 2. Abraham loued Isaac most dearly, Gen. 22. 2. God bid him take his onely sonne Isaac whom he loved: yet at Gods commaundement he stretched out his hand to haue killed him, vers. 10. Abraham in this instant loued the person of his sonne: yet in his holy anger and rage, he would kill him: I thinke to kill is no fruit or effect of loue. If Abraham then at the same instant retayned a fatherly loue toward Isaac, and yet in an holy & iust zeale would haue killed him, why should it seem strange that God not chaunging his euermourning loue toward his sonne, yet was angrie with our finnes which he sustained? 3. Augustine well saith: Vsq̃ue adeo non amaris qui irascitur odit, ut aliquando magis odisse conuincatur qui non irascitur: Many time he that is angrie is so farre from hating, or not louing, that he is found rather to hate, which is not angrie: in Matth. ser. 16. He giueth an instance of a child which through his fathers lenitie runneth into apparant danger of his life. I proue by this similitude, that as there may be wrath in a father without a destruction of loue, so Gods eternall loue did stand inuolable toward Christ without any chaunge, though his wrath appeared in the instant of Christs death, not shewing any alteration in God, but a diuersitie of dispensation in Christ, who now sustained our person.

2. The next obiection hath the same answer, sauing that it seemeth to affirme that Christ by his obedience to death purchased a greater measure of loue to himselfe, which is a great error: 1. Because the loue of God toward his sonne being from euermourning, was alwaies the same, neither increasing nor decreasing: for this were otherwise to make God mutable and chaungeable, which the Apostle denieth, Iam. 1. 17. if Gods loue should sometime abate, and sometime abound. 2. Christ did not merite any thing to himselfe but all for vs: as Ambrose well saith: Christus non emerenda gratia sua causa, sed nostra eruditionis gratia inuenerit: Christ did not fast to merit fauour or grace to him selfe, but onely for our erudition sake. lib. 3. de fide. 2. The like may be said of all other actions of Christ: Christ obtained not an applification of his loue by his obedience, but a manifestation of it onely: Christus hoc natus accepit, ut post crucem manifestaretur, quid a patre dum generaretur, accepit; non enim tunc accepit a patre, quando a creatura coepit fieri: Christ in his birth receiued this, that after his death it might be manifested, what he receiued of his father in his generation: for he did not then first receiue it, when the creature began to worke it: Ambrose. in 2. Philipp. Christs glory then, and Gods loue toward him was due vnto his humanitie in his verie first incarnation, by right of his Godhead, as our Sauour himselfe saith, Iohn. 17. Glorifie me with that glorie, which I had with thee before the world was: This glorie was manifested in time, which was due to Christs person before all time.

3. 1. Neither doth it follow, that we should make two persons in Christ, when we affirme that at the same instant God did both loue him with an eternall loue, and was angrie with him with a temporall wrath: Augustine will teach you how this may be: Moses famulus dei quomodo oderat peccatores cum pro eis orabat, quomodo non oderat cum eos occidebat; ea namque perfectione sic oderat iniquitatem, quam puniebat, ut diligeret humanitatem pro qua orabat: Moses the seruant of God, how did he hate the sinners, when he prayed for them; how did he not hate them, when he killed them: with such perfection he hated iniquitie, which he punished, that he loued their humanitie, for the which he prayed. in Psal. 138. So God in Christ loued his holines and innocency, but was angrie with our finnes and iniquitie which were vpon him: Heere then are not two persons, but one and the same person diuersly considered. 2. This then is no Nestorianisme: take you heed of Manichisme, that you make not Christ to haue done all things fantastically & in shew, while he sweate drops of blood, complaineth that he was forsaken, as though God were throughly angrie with him, and yet no such matter. 3. Neither do we say that Christ was onely so perswaded of his father, that he was angrie, but indeed he was so for the time, and he verely in his soule felt it so to be. David was a man greatly beloued of God, whereof he hath his name; yet he truly complaineth of Gods wrath, Psal. 38. 3. There is nothing sound in my flesh, because of thine anger: And how this may be, that God may be temporally offended with the elect, that are eternally beloved, Saint Paul sheweth, Rom. 11. 28. Concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes, but as touching the election they are beloved for the fathers sake: as the Iewes were temporally reiecte; yet eternally in Gods counsell electe; so it is in this case, as Saint Ambrose well sheweth: De presenti Deus iustitia indicat, non de prescientia: God doth iudge according to present iustice, not according to prescience: in 9. ad Roman. And he further declareth how some may be said to be electe in respect of their present iustice which are not in Gods prescience: and so of the contrarie, some may be for a time in Gods temporall wrath suspended, to whom euerlastingly saluation is intended: so Christ was eternally electe and delecte or beloved of God, but in respect of our sinnes hanging vpon him, he was for a time as forlorne and reiecte.

4. Lastly we must distinguish in Christ betweene the faith of his soule, and sense of his flesh: his faith alwaies apprehended Gods fauour euen in the midst of his deepest torments, as he saith, I set God alwaies before me, Psal. 16. 8. but in his present sense he felt and perceiued the wrath of God: Our Sauour himselfe doth warrant this distinction: saying of himselfe, The spirit is ready, the flesh is weak. Matth. 26. 41. Vpon the which words S. Ambrose thus writeth. Audi utramque vocem & carnis infirma, & spiritus prompti (pater si possibile est transat calix). hac est carnis vox (sed non quod ego volo) habes deuotionem spiritus: Heare each voice of a weak flesh, and prompt spirit: father if it be possible let the cup passe, this is the voice of the flesh, (but not as I will,) here is the deuotion of the spirit.

THE QUESTION CONFIRMED.

THat the wrath of God lay heauily vpon Christ as our suretie, and that as he bare all our sins, so he truly felt in his soule the wrath of God kindled against the same: thus we doe make it manifest out of scripture.

Argum. 1. Ilay. 53. 4. We iudged him, as plagued, smitten of God, and humbled: but no man is plagued, or smitten but of God being angrie: Ergo.

Ans. 1. This smiting is referred onely to the temporall death of Christ by Hierome and others. 2. This might be done without Gods anger: for as Abraham would haue sacrificed his sonne without hatred or anger, he loued him still: so God did suffer his sonne to be slaine without anger, Bellarm. lib. 4. de Christi anima. c. 8. resp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. 1. It is euident, that the prophet speaketh not of Christs bodily death: for he said before in the beginning of the verse, he bare our infirmities, that is as the Septuagint translate infirmis, sins, whom Saint Peter followeth, 1. Pet. 2. 24. But whence proceedeth the plague due vnto sinne, then from Gods wrath? Again his bodily sufferings are more properly expressed in the next verse: He was wounded for our transgressions.

2. Hierome doth so vnderstand the prophet: Factus est pro vobis maledictum, ut nos à maledicto liberaret; quod nos pro nostris debebamus sceleribus sustinere, ille pro vobis passus est: ex quo perspicuum est, sicut corpus flagellatum, ita animam variè doluisse: He was made a curse for vs, to deliuer vs from the curse: for what we should haue sustained for our sinnes, he suffered for vs: whence it is manifest that as his bodie was whipped, so his soule was truly grieved, in Ilay. c. 53. It is therefore vnttrue which Bellarmine heere affirmeth, that Hierome vnderstandeth Christs bodily death onely.

3. Euen the death of the bodie also sheweth the wrath of God against sinne, as the Apostle saith: That death entered by sinne. Rom. 5. 12. And the prophet testifieth thus: When thou with rebukes dost chastise man for iniquitie, thou makest his beautie to consume as a moth. Psal. 39. 11. The mortalitie then of man doth proceed from the rebukes of God, and his rebukes declare his wrath: Christ then euen in his bodily death also had experience of his fathers wrath against sinne: though we grant, that death in Christs death is vanquished, and the sting thereof extinguished, 1. Cor. 15. 56. 57. And as Ambrose wel saith: Christus habet oleum iustitie, qui facit exultare mortuos, mors a facore mortis aboleuit: Christ hath the oyle of gladnes about his fellowes, which causeth men readie to die to reioyce, and hath abolished the stinche, and extinguished the sting of death. lib. 1. de spir. c. 8.

4. Abraham alwaies loued his sonne Isaac, yet (I thinke) he could not kill him in loue: the Apostle saith, Noman euer hated his owne flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it: Ephel. 5. 29. To loue then is to nourish and cherish: Abraham in sacrificing his sonne did not cherish him, in that very act then he loued him not: so a father notwithstanding he loueth his child, may in his iust anger correct him: as Augustine saith, Quanto melius est, si irasceris & corrigis, quam si non irascendo perire permittas: How much better is it, if you be angrie and correct your sonne, then by not being angrie to suffer him to perish. serm. 16. in Matth. Like as then Abrahams holy rage against his sonne, which was but in part and for a moment doeth not abolish the perpetuall and totall loue to his childe: so by this example wee see howe

Christ was eternally and totally beloued of God, yet for a while and in part tasted of Gods wrath.

Argum. 2. Ilay 53. 5. The chastisement of our peace was upon him: or rather the discipline of our peace, as the Septuagint readeth: Christ then was to beare that discipline and chastisement, which appertained to vs, and whereby our peace is purchased: but Gods wrath was not otherwise appeased, but by satisfying it; he did not otherwise satisfie it, then by suffering it, Hebr. 5. 8. He learned obedience by the things which he suffered: Ergo, he suffered and endured Gods wrath for vs.

Ans. If the whole chastisement due vnto vs, was layd vpon Christ; then he must haue bene punished eternally in hell, for that was due vnto vs: if Christs temporall punishment did satisfie for our eternall in regard of the worthinesse of his person; by the same reason his bodily sufferings may suffice and satisfie for the death of our soules, Bellarm. resp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. 1. Christ was to suffer the whole punishment due vnto sinne, so farre as it became the degnitie of his person, and the necessitie of the worke: but if he had suffered eternally, neither could the worke of our redemption haue been accomplished, and his person should haue endured that, which him not becomed: and therefore the Apostle saith, Hebr. 2. 10. It became him to be consecrated through afflictions: and Augustine to the like effect, De unit. em. it became him to vnder take this worke, qu. 113. ex veter. Testament. Christ then was onely to passe through those afflictions, which became him.

2. It followeth not, because Christ is exempted from that punishment which became not his person, that therefore he should be freed from those sufferings also, which are no derogation vnto him: we attribute so much to the degnitie of Christ, as that we abolish not the equitie of God: so farre with Christs person it must be dispensed, as that yet Gods iustice be satisfied: to suffer in soule, Gods iustice required, neyther was Christs person thereby dishonoured; therefore those sufferings he was to endure for vs: as our Sauour himselfe saith, Ought not Christ to haue suffered these things, and so to enter into his glory, Luke 24. 26? Augustine well saith, Potuerat Dominus noster hostem humani generis sola maiestate prostrare, sine incarnationis humilitate, sine certamine passionis, sed homo, &c. non violentia liberandus fuit, sed misericordia redimendus, iusto igitur ordine, &c. The Lord could haue subdued the enemies of mankind onely with his maiestie, without either the humilie of his incarnation, or difficultie of his passion: but man was not by violence to be deliuered, but by mercy and indulgence to be redeemed, therefore in iust order, &c. serm. 156. It was meet then and iust, that Christ should suffer as he did for vs.

Argum. 3. Hebr. 4. 15. Christ was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sinne: as Christs members are tempted, so was he, but his members do feele in their soules the terrors of conscience, and haue experience of Gods wrath: as Iob complaineth, Iob 6. 4. The arrows of God are in me, and the terrors of the almighty fight against me: and Psalm 89. 46. Shall thy wrath burne like fire? much more then did Christ feele the burthen of his fathers wrath, bearing all the finnes of the elect in himselfe.

Ans. If Christ must be tempted in all things like to vs, then he must haue bene burned, beheaded, corrued in pieces: he should haue bene subiect to diseases, as the gowte, the drop sicke, the palsy, for all these are incident to his members, Fenard. p. 445.

Contra. 1. The Apostle speaketh of temptations, which are for the most part spirituall, not of bodily passions, therefore this answer is impertinent. 2. Yet because the Apostle saith elsewhere Hebr. 2. 17. It became him in all things to be made like his brethren: that is, both as touching his bodie and his soule: I answer againe: 1. that this clause in all things, is not to be vnderstood of euery particular passion, but of the generall kind: not that Christ suffered euery particular maladie of the bodie, for that had bene impossible, but euery kind of griefe, both of bodie and soule. 2. It is absurd to obiect so many kindes of death, seeing it was impossible for Christ to haue dyed often, Hebr. 9. 25. 28. 3. Neyer was it comely for Christ to suffer all, that we do, in that manner and measure: whereof the Apostle maketh manifest exception: it became him, &c. in sufferings not comely Christ was not to be like vs. 4. Againe, sinne is excepted, and in sinne also the cause, and effects thereof are comprehended: so then Christ could not be like vnto vs in our conception, which is the beginning and cause of sinne; nor yet in our sicknesses and diseases, which are the proper and immediate fruites and effects of sinne: as it is in the Psalm 138. 3. There is no rest in my bones, because of my sinne, Psal. 38. 3.

3. The Apostle also giueth a reason, why it became Christ to bee like vs in his sufferings and temptations: He is able thereby to succour them, that are tempted, in that he suffered and was tempted, Hebr. 2. 18. Where the Apostle speaketh not of Christs absolute power, whereby he is able without experience had of our temptations, to succour vs, but of his humane compassion, whereby he is able by his owne feeling to haue pitie of vs: and, though he suffered not in bodie euery particular griefe as we do, as our diseases and sicknesses, yet by the experience which he had in other of our infirmities, he hath a feeling also of those, and therein in his pitifull compassion is able to helpe.

helpe: wherefore, that Christ might be able also to succour vs in his owne feeling, when wee are vexed in soule with terror of conscience, and the sense of Gods wrath, it became him in his owne soule to feele the like. And so I conclude with S. Ambrose; Qui corpus suscepit, omnia debuit subire qua corporis sunt, ut esset, sciret,angeretur, &c. He that tooke a bodie, must vndergoe all things belonging to the bodie, as to be hungrie, thirstie, to be grieved: in 12. cap. Luc. As he here saith of Christs bodie, so likewise of his soule: Minus mihi constulerat, si non mentis suscepisset affectum, &c. He had done little for me, if he had not taken mine affection: and againe, Debuis dolorem suscipere, ut vinceret tristitiam non excluderet: He was to take my sorrow to overcome it, not to exclude it: in Luc. 22. By this sentence then, those sorrowes of ours, which Christ excluded from himselfe, are not yet vanquished nor overcome.

Bernard saith, Per quos uisificatus mors tua, tu nihilominus trepidatio robustior, uisus in latos, turbatio quietos redderes: That those whom thy death quickened, thy trembling might strengthen, thy heavinesse might cheare, thy troubles might quiet: in die. S. Andr. serm. 1. Our peace then and quietnesse of soule is purchased by the like trouble and terror in Christs soule.

Augustine also in this behalfe maketh Noah a figure of Christs passion, who was drunken and vncovered in his tent: so Christ saith he, Calice passionis adeo factus est ebrius, ut ipso tegimine corporis nudaretur, &c. So Christ was drunken as it were with the cuppe of his passion, that he was left naked of the couering of his bodie: serm. 153. he expresth but one effect of this spirituall drunkennesse; the Prophet sheweth another, Ierem. 23. 9. I am like a drunken man, for the presence of the Lord: It is then the wrathfull presence of God, which is the cause as it were of the spirituall drunkennesse of the soule: when it tasteth so deeply of the cuppe of Gods wrath, that it is so rauished and overwhelmed, like as the bodie, when it is intoxicate with strong drinke.

Wherefore, if Christ were finitten and plagued of God for our sinnes, argum. 1. If the whole chastisement of our peace was vpon him, argum. 2. If hee was tempted in all things like vs, argum. 3. then it remaineth that out of all doubt, he felt the terrors of soule, and had experience of the wrath of God against our sinne: for such temptations are the members of Christ subiect vnto.

THE NINTH PART, THAT CHRIST DID TRV- ly complaine vpon the Crosse, that he was forsaken of God, and that he verily felt himselfe in his soule for our sinne, for the time, as re- iect of God in part, though not to- tally or finally.

THE OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

Feuardenius thus obiectioneth and reasoneth. 1. If Christ were truly forsaken of God, it would fol- Antic. 34.
low that the hypostaticall vnion was dissolued, and that Christ was personally separated from God, for otherwise he could not be forsaken. Feuarden. p. 473. confut. 1.

2. The Centurion notwithstanding Christ so complained and cried out, yet confesseth thus of him; this truly was the sonne of God, he was a righteous man: Matth. 27. Farre off was he, from imagining Christ to be forsaken of God. Feuarden. p. 474. lin. 17.

3. Christ was alwaies most holy, innocent, iust, and therefore acceptable vnto God, he was not then reiect of or forsaken. Feuarden. p. 475. confut. 3.

4. Out of Fulgentius, Diuinitas Christi animam in inferno non deseruit: Christs diuinitie did not leauie his soule in hell: Ergo, his soule was not forsaken. Feuarden. p. 474. lin. 32.

5. If Christ had bene verily forsaken, then he so crying out should haue despaired, which were horrible blasphemie to affirme. Bellarmin. argum. 6. Feuarden. p. 485. conf. 6.

6. Christ prayeth for them which crucified him, saying: Father forgive them, they know not what they doe. Luk. 23. 34. How could Christ pray vnto God, or assure himselfe to be heard, if he were forsaken. p. 488. conf. 12.

7. How could Christ promise Paradise to the theefe vpon the Crosse, if he were himselfe forsaken, and not sure of Paradise: Feuarden. p. 448. lin. 32.

Ans. 1. If Christ had bene totally and eternally forsaken, the personall vnion must haue been dissolued: but vpon this temporall and partiall reiection there followeth not a personall dissolution or generall dereliction. 2. As the bodie of Christ being without life, was still hypostatically vnited to the Godhead, so was the soule of Christ, though for a time without feeling of his fauour: the dereliction of the one doth no more dissolue the hypostaticall vnion, then the death of the other:
if life went from the bodie, and yet the deitie was not separated in the personall consociation, but onely suspended in operation: so the feeling of Gods fauour, which is the life of the soule, might be intermitted in Christ, and yet the diuine vnion not interuerted. 3. Augustine doth well shew, how

how this may be: when he saith, that Passio Christi dulcis fuit diuinitatis somnus: The passion of Christ was the sweet sleepe of his diuinitie. lib. de essent. diuin. Like as then in sleepe the soule is not departed, though the operation thereof be deferred: so in Christs sleepe vpon the crosse, the God-head was not separated, though the working power thereof were for a time lequestred.

2. 1. The Centurion being a Romane vnderstood not the language, wherein Christ complained crying out, he was forsaken, seeing the Iewes themselves mistooke his words, saying, he called for Elias. Matth. 27. 47. 2. And the Euangelist evidently sheweth, that not the hearing of those words, but the seeing of the earthquake and other things, which were done drew that confession from the Centurion, that Christ was the sonne of God. Matth. 27. 54. 3. Who denieth but that notwithstanding Christ truly complained he was forsaken, yet he was the sonne of God still: for the hypostaticall vnion was not hereby dissolued, as I haue answered to the first obiection: for like as the soule of Christ being parted from his bodie, was separated only from it ~~unum~~; not ~~unum~~; locally, not hypostatically: Damasene lib. 3. de Fid. c. 27. The soule ceased working in the bodie, yet was not diuorced in the personal being from the bodie: so the filiall vnion was not dissolued, though the effectuall feeling were for a while discontinued.

3. 1. It followeth not because Christ was alwaies the beloued sonne of God in himselfe, that therefore he could not be forsaken for a time in respect of our finnes, which he as our suretie answered for: If they can tell me, how these two can stand together, that first God should promise as concerning Dauid, his seed shall endure for ever, Psal. 89. 36. and yet the Church complaineth, thou hast reiected and abhorred, and beene angrie with thine annointed, Ibid. v. 38. then will I answer them how both these may be at once in Christ, dereliction and dereliction: like as then the elect members of Christ may be forsaken not totally, or finally, but ex parte, in part, and for a time, and yet their election remaine firme still; the same may be the case of our head, that he was ex parte derelictus, onely in part forsaken, and for a time, alwaies beloued for his owne innocency, but for vs and in our person, as our pledge and suretie deserted.

2. Augustine very well sheweth, how one man may at the same time both loue & hate another: Hominem deus fecit, prauaricatorum seipso fecit; amia in illo, quod deus fecit, persequere in illo, quod ipse sibi fecit: God made man, & he made himselfe a sinner, loue that which God made, persecute that which he made himselfe. in Psal. 100. So Christ in respect of his holines and innocency the fruits & graces of the spirit, was beloued of God, but in regard of our sins which were our owne works, now laide vpon Christ, as his owne, he was as forsaken: see more for a fuller answer to this argument. part. 8. resp. ad obiect. 1. et. 3.

4. 1. Christ indeed was not forsaken finally neither his soule in hell, nor his body in the graue, and so is S. Peter to be vnderstood. Act. 2. 27. Thou wilt not leave my soule in the graue or hel: for like as Christs bodie was forsaken for a time in that it died, but not forsaken finally, because it rose from death: so his soule was forsaken in part while the terrors of God were in it, but not totally or generally, because he subdued these sorrowes of hell, wherewith he was compassed. 2. Saint Paul in the one sense saith. 2. Cor. 4. 9. We are persecuted, but not forsaken; that is, vtterly or finally: Dauid in the other sense complaineth, that he was forsaken, Psal. 22. 1. that is in part, and for a time in his owne sense and feeling: And so Augustine well saith: Vnusquisque pro peccatis necessario flagellatur, sed ab eo, si Christianus est, misericordia dei non dispergitur: Euery man is necessarily whipped for his sinne, but he is not stripped of Gods mercy, if he be a Christian, in psal. 88. serm. 2. So there are two kinds of dereliction or forsaking, one is for a time and in part; so the elect may be, and Christ was vpon the crosse forsaken: another which is totall, final, and generall, and so neither Christ nor his members are forsaken.

5. 1. Neither doth it follow that Christ vttered words of desperation, if he had felt himselfe indeed in his soule forsaken: for we must distinguish between the faith of Christ, which was alwaies sound and firme, and the sense of his humane infirmity, which caused him to complaine; so that in the deepest bottome of the anguish of his soule he is vpheld and sustained by his faith, saying, my God, my God: whereby he sheweth his singular confidence and trust in God, notwithstanding the present sense of his wrath.

2. Bellarmin. 1. If Christ did suffer the punishment of the damned and of hell, as Caluine affirmeth, then he also despaired: for desperation is an essentiall part of the paine of hell. 2. This speech of Christ it was eyther deliberate and aduised, or indeliberate and vnaduised: if the first, then Christ verily despaired; if the second, his passions were inordinate, which is not to be admitted.

3. Neither can it be imagined, that the first clause (my God, my God) should be aduisedly spoken, and the other (why hast thou forsaken me) to be vnaduisedly vttered; was Christ so weak and inconstant, that he could not continue fower words in faith?

4. And if the first words, my God, my God, are a correction of the other, then the correction goeth before the error, which were absurd. Bellarmin. lib. 4. de anim. c. 8. arg. 6.

CONTRA.

Contra. 1. Such punishment of hell, as Christ might endure without sinne, wee doubt not to ascribe vnto him: but desperation is a detestable sinne, and therefore farre from Christ: the Apostle teacheth vs to make this exception, Heb. 4. 17. that Christ was tempted in all things as we are, sinne only excepted: wherefore this is a meere cauill to obiekt that, which is by the Apostle directly excepted. And Augustine also saith: Solus Christus sine peccato, peccati pœnam subire dignatus est: Onely Christ without sinne, vouchsafed to vndergoe the punishment of sinne, conr. 2. epist. Pelag. 4. 4. Therefore no punishment which is necessarily accompanied with sinne, can bee fastened vpon Christ.

2. The whole speech of Christ was aduised and deliberate, and yet no despayre at all: in which deliberatiue speech both he cryeth out in the feeling of his sorrow, that it might appeare what he endured for vs, and hee also vttereth his faith and confidence, to teach vs by his example to be confident in our troubles. Damasceus saith well for the first, ut in hispanis pœnis, &c. 20. Vnde et in desperatione, that which was said and done proceeded not from the fault or deprauiation of nature, but for the demonstration of his true existence and humanity: lib. 3. de fid. c. 22. For the other Saint Ambrose speaketh: Dubito illa nos firmat, ne in se capitis dubitare desperet: His doubtfulness doth strengthen vs, lest thou, when thou beginnest to doubt, shouldest despayre, lib. 2. de fid. c. 4.

3. 1. Neither doth the faith of Christ conclude it selfe within these wordes onely, My God, my God, but is continued throughout the whole sense and sentence: for at the same time Christ both sheweth his humane infirmities, and his constant fidelitie, his exceeding great passion, and his excellent confession: As Damasceus saith: per hanc aduersam mentem, his will was first tempted of his naturall infirmities; and againe, mentem, it was corroborate and strengthened by his diuine will, lib. 3. de fid. cap. 18. 2. Neither is this so straunge a thing, for nature and faith to appeare at once: as the Prophet David sheweth in himselfe, Psal. 31. 22. I said in my haste, I am cast out of thy sight: here is David's infirmities: yet thou hearest the voyce of my prayer: here is his faith and stabilitie.

4. Neither doe we say, that one part of the sentence is a correction of the other: but the whole sheweth a singular moderation and direction by faith of Christs naturall affection in the midst of his deepest passion: So the Apostle saith, Heb. 5. 8. that he learned obedience by the things which he suffered. And Augustine witnesseth: Vnde pœrefacit, quod & humanam habuit voluntatem, per quam obediit patri, & immaculatam ab omni peccato eandem voluntatem: Whereby he sheweth, that he had both an humane will, by the which hee was obedient to his father, and the same will immaculate and free from all sinne: ex epist. Agathon ad Constantiu.

6. 7. Christ notwithstanding this sense of his dereliction, might and did both promise paradise to the theeve, whereof he doubted not, and pray in charitie for his persecutors: for his faith, hope and charitie failed not in the deepest of his agonie: for though hee felt Gods wrath in his humane sense and infirmities, yet his faith was stedfast in all godly constancie: and so as Ambrose saith of the like request of Christ, when he prayed that the cup might passe, &c. that there was both one carnis, & deuotio spiritus, the voyce of the flesh, and the deuotion also of the spirit. In like manner in this place Christ sheweth in the complaint his humane sense, as also his godly confidence, Ambros. lib. 4. in Luc.

THE QUESTION CONFIRMED.

THat our blessed Sauour bearing our sinnes in himselfe vpon the crosse, did verily feelee Gods wrath in his soule, and truly complained in respect thereof, that he was forsaken of God: he himselfe thus euidently testifieth.

Argum. Our Sauour cryeth out and complaineth vpon the crosse: My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Matth. 27. 46. These words were vttered in truth, not in colour or shew: as Athanasius saith: verum, & aduersus, in dubio non videtur, All things were done naturally and in truth, not in opinion, or shew: ad Apollinar. Ergo, Christ did feelee himselfe in his soule forsaken of God.

Ans. 1. One answer is, that Christ speaketh in our person, and not in his owne; to the which sense some of the Fathers seeme to incline: as Damasceus lib. 3. de fid. c. 24. he saith, he was forsaken, because we were iustly forsaken for our sinnes.

2. But the most common answer is this, that Christ was forsaken in respect of his bodie and flesh, which was yeeled vp into the hands of the Iewes to kill and crucifie, and vsf at their pleasure, and therefore Christ complaineth, that God would not deliuer him: scilicet Bellarm. resp. ad arg. 4. as if Christ in effect had thus said: My God, which diddest deliuer Noe from the flood, Abraham from Vr of the Chaldees, Isaac from the sword of his father, Iacob from the hand of his brother, Israel out of Egypt, Ioseph out of prison, David from Goliath, &c. why hast thou left me without any helpe? scilicet Fenard. p. 477.

3. To this purpose the Frier alleageth diuers Fathers, as Tertullian, Origen, Epiphanius, Cyrill, Hierome, Bernard, p. 479. whose testimonies shall be examined afterward.

Contra,

Contra. 1. It is euident, that Christ speaketh in his owne person, saying, Why hast thou forsaken me? 2. As Origen saith, Non fas est credere mentiri Christum dicentem, quare, &c. It is not safe to beleeue that Christ lied when he said, why hast thou forsaken me? Tract. 35. in Matth. But if Christ had said he was forsaken, and yet was not, it had been an vntruth. 3. As for Damasceus sentence, it is reiected by Iodocus Chilonius in his enarrations vpon that place. 4. And yet Damasceus may very well be interpreted otherwise: for he saith that Christ thus spake, interius inuoluitur, inueniens, habitu, putting on, assumed, or inhabiting our person: which is as he expoundeth himselfe, cap. 2. 5. aduocatus, receiuing our person, that is, inuestitus, being ordained with vs, that is, made like vs: So then his meaning is, that Christ in our person, that is, in respect of his humanitie taken from vs, thus complained.

2. Neither can it be referred to the leauing of Christ in his bodily death and torments. 1. The sense of these words must be deriued from the 22. Psal. vers. 1. where the Prophet complaineth not so much of any outward affliction, but that he was without spiritual comfort, Why art thou so farre from my health, and the voice of my roring? And to the like effect he prayeth, Psal. 51. 11. Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holie spirit from me vers. 12. Restore me to the joy of thy saluation. To be cast away then, or forsaken, is to be left comfortlesse of Gods spirit.

2. If Christ should haue so cryed out, and, as the Prophet saith, rored, in respect of his bodily death, he should haue shewed himselfe weaker, than many of his members, who were chearefull in the midst of their torments, being inwardly comforted.

3. If this forsaking of Christ, were the leauing of him to the pleasure of his persecutors, it is likely that Christ would haue vttered this voyce in the beginning of his passion, being now already nayled to the crosse, for euen then had they wrought their will vpon him; but he so cryed not till three houres after: and at the ninth houre being readie to giue vp the ghost, and hauing wrestled all this while in his soule with the terrors of hell, and hauing felt the absence of Gods fauour within, as the world wanted the Sunne light without, then hee cryed out and complained, My God, my God, &c.

4. Neither doth the Scripture vse to call this a dereliction, or desertion, when a man is left to his persecutors: as Saint Paul saith, we are persecuted, but not forsaken, 2. Cor. 4. 9.

5. In this complaint of Christ, the whole person of Christ consisting of both his natures is expressed, the one part or nature of Christ forsaketh, that is his deitie, the other is forsaken, namely his humanitie; then the soule of Christ is also in this instant forsaken, as well as his bodie: for it either forsaketh, or is forsaken: but not the first, for it was the Godhead onely that left him, not in essence, but in sense; not in being, but in feeling: Ergo, his soule was forsaken.

6. Neither did the persecutors force Christs soule out of his bodie, that in that behalfe hee should complaine as forsaken: for hee layd downe his life of himselfe, no man tooke it from him, Ioh. 10. 18. And as Ambrose writeth vpon these words, Emisit spiritum, He gaue vp the ghost; Quod amittitur voluntarium; quod amittitur necessarium est: That which is emitted or sent forth is voluntarie; that which is amitted is necessarie, in Luc. 22.

7. Christ was forsaken, but in deeper degree and measure of feeling, as his members doe often finde themselves forsaken: but his members doe feeble the terrors of conscience, and for the time are as forsaken in their feeling: as it appeareth in Dauid, Psal. 31. 20. I am cast out of thy sight: In Iob. 30. 21. Thou art an enemy vnto me, &c. Ergo, so was Christ forsaken: for as Ambrose saith, Flagellatus est ipse, ne nos flagellaremur: He was scourged, that we should not be scourged, in Luc. 22. So he was forsaken, that we should not be forsaken.

3. 1. Tertullian saith, Reliqui dum non parci: God left his sonne in not sparing him, hee left him in deliuering him, lib. ad Praxeam. To this not sparing belongeth the spirituall forsaking: this testimonie is not against vs.

2. Origen saith, Derelictus fuit, comparatione gloria, &c. ad confusionem: He was forsaken, comparing his glorie which he had with his father to this present confusion vpon the crosse, Hom. 35. in Matth. As though the dereliction of his soule doth not properly belong vnto this confusion.

3. Epiphanius saith: Non separata deitate, &c. Christ did not thus crye out, as though his deitie were separated, contr. heres. 69. As though any man saith, that Christ was forsaken of his Godhead: this sentence is improperly alleaged.

4. Cyrill: Opus erat ad fidem nostram, &c. It was necessarie to our faith, that Christ should shew himselfe a true man in his passion: and therefore lest any man should doubt, as a man hee crieth out, My God, my God: lib. 10. Theosaur. c. 3. This testimonie rather maketh against the Frier: for if Christ by thus crying out would declare himselfe to be a perfect man, who consisteth of bodie and soule, it must follow, that the whole man Christ complaineth, that he was in his whole humanitie forsaken.

5. Hierome saith: Christus derelictus pro parte carnis: Christ was forsaken on the behalfe of his flesh, flesh, in Psal. 21. By flesh he vnderstandeth the whole humanitie of Christ: as in the same place, Humanitas loquitur quomodo derelicta fuerit in Adam: His whole humanitie speaketh how it was forsaken in Adam: which was both in bodie and soule.

6. Bernard saith: Quadam ob derelictio fuit, ubi nulla fuit in tanta necessitate virtutis exhibitio, nulla ostensio maiestatis: It was a kind of dereliction, when in such necessitie there was no vertue exhibited, no maiestie declared, ser. 5. de verb. Isaia. This may be referred as well to the sayling of inward comfort, as to the sayling of outward crosses: for neither in the one nor the other, did the diuine maiestie comfort and vertue declare it selfe.

7. Now on the contrarie side I will produce the Fathers testifying for the truth. 1. Origene For-
firm videtur poenitentia hominum, pro quibus passus est, &c. It may be that Christ seeing the finnes of men, for the which he suffered, cryed out, that he was forsaken. And againe, Non existimo humi-
no more ita dixisse propter calamitatem, qua eum comprehenderat in cruce: I doe not thinke that hee said thus after the manner of men, because of the calamitie, which fastened vpon him on the crosse, Tract. 39 in Matth. Origene then maketh not the outward calamitie of the crosse, but the inward suffring for our finnes, the ground and cause of Christs dereliction.

2. Andreas: Quoniam delicta aliena suscepit, etiam delictorum aliorum verba suscepit, ut me derelictum a patre dicam: Because I haue taken other mens finnes, I haue also taken the words of their finnes to say, I am forsaken of my father, de incarnatione. c. 9. This dereliction then of Christ proceeded from the consideration of our sins, which lay vpon him. And againe, Dubitatio illa non firmat, ne et si in desperatione caperis, desperes: His dubitation is our confirmation, that in our doubting we fall not into desperation, lib. 2. de fide. c. 4. He calleth the perplexitie and dereliction of Christ in his soule, dubitatio, or doubtfulness: though to speake properly Christ doubted not at all.

3. Hierome: Christus sic orauit in cruce, deus deus, quid dereliquisti me? longe a salute mea verba delictorum meorum, &c. Christ thus prayed vpon the crosse, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? far from my health are the words of my finnes, lib. 3. aduers. Pelag. Christs dereliction then was grounded vpon our finnes, which he bare.

4. Augustine: Non indignatus est assumere nos in se, transfigurare nos in se, & loqui verbis nostris, ut nos loqueremur verbis ipsius, hac enim mira commutatio facta est, & diuina parata sunt commercia, &c. He vouchsafed to assume our nature to himselfe, to transfigure vs in himselfe, to speake our words, that we might speake his words: for a wonderfull commutation is made, & a royall or diuine exchange effected, &c. in Psal. 30. As wee then speake with Christs words of spirituall comfort, so he spake our words in his spirituall distresse: and as wee in our trouble of minde complaine of the absence of Gods comfort, so did Christ.

5. Hilarie: Christus cruci vniuersa, quibus infirmabamur, affixit: ideo poenitentia nostra pars, & pro nobis dolet, &c. Christ did fasten to his crosse all those things vniuersally, whereby wee are weakened and troubled: therefore hee bare our finnes, and was grieved for vs, &c. c. 31 in Matth. If Christ fastened all our infirmities in himselfe to the crosse, then also the sense and feeling of desertion and dereliction.

6. Beda: Ps. homo loquitur moerens circumferens manus, quod in periculo posuit a deo non deseri putauit: He speaketh as a man bearing our feares, because when we are in daunger we thinke wee are forsaken of God, in 15. Marc. If Christ then complained of desertion and forsaking, as his members in their extremitie vse to doe: then was it the dereliction of his soule, which hee felt, as his members in some measure vse to feeble.

Wherefore leaving apart all other deuises and coniectures of men, I resolute with Origene: first, that neither Christ complained in humilitie, that he was forsaken of the deitie: for then he should haue complained vntuly. Secondly, neither that in regard of the present darknes hee so sayd, as some thinke. Thirdly, nor yet did he speake in the person of the Lewes, which were reuelled, that the Gentiles might be deluded. Fourthly, nor yet did hee make this outerye by reason of his outward calamitie vpon the crosse: all these coniectures Origene refuseth, and concludeth rather, that Christ because of our finnes which he bare, for the which he felt Gods anger, and himselfe forsaken, thus cryed out and complained vpon the crosse.

THE TENTH PART, THAT CHRIST WAS VERILY made a curse for vs, and did beare both in his bodie and soule, that curse, which by reason of the transgression of the law was due vnto vs.

THE OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

Against this position the Friers vse no speciall arguments, but such as were before produced Anic. 39.
 Against Christs feeling of the wrath of God.

1. If

1. If Christ stood accursed for vs in his soule before God; then there would follow a dissolution of his person from the vnitie of the Godhead: but Christ semper sine rapina sequebatur Deo, &c. alwayes without any robberie, or iniurie to God; tooke himselfe to be equall to him, Enui deus, pag. 470.

2. Christ was alwayes beloued of God and in his fauour? Ergo, not accursed; Fenard. pag. 470. confut. 4.

3. If he were accursed; then also he despayred, and was damned, Fenard. pag. 446. confut. 5. lin. 5. 11.

Answe. These obiections I haue answered before, part. 8. respons. ad obiect. 1. 2. 3. & part. 9. respons. ad obiect. 4. The summe of our answer was this: 1. That there is no more feare of the dissolution of Christ's person, for the spirituall conuelsing vpon his soule, then for the externall figured in the death of his bodie: 2. Neither is the externall loue of God thereby discontinued or interrupted: For as I shewed, this dereliction or curse, was not totall but partially, temporall, not eternall: and Christ for his owne innocencie and holinesse was alwayes beloued of God; but stood accursed for our sinnes: See our answer more at large, part. 8. respons. ad obiect. 1. 2. 3. & part. 9. respons. ad obiect. 1. 3. Neither vpon the admitting of this curse, shall eyther damnation or desperation follow in the soule of Christ: though it were spirituall, yet was it not eternall: though there were a dereliction, yet no desperation: though desolation for a time; yet no damnation: it was painfull, yet not full: Christ's soule was perplexed, yet his faith not peruered: hee was not onely vpon the crosse, but vnder Gods curse for vs: damnation and desperation are the inseparable companions of eternall and totall malediction: but so was not Christ accursed: but in part and for a time. 1. The execration of his soule doeth no more enforce damnation and desperation, then the malediction of his bodie, which is granted. 2. Ieremie felt himselfe vnder Gods wrath and curse, when he said, *Woe is me, Ierem. 17. 10. and vers. 17. Thou hast filled me with indignation, vers. 18. My plague is desperate, why art thou so me woe? Ierem. 20. 14. Cursed be the day wherein I was borne: yet Ieremie was neyther damned, nor despaired. 3. Wee doubt not to ascribe all our censurations to Christ, without sinne; therefore he must be freed from damnation and desperation. As Bernard well saith, Christus passus propter nos & propter nos peccata: he tasted the sinne, but tooke not the sinne, admirabile. But for more full answer, I referre the reader to the ninth part, *respons. ad obiect. 1.

THE QUESTION CONFIRMED.

THe Apostle in most direct words proueth the question, when he saith, Galath. 3. 13. Christ hath redeemed vs from the curse of the law, when he was made a curse for vs: as it is written, Cursed is every one, that hangeth on a tree: I say then with Ambrose, Cur crucifiscimus satelli, quod Apostolus non erubuit alio videri profiteri? Why should I be ashamed to confesse that, which the Apostle with a loud voyce hath professed, that Christ was truly made a curse for vs?

Answe. 1. Christ may be said to be a curse, that is, maledictionis remissio, because he remitted or released the curse, Fenard. pag. 377. confut. 18. 2. He was accursed onely in respect of his ignominious death, as Psalm. 22. 6. Opprobrium hominum & abiectio plebis: Part a shame of men, and the contempt of the people; Fenard. pag. 470. confut. 3. lin. 11.

Contra. 1. The first answer the Apostle remoueth, when he saith, Christ hath redeemed vs from the curse of the law, when he was made a curse for vs: to be made a curse and to redeeme vs from the curse, are not all one: but the remitting of the curse, is all one with the redeeming from the curse: Ergo, the remitting of the curse is not to be made a curse. 2. Again, the Apostle proueth Christ to be cursed, because he hanged on a tree, as it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree, that is, he is indeed accursed; not the curse onely remitted. 3. The receiving of the curse is one thing, the remitting another: first, Christ tooke the curse vpon himselfe, and so tooke away the curse: malediction then, and the remission of the malediction are two diuers things. 2. That this curse, wherewith Christ was accursed for vs cannot be referred to the externall death vpon the crosse, it appeareth by these reasons.

1. S. Hierome saith, Non quicumq; pependit in ligno, maledictus coram Deo, sed qui propter scelus suspensus: not euery one that hangeth vpon a tree, is cursed before God, but he that hangeth there for his sinne: in 3. ad Galat. Like as if Haman had preuailed against Mardoche, and hanged him vpon the gallows which he had made for him; Mardoche in his innocencie, notwithstanding that ignominious death, should not haue stood accursed; wherfore it was not the death of the crosse, but our sinnes hanging vpon the crosse, that deriued this curse vpon Christ: this also is euident out of Moses; that not the kind of death, but the desert of death made it ignominious, Deut. 21. 22. If a man haue committed a trespass worthis of death, and be put to death, and then hang him on a tree, &c.

We

Wee see then, that cursins hanging with Christ vpon the crosse, made the same an accursed death.

2. Christ was made that curse, which he redeemed vs from, otherwise the Apostle had not reasoned soundly, we are redeemed from the curse, because Christ was made a curse: he remitteth that curse to vs, which he received in himselfe. Beda also saith, Christus supplicium nostrum sine reatu suscepit, ut solueret reatum, & finiret supplicium: Christ hath taken our punishment without guilt, to loose the guilt, and end the punishment, in 3. ad Galat. What other punishment ended he, but that we tooke? but to vs was due for the transgression of the law, the curse both of body and soules. Ergo, the same curse Christ tooke.

3. The wordes in Moses are maledictus deo, he is cursed to God, that hangeth on a tree, but no death in it selfe is more ignominious then another before God, the shame thereof is externall, and concerneth men: Ergo, the curse was not in the ignominious death: the ordinarie gloss thus noteth vpon these wordes: Non est hoc in contumeliam Domini, quid mirum si maledictus dicitur Deus, qui habet in se, quod Deus odit, i. peccatum: This redoundeth not to the reproch of God; for what marvaile, if he be said to be accursed to God, that hath in himselfe that which God hateth, namely sinne, in 3. Galat. it is not the maner of the death onely, that made it ignominious, but our sins, which Christ bare.

4. Oecumenius vpon this place thus writeth: we were subiect to the curse because we had transgressed the law; Christ was not subiect, because he had fulfilled it: Ergo ergo execrationem suscepit, cui obnoxius non erat, quoniam suspensus fuit in ligno, ut execrationem solueret, quia idcirco suscipi erat: Hee therefore tooke that curse, to the which hee was not subiect: when he hanged vpon the tree, to loose the curse which was against vs, in 3. ad Gal. From hence I reason thus: Christ tooke that curse for vs, which otherwise was not due vnto him; but death & mortalitie were incident & appertaining vnto the humane nature of Christ, though he had not dyed for vs, which notwithstanding was impossible: Ergo, the curse was not in Christs death onely. That Christ was by humane nature subiect to mortalitie; 1. the Scripture testifieth: It became him in all things to be like vnto vs, Heb. 2. 17: Ergo, he was mortall as we are by nature. 2. S. Ambrose giueth this reason: Quia exceptum se putat a conditione moriendi, qui non exceptus fuit a conditione nascendi: Who can thinke himselfe exempt from the condition of dying, that is not freed from being borne? Putandum est, Christ therefore being borne, had an aptnesse in his nature to die.

If the Lordes body had bene immortall, it had not bene of the same substance with ours: then it would follow, saith he, that Christ was not truly made man, and to consequently we not truly saued: de sit. lib. 3. c. 28. 4. And Ambrose againe saith: Christ was not exempted from death, ut carnis quousque susceperat, legem non recusaret: That he should not refuse the lawe of the flesh, which he tooke: In Lib. 1. c. 1. Mors Christi propter naturam secundum naturam corporis, specialiter secundum virtutem: Christs death was common in the nature of his body, but speciall in respect of the vertue and power thereof: Ambros. lib. 1. c. 1.

Yet least I be here mistaken, as though I did thinke, that Christ, if he had not died vpon the crosse, (if it had been possible) should otherwise haue died: I am faine from so thinking; for Christ had neuer tasted death but for vs, Heb. 2. 9. I onely shew that the lawe of mortalitie was in his flesh by the nature thereof, which lawe notwithstanding by his diuine spirit, should haue been dispensed with, and oueruled. So that he was not, but in the case of our redemption to haue died. And here I willingly embrace Damasces iudgement: The flesh of Christ was not by nature free from mortalitie, but yet it was a quickening and liuing flesh, and exempted from mortalitie by the hypostaticall vniion of the Godhead: de lib. 3. c. 1.

This then I conclude with Augustine: Credo filium dei mortuum esse non secundum naturam, sed quoniam ex rebus non habuit, sed secundum legem naturae, quoniam pro hominibus nostris suscepit: I beleeue that the sonne of God died, not according to the punishment of vniuersall reprobation, which he had not at all, but according to the law of nature, which he tooke for the redemption of mankind: de lib. 1. c. 1. 8. If death then and mortalitie were in Christs nature, and the curse appertaining, but the curse which he tooke, did not belong vnto him, but to vs onely for our sinne; it followeth, that this curse was not wholly in his death.

That curse which Christ did beare, he hath redeemed vs from: but we are not freed nor redeemed from shameful and ignominious kinds of death: the members of Christ deus bene redempti, sed non a simili, etc. Heb. 11. 33. Ergo, the curse which was laid vpon Christ, was not in his ignominious death.

Obiect. 1. The Apostle saith: Heb. 12. 2. Thas Iesu subiecit se crosse, et dispense de hinc; he referred the shame to the manner of death vpon the crosse.

Ans. 1. The Apostle speaketh of the shame of the crosse; but not of the curse: 1. We confesse that it was a shameful and cursed death, but therein lay not the whole curse: 2. To this shame belonged not onely the manner of death which Christ suffered, but in that he was counted among transgressors,

transgressors, I say, 53. 12. and was put to death by the Jewes as a transgressor of their law: and so herein consisted the chiefe part of the shame and curse of the crosse, that he bare our sinnes, and so was counted a transgressor for vs.

Obiect. 2. But the Apostle proueth Christ to be made a curse, onely because he hanged vpon a tree: the ignominie then of his death made the curse.

Ans. 1. We grant it was a cursed death, but therein the Apostle wholly and onely placeth not the curse. 2. I shewed before out of Moses and Hierome, that not the hanging of euery one, but onely of malefactors was accursed: so that not the death, but the desert, not the condition, but the cause, not the suspension, but the transgression made the curse: and so Christ in this ignominious death was made a curse by reason of our sinnes that were laid vpon him: and thus as he was made sinne for vs, and reputed a sinner in our stead; so verily he felt Gods wrath and curse in his soule, which was due to our sinnes.

I will conclude with Augustine: Maledictus omnis, &c. ne Christum excludatur qui benedictus in sua iusticia, maledictus ob delicta nostra: Cursed is euery one, that Christ should not be excluded, who was blessed in his own righteousness, but accursed for our sinnes: And before he thus writeth: rehearsing the Apostles words, that Christ was sent in the similitude of sinfull flesh, Rom. 8. 3. Quia propter nos homines sine peccato, mortalis fuit: Because Christs flesh, though without sinne, yet was mortall: And againe the Apostle saith, God made him sinne for vs. 2. Cor. 5. 20. Maledictum comes peccati: But malediction is the companion of sin or transgression, cont. Fant. Manich. lib. 14. c. 12. If Christ then were accursed for our sinnes, if he by nature of his flesh were subiect to mortalitye, if malediction were adherent to our sinnes which he bare, then did not the curse onely consist in his outward death: We confesse, that it also was part of the curse, as Augustine in the same place: Mors maledicta, quia punit peccati: Death is accursed, because it is the punishment of sinne, but it was not the whole nor the greatest part of that curse, which Christ was made for vs.

Again vpon those words of the Apostle, Galat. 3. 13. Cursed is euery one, &c. Loquitur Paulus de Christo, qui in cruce pendit ex parte mortali; nam in eo maledicta mors & maledictum peccatum, quia in cruce pendendum; sic Moses ex aliaui serpenti enim serpentis mors & peccatum intelliguntur, super quo Christum in cruce triumphans, sic de maledictis viciis maledictum, de morte mortem, de peccato peccatum, de serpente serpentem: Paul speaketh of Christ, who did hang vpon the crosse in his mortall part, for in him death was accursed, and sinne accursed, which did hang on the crosse, ouer the which Christ triumphed vpon the crosse: so Moses lift vp the serpent, for by the serpent death and sinne are vnderstood: for Christ ouercame curse with curse, death with death, sione by sinne, the serpent by a serpent: in 3. ad Galat. From this sentence of Augustine I inferre, 1. That he nameth the curse of sinne before the curse of death, 2. That Christ did beare that curse vpon the crosse, ouer the which he triumphed, but he triumphed ouer the whole curse both of bodie and soule. 3. That as he subdued our death by his death, so our sinne by his sinne, now imputed to him, and our curse by his curse: so that, such curse as he redeemed vs from, he bare himselfe. 4. Neither doth he say, that Christ was accursed onely in his mortall part, but did hang vpon the crosse in his mortall part, which we denie not, but there hanged also the curse of death and sinne.

Thus I trust it is euident that Christ did sustaine in his soule, and not in his bodie onely, the wrath and curse of God, which was due vnto our sinnes: and so by bearing our sinnes, hath acquitted vs thereof, and by enduring the curse hath also freed vs therefrom: and so I endewith that saying of Hierome: inuria domini nostra gloria: The Lords iniurie is our glorie: in 3. ad Galat. The more we ascribe to Christs sufferings the lesse remaineth of ours: the more painfully that he suffered, the more fully are we redeemed: the greater his sorrow was, the greater our solace, his consolation is our consolation, his crosse our comfort, his annoy our endlesse joy, his distress in soule, our release, his calamitie our comfort: his misery our mercie, his aduersitie our felicity, and so conclude, his hell our heauen: and so our blessed Saviour as Chrysostome saith; Plurimum in morte doleretur: ut quoniam omnes tragædi scribere possunt, exspiravit: Being vexed in his death, with more sorrow then all tragicall writers in the world can expresse, gaue vp his spirit. hom. 3. in Matth. For this so infinite and ynspokeable loue of our Saviour, we can neuer be sufficiently thankfull, who vouchsafed not onely to die, but to enter into hell for vs; not onely to offer his bodie to paine, but his soule to sorrow for vs; wounds to receiue in his sense, and terrors in conscience; a crosse in his bodie, and a curse in his soule: the greater debt he paid, the greater our dette: the more painfull his crosse, the more fruitful his death, the more thankfull his loue: the deeper his wound, the more infinitely are we bound: the more excellent his patience, the more willing ought to be our obedience: and as Chrysostome well saith: Sæpe singulos dies pro eo moreremur, qui nos dilexit, non sic meritum exolveremus: If we should die euery day for him, which hath so loued vs, we could not be answerable to his merite. hom. 19. in Matth.

The conclusion of all is this, that seeing the bodily sufferings of Christ in respect of Gods iustice were not sufficient, part. 1. that Christs agony in the garden was not caused by the feare of his his bodily death, but proceeded from the feare and feeling of Gods wrath, part. 2. and seeing our Sauour suffered properly and immediately in soule, and not by compassion only or consent with his bodie, part. 3. if Christ did sustaine the very torments of hel in his soule, as is proued, part. 4. and did appeare before God as guiltie of our sinnes, part. 5. and was perplexed in his soule and conscience for the same, part. 6. if our Sauour by the iustice of God was to die for our sinnes, and by his death did satisfie his iustice, and appease his wrath, part. 7. if in his soule he verily felt the wrath of God kindled against our sinnes, part. 8. and truely complained that he was in that instant forsaken of God, part. 9. and lastly if he were made a curse for vs in his bodie and soule, part. 10. It remaineth that Christ did not onely suffer in bodie for our sinnes, but sustayned also in his soule such punishment, vexation and sorrow, as was due vnto vs, and which we should haue endured, if he had not as our suretie in his owne person vnderaken for vs: so I conclude with Saint Ambrose: Passionem in Christo plus veneror quam creationem, quia creati ad laborem sumus, redempti ad quietem: I doe more honour Christs passion, then the creation; for we were created to labour, we are redeemed to rest. serm. 14. in psal. 19. And this question haue I of purpose trauailed in, though not as I would, my leasure not seruing thereunto, and being so straited, the Printer hastening this worke, that I scarcely had a moneth to dispatch this treatise: yet I haue laboured to my power to set forth Christs holy sufferings for vs, that nothing be detracted therefrom: and so I ende with that saying of Origen: Non sic mihi videtur inutilis, qui natiuitatem Christi, stellam &c. salutationem angelorum tacet, quam qui crucifixum eum abscondit: He seemeth not to me to be so vnprofitable, which doth conceale Christs natiuitie, the Starre and salutation of the Angels, as he that doth hide Christ crucified, bom. 1. in Matth.

Lastly for the confirmation of this truth, that Christ suffered the wath of God in his soule for vs, I will produce. 1. The testimonie of our aduersaries themselves. 2. The witnesse of the holy martyrs that died in this faith. 3. The consent of the famous writers and confessors of the Church of England.

First for our aduersaries: 1. Nicholau Cusanu a man of great account among them thus writeth: Illam penam sensu conformem damnatis in inferno pati voluit in gloriam dei patris sui: That paine of sense conformable or like vnto the damned in hell he would suffer to the glory of God his father: Exitation. lib. 10. ex serm. qui per spiritum sanctum seipsum obtulit.

2. Ferus: Ille Christi derelictio maior est conscientia nostra ob admissa peccata, qua iudicium Dei & iram eternam experitur, & sic afficitur, quasi in perpetuum derelicta, & reiecta a facie Dei esset: That dereliction of Christ is the trembling of our conscience for sinne committed, which feeleth by experience Gods iudgement and eternall wrath, and is so affected, as if it were for euer forsaken, and reiected from the pretence of God. lib. 4. in Matth. c. 27. in illa verba: deus meus, &c.

3. Durand. Precipua causa fuit anima, &c. The chiefest cause of the effects of Christs crosse was his soule, in 3. dist. 22. qu. 3. Bellarmino saith, not so: Sed precipua causa fuit totum compositum: i. tota eius illa homo qui patiebatur: pretere a isto, fuisset anima precipua causa, tamen etiam caro & sanguis fuit causa; alioqui non vere diceretur, sanguis eius emundat vos: The chiefe cause is the whole compound, that is, the whole man which suffered: beside, be it, that his soule was the chiefe cause; yet his flesh and blood was a cause; otherwise it should not be truely said, his blood doth cleanse vs. 1. Iohn. 1:7. Here by Bellarmines owne testimonie the soule of Christ (which must be by the suffering thereof) is the chiefest cause of our redemption. Bellarmin. lib. 4. de Christi. anim. ca. 15.

Secondly, the holy martyrs haue thus beleueed of Christs soule sufferings: Master Latimer Bishop and martyr: I beleue verely for my part, that Christ suffered the paines of hell proportionablie, as it correspondeth: and: answereth to the whole sinne of the world: And againe, I see no inconuenience to say that Christ suffered in soule in hell, I singularly commend the exceeding great charity of Christ, that for our sakes would suffer in hell in his soule: It setteth out the vnspeakable hatred, that God hath to sinne. Sec. serm. 7. coram reg. Edward. Here though Master Latimer seeme to thinke that Christ might suffer in the place of hell in soule, for the which we alleage him not: yet he giueth three effectuell reasons, that it was necessarie for Christ to suffer the paines of hell in his soule. 1. That his paines may be proportionable to the sinne of the world. 2. To set forth Christs charitie. 3. And the great wrath of God against sinne.

Iohn Warne holy martyr hath also sealed this truth: Christ suffering for our sinnes did beare our deserved condemnation, the paines of death, the tast of abjection, the verie terrors of hell, yeelding his spirit to his father, his bodie to be buried in the earth. Fox: p. 1780. col. 2.

Thirdly for the confessors, and the confession of our Church, this euidence we haue.

1. The annotation in the great Bible called the Bishops Bible, allowed publicly to be red in our Church: vpon the 22. chapter of Saint Luke. vers. 44. thus testifieth: He felt the horror of Gods wrath and iudgement against sinne.

2. And in the booke of homilies allowed publicly to be recited to the people. serm. 1. of the passion, it thus standeth: Christ did put himselfe betwene Gods deserved wrath and our sinne, and reue

the obligation, wherein we were in danger to God, and payd our debt. Our debt was a great deale too great for vs to haue payd; and without payment God the father could neuer be at one with vs: it pleased him to be the payer thereof, and to discharge vs quite. And againe afterward, He bestowed himselfe wholly for the ransoming of vs. If Christ then gaue himselfe wholly for vs, and payed all our debt, whereof the chiefe part was the griefe and anguish of soule and sence of Gods wrath, it was necessarie that Christ should haue suffered all these things for vs.

3. In the Catechisme authorized publicly to be taught, in the exposition of the Creede vpon the article of Christs passion, it is thus confessed: Christ suffered most painfull and shamefull death, sustaining withall torments of minde more cruell, than any bodily death. And againe, Christ became our suretie and pledge vnto his father, to answer, pay and suffer, whatsoeuer wee did owe, and had deserued.

4. Beside this publike testimonie of our Church, the common defenders of the faith of the Gospell, both by writing and preaching haue thus taught; as D. Fulke, that worthie learned man, thus witnesseth: 't was the burthen of sinne and the curse of God, due vnto sinne, which Christ took vpon him to deliuer vs from sinne and the punishment thereof, and not onely the bodily paine of death, that enforced him, that was God, to complaine, that he was forsaken of God. Aunot in Matib. 27. self. 3.

Again, What is more to the honor of Christ, than that he vouchsafed to descend into hell for vs, and to abide that paine, which we had deserued to suffer eternally: and what may be rather called hell, than the anguish of soule, which hee suffered, when hee being God complained, that he was forsaken of God? Fulke in 2. Ait self. 11.

5. Master Fox that reuerend godly writer, and faithfull preacher of the Gospell, consenteth with the rest, and thus deliuereth his iudgement: The torments which Christ suffered in soule and spirit, were the greatest of all, when as he not onely in bodie decaying for weakenes and bleeding, but in soule fainting with anguish and discomfort, began to crye with a loud voyce, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? serm de Christo Crucifixo.

6. A zealous preacher of our Church, who had while he lived great experience of the cases of conscience, and an excellent grace from God to comfort such as were afflicted, doubteth not to say, that Christ must suffer the very pangs and paines of hell for the least sin that euery man committed, seeing that euen our least sinnes caused him to be accursed, and in the extremitie of griefe to crye, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? in his Meditations, pag. 215. set forth since his death.

Thus (I trust) this poynt is thoroughly cleared, that Christ suffered the very anguish and hell sorrowes of soule for vs, and tasted of the bitter cup of Gods wrath due vnto our sinnes, which otherwise wee should haue most deeply drunke of. And here I will end this question, in the handling whereof, if I haue either in manner failed, or in matter swarued from the doctrine of our Church, I heartily desire pardon, most willingly submitting my selfe to the iudgement of the learned: and this I simply and vnfaignedly protest, that the loue of seeking and searching out the truth hath drawne me into this question, not the desire of contention with any in our Church, much lesse to oppose my selfe to the iudgement of any reuerend person, whom for their authoritie I honour, for their person I reuerence, for their learned trauailes in the Church we are much bound vnto: from whom I am as vnwilling to dissent, as desirous to learne. And so I conclude, most humbly crauing in the bowels of Christ, that where I haue said the truth, I may be receiued; where I doubt, I may be resolu'd; where I haue well sayd, I be not condemned; where I haue ignorantly slipped, I may be pardoned. For I doe most willingly embrace that sentence of Augustine: Aliquid aliter sapere, quam res habet, humana tentatio est; in nullo aliter sapere, quam res habet, angelica perfectio est: Otherwise sometime to thinke, then the matter is, is an humane tentation; but in nothing to be deceiued, is angelicall perfection: De baptis. 2. 5. If in this question of soule sufferings, there be any difference of opinion in our Church, let not any man take offence thereat, for we all doe consent, that Christs death is alone sufficient, neither doe we varie in any fundamentall poynt: they which doe free Christ from his spirituall sufferings, doe it vnto his honor, least by this means any desperation, or doubting might be fastened vpon Christs soule; they which affirme the sence of Gods wrath in Christs soule, do therein also seek Christs honor, least anything should be diminished of his holy sufferings. Seeing therefore we all hold the same foundation, and tend to the same end, let vs not either by writing or speaking nourish domesticall contention, but be willing one to yeeld vnto another in the truth, and euery one readie to say with S. Hierome, Non solum te vicisse existimes vicinus uterque, palmam refer tu mihi, et ego tu erroris; vti nam mihi semper sic disputare conuigat, ut ad meliora proficiens, desorano, quod male tenebam: Thinke not, that thou onely haist ouercome, we are conquerors both, you beare the palme and praise of my error, I of yours: I wish that I may alwaies dispute with such successe, that proceeding to the better, I may forsake that, which before I did not well holde: aduers. Luciferian. But I haue carried too long in this question: the next followeth.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION, WHETHER CHRIST descended in soule into hell, to deliuer the Patriarches.

The Papists:

They doe beleene that Christ according to his soule went downe to hell, to deliuer the Patriarches and all iust men there holden in bondage till his death, Rhemist. Añ. 2. sect. 12. 16. Error

Argum. 1. Hee that ascended, is he that descended first into the lowest parts of the earth, Ephes. 4. 9. that is, into hell, the which is the lowest place in the earth, Bellarm. cap. 12.

Answ. 1. The earth it selfe, in respect of the world, is the lowest part, so that here one part of the earth is not to be compared with another: but the whole earth, in respect of the high heavens, hath the name of the lower parts: so is it taken, Psal. 139. 15. Thou hast fashioned me beneath, or in the lower parts of the earth: but David (I trust) they will not say, was borne in hell, because he speaketh of the lower parts of the earth, consul. Bez. in hunc locum. So that by the descending of Christ into the lowest parts of the earth, is meant nothing else, but the lowest and extreamest degree of his abasing and humiliation, Fulk. anner in hunc locum: as Saint Paul saith, that he made himselfe of no reputation, and tooke vpon him the forme of a seruant, Philip. 2. 7. 2. Again, Psal. 63. 9. the Prophet David saith, they that seeke his soule to destroy it, shall goe downe into the lowest parts of the earth: which the Septuagint translate, ἐν τῇ κατώτῃ τῇ γῇ, infima terra, the lowest parts: and Saint Paul saith, in the comparatiue humilioris, the lower parts: As in the Psalm therefore by the lowest parts the Psalmist vnderstandeth the graue and destruction, as it may appeare, vers. 10. They shall be a portion for Foxes; so the Apostle by descending into the lower parts, doth set forth the lowest degree of Christs humiliation, in death, and the graue.

Contra: Bellarmine thus objecteth: 1. The inferiour part of the earth, signifieth not the whole earth, sed vnam partem, but one part of the earth, and that lower than the rest: it doth not then betoken the superficies, or vpper part of the earth.

2. He descended (saith the Apostle) that he might fill all things, Ephes. 4. 10. and therefore it was necessarie that Christ should truly descend to hell to deliuer the Patriarches, as he descended into the earth, to visite all parts of his kingdome: that euen, the things also vnder the earth, that is, the infernall spirits should how the knee vnto him, Bellarm. c. 12. Luc. 6.

Answ. 1. The inferiour part of the earth being compared with it selfe, cannot signifie the whole earth: but being vnderstood to be the inferiour part of the world, the whole earth may very well be comprehended. 2. Where the Apostle saith in the plurall, inferiores partes, the inferiour parts, it is too great ignorance to say, that hee meaneth, vnam partem, but one part. 3. Origen thus expoundeth Saint Paul to speake of Christ: Quasi de superioribus ad inferiora veniens: Comming from the superiour to the inferiour or lower parts, Hom. 2. in Genes. And againe, Descendere dicitur, quando curam humana fragilitatis habere dignatur, &c. God is said to descend, when hee vouchsafeth to haue care of humane frailtie, which more specially is to be vnderstood of Christ, qui descendit non solum curare, sed portare, qua nostra sunt, who descended not onely to cure, but to beare, that which is ours, Hom. 4. in Genes. Thus also Augustine testifieth: Celestis illa habitatio angelorum illa pars reru superna est: hac terrena vita, si illi comparatur, inferna est: cum enim hic sunt mortui, ne mireris, si infernum dicitur: That celestiall habitation of the Angels is the superiour part, this terrene life in respect of that, the infernall: for seeing here are also vpon the earth, they which are dead, no maruile if it be infernall, in Psal. 85.

1. How Christ filleth all things Augustine well sheweth: Nec tamen localem dei fingimus presentiam, non mundum dimittens ad caelos ascendit, nec caelum deserens ad terram venit, sed vno eodemq; tempore totus totum impletis: Neither doe we imagine a locall presence of God, for hee went not to heauen leauing the world, neither forsaking heauen came to the earth; but in one and the same time, he all and whole filled the whole, Añ. cum Felician c. 17. Christ then not by his focall presence, but by his diuine power filled all things.

2. Neither is that place Philip. 2. 10. to be vnderstood of Christs descension: 1. The Apostle speaketh directly of Christs exaltation: vers. 9. Therefore God hath exalted him: but the descension belongeth not to Christs exaltation, as Origen saith: Si diligenter consideremus, inueniemus, quia nunquam quis in sanctum fore locum descendisse dicitur, neque ad vituperabilem conscendisse: If we well consider, we shall finde, that one is not said to descend to an honourable place, nor to ascend to a dishonourable, Hom. 15. in Genes. He thinketh then, that to descend belongeth not to honor, or exaltation. 2. Saint Paul sheweth, that this bowing of the knee vnto Christ of all creatures shall chiefly be accomplished in the day of iudgement, Rom. 14. 11. 12. where hauing made mention of bowing of the knee, he inferreth, vers. 12. so then every one of vs shall giue account of himselfe vnto God. 3. It is too great curiositie to applie this place to the infernall spirits properly: for they are not yea vnder the earth as tyed to a certaine place, being by the Apostle called the princes.

of the ayre, Ephes. 2. 2. the Apostle rather by this distribution, of things in heauen, things in the earth, and things vnder the earth, comprehendeth generally all creatures in the world whatsoever: as in the second commaundement wee are forbidden to make the likenes of any thing to worship it, either in heauen above, in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth. 4. To cause the infernall spirits to bow the knee to Christ, that is, to acknowledge his power, Augustine ascribeth not to the presence of Christs humanity, but to the power of his diuinitie: Neque aliter eum video suscitare potuisse carnem suam, si apud inferos pradicem videt absenti dei non fuisse potentiam: Neither doe I see how otherwise Christ could haue raised his flesh, if we doe thinke the power of his God-head was absent in hell: Ad. cum Feliciano. 17.

3. All this being yeelded, that Christ by his descent into hell shaked the infernall powers, and triumphed ouer them, which is by some of our reuerend fathers, and learned brethren, vpon great perswasion of many forcible reasons and arguments affirmed, neither is by me impugned, yet hath not Bellarmine obtained that he would, that Christ by his locall descent did deliuer the soules of the Patriarches out of hell.

Argum. 2. Ad. 2. 27. Thou wilt not leaue my soule in hell, nor suffer thy holy one to see corruption: this cannot be vnderstood of the graue; for the graue is no place for the soule: and here the soule is opposed to the flesh, that as his flesh should see no corruption, so his soule should not remaine in hell: Christ therefore went downe in soule to hell, which was to no other end but to deliuer the fathers from thence, Bellarmino. ibid.

Ans. This place is alleaged by Saint Peter, out of the sixteenth Psalm; from thence then the sense of this place must be deriued: first therefore we shall shew, that neither the word (nephes) here translated soule, can properly signifie the soule of Christ; nor the other worde (sheol) can be translated hell.

1. First, this word nephes, is taken in Scripture for the life, Genes. 37. 21. Let vs not smite his soule, that is, take away his life: and consequently it signifieth sometime the very bodie of the dead, wherein there was life, Leuit. 21. ver. 1. 11. And that in this place, nephes signifieth the life, it shall appeare by the like place, Psal. 88. 3. My life (nephes) draweth nere to the graue or hell; (sheol) this place may very well interpret the other.

2. Secondly, the other word (sheol) is not here vnderstood hell. There are foure words commonly vsed in the Psalmes, expressing the same thing in effect which (sheol) doth: yet none of them all are applied to signifie hell: the first is (sheol) sheol, the pit, Psal. 30. 9. What profit is there in my blood, when I goe downe to the pit? the second (bor) the lake: the third (ebber) the graue: both these words are indifferently vsed for the same thing, Psal. 88. 3. the word is (sheol) ver. 4. 5. the other two words are also vsed, as expressing the former: And all these three doe containe a description of death, and of the graue: the fourth is, (sheol) sheol, thou wilt take me from the deepe of the earth, Psal. 71. 2. In all these places there is no mention made at all of hell, but onely of the graue.

- Now that this place can haue no such meaning, as Bellarmino enforceth, thus wee shew it: first, this place is so applied to Christ, as it must first be true in Dauid: well then, first Dauid's soule is in hell, then must it be in the lowest hell, Psal. 86. 1. 2. Thou hast deliuered my soule from the snaremost hell (sheol) But Limbus patrum is not the neathermost hell, but (as they say) only in the brim of hell. Againe, Saint Peter onely applieth this text to the resurrection of Christ, ver. 31. he knowing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ: But the resurrection was onely of the bodie of Christ, not of his soule: wherefore this place cannot be vnderstood of the descending of Christs soule into hell, to deliuer the Patriarches.

Contra: Bellarmine replieth: 1. That anima, the soule, cannot be here taken for the life of the bodie or flesh: for that the Apostle expresseth afterward, that his flesh did see no corruption, ver. 31. Wherefore vnlesse we admit a needlesse repetition of the same thing, it was one thing for Christs soule not to be left in hell, another for his flesh not to see corruption.

2. The Greeke word anima, alwaies signifieth hell, the graue neuer: Bellar. c. 12. Soc. 4.
1. Ans. 1. Where the Prophet saith, Thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, nor suffer thy holy one to see corruption: though the same thing be here expressed, it is no needlesse repetition, when as, after the manner of the Scripture, the latter part expoundeth the former: for hee sheweth how his soule, that is, his life or person, shall not be left in hell, because his flesh should be deliuered from corruption. 2. And that by soule Christs person is to be vnderstood it may appeare, as in the like sense it is said, Genes. 46. 26. the soules that went with Iacob into Egypt: Christs soule, that is, person, may be as well said to be in the graue, as their soules to goe downe to Egypt. And againe, S. Peter by the holy one, expoundeth Christs flesh: what is the holy one, but Christs soule or person? for holines properly is not an adiunct of his flesh onely, but of his person: as well then may soule be taken for the life, as the holy one for his flesh. 3. Saint Peter saith, that the Prophet spake of Christs resurrection which is of the bodie, not of the soule: as Augustine also saith; Primo genitum Christum videri caus ex mortuis, quod primum illum ex inferni tenebris, in lucem resurrectionis parvis ediderit: Christ is called the first borne of the dead, because the birth of the resurrection did first bring him into the light out of the darknes of hell, de tempor. serm. 161. But Christ is said to be the first fruits of the dead onely in respect of his bodie, not of his soule: Ergo, his soule descended not to deliuer the Patriarches out of hell.

2. That hell onely signifieth hell, the graue neuer, is an vntrue and vnlearned position: Genesis 42. 38. You shall bring my gray head with sorrow to hell, &c. Did Iacob carrie his gray haire to hell? I thinke he left them in his graue.

2. The marginall note of your owne vulgar Latine text thus obserueth, Genesis 37. 35. vpon these words, I shall goe mourning to my sonne into hell, &c. Non hic significat locum puniendi, sed fessam, vel sepulchrum: It signifieth not here the place of punishment, which is hell; but the pit or the graue, &c. Who seeth not now this fellowes boldnes, that denieth hell to be taken for the graue?

3. If hell be here taken properly, then it will follow that Christs soule was in the sorrowes of hell: as the vulgar Latine readeth, Act. 2. vers. 24. Having loosed the sorrows of hell, because it was impossible he should be holden of it: and so Origen seemeth to thinke, when he saith: Data est diabolo anima Christi redemptione pro nobis, decepto & non videnti, quod non poterat sustinere in tenenda eam tormentis, &c. The soule of Christ was giuen (to the diuell) to be a redemption for vs, he being deceived and not perceiuing, that he could not long hold it in torment, &c. and therefore it is said, Thou wilt not leaue my soule in hell, &c. Tract. 12. in Matth. If Christs soule were tormented in hell, it must be referred to his hell sufferings vpon the crosse, for after death he suffered not.

Argum. 3. The Apostle saith: Rom. 10. 7. Say not who shall descend into the deepe, that it is to fetch Christ againe from the dead: Here the deepe must be taken for hell, as the most opposite place to heauen: Bellarmin. ibid.

Answ. 1. The Apostle taketh this place from Moses, Deuter. 32. 14. Say not who shall goe up to beauen for vs, or goe ouer the sea, &c. That which the Apostle translateth the deepe, Moses calleth the sea, as Exod. 15. 5. The depths of the sea covered them: the Apostle is not contrarie to Moses, nor yet diuers from him in sense, though they differ in words: if then you will finde hell here, you must seeke for it in the bottome also of the sea.

2. We neede not sound the center of the earth to make an opposition to heauen: for heauen so high, and the earth so lowe, are places opposite enough, as Psal. 103. 33. As high as the bea- uens are above the earth.

3. The Apostle expoundeth himselfe: That is to bring Christ againe from the dead: the deepe then, whereof he speaketh, is the place of the dead: but bodies onely die, soules die not: and therefore this deepe is not hell, where soules liue in endlesse torment.

4. Origene thus expoundeth this place: Paulus quoniam descensiois Christi mysterium predicat profundum nominauit, quasi de superioribus ad inferiora descendens: Paul because he doth set forth the myserie of Christs descension, he nameth the deepe as of one descending from the superior parts to the lower, Hom. 2. in Genesis. this deepe which the Apostle speaketh of, he referreth to the earth, which is the deepe and lower part of the world, in respect of heauen.

Argum. 4. Bellarmin. vrgeth other places to proue Christs descent to deliuer the Patriarches: as that of Ionas, Matth. 12. 40. to the which see our answer in the appendix to this question, error 27. argum. Papist. 2.

Likewise he discouerseth at large of that place of S. Peter, 1. Pet. 3. 19. 20. By the which he went and preached to the spirits in prison, which were in times past disobedient: see also our answer at large to this place before, p. 350. in the 9. controuers. 1. quest. argum. Papist. 3. Vnto which our answer, I will here adde thus much further: that they can haue no shew at all from this place, for the deliuerance of the Patriarches out of Limbus: because the Apostle speaketh of such as were disobedient, and in their disobedience died: for if they had repented of their disobedience, they should not be named after the sinnes which they had committed, but should liue in their righteousness, which they had done, Ezech. 18. 22. to say then that Christ went downe to hell to deliuer the damned soules, doth contradict the Scripture, Luk. 16. 26. They cannot come from thence to vs: and Saint Augustine doth number them among other heretikes: Qui Christo descendente ad inferos credidisse incredulos, &c. Which did affirme that by Christs descending into hell, the incredulous and vnbeleeuers beleeued.

The Protestants.

That Christ our Saviour, by the vertue of his death, did ouercome hell and the diuell, we doe verilie beleue, which may be called a descent into hell: that he also suffered the tormentes of hell vpon the crosse, and so descended into hell for vs, to abide that bitter paine which we had deserued to suffer eternally, we doe also hold and teach: for what rather may be called hell, then the anguish of soule which he suffered, when he being God, yet complained that he was forsaken of God? Furthermore, if descending into hell, be taken according to the Hebrue Phrase, For entring into into the state of the dead: so we also graunt, that Christ descended into hell, Falk. Ad. 2. sect. 11. But for the descending of Christ into hell, after your sense, to deliuer the Patriarches from thence, when you can proue it out of Scripture, we will yeeld vnto you.

Argum. 1. The soule of Christ which he committed into his fathers hands, was in Paradise, where he promised the theefe should be with him, Luk. 22. 43. How then could his soule be three dayes in hell, as you affirme, from the time of his death to his resurrection? Falk. Luk. 11. sect. 4. Bellarmine answereth, that it was not impossible, that the soule of Christ should be in two places at once, cap. 15. which is an answer not worthie to be answered: for who hath taught them so boldly to build their phantasies vpon Gods power, hauing no warrant nor assurance of his will? May not the Vbiqutaries by the same reason proue the omnipresence of Christs humanitie, because he is able to make his soule and bodie to be in many places at once, as well as in two: and so consequently by his power, which is infinite, as well in all places, as in many?

Againe, it may be answered, that Christ was with the theefe in paradise as he was God.

Contra. 1. The answer made by our Sauour to the theefe, must be agreeable to his demaund: now he made request to Christ as man: Remember me, when thou shalt come into thy kingdome: the Godhead neither commeth nor goeth: and as he was God, he was neuer out of his kingdome: so then as Christ was to enter into his kingdome, so was he with the theefe, and the theefe with him: but he entered into his kingdome in his humanitie: Ergo, in his humane soule he was that day with the theefe in paradise, and the theefe with him.

2. Christ saith not, This day I will be with thee, but thou shalt be with me in paradise: Christ is with vs as God every where, as he saith, Matth. 28. 20. I am with you to the end of the world: when he speaketh as God, he is said to be with vs: but when we are said to be with him, his whole person is described: as S. Paul saith, I desire to be dissolved and to be with Christ, Philip. 1. 23. But as Christ was God, euen then he was with Paul: this difference is well noted by Bernard: (Christus nobiscum est, &c. Christ is with vs at all times to the end of the world; but when shall we be with him? when we shall be taken vp and meete Christ in the ayre, Serm. 16. in Psalm. 91.

3. And that Christs humane presence in Paradise is to be vnderstood, Bernard againe sheweth thus writing: Factum est utique, quod promissum est, ipso die quo compassus & correptus est: That, which was promised, was fulfilled; for the same day that he suffered together, he reigned also together with Christ: In solemnitate sanctor. serm. 5. but the theefe did not reigne together with him as God, for so the kingdome of God is not communicable to any.

Argum. 2. I will presse them with Durands argument, one of their owne champions: the soules of the Saints were deliuered in the very instant of Christs death: Ergo, Christ needed not to descend in soule to hell to deliuer them.

Bellarmine answereth: first, though the price of redemption were paid in Christs death, yet the Patriarches were to expect Christs comming thither not of necessity, but of congruities. Secondly, Christ descended for other causes, and not onely to deliuer the soules of the Patriarches, Bellar. c. 15. resp. ad obiect. 2. Durand.

Contra. 1. As touching other causes of Christs descension, we are not now to deale: the question is, whether he descended to set the soules of the Patriarches at large, which if you cannot iustifie, we haue that we would.

2. It is well yet that you hold the article of Christs locall descension to deliuer the Patriarches to be of congruities, not of necessitie: but I pray you how can you make it an article of our faith, if it be not necessarie?

3. You say the Patriarches were yet to expect Christs comming: and so your opinion is, that Christs soule staid in hell til the third day, & then rising againe, he brought with him all the soules of the fathers. Contra. 1. Had the theefe then greater priuledge then any of the Patriarches and Prophets? for he went to Paradise the same day Christ died: was heauen open for a theefe & murtherer, though now a conuert, and was it not open for Abraham the father of the faithfull, for Moses, for Dauid? 2. If the Patriarches soules were loosed at Christs death, were they not to accompanie Christs soule into heauen, and to ascend with it? for Christ saith, where I am, there shall be my minister also: Iohn. 12. 26. but Christs soule was in Paradise the same day he suffered, as he said to the theefe, this day shalt thou be with me in Paradise: and Saint Ambrose witnesseth the same: Paradisus non dixit, non est in me, quem regnare in se absoluto latrone cognouerat: Paradise did not say he is not in me, whom it did know to reigne there by the absolution of the theefe: Exhortat. ad virgin. If then Christ as man and in his soule was in Paradise; surely all the Patriarches soules went vp with him; then Christ needed not to haue descended to hell to deliuer them: this I say, in their sense, that hold the Patriarches then onely to be deliuered, whom we affirme already to haue been in ioy by faith in Christ to come: as now followeth in this next argument to be shewed.

Argum. 3. We beleue that the Patriarches and godly Fathers were in Heauen or Paradise, as well before the resurrection of Christ as after: for in as much as they were iustified by faith in his his blood, they received the same crown and reward of righteousness that we do, being iustified by the same means. This we haue proued more at large, centum. 9. quest. 1. Wherefore seeing there were none of the Fathers in hell, which they call Limbus Patrum, to be deliuered, there was no such cause why Christ should descend into hell. Therefore he descended not to deliuer the Patriarches that remained in darknes. And here I would aske them a question, from whence they thinke Moses and Elias came, when they appeared talking with Christ in the mount, Matth. 17. 3. will they say they came from hell a place of darknes, appearing in such light and great glorie? But for Elias I know their answer already, that he came from the terrestriall Paradise, where they imagine him to be kept, which I haue shewed before to be a faine tale. p. 745. cent. 17. qu. 3. part. 1. What will they say for Moses: if he were not in Limbus, no more were the rest of the Prophets: and to say that Moses was fetched from hell, and out of darknes to talke with the sonne of God in light, I thinke they are not so absurd to affirme. Chrysostome vpon this place thus writeth: Voluit Petrus tria tabernacula facere, &c. Peter would haue made three tabernacles for Moses, Elias, Christ; and so haue separated the law, the Prophets, and the gospell: Ergo apparuit lucida nubes: unum tabernaculum, quod tres simul texit: Therefore there appeared a bright cloude as one tabernacle, which couered all three. &c. If a cloude of brightnes were Moses tabernacle, then your Limbus a dungeon of darknes was not at this time his tabernacle: and if he were not in Limbus, neither Abraham the father of the faithfull, nor the rest of the Prophets.

Argum. 4. They agree not among themselves about this article of Christs descension, to deliuer the Patriarches: Andradus saith, it cannot be proued out of Scripture: but Beilarm. and our Rhemists doe bring their best arguments for it out of Scripture: they alleage also diuers causes of his descension: the Romane Catechisme rendreth two reasons; one, to let the Patriarches at libertie; the other to manifest the power and vertue of his death in hell: but that, Saint Paul saith, was sufficiently manifested and made knowne vpon the crosse, Colos. 2. 15. Thomas Aquinas beside these, addeth a third, that as Christ died for vs to free vs from death, so it was conuenient that he should descend into hell, to deliuer vs from the descension into hell: as though Christ by his death did not fully deliuer vs from eternall damnation. Some other holde, that Christ went thither to suffer the torments of hell, that he might fully pay our ransom by suffering the whole punishment due vnto mankind. But this is a verie grosse and erroneous opinion: for Christ suffered fully in bodie and soule vpon the crosse, when hee cryed, Consummatum est, It is finished: that is, he had fully appeased the wrath of God by his sufferings.

Durand a popish writer of great account, thinketh that Christs soule did not descend into hell, Secundum substantiam, sed per effectus quosdam; in his substance, but by certaine effects: not substantially but effectually.

1. This opinion of Durand; is thus impugned by Beilarm. 1. It would follow that Christs bodie descended into hell, as well as his soule, for the effects of Christs death, which wrought in hell, were performed by Christs flesh, as well as his soule:

2. If Christs soule descended but by the effects, so it was in Paradise, and thus Christs soule should be in many places at once.

3. Christs soule was three daies in the heart of the earth, but the effects of the soule might be shewed in hell in a moment, Beilarm. c. 15.

Contra. 1. To them which hold the effectuall descent of Christ, it is no absurditie to grant that the effects both of his bodie and soule wrought in hell. yea, the graue being taken for hel, Christs flesh properly descended thither: as the marginall note of the vulgar Latine expoundeth these words of Jacob: I will descend to hell mourning to my sonne, Genet. 37. 35. of his going to the graue.

1. What letteth but that the efficacie and vertue of Christs soule, and the fruites of his death may be in many places at once. 2. You most absurdly hold, that the substance of Christs soule may be present in diuers places in one instant.

1. That Christs soule remained three daies in hell, is contrarie to the Scriptures: for his soule was in paradise in the day of his passion. 2. The effects of Christs death doe remaine still: and Abbrase doubteth not to say, Abyssum optinuit si penetras, illic quoq; vidobis Iesum operari: If you pearce hell in thought, you shall see Iesus working there still. Iob. 2. in 1. Luc.

Augustine saith plainly, that he knew not what good Christ wrought for the iust soules that were in the bosome of Abraham, when hee descended into hell: a quibus cum secundum beatificationem presentium diuinitatis, nunquam vides recessisse: From whom I finde he was neuer absent or withdrew himselfe by the blessed presence of his diuine power: Ergo, in his iudgement Christ descended not to deliuer the Patriarches. And concerning the soule of Christ, he writeth flatly: Si mortuo corpore anima latronis ad Paradisum mox vocatur, quempiam adhuc tam impium credimus, qui dicere audiat, quoniam anima Saluatoris nostri triduo illo corpore a mortis apud inferos custodia mancipetur? If the soule of the theefe straightway being gone from the bodie, was called vp to heauen: is there any man so wicked, to say that the soule of our sauour was kept three daies in the prison of hell? By his sentēce then, the soule of Christ passed straight to heauen, and descended not to hell. And Augustines reason seemeth to be this: Christs soule went the same way after death, which our soules must go, that are his members: but the soules of the faithfull goe presently to heauen, as the soule of the theefe did, conuerted vpon the crosse; and as Saint Pauls faith of his soule, I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, Philip. 1. 23. for what assurance haue we that our soules shall passe immediately to heauen, if Christs soule, who is the way, Iohn. 14. 6. did not make a way for our soules? Ergo, Christs soule went straight to heauen, and therefore was not, triduo in corde terra, three daies in the heart of the earth, as Bellarmino saith, 2. 15. argum. 4. cont. Durand.

Concerning the testimonies of the fathers alledged by Bellarmino for Christs descension in soule to deliuer the Patriarches, I denie not, but that many of them do so affirme, yet it was no generall receiued opinion amongst them, but diuers of them did otherwise both speake and write.

Cyprian in the symbole or Creed, which goeth vnder his name, thus writeth: Sciendum est, quod in ecclesia Romana symbolo non habetur additum, descendit ad inferna: sed neque in Orientis ecclesijs habetur hic sermo: vis tamen verbi eadem videtur esse in eo, quod sepultus dicitur: It must be known, that in the Creed of the Romane Church, it is not added, be descended into hell, neither yet is this speech vsed in the East Churches: yet the same sense and force seemeth to be in that he is said to be buried.

We may finde tenne seuerall Creeds rehearsed in the Councils, and in them this article of Christs descension omitted.

1. In epist. 1. Clement. 2. In confession of Constantines faith: in Donation. Constantin. 3. In the Nicene symbole. 4. In the Sirmian Councell. 5. In the confession of Liberius. Aet. Liber. 2. 1. 6. In the symbole of Constantinople. 7. In the symbole of Carthage. Cuncil. 4. can. 1. 8. Likewise, cuncil. Toletan. 1. can. 2. 1. 9. In the symbole confirmed, Ephesus. 1. 10. Bracarenf. 3. in prefation. In all these places it is omitted.

Likewise in diuers of Augustines sermons: as serm. de tempor. 123. 125. 129. In the exposition of the Creed, no mention is made of Christs locall descension to hell, to deliuer the Patriarches: and serm. 119. he saith: Cum confessi fuerimus eius passionem, confitemur & resurrectionem: When we haue confessed his passion, we confesse his resurrection: If the Church had helde it so necessarie to beleue the descē of Christs soule, for the release of the Patriarches; especiall remembrance should haue beene made thereof in so many rehearsals and expositions of the Creed.

Yet was not the article of Christs descension euer denied in the Church, but not receiued in any such sense.

1. Some of them apply the descension to the suffering of Christs soule, as Origen. tract. 22. in Matth. data anima Christi in redemptionem pro multis, non mansit apud eum cui data est, propter hoc dicit Prophetia non derelinques, &c. The soule of Christ being giuen in redemption for many, tarried not with him, to whome it was giuen; as the Prophet saith, thou wilt not leaue my soule in hell.

2. Sometime the same Origen doth interpret the descension of Christ: De superioribus ad inferiora uenientis: Comming from the higher parts of heauen to the lower parts of the earth. bap. 2. in Genes.

3. Some other, by the descent into hell: vnderstand the lying of Christ in the graue, as Hierom: Saluator in tantum ipsum corpus habuit post inferos in quo & crucifixus, ut manus perforatas ostenderet: Our Sauour had so verely after hell, the bodie wherein he was crucified, that he shewed his pierced hands. lib. 1. aduers. Iouinian. But Christs bodie went not downe to hell, but onely to the graue.

So Origen: Christus descendit ad inferos ad mortuos, tanquam inter mortuos liber: Christ descended to hell to the dead, as free among the dead. in Matth. 16. But the graue not hell is the place of the dead. Likewise Augustine: Ab inferis primogenitus est ex defunctis: He was the first borne of the dead from hell. serm. de temp. 161.

4. Somereferre Christs being in hell to his diuinitie: as Ambrose vpon these words, Psal. 139. 15. Substantia mea in inferioribus terra, &c. My substance was beneath in the earth: Quid obstat quominus illam diuinam intelligas substantiam, cum deus ubique sit. What letteth but we may vnderstand his diuine substance, seeing God is euerywhere, as it is said before, If I ascend into heauen thou art there, if I lie downe in hell thou art there. Psal. 139. 8. So also Augustine expoundeth Christs descension of the presence of his maiestie: Aet. cum Felician. c. 17. as I haue shewed before.

5. Some applie Christs descension to the fruits and effects of his crosse: Augustine. serm. 107. de tempor. Quid est portas inferni tollere nisi mortis imperium remouere? What is it else to take away the gates of hell, but to remoue the power of death.

6. Some doe metaphorically referre the descent into hell, to a troubled conscience: as Bernard vpon these words, Thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, Psalm. 16. 10. Infernus quidem, & carcer anime rea conscientia est: A guiltie conscience is the hell and prison of the soule, in assumpt. ser. 4. Againe he thus writeth: Sunt gradus in ascendendo & descendendo: in descendendo primus gradus à calo usque ad carnem, secundus ad crucem, tertius ad mortem: ecce quousque descendit, nunquid amplius poterat? poterat iam velle rex noster dicere, quid ultra debui facere, & non feci? There are degrees in ascending, and descending: in descending the first degree is to the flesh, the second to the crosse, the third to death: behold how far he descended, could he descend any further? might not our King now truly say, what ought I to haue done more, which I did not? ser. par. 18.

Some of them I grant doe affirme Christs descension in soule to hell, to bring the Fathers soules from thence: but this was no generall opinion, nor expresse sentence of the Church: as may appeare by this testimonie of Origen, vpon these words of Iob: Naked I came forth, naked shall I returne, Iob. 1. 21. Nudus ibi illic (inquit) quo illic? illic quo Adam abiit, quo ierant priores mei: ubi tabernacula sunt iustorum, &c. ubi est lux & vita, ubi est letitia & exultatio, ubi Abraham finis, &c. angelorum chori, Christi regnum, aeterni dei patris gloria & conspectus: I shall returne thither? whither? euen whither Adam went and all my forefathers: where are the tabernacles of the righteous, where is light and life, where is Abraham himselfe, the queere of Angels, the kingdome of Christ, the glorie and sight of the eternall father: in 1. cap. Iob. Now then, if in your Limbus there be light and life, the companie of Angels, the presence of God, the kingdome of Christ, then will I graunt, that the Fathers were there: but then they should not haue needed to be fetched from thence. And thus much of Christs locall descension into hell to set free the soules of the Patriarches.

AN APPENDIX, CONCERNING

the place of Hell.

The Papists.

THe place where damned spirits are tormented, they say, is about the center of the earth, the lowest of all places, and nothing lower than it, Bellarm. de Christi anima. lib. 4. cap. 10. 37. Error.

Their Limbus Patrum, the place of darknes, where the Fathers were before Christ, is, say they, in the highest part, and as it were the brimme of hell, Rhemist. Luk. 16. 32. Betwene these two places there is a great gulfe or space, and there is Purgatorie, Rhemist. Luk. 16. 28. Wherefore they conclude, Veros inferos esse loca subterranea: That the subterrestriall and infernall places doe properly make hell, Bellarmin. cap. 8. And so hell should be properly a place of punishment: because of the farre distance from heauen: whereas not so much the distance of place, as the absence of Gods spirit, and losse of his fauour, maketh it a place of horror and miserie.

Argum. 1. Bellarmine proueth by the Greeke word έναν, and the Hebrue (Sheol) that hell is a subterrestriall place, because those words are taken for hell in the earth, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. 1. This argument concludeth not, vnlesse he could proue, that those words are alwaies taken for hell: the contrarie whereof is euident, as Genes. 42. 38. Thou shalt bring my gray head with sorrow to (Sheol, &c.) the graue: for his gray haire was not downe to hell, but rested in the graue. Likewise this annotation is giuen in the margin of the vulgar Latine, Genes. 37. 35. In infernum, id est, fossam, vel sepulchrum, non hic significat locum punitionis, sicut nec in alijs locis: Into hell, that is, the pit or the graue, it signifieth not here the place of punishment, nor yet in other places.

2. We graunt that these words sometimes are taken for hell, and then they onely shew that there is an hell, but they enforce not the place.

3. Thirdly, neither doe we denie, but that hell is an infernall place: but herein wee differ from them, 1. that neither doe we affirme, that the place causeth hell, but the absence of Gods fauour and presence. 2. neither dare we circumscribe the place certainly, as they doe, making it to be about the center of the earth. 3. nor yet presume we to make so many regions of hell, as they doe without warrant of the word.

Argum. 2. Matth. 12. 40. As Iohnas was three dayes and three nights in the belly of the Whale; so the sonne of man must be in the heart of the earth: but the graue is not in the heart, but the brimme of the earth: Ergo, we must needes vnderstand that to be hell, which is in the middle of the earth, Bellarmin. cap. 12.

Ans. 1. This place cannot otherwise be applied, than to signifie the buriall of Christ, and his abode in the graue, and his rising againe the third day: of his soule it cannot properly be meant: for Christ saith, he will giue them the signe of Iohnas in himselfe; but a signe is conspicuous, visible and apparant: how could then the descending of his soule be a signe vnto them, which they knew not, neither could see? But the laying of his bodie into the graue, and the remaining there to the third day, they were all eye witnesses of. Also there is great affinitie betweene the two Greeke words, έναν, a signe, which is there vsed, Matth. 12. 40. and έναν, which signifieth sepulchrum, a graue, the one word being sicly deriued of the other, what better, when could hee giue them, then, έναν, his owne graue or sepulchre? Secondly, to be in the heart of the earth, is nothing wrath, his eternall and endlesse curse, with vnspcakable torments now in soule, and afterward both in bodie and soule, without all comfort or hope of refreshing, vterly excluded from the presence of God: Wherefore it is not the place, but the wrath of God, and absence of his spirit, that causeth such endlesse and vnspcakable punishment.

Argum. 3. As for your distinction of hell, the brimme whereof you say is Limbus Patrum, the middle part, Purgatorie, the lowest and neathermost hell it selfe, the place of the damned, in Augustines time it was not knowne: for first, that the bosome of Abraham was part of hell, he vterly denieth: Apparet non esse membrum inferorum, quia illius felicitatis finem: That bosome of so great blisse can be no member or part of hell, Epist. 99. Againe, Purgatorie he vterly refuseeth, acknowledging but two places: Heauen for the faithfull, Hell for the damned and vnbeleeuers. Tertium locum penitus ignoramus, non esse esse in scripturis sanctis inuenimus: A third place wee are vterly ignorant of, yea we finde in holy Scripture, that it is not, August. Hypognost.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROVER-

sie, of matters which are in question concerning the diuine nature of Christ.

This part of the controuersie containeth three questions. First, whether Christ be God of him. Secondly, whether hee be mediator as God, or man, or as both. Thirdly, whether he haue by his deserts purchased any thing for himselfe.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER CHRIST

be ~~God~~ God of himselfe.

The Papists.

They denie that Christ is God of himselfe; and affirme, that he had not onely his person, but his substance of his father: whereupon they are bolde to charge Caluine with blasphemie, for saying, that Christ is God of himselfe as well as the Father, Rhemist. Job. 1. self. 3.

Argum. The word was with God, to wit, the sonne is with and of the father, and not the father of the sonne? Beza, the sonne is God, with and of his father, Rhemist. ibid.

Ausv. This place proueth, that the sonne of God, as he is the sonne, is of God: for to bee the sonne of God; the word, the wisdom of God, 1. Cor. 1. 30. his image; Heb. 1. 3. doe belong vnto his person. So then, as he is the sonne, the wisdom of God, or the word, so hee is of God, namely in respect of his person: but as the sonne is God, he is of himselfe, neither taketh he his essence but person onely of his Father.

The Protestants.

That we may fully know the state of this question, wee must first set downe certaine propositions: 1. We doe worship one eternall, omnipotent, and onely wise God, one and the same in power, essence, eternitie: but three in person, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: there is the same nature, essence, and deitie of them all, though they be distinguished in person: As there is one nature of the light, the heate thereof and the shining brightness, Lux, splendor, calor, as Augustine putteth the example: which three differ among themselves in propriety and quality, yet haue one and the selfsame nature and substance: God the father is as the light, Iain. 1. 17. God the sonne is as the brightness of his glorie, Hebr. 1. 7. God the holy Ghost is as the heate or fire, Heb. 12. 29. Thus these three are one in nature and essence, but three in person.

2. There is somewhat communicable to them all, as the Godhead and diuine power and nature: Somewhat incommunicable, as the seuerall proprieties of the persons: for it is proper onely to the Father to beget, proper to the Sonne onely to be begotten, proper onely to the holie Ghost to proceede from them both. There is no essentiall difference in the Trinitie: for there is one essence and diuine nature common to them all. But there is both a reall and rationall difference: The persons differ one from another reallly, though not essentially: But the persons differ only rationally of in respect from the essence of the Godhead: as the father and the sonne amongst men differ not essentially, for they are both men. But they are reallly, verily, and indeede distinguished: for it is one thing to be the father, another to be the sonne: yet from their diuine essence their persons only differ in respect and relation, not verily, essence, sed ratione: for as amongst vs the father is a man, the sonne also is a man: but in one respect he is a father, and in another he is man; so likewise of the sonne, yet one and the same, is both father and man; one and the same is both sonne & man: so is it in the Trinitie. Now to the point of the question, which we haue in hand. The Son therefore in the blessed Trinitie is begotten of his fathers essence, and hath the whole essence of his father, not by propagation, partition, profluency, but only by communication. The Son is not son of himselfe, because he is son of the father: but he is ~~God~~ that is, very God of himselfe.

Yyyy

The

The essence or Godhead of the Sonne is of himselfe, not of the father: for it is one and the selfe-same essence, which the father hath. He is indeed, Deus de Deo, Lumen de lumine, God of God, light of light: but not as he is God, is he of God, but as he is the Sonne. It is one thing for the person of the Sonne to be begotten of the essence of the father, which we graunt: another thing, for the essence of the Sonne to be begotten, which we must not yeeld to. So we conclude, that Christ as hee is the Sonne, is of God the father, as he is God, he is of himselfe.

Argum. 1. The essence of the father is of himselfe, not begotten of any: but the essence and deitie of the Sonne is the same and all one with his fathers: Ergo, it is not begotten of any other. Again, he is not God whose essence is not of himselfe: therefore if Christs essence be not of himselfe, he should not be God.

Argum. 2. Our Sauour Christ himselfe saith, As the father hath life in himselfe, so he hath giuen to the Sonne also to haue life in himselfe, Ioh. 5. 26. The Sonne then hath life in himselfe; Ergo, he is God of himselfe. Augustine vpon these words writeth: Non quasi mutatur vitam, nec quasi participat vitam, sed ipsa vitam in se habet, ut ipsa vita sibi sit ipse: Hee did not as it were borrow life of his father, neither is made partaker of life, but he hath life in himselfe, hee is life vnto himselfe. But lest any man should thus mistake the words of the text, that because the father gaue to the Sonne to haue life in himselfe, therefore he gaue him to be God: (for to haue life in himselfe is to be God) Augustine thus expoundeth them: Dedit filio vitam habere in se, breuiter diximus, genuit filium: Hee gaue to his Sonne to haue life in himselfe, in few words, He begat his Sonne. As if we should say, the father which hath life in himselfe, that is, is God, gaue to his Sonne to haue life in himselfe, that is, begat God the Sonne: he begat him not as hee was God, or in respect of his diuine essence, but as he was his Sonne, in regard of his person: yet because of the nere uniting and coniunction of the person with the Godhead and diuine power to haue life in himselfe, which really cannot be distinguished, but onely in respect, as we haue shewed: the father is said also to giue vnto the Sonne to bee God, and to haue life in himselfe, not directly or properly, but obliquely and by a consequent, because his Sonne, whom he begat from all eternitie, must also necessarily be God.

And that it cannot be the proper meaning, that God the Father gaue to the Sonne power to haue life in himselfe, as he is God, or in respect of his diuine nature, &c. it appeareth by the words themselves: for as the father hath life in himselfe, even so hath he giuen to the Sonne; but the father hath life in himselfe, without beginning from any other: Ergo, so hath the Sonne.

There should else be a contrarietie and repugnancie in the speech: for if Christ receiued life from his father, he could not haue it in himselfe. It must therefore of necessitie be vnderstood of the person in the Trinitie, not of the diuine essence. And so wee determine that it is true in the concrete, in encreto, if wee say, Deus Pater genuit Deum Filium: God the Father begat God the Sonne, but not in abstracto, Deitas Patris genuit Deitatem Filij, that the Godhead of the Father begat the Godhead of the Sonne. But in respect of his person onely as hee is the Sonne the second person in Trinitie, so is hee begotten and hath his beginning of God: but in respect of his diuine nature as he is God, he is begotten of none, but of himselfe, as God the Father is.

Council. Constantinop. 6. actio. 6. ex epistol. Sophronij Hierosolym. Perfectus deus est pater, perfectus domus filius, perfectus deus spiritus sanctus, vnam eandemque singula quaque persona inseparabilem, indiuisibilem, & perfectam habet deitatem: The Father is perfect God, the Sonne perfect God, the holy Ghost perfect God: every person hath one and the same vnseparable, vndeuided and perfect deitie. If Christ then be perfect God, is hee God of himselfe: for he is not perfect, that hath his being from another: and if he haue one and the same deitie with his father, then his deitie hath no beginning from any other, for such is his fathers deitie.

Saine Ambrose saith vpon these words of the Apostle: Qui solus habet immortalitatem, 1. Tim. 6. vers. 16. Which onely hath immortalitie: Non separas patrem non separas filium, quia diuinitas patris, & filij vna eademque est: Doe not separate the father, nor the Sonne, because there is one and the same diuinitie of them both, do fid. lib. 3. c. 1. If there be one and the same diuinitie of both, then the Sonne is God of himselfe as the father is.

Origen. ex apolog. Pampyl. doth count them in the number of heretikes, which doe affirme, that Christus homo natus patris solum in se habuit deitatem: That Christ being borne man had onely his fathers deitie, &c. How farre then are the Papists from this herefie, that affirme, that Christ is not God of himselfe, and so consequently, that he hath onely his fathers deitie?

Decc. part. 2. caus. 24. qu. 3. c. 29. Among other heretikes are rehearsed Aetiani, the Aetians, difficilem patri asserentes filium, which affirmed, that the Sonne was vnlike the father: what doe they else affirme and teach, but that the Sonne is not God of himselfe, as the father is?

Peter Lombard is an euident witnesse with vs, that God the father begat not the diuine essence, but the person onely of his Sonne. This position he hath, Diuina essentia non genuit diuinam essentiam: That the diuine essence begat not the diuine essence: which he proooueth by these three reasons: First, if the father begot the diuine essence, it would follow, that the Godhead or diuine essence

ence should be a relatiue, not a substance: for that which is begotten, is a relatiue to that which begetteth. And as Augustine saith: Quod relatiue dicitur, non indicat substantiam: That which is relatively spoken, doth not shew the substance.

Secondly, then also the Father should beget himselfe, if hee beget the diuine essence, which is himselfe.

Thirdly, seeing the Father is God and a diuine essence, if he should beget the Godhead and diuine essence, then by begetting he should be God, and so that which is begotten should be the cause of that which begetteth, whereas he that begetteth is the cause of that which is begotten.

Vpon these reasons he concludeth, that diuina essentia nec genuit, nec genita est: that the diuine essence neither begetteth, nor is begotten, lib. 1. distict. 5. a. b. c. And this sentence is confirmed by Innocent. 3. decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 1. c. 2. Diuina natura nec est generans, nec genita: The diuine nature neither begetteth, nor is begotten.

And whereas wee say, Deus de Deo, lumen de lumine, God of God, light of light: the meaning is this, not that the Godhead is begotten, but that the sonne, which is God and light, is begotten of the Father God and light, not begotten as he is God, but as he is the sonne, Magist. ibid. l. 1. f. So then not the substance or Godhead of the sonne, but his person onely is begotten.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER CHRIST

be our Mediatour, as he is man onely, or as he is both God and man.

The Papists.

They doe teach that Christ onely exercised his priesthood and the office of the Mediatour, as he was man, not as hee was both God and man, Rhem. Heb. 5. sect. 4. His obedience, sacrifice, prayer, satisfaction, entering into the heauens, was all performed by and in his manhood onely, secundum formam serui, as he was in the forme of a seruant, not secundum formam dei, as hee was in the forme of God, Bellarm. de Christo, lib. 5. cap. 1. 29. Error.

Argum. 1. If he were priest as he is God, he should be inferiour and not equal to God, and so be Gods priest, and not his sonne: for he to whom sacrifice is offered, is greater than he that offereth it, Rhemist. ibid.

Answ. It followeth not, that because Christ is our Priest and Mediatour as God and man, that therefore he should performe all the duties of the Priesthood as he was God: all the parts of his priesthood that required obedience, seruice, homage, subiection, as were his sufferings and sacrifice, he exercised as man: but the authoritie of reconciling vs to God, he wrought both as God and man.

Argum. 2. There is one God, and one Mediatour of God and men, the man Iesus Christ, 1. Timothy. 2. 5. Why saith the Apostle, The man Iesus Christ, but to signifie, that according to his manhood onely he is our Mediatour? Bellarm. cap. 3.

Answ. First, you may as well conclude out of this place, that the Mediatour is onely man and not God, as that he is Mediatour onely as man and not as God: but if out of these words it may be proued, that the Mediatour is both God and man, as it necessarily followeth, (for how else can he be a Mediatour of God and men?) it doth as well follow that hee is Mediatour both as God and as man. Indee the Apostle saith, The man Iesus Christ, not God and man, for the one hee had said before, There is one God; in that speech including our Saviour Christ, who is one God with his Father. Secondly, what Saint Pauls meaning is, it appeareth in the next verse, who gaue himselfe a raunsome, vers. 6. As Christ therefore gaue himselfe a raunsome, so is hee Priest and Mediatour: but he gaue himselfe as he was God; as he was man, he was giuen: Ergo, as God he is Mediatour. Thirdly, I will adioyne the answere of Espeu a learned Papist: 1. That the Fathers by this very place doe prouue that Christ is God, not man onely, which could not be concluded from hence, if Christ were Mediatour as man onely, and not as God and man. 2. The Apostle addeth, The man Christ Iesus: Quorum illud nomen est hominis, non puri puri, sed à deo uenit: Whereof the first is a name not of a very pure man, but anoynted of God: Posterius nomen dei hominis est: The latter is a name, of one that is God and man, such an one as should saue the people from their finnes: Espeu. lib. de Christ. mediat. c. 3.

The Protestants.

In the office of the Priesthood two things must be considered, a ministerie, and an authoritie: In respect of the ministeriall part Christ performed the office of his Priesthood as man: but in respect of authoritie of entering into the holiest place, and reconciling vs to God, which was the principall part of his Priesthood, he did performe it as the sonne of God, as the Lord and maker of the house, and not as a seruant. And so we hold that Christ neither according to his humanitie alone, nor his Godhead alone, but that whole Christ is a Priest, both as God and man.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul saith, God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himselfe; 2. Corinth. 5. 19. Ergo, Christ; as God, is our reconciler and Mediator. Again, Christ as he is without father and mother, hath no beginning of his daies, nor ende of his life; so is he a Priest after the order of Melchisedech, Heb. 7. 3. but Christ as he is God & man hath neither father nor mother: as he is God hath no beginning of daies, and in his whole person no ende of his life: therefore as God and man he is a Priest of Melchisedech's order.

Bellarmino answereth to the first, 1. Euery one that reconcileth is not a mediator, though euery mediator be a reconciler. 2. It is one thing to be a mediator, an other to reconcile by a mediator; God by the man Christ the mediator did reconcile vs to himselfe, but it followeth not, that therefore he is our mediator as God.

Secondly, the place alleaged out of the Hebrewes, prooueth that the person of our high Priest and mediator is diuine, but not that hee is our Priest as hee is God: hee is both God and man, but he executeth his Priesthoode and Mediatorship onely as man. Bellarmino c. 6. ad 2. & 3. Loc.

Contra. First, 1. Though sometime among men one may reconcile himselfe without a mediator, yet there is no reconciliation with God without a mediator: wherefore it is not farre from blasphemie to denie this argument, Christ reconcileth vs as God and man, Ergo, he is our mediator as God and man: Again the Apostle sheweth wherein this reconciliation consisteth, in the not imputing of our finnes. 1. Cor. 5. 19. But the not imputation of our finnes, is a worke of the mediator. 2. Christ is both the reconciler as God and man, and the partie to whom we are reconciled, as he is God: to be a mediator and to reconcile by a mediator, doe both agree vnto Christ: it followeth not then, we are reconciled to him as God, Ergo, not by him as God: for the Apostle sheweth, that he reconcileth vs to himselfe: and God doth beseech you through vs, And I pray you in Christes steade: Christ then as God is our mediator, and doth as it were entreate vs to be reconciled.

Secondly, Melchisedech was a type of the eternall Priesthood of Christ: He is likened to the sonne of God, and continueth a Priest for euer: Heb. 7. 3. Christ cannot be a Priest for euer, but as he is God: and vers. 25. He is able perfectly to saue them that come vnto God by him: but he cannot perfectly saue, but as God: Ergo, he is mediator as God. vers. 28. The word of the oath, &c. maketh the sonne priest that is consecrated for euer: Christ is a Priest after Melchisedech's order as he is the sonne, but as the sonne he is God; Ergo, as God he is our Mediator.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul saith, The law was giuen by Angels in the hand of a Mediator, Galat. 3. 19. But then Christ was God onely: Ergo, hee is Mediator also as God. Bellarmino saith, that he is called Mediator, because that person was appointed afterward to be Mediator. But the text is plaine, that he then actually performed the office of a Mediator, so much as pertained to his Godhead: for the Law was giuen in the hand of a Mediator, which kind of speech sheweth a present execution of the Mediatorship.

Bellarmino replieth: if Christ were the Mediator before he was man, being then onely God, it would follow, that as God he was inferiour to God; for as he is a Mediator he is inferiour. c. 8.

Ans. 1. Christ in respect of euery part of his Mediatorship is not inferior to God; but equall as he executeth his Mediatorship as God: He is inferiour onely as the man Mediator, not as God Mediator: as Theophylact expoundeth these words, Iohn. 1. 3. All things were made by it: saying: Patrem mediatore filio ad verum creationem vsam non minore, sed equali: That the father vsed his sonne as a Mediator for the creation, yet not lesse then the father but equall.

Augustine saith, Non mediator homo prater diuinitatem, diuina humanitas, & humana diuinitas mediatrix: The man Christ is not mediator beside his diuine nature; the diuine humanitie, and the humane diuinitie, is the Mediatrix. Ergo, Christ Mediator both as God and man.

Cyrillus lib. Apologetic. anathat. 10. Quando dicitur indignum esse deo, ut sacrificet, aspiuntur & ego, scilicet, si solum sit, & absq; carne verbum: itaque videtur ipsum sacrificantem secundum humanitatem considerantem ut deum: sic beatus Paulus, Heb. 8. 1. Where thou sayest, that it is no meete thing for God to sacrifice, I grant it, if the word should be by it selfe without flesh: therefore I consider Christ sacrificing as man, but sitting in the heauens as God, as blessed Paul saith: Heb. 8. 1. We haue such an high Priest, that sitteth at the right hand of the throne of the Maiestie in heauen: Christ is our Priest, as he sitteth at the right hand, &c. but so is he God, as this father saith, the first is heere affirmed by Saint Paul: Ergo, as he is God, he is our Priest.

Bernard also writeth well of this point: Sicut mediator iuxta duas naturas, humanitatem & diuinitatem coniunctis in vna persona: ita singulatis opera, ad hanc sine illam necesse est pertinere naturam; ad hanc scilicet miseria, and illam persinet potentia: As our Mediator ioyned two natures, the diuine and humane in one person; so all his workes belong to one of these natures: whatlocuer he suffered was of man, his powerfull workes were of his diuine nature: serm. de verbis sapientie. Christ therefore wrought some workes of his mediatorship as man, some as God: but the whole office he executed as both.

Leo

Leo epist. 81. Qua ratione veritas mediatoris impletur, nisi qua in forma dei equalis est patri, & in forma serui participis esset & nostri: How should he fulfill the veritie of a Mediator, vnlesse he were in the forme of God equall to his father, and in the forme of a seruant partaker with vs: Both these natures then belong not onely to the being but to the fulfilling of the Mediators office; not to the constitution onely, but to the execution also.

Esperians a learned diuine of Paris of their owne side hath written a whole treatise of this matter, wherein he maintaineth this position, that Christ is not Mediator onely: Qua homo, sed qua deus: As he is man, but as he is God, lib. de Christ. mediator. c. 5. And to this purpose he alleageth diuers fathers: as Cyrrill: Non propter carnis solum dispensationum mediator vocatur, He is not called a Mediator onely because of the dispensation of his flesh: Theophyl. lib. 4. c. 2.

To the same end he alleageth, Theophylact. c. 2. Theophylactus ad v. de ratione mediatoris fuit esse diuinum naturam, ut hinc Christi diuinitatem colligat ita: quod deus sit, inde liquet, quod mediator sit, &c. Theophylact doth thinke that the diuine nature belongeth to the manner of the mediation; in such sort that hee thereby proueth Christ to be God: That he is God, is is euident, because he is the Mediator.

To this purpose alleaging many fathers both Greeke and Latine, c. 2. 3. 4. he concludeth with Augustine: Mediatorem inter nos & deum & mortalitatem habere oportuit transiuentem, & beatitatem permanentem: &c. It was necessarie that the mediator should haue, both transitorie mortalitie, and permanent felicitie, &c. lib. 9. de ciuit. dei. c. 15. And whereas in the same place it followeth: Non ob hoc mediator quia verbum sed per quod homo: He is not a mediator, because he is the word, but whereby he is man: he answereth, that Augustines meaning is, that Christ was not our mediator as the word onely and simply, without our flesh. c. 5. Thus this graue writer one of their owne side is a plentifull witness with vs against them.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER CHRIST merited for himselfe.

The Papists.

Christ, they say, by his passion and sufferings, hath not onely merited eternall life for vs, but 10. Error euen by his owne merite obtained his owne glorification, Rhemist. annot. Heb. 2. 1.

Argum. 1. Philip. 2. 9. He humbled himselfe vnto the death of the crosse, wherefore God hath also highly exalted him, and given him a name aboue all names: Ergo, Christ merited his exaltation, Rhemist. in hunc locum.

Ans. First, this place sheweth a sequele of the exaltation of Christ after his humiliation, it maketh not one the cause of another, as our Sauour himselfe saith, Luc. 24. 26. Christ ought to haue suffered, and so enter into his glory. Secondly, the exaltation which the Apostle heere speaketh of, is the same, which God chalengeth to himselfe, Isai. 45. 22. Every knee shall bow vnto me, and euery tongue shall sweare by me. But it were most grosse to affirme, that the diuine power and glorie can be merited: Christ hath his diuinitie by nature, and not by merite. Thirdly, Saint Ambrose expoundeth this place not of the purchase, but the manifestation onely of Christs glory: Christus hoc natus accepit, ut post crucem manifestaretur, quid a patre, dum generaretur, accepisset; non enim tunc accepit a patre, quando a creatura capis sciri: Christ receiued this in his birth, that it should be manifest after his crosse, what he receiued of his father in his generation; for he then did not receiue it of his father when it began to be known of the creature, in 2. Philipp.

The Protestants.

It is not in any wise to be thought, that Christ merited his glorie, which is due to him in respect of his diuinitie: but that by the glorious worke of our redemption, he hath declared himselfe, to be a person worthie of all honour and glory, Apoc. 5. 9. Thou art worthie to take the book, &c. the place is so to be vnderstood.

Argum. 1. If Christ had respect vnto himselfe in his sufferings, to gaine or merite any thing for himselfe, his loue should greatly be obscured and darkened, which Saint Paul so greatly commendeth, in that he died for his enemies, Rom. 5. 10. For now should not his loue be whole and entyre towards vs, as though for our cause he onely had died: But it is now a deuided and halfe loue: for he died, as they say, partly to merit for himselfe, partly to merite for vs. But the scripture speaketh cleane contrarie, Iohn 17. 9. For their sakes sanctifie I my selfe: he saith not, partly for their sakes, partly for mine owne.

Saint Ambrose sheweth, how that whatsoever Christ did, he did wholly for vs, not thereby to gaine any thing to himselfe: 1. Concerning his fasting he saith: Christus non emerenda gratia sua causa, sed nostrae eruditionis gratia ieiunauit: Christ fasted not to merite fauour or grace to himselfe, but for our erudition or instruction. lib. 3. de fide. 2.

2. Nec suis sua natiuitas profuit, sed nobis: Neither did his birth profit himselfe but vs. in 1. Coloss.

3. Christus nostri non sui causa pauper factus: Christ became poore for vs, not for himselfe in 2. Cor. 8.

4. Christus est mortuus pro nobis, sed illa, ut proderet nobis; nostra autem mors non illi proficit, sed nobis: Christ died for vs, he died to profite vs, but our death doth not profite him, but our selues. in 8. ad Roman.

Thus we see that the 1. birth, 2. fasting, 3. pouertie, 4. death of Christ did not any waies aduantage himselfe: but all was done for vs.

Argum. 2. All glorie that Christ hath, was from everlasting due to his person, because he is the eternall Sonne of God: aske himselfe saith, Iohn. 17. 5. And now glorifie me with thine owne selfe, with the glorie which I had with thee, before the world was: And this glory was due vnto Christ so soone as he was incarnate by the right of his Godhead. Heb. 1. 6. When he bringeth in his first begotten Sonne into the world, he saith, Let all the Angels of God worship him. And the Angels themselves confesse, in their Annas. vpon these words, that straight vpon Christs descending from heauen, it was the due of Angels to worship him. Ergo, he merited not his glorification by his death, which was due vnto him euen at his first incarnation.

Argum. 3. If Christ merited his owne glorification, then he also merited the hypostaticall vnion, that his manhood should bee ioyned to his Godhead in vnitie of person: for his glory, maiestie, and power giuen to his manhood, doth issue and arise from the vniting of his Godhead therewith in one person: but his humanitie deserued not to be vnited to the Godhead:

Disrupt. & Gal. 3. 11.

Nemo tam cecus est, sicut Augustinus. Na man is so blinde, that he dare say, that Christ by his well lining merited to be called the Sonne of God. And he proueth it out of the first of Luke, ver. 35. Therefore shall that holy thing bee called the Sonne of God: not for any workes going before, but because the holy Ghost came vpon her. Wherefore the diuine glory which Christ hath, was not merited, but his owne it was from the beginning, which glorie the humane nature in Christ is made partaker of, not for any merite, but because it is vnited to the Godhead in the same person, through the abundant and vnspeakable grace and loue of God vnto mankinde, which of his free grace rather tooke vnto himselfe the nature of men, then of Angels. Wherefore Christ by his perfect obedience and blessed sacrifice, hath merited abundantly for vs, remission of finnes, and eternall life: but by his merites hee hath gayned nothing for himselfe: neyther had he any respect to the bettering of his owne estate in his sufferings, but onely to pay a ranfome for vs.

Saint Ambrose further saith: Videtur donum patris, hoc est, esse filium, & nomen super omnia nomen, hoc est, esse Deum, &c. This seemeth to be the gift of the father, that is, to be his sonne: and this is the name aboue all names, to be God. in 2. ad Philipp. but the Godhead cannot be merited.

Again he saith: Lices secundum carnem Christo sedes ad dextram Dei a patre, generationis tamen superna & aequalitatis potentia defertur: Although Christ according to his flesh sitteth at the right hand of his father, yet it is due vnto him in respect of his supernall generation, and equall power. lib. 5. de fide. 7.

Further he thus testifieth: Ad hoc natus est Christus, ut faceret creaturam; nec enim sibi natiuitas suo proficit, sed nobis, quia non eguit nasci; erat enim in Deo qui processit de Deo: si ergo natiuitas prima ipsi non profuit, multo minus secunda: Christ was borne or begotten of God to this ende, to make the creature: for his natiuitie or begetting, did not profite himselfe, but vs; because he needed not to be borne, for he was in God, that proceeded from God: and if the first and eternall birth did not profite him, much lesse the second. in 1. ad Coloss.

Thus Saint Ambrose is verie constant and resolute in this point, that Christ gained nothing properly to himselfe by his life or death: but all was done for vs.

Yet Christ may be said in two respects to haue obtained somewhat to himselfe, 1. because the preeminence of the members doth redound to the honour of the head: and in this sense Saint Ambrose saith: Nos redemit, sed sibi acquisiuit, &c. in his omnibus detrimentum nullum video diuinitatis, profectum operationis agnosco, &c. Christ hath redeemed vs, but he hath also gotten to himselfe in all this I see no detriment of the diuinitie, but a profiting in the worke of our redemption. serm. 20. in Psal. 119. His meaning is, that Christ gained, in that he finished the redemption for vs; he purchased nothing properly to himselfe, but by way of communication, because his members by his merite were redeemed.

2. Christ by way of declaration or manifestation is said to haue obtained his great name: not in that he merited his glory by his passion, which was due to his person: but by his obedience he declared himselfe worthy of so great glory: thus Peter Lombard expoundeth that place of the Apostle, Philip. 2. 9. God hath giuen him a name aboue euery name, &c. Secundum scripturam creberrimum res dicitur fieri, quando inuocetur, &c. manifestationem ergo illius nominis donauit illi Deus post resurrectionem sed illam meruit per obedientiam passionis: According to a certaine figure of speech often vsed in the Scripture, a thing is said to be done, when it appeareth onely; so God gaue vnto Christ

Christ after his resurrection, the manifestation of his name; but he merited it by the obedience of his passion: lib. 3. dist. 18. lit. a. By his sentence Christ merited not his glorie, but the manifestation onely thereof, that is, was declared by the obedience of his death worthy all honour, which is that we affirme: for otherwise to speake properly, as Peter Lombard in the same place saith: Habuit hoc nomen Dei filius, in quantum Deus ab aeterno per naturam; in quantum homo factus est, habuit ex tempore per gratiam: The Sonne of God had this name, as he was God eternally by nature; as he was made man, he had it temporally by grace, &c. If then he had it of grace, he properly did not merite it.

I will alleage another graue testimonie, of one of their owne side, (lichtbomans: ad Damasceum. numerum. 83.) Quia in Christo est diuinitas omnium princeps & dominatrix: sua idem conualit humanitati, ut ratione vniuersi sit omnium etiam domina, &c. The diuinitie, that is in Christ Prince and ruler of all things, gaue the same vnto his humanity, by reason of the vnion, to be Lord of all things, &c. which rule and domination is said to be giuen, when for and after his humilitie vpon the crosse it was manifested vnto men, &c. We cannot haue a clearer euidence for this matter, as we haue heard, then from themselves.

Concil. Ephesin. 1. can. 9. Si quis dicit quod Christus pro se ipse obtulerit oblationem, & non magis pro solis nobis anathema sit: If any man say, that Christ offered vp himselfe for himselfe; and not rather onely for vs, let him be accursed. But if Christ merited heauen by his sufferings, not onely for vs, but for himselfe also, then had he part himselfe in his owne oblation.

Master Tindal holy Martyr hath sealed this truth: Christ with all his workes did not deserue heauen for himselfe (for that was his alreadie) but did vs seruice therewith, and neither looked for, nor sought his owne profite, but ours, and the honour of God his Father only: For pag. 1247. col. 2. articul. 7. Again, he explaineth himselfe thus: Iesus Christ possesseth the kingdome of heauen by double right: first, because hee is the sonne of God, and very inheritor of his kingdome: secondly, because hee hath gotten it by his passions and death: of his second right hee hath no neede, and therefore hee giueth it all to them, that beleue and trust in him, pag. 1256. col. 2. articul. 30.

THE THIRD PART OF THIS CONTROVERSIE,

concerning the coming of Christ to iudgement: which appertaineth to his whole person, as he is both God and man.

This part of this controuersie hath two parts: First, concerning the signes which must come to passe before his appearing. Secondly, of the time and manner of his appearing. The first part containeth three questions: First, whether the Gospell bee alreadie preached to the whole world. Secondly, whether Henoch and Elias shall come in the flesh, before the day of iudgement. Thirdly, of the great persecutions toward the end of the world.

THE FIRST QUESTION, WHETHER THE Gospell bee alreadie preached throughout the world.

The Papists.

They denie that the Gospell hath been alreadie published to all nations of the world: for there are many great countries, which neuer heard of the Gospell, as they affirme: but before the coming of Christ to iudgement, they say, it shall be preached to the whole world, Bellarmin. de Roman pontif. lib. 3. cap. 4. 31. Error.

Argum. 1. Matth. 24. 14. Christ saith, This Gospell of the kingdome shall be preached thorough the whole world, for a witness vnto all nations, and then shall the end come. The end of the world shall immediately follow the generall preaching of the Gospell: which if it hath been performed, it is most like to haue been done in the Apostles time, then the world should haue ended long agoe, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. 1. This word, Then, doth not alwaies in the Scripture signifie a certaine and definite time presently to follow, as Matth. 9. 1. Then he entered into a ship, &c. Luke also setteth forth the same storie, chap. 5. vers. 18. Then brought they a man lying in a bed: But in saying Then, they haue not relation to the same time, for they keepe not the same order, in rehearsing the storie: Matthew setteth downe one thing, that was immediately done by our Sauour Christ before, and Luke another. And so is the word Then, vsed in other places, not to describe a consequence of time, with relation to that which went before, but absolutely without any such respect to name the time present only, wherein anything is done. So, then, then, signifie as much as in illo tempore, in that time, not which shall immediately follow vpon the generall publishing of the Gospell, but which God hath appoynted. We must also consider who it is, that saith, Then, namely, God himselfe, with whom a thousand yeares is as one day, and one day as a thousand yeares. 2. Pet. 3. 8. Christ then may come many hundred yeares after, and yet it shall be true, that then shall the end be.

So Origene well saith: Christus in parabola totum hoc seculum praesens unum diem vocat, licet enim magnum quantum ad nos, modicum tamen quantum ad vitam patris, filij & spiritus sancti: Christ in the parable, doth call all this present world, but one day: for though it be great in respect of vs, yet it is but little in respect of the life of the Father, the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost, &c. So Iohn saith, It is the last hour, 1. Iohn 2. 18. Orig. trall. 10. in Matth. 20. This word (then) may as well be applied to any part of this last hour.

But we rather take the first sense, that (then) is here taken indefinitely: as it is also, verf. 23. Then if any man shall say unto you, loe here is Christ, &c. Here our Sauour speaketh of his latter comming: yet immediately before he described the troublesome times of the destruction of Ierusalem if (then) should be taken strictly, the second comming of Christ should haue fallen out at the same time, when Ierusalem was destroyed. And as this word (in) time, (then) is taken, so is 2. Tim. verf. 29. Immediately or presently after the tribulation of those dayes, the sunne shall be darkened: yet S. Marke saith, 13. 24. In those dayes after the tribulation, the sunne shall waxe darke: so that there shall be dayes & times after those tribulations, before the end come: then the end shall not be immediately, taken strictly. In like manner our Sauour saith, Matth. 26. 64. At that time, from this time, amodo, from hence forth ye shall see the sonne of man sitting at the right hand of the power of God: yet this, from hence forth, is not yet come: Hereof Origene thus writeth, Deo à constitutione mundi ad consummationem eius velut una dies: nil mirum ergo, quod hic dicit saluator, amodo, spacium esse brevissimum: Vnto God from the constitution of the world, to the end and consummation thereof, it is but as one day: no maruaile then, if our Sauour say, from hence forth, counting it a short space: Tract. 35. in Matth.

Argum. 2. We see the Gospell hath been preached in great countries of late, which neuer heard the Gospell afore, as it is thought, Rhemist. Matth. 24. sect. 4.

Answ. 1. They speake doubtfully, they cannot tell: as it is thought, say they. 2. They meane the preaching of their Friers, in those new found countries, which was not the preaching of the Gospell, but of vile superstition, not to conuert the people to God, but to robbe and spoyle them, and make a pray of them, killing and slaying them without all mercie: reade Benzo in bellaria ueni orbis. 3. We denie not but that the Gospell may be reuiued and renewed in many countries, where notwithstanding it was planted many yeeres afore: as this countrie of ours in ancient time called Britanie, was first instructed in the faith by the preaching of Ioseph of Arimathea, as Gildas saith: or as Nicophorus saith, by Simon Zelotes: yet after that, the foundation of the faith thus begun, it was confirmed afterward in King Lucius daies, by the preaching of Fagave and Damiano, which at Lucius request were sent into the land from Eugeniberius B. of Rome: and so may it come to passe in other countries: a second preaching therefore taketh not away the former, but confirmeth and reuiueth it.

The Protestants.

THAT the Gospell was in the Apostles time preached to all the knowne and inhabited nations of the world, so that once alreadie the world hath been generally called by the preaching of the word, it is euident by the Scriptures.

Argum. 1. Our Sauour saith to his Apostles, Ye shall be my witnesses to the uttermost parts of the earth, Act. 1. 8. which is spoken to the persons of the Apostles, not in them to all pastors and preachers, as some expound it: for in the same verse, there is mention made of the comming of the holie Ghost, and how first they should begin to witnesse at Ierusalem: which things were indeede so accomplished in the Apostles.

S. Paul also Rom. 10. 18. expoundeth that place of the Psalme, Their sound is gone forth into all the world, of the Apostles. And Coloss. 1. 6. The word of truth is come to you, as it is to all the world, and is fruitfull as it is among you: and verf. 23. The Gospell hath been preached to every creature which is vnder heauen. These places doe euidently proue, that the Gospell was preached to all the world, euen in the Apostles time: neither can it be so vnderstood, as Bellarmino imagineth; that the Gospell was preached not in act, but in vertue, because the Apostles did sowe the seed, which should afterward fructifie in all the world: or because the fame of the Gospell onely was spread ouer all the world. Bellarmino. lib. 3. de Roman. pontif. c. 4.

Contra. 1. The Apostle saith, It is come vnto the world, as it is also vnto you: but it was come actually to the Colossians, therefore it was so come also to the world. 2. He saith also, and is fruitfull, &c. but the fame or rumor only of the Gospell could not be fruitfull: and the Apostle calleth it a preaching: but the carrying or spreading of a report, is not a preaching, which is effectual and begetteth faith. 3. If by the fame of the Gospell, he vnderstand the preaching thereof at the second hand, by such as were the Apostles schollers, and so sent forth by them: it is the same thing that we affirme, that in the Apostles time, though not by the Apostles persons onely, all the knowne parts of the world heard the Gospell.

Again,

Againe, seeing the Apostolicall calling and gifts is now ceased, neither are wee to looke that men should be immediatly called from heauen, and the preaching of the Gospell to all nations is an Apostolicall worke, for the which the Apostles also receiued the gifts of tongues: seeing now we haue neither Apostolike men, nor Apostolike gifts, we are not to doubt, but that this promise and prophesie of the vniuersall preaching of the Gospell, is performed already.

Argum. 2. It appeareth in Ecclesiasticall histories, that the Apostles dispered themselves into all parts of the world, euery where preaching the Gospell. Thomas preached to the Parthians, Medes, Persians, also to the Germanes: Simon Zelotes, in Mauritania, Africa, and in Britannia: Judas, called Thaddaeus, in Mesopotamia: Mattheus, in Egypt: Bartholomew to the Indians: Andrew preached to the Scythians, Sogdians, Ethiopians: Hierom. catalog. scriptor. So that there were few or no knowne countries in the world, which heard not of the fame of the Gospell.

But here we must put in certaine cautions: First, that the Gospell was to be preached in the habitable or known world: the word is inhabitable, which Hierome saith answereth to the Hebrue kan tebel, Quam nos habitatum transferre possumus, Which wee may translate the inhabited world, tom. 4. epistol. ad Cyprian. Many countries are inhabited now that were not habitable then, or at the least not inhabited: wherefore it was sufficient, that the people of the world heard of the Gospell, howsoeuer afterward they were propagated into other vnknowne places. Secondly, as Augustine saith, Omnes gentes promissa sunt, non omnes homines omnium gentium: All nations were promised to heare of the Gospell, not all the men and inhabitants of euery nation. And so we doubt not but the Apostles did lay the foundation of faith through the whole world, & were first planters of the churches in the most knowne nations. Thirdly, though it might be, that there were many barbarous nations in the Apostles time, to whom they themselves preached not personally, yet the Gospell might be brought vnto them by those, whom the Apostles sent: as there were many disciples and Euangelists beside the Apostles, which preached the Gospell: at the least the fame of the Gospell might easily be brought to the more obscure, barbarous, and vnknowne nations, from those famous, large, and populous countries, where the Apostles had laboured. Thus S. Ambrose saith in 10. ad Roman. Vbiq; audita, & peruenit in omnem locum predicatio nominis Christi, ubi enim praesentia hominis praedicantis desuit, sonus tamen & fama peruenit, &c. Euery where is heard, and to euery place is come the preaching of the name of Christ: for where the presence of the preacher ceased, yet the sound of the reporter encreased: as the report of the wonders done in Egypt came vnto all nations, by the witnesse of Rahab the harlot, &c. Thus then not by a generall fame onely of the Apostles preaching, but a particular report and relation of their doctrine, the name of Christ was published to all nations. Fourthly, the Gospell in many countries was planted by the Apostles, which in short time notwithstanding might decay, and begin to bee extinguished: and afterward their plantings might be renewed, watered, and reuiued by others; and yet may the Apostles be the first planters. Wherefore according to our meaning we nothing doubt, but that the Apostles sowed the first seedes of faith throughout the worlde: and therefore it is not to be expected, that the Lord should send another generall commission to publish the Gospell to the whole world.

That the Gospell hath been already preached to the whole earth, a notable experiment hercof we haue in the first Nicen Councell: where were assembled 318. Bishops out of the chiefe prouinces of the world: for Africa, there were present the Bishops of Egypt, Thebais, Lybia: for Asia, there came some out of Persia, Arabia, Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia: and some from all the prouinces of Asia minor: likewise out of the Isles of Rhodes, Chius, Lemnos, Corcyra: for Europa, Hosius of Spaine, others out of Fraunce, Gotland, Mysia, Dacia, Achaia, Pannonia, Calabria, and from the prouince of Bosphorus: And as Socrates saith, Sed etiam Persa uenit ad concilium Episcopus, uerum nec Scythia desuit ex eorum choro: There came to the Councell a Persian Bishop, and there wanted not one out of Scythia. Thus then by the view of this ancient Councell it may appeare, that the whole world was in those times lightened with the Gospell.

Ex subscriptione concilii Niceni. 1.

Hereof also Gennadius thus reporteth, Catalog. scriptorum: Iacobus presbyter Nisibena nobilis Persarum ciuitatis Episcopus unus eorum fuit, qui in Nicena synodo Arrianam peruersitatem damnauit: Iacob, or Iames a presbyter Bishop of Nisibene a noble citie of Persia, was one of them which in the Nicen Synode condemned the Arrian heresie.

Further, Saint Hierome thus testifieth: Catalog. scriptor. Crescens in Galliis predicauit, &c. Crescens preached in Fraunce, Queene Candace Eunuch in Arabia Felix, and the Isle Taprobane: Pantenus was sent by Demetrius Bishop of Alexandria into India, being entreated thereunto by the Ambassadors of that nation, where he found, that Bartholomew had preached the Gospell after Mattheus, the which written in Hebrue letters he brought to Alexandria.

Againe he thus writeth: Iam & Aegyptius Serapius Christianus factus est, &c. Now the Egyptian God Serapis is become a Christian: from India, Persia, Ethiopia we daily receiue great troupes of Monkes: the Armenians haue layd aside their quivers, the Hunnes doe learne the Plalter: Scythia frigora frigora formis calore fides: The Scythian frosts doe glow with the heate of faith: the Getes bloody armies are become the tents of the Church.

Hieron. ad Laram. and in his epistle ad Eusebium, he maketh mention of the Brittaines, of the Armenians, Indians, Ethiopians, of Cappadocia, Pontus, Syria, Mesopotamia, conuerted to the faith, cunctaque Orientis examina, and all the swarmes of the East.

Origen saith, ex apolog. Pambul. Prædicatur sermo iste in omni orbe terrarum, &c. This worde is preached in all the world, Greekes, Barbarians, the wise and vnwise doe receiue the religion of Christ.

Saint Ambrose: Nulla pars mundi ab Euangelio vacat Christi: & licet illa generalis vocatio non quiescat, tamen iam ista specialis omnibus facta est communis: No part of the worlde wanteth the Gospell of Christ: and although that generall calling (of the creatures) ceaseth not; yet this speciall is made common to all, lib. 2. de vocat. Gen. 1. 10. It is euident then by these testimonies, that the world hath already generally been lightened with the preaching of the word, so that a generall second preaching is not to be expected.

Wherefore, seeing the world hath once already been generally lightened with the truth, we are not to looke any more for a solemne legacie and ambassage to be sent from the Lord vnto all nations: But those countries rather, which sometime had the truth, and now haue lost it, ought now to seeke vnto those places that haue it, as the Queene of Saba went a long iourney to heare Salomons wisdom. They therefore that yet doe expect an vniuersall preaching, may sooner see Christ comming in the cloudes, than haue their expectation satisfied.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE COMMING of Henoch and Elias before the day of iudgement.

The Papists.

32. Error.

Their common and receiued opinion is, that Henoch and Elias doe yet liue in their bodies in Paradise, and shall come in person to oppose themselves against Antichrist, and by their preaching to conuert the Iewes, Rhemist. Apocal. 11. sect. 4.

Argum. Malach. 4. 5. I will send you Elias the Prophet, before the great and fearefull day of the Lord. These are also the two witnesses spoken of, Apocal. 11. 3. which shall be slaine and rise vp againe the third day; Ergo, Elias and Henoch shall come before the day of the Lord, Bellarmin. de Roman. pontif. 3. 6.

Answ. First, the prophetic of Malachie was fulfilled in Iohn Baptist, who came in the spirit of Elias; as it is thrice in the Gospell applied: once by the Angell, Luk. 1. 16. twice by our Sauour Christ, Matth. 11. 14. and 17. 13.

1 Bellarmin saith, it is not properly vnderstood of Iohn Baptist, but onely in an allegorie. First, the Prophet speaketh of the great and fearefull day of the Lord: but the comming of Christ was the acceptable time. Secondly, Matth. 17. 11. Christ saith, after Iohn had finished his course, Elias certainly shall come. Thirdly, hee speaketh there of the person of Elias that appeared with Christ in the mountaine. Fourthly, Iohn Baptist did not restore all things, that is, by conuerting of all Iewes and heretikes, but Elias shall: Iohn therefore was not that Elias.

1 Answ. 1. Here Bellarmin bewrayeth great ignorance: As though the comming of Christ in the flesh, as it brought comfort to the elect, and to as many as were ordained to saluation, was not also an hastening of the iudgement of God against the wicked: and therefore Iohn saith, The axe was layd to the roote of the tree, Matth. 3. 10. and that Christ came with his fauue in his hand, vers. 12. The Apostle, Hebr. 12. 26. applieth that saying of the Prophet; Once againe will I shake not onely the heauens, but the earth, to the preaching of the Gospell. Wee see then in what sense the first comming of Christ is called a fearefull and terrible day. 2. Our Sauour maketh answer to the Apostles question: Why say the Scribes that Elias must first come? first deliuering their sense, Elias must first come, but then he sheweth his owne iudgement, correcting the erroneous sense of the Scribes, vers. 12. But I say vnto you, that Elias is come already. 3. Neither is it necessarie, because Elias appeared a little before in person, that this should be spoken of his person: and yet it was true also in that sense, that Elias was come already, appearing vnto Christ in the mount. 4. And Iohn also restored all, that is, many, as the Scripture vlieth to speake, Luk. 1. 16. Many of the children of Israel shall be turned to the Lord their God. So Saint Paul hauing said, Through the infesting of one the benefit abounded toward all men to iustification, Rom. 5. 18. in the next verse, in stead of all he saith, by the obedience of one many shall be made righteous.

Answ. Secondly, by the two witnesses, is vnderstood the small, yet sufficient number of the true seruants of God, which shall witnesse the truth euen in the hottest persecution of Antichrist: there is no mention made of Henoch or Elias. And if you will needes vnderstand that literally, of their rising againe, why not the rest also, how fire shall proceede out of their mowthes to consume the wicked, wicked, and they shall turpe water into blood: The meaning is nothing else, but that God will alwaies haue faithfull witnesses in his Church, which shall alwaies stand vp, in the stead of the Prophets and holy men gone before.

Saint Hierome writeth well of this matter: De Henoch & Elias, quos venturos Apocalypsis refert & esse morituros, non est istius temporis disputatio, cum omnis ille liber, non spiritus ualiter intelligendus sit, ut nos existimamus, aut si carnalem interpretationem sequimur, Iudaicis fabulis acquiescendum sit, ut rursus adificetur Ierusalem, & hostia offeratur in templo: Of Henoch and Elias, whom the Apocalypse maketh mention shall come, and afterward dye, it belongeth not to this time to dispute, seeing that whole booke must either spiritually be vnderstood, as we thinke, or if we follow the carnall (or literall) interpretation, we must rest in Iewish fables, that Ierusalem must be built againe, and sacrifices offered in the temple, Marcell. tom. 4.

The Protestants.

Like as the Pharises decieued the Iewes with vaine expectation of Elias, and so hindred their beleefe in Christ: so the Papists would not haue men to acknowledge the manifestation of Antichrist, vnder this false pretence, that Henoch and Elias must first come before Antichrist be reuealed, which we doe hold as a Iewish fable and popish dreame.

Argum. 1. The prophetic of Elias comming is properly fulfilled in Iohn Baptist, and therefore we are not to looke for any other accomplishment thereof: neither now is there any Paradise remaining but heauen, 2. Corin. 12. 4. And to asirme that Henoch and Elias went vp to heauen in their bodies, before the ascension of Christ, out of Scripture it cannot bee proued: it is euident that they were taken vp aloue into heauen, but not that they continued aloue.

That there is no paradise now but heauen, Ambrose speaketh euidently: Etenim uera non magna salus est; nam saluus ero, cum fuero in paradiso, cum uinere capero inter electos angelos: Here is no great nor true health; then I shall be safe, when I shall be in paradise, when I shall liue among the elect Angels, serm. 15. in Psal. 119. Again, In paradysum celestem raptus est Apostolus, in quo latro dixit dominus, &c. illic ubi & esse dicitur anima Ierusalem mater nostra: The Apostle was taken vp into the celestially paradise, where the Lord layd to the theefe, &c. where Ierusalem is sayd to bee the mother of vs all, in 2. Cor. 11.

But in this celestially paradise of heauen Henoch and Elias are not with their bodies: Christ was the first, that in his flesh pierced the heauens. Origen herein is most resolute: Offendatur, qui uide de sermone nostro, ego cum omni fiducia asserero, quia sicut ex mortuis primogenitus Christus, ita primus eorum exiit in celum: Let him bee offended that will with my speech, I speake it boldly, than as Christ was the first begotten of the dead, so he first caried his flesh vp into heauen: ex Pampili.

Argum. 2. The varietie of opinions concerning the personall appearance of Henoch and Elias, declare that it is an vncertaine thing, and but deuiled of men. Hilary saith, they shall be Moses and Elias: Chrysostome grauntech that Elias shall come, but not Henoch. Iulian thinketh that not onely Henoch and Elias are aloue, but all those, whose bodies rose at the resurrection of Christ. Hippolytus is of opinion, that Iohn the Diuine shall come with them, and some say Iohn the aloue, whose death is not read of, Falsk. Apocal. 1. 1. fell. 4. And thus it is no maruile, if men ranne mad as it were in their foolish conceits, hauing no warrant for their opinions out of scriptures.

The nation of the Iewes we graunte, according to the manifest prophetic of Saint Paul, shall in the end be conuerted: but not in such sort, by the personall preaching of Moses and Elias: for the Apostle setting downe at large the myserie of they calling, would not haue left out so necessarie a thing.

Augustine by the two witnesses, vnderstandeth the two Testaments, the Old and the New. But he denieth vicerly, that any shall rise before the comming of Christ: as the Apostle saith, 1. Corin. 15. 23. The first fruits is Christ. Then they that are Christs at his comming, but not before, Vnde (saith he) excluditur omnis suspicio querendum, qui prius huiusmodi testes dicitur uideri esse, & ante aduentum Christi celum in nubibus ascendisse: Their suspicion therefore, or opinion is vicerly excluded, which thinke these two witnesses to be two men, which should ascend into heauen before the comming of Christ. Augustine we see is flat against them.

Saint Cyprian also saith: Nobis in spiritu & uirtute Elias non alius quam Ioannes solum angelus & dominus Christus innotat: The Angell and our Lord Christ innotate, that wee shall haue no other in the spirit and power of Elias, but Iohn: de singulari Clerico. Therefore no other Elias was to come but Iohn.

Iouenius a popish Bishop thus expoundeth that place. Ecclesiastic. 48. 10. of Hekar, That he is appointed to reprove in his time, &c. That Ecclesiasticus did write according to the opinion received in his time, that Elias should come in his owne person before the Messiah, which was to be fulfilled, not in his proper person, but in him that should come in the person and power of Elias, &c. This popish writer is a very good witness against them.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER THE MOST griueous persecutions that euer were, shall be toward the end of the world.

The Papists.

33. Error.

THe most griueous persecution (say they) that euer was, shall be vnder Antichrist, who is not yet come, but shall be reuealed toward the end of the world, and shall raigne vpon the earth three yeeres and an halfe, making great haucke of the Church of God, Bellarmino de Roman. pontific. lib. 3. cap. 7.

Argum. Matth. 24. 21. There shall bee then such great tribulation in the world, as was not since the beginning of the world, neither shall be: Ergo, the greatest persecution toward the end of the world.

Ans. First, it is plaine by the text, that this great tribulation is prophesied to come vpon the Jewes: the next verse before he saith, pray that your flight be not in the winter: And then it followeth, there shall be then, or as Marke saith, in those daies, there shall be such tribulation, 13. 19: and in the 17. verse: it shall be to them that give sack in those daies: which must needs be vnderstood of the destruction of Ierusalem: for at the comming of Christ, there shall be one and the same case of all, whether of those that giue sack, or of those that giue none.

Secondly, it cannot be meant of the last tribulation in the world, because the words are, that as there was none such since the beginning of the world; so there shall be none such after: Ergo, there shall be tribulation after, though none such.

The Protestants.

Our hope and trust is, that the greatest persecution of the Church of God is ouerpast; because the kingdome or rather tyrannie of Antichrist beginneth to decay, and we trust, shall more and more be shaken, till it come to vtter ruine.

Argum. 1. The Scripture telleth vs, that hard vpon the end of the world there shall be great securitie, men shall say, Peace peace vnto themselves, 1. Thessal. 5. 4. They shall eate and drinke, marry and be married, as it was in the daies of Noab, Matth. 24. 38. And therefore Luke saith, 21. 34. Take heed you be not overcome of sleepe and drunkenness, least this day come vpon you vnawares. For as a snare shall it come, &c. All this proueth, that there shall bee rather generall securitie, as in the daies of Noab, then generall tribulation. And there is greater danger of surfeiting and wantonnes in time of prosperitie and abundance, then in the daies of persecution. 2. And the text is plaine speaking of warres, troubles and persecutions, but the end shall not be yet, Marke 13. 7. Wherefore it appeareth, that the troubles and persecutions of the Church, shall be well slackt toward the end of the world.

Argum. 2. Antichrist, though he shall not vtterly be extinguished before the comming of Christ, yet shall be deadly wounded: and he shall beginne to be iudged euen in this world, Apoc. 17. 16. And shall tread him blood to drinke, Apoc. 17. 16. The tenne hornes, that is the kings of the earth, shall hate the whore and eat her flesh. The Church of God shall reward her, as she hath rewarded vs, and give her double according to her works, Apoc. 18. 6. By these places it is gathered, that Antichrist shall haue great overthrow before the comming of Christ, who shall vtterly abolish him with the brightness of his comming, 1. Thes. 2. 8.

Antichrist is already come, and hath raged a long time against the Church: The persecutions of the heathen did neither continue so long, neither were in exquisite crueltie and bitterness to be compared to the outrageous practices of the Antichrist of Rome, and his adherents against the Church of God, which would fill a whole volume by themselves, nay not one, but many and infinite volumes to be declared at large.

Jacobus et
S. Iacobus

1. But Bellarmino here telleth vs, 1. That the persecution which we say the Bishop of Rome hath raised against the Protestants, is nothing like to the persecution of the heathen Romaine Emperors against the Christians, neyther for number of martyrs, nor for diuersitie of most exquisite torments.

2. He is not ashamed to say, that the Protestants haue put more Papists to death in fewe yeers, then they haue killed Protestants.

3. The persecution of Antichrist shall be notorious and manifest to all the world: as the persecution of Nero, and Domitian were, we can tell when those persecutions began, and when they ended: but they can not tell when the Pope began to persecute, &c. Therefore his persecution is not that, which Antichrist shall raise.

4. Antichrist shall abolish the daily sacrifice, and all worship of God, in the time of his persecution: but so doth not the Pope. Bellarmino de Roman. pontific. lib. 3. c. 7.

Ans. 1. If the number of martyrs slaine by the tyrannie of the Pope is no whit inferior to the number number of the ancient martyrs if the time & place be considered: the heathen Emperors tyrannized for the space of three hundred yeers, and ouer the most part of the world which was vnder the Romane Empyre: the Romish Popes haue not practised their cruelty so long, neither I trust euer shall, neither is his popish iurisdiction any thing so large, as the Romane Empyre was: these two things considered, our late blessed martyrs, may compare in number, with those of former times if they goe not beyond them.

For prooue hereof, I will produce three examples: the first of the persecution of Calabria vnder Pope Pius 4. Ann. 1560. where in one towne 88. men had their throats cut, like calves and sheepe, and an 100. women were determined to be put to death: and 1600. more were apprehended and condemned: this Master Fox reporteth out of a certaine letter written by a Romanist to a friend he had in Rome. p. 942.

The second example is of the persecution of Almindand & Sabrin in France vnder King Francis: where eight townes in the countie of Progence with the inhabitants thereof were utterly destroyed by mercilesse Almindand 5000. women of Almindand were some ransomed, some whipped and scourged, some sold like cattell, some murdered: and at the same time an 1000. persons of men, women and children were put to death in Cabriers. Fox. p. 933. or Henricus Paucel.

My third example is of the late massacre in France Ann. 1570. when and where in Paris in three daies, were ten thousand Protestants cruelly murdered: in Lyons, Orleans, Tholout, Roan and the space of one moneth thirtie thousand most butcherly slain. Fox. p. 2153. Can any man now finde any difference in number of holy martyrs betweene these and the first persecution? I thinke verily that the horrible outrages of cruell Popes and Papists, haue exceeded the cruelty of the persecuting Emperors.

Concerning the diuers and exquisite tormentes, whether the Papists haue beene behinde, I report me to the foresaid recited stories: as in Calabria, where 88. had their throats cut by one executioner in one day: a Romanist detesting the cruelty of the fact, thus writeth thereof: I remember to seeke to remember how the executioner held his bloody knife betwene his teeth, with the bloody mus- sler in his hand, and his armes all in gore of blood, as hee was cutting, going to the fold, and taking every one of them, one after another by the hand, and so dispatching them all, as a butcher kill his calves and sheepe. Fox. p. 942. What greater cruelty could Nero or Domitian haue shewed?

In the sacking of the towne of Calabria: they forced diuers women to go into a barne full of strawe, and to set fire vpon the house: the women that assayed to escape by the doore, which a souldier opened in compassion toward them, the tyrant Calixtus commaunded to be hewn in peeces, opening the bellies of the women great with child, that the infants fell out. p. 953. O cruelty and horrible butcherie vnspeakable! Lord, thou hast seen this wickednes in the earth, and wilt iudge it in thy time.

At Lyons in the time of the Massacre, all the prisons being filled full of Protestants; when the souldiers and butchers refused to be instruments of so greiv villanie, the cruell gouernour procured the beastly kennell ralers and sweepers of the streets to goe into the prisons and hew in peeces the filly innocent soules, that the streets from the prisons stunk with blood. Histor. massac.

I thinke more fearefull precedents of beastly and inhumane cruelty cannot be shewed vnder those barbarous tyrants of Rome.

Secondly, it is a most shamelesse thing, that the Protestants haue perished by death, & to I will giue an instance of this realme of England, where in the space of three yeeres, in the late daies of persecution one bloody butcher (laughtered twice so many innocent Protestants for the truth, as there haue beene executed Papists now elswe 421. yeeres agoe for treason of the Papistes which haue died by the sword of Protestants, were either overcome in battell, or else condemned by iust lawes, not for their religion, but their rebellion, not for their profession, but their prauiding against Princes.

Thirdly, it is no hard matter for vs to assigne the time when the Pope began his true rage, and Antichristian persecution against the Church of Christ: for Ann. 1400. vnder the reign of Hann the fourth we finde William de Wyke to haue bene the first that was burned here in England for the faith of the Gospell: and at that time Bonifacius the second was Pope. Fox. pag. 418. and Ann. 1414. followed the condemnation of John Hus in the Council of Constance, pag. 624. So that it is now 200. yeeres since the Antichrist of Rome beganne his open persecution: his malice against the seruants of Christ did not sit long before, but about that time his tyrannie was manifested to the world, and since hath encreased.

Fourthly, Antichrist shall not prohibe all diuine worship, but all seruice and worship of God: that like as Antichrist in his time, and afterward the Romish Church caused the daily sacrifice to cease, and brought into the Temple the oblation of desolation: Matth. 24. 15. that it being profane and idolatrous sacrifices, so hath bee Antichrist of Rome compelled the possibles are said to sit in seates: first, vpon these words, Ephes. 2. 6. He hath made vs to sit together in heauenly places with Christ: Agnosco scriptum; sed non ut homines sedere ad dextram sibi patitur deus; sed ut in Christo sedere quia ipse est eorum fundamentum, caput ecclesia, in quo communis secundum carnem natura, prerogatiua sedis celestis emersit, &c. I acknowledge it is so written, not that God doth suffer men to sit by him at his right hand, but to sit as in Christ, because he is the foundation of all, and the head of his Church, in whom the common nature of man hath deserued the prerogative of the heauenly seate, lib. 5. de fid. c. 7. Thus one way the Saints are said to sit in seates, that is, not in their owne person, but in Christ their head.

Secondly, vpon these words, Matth. 19. 28. Te shall sit vpon twelue thrones: Non sedis sua dixit Apostolis dari posse consortium, sed alias illas esse sedes duodecim, quas tamen non pro corporali consensu, sed pro successu spiritualis gratia estimare debemus: He said not he would giue to his Apostles the fellowship of his seate, but other twelue seates, which wee must estimate not according to the corporall sitting, but after the spirituall profiting in grace, lib. 5. de fid. c. 3. By the twelue seates he vnderstandeth an higher degree of glorie, which should be giuen to the Apostles.

Thirdly, Saint Ambrose thus writeth vpon that place, 1. Cor. 6. 2. The Saints shall iudge the world: Iudicabunt sancti hunc mundum, quia exemplo fidei illorum perfidia mundi damnabitur, &c. The Saints shall iudge the world, because by example of their faith, the faithlesse world shall be iudged, and so he saith afterward that the Angels shall be iudged. So likewise Origen: Omnis vita iustorum iudicabit tribus Israel, quae non crediderunt: The whole life of the righteous shall iudge the tribes of Israel, that beleueed not, tract. 8. in Matth. In any of these senses the Saints may be said to iudge the world, but not as iudges to giue sentence with Christ, as we haue seene.

The Papists.

2. They are so bold as to appoint the place, where Christ shall appeare, namely in the East: 35. Error. for his comming shall be as the lightening that shineth from East to West, Matth. 24. 27. Bellarm. de culis sanctor. lib. 3. cap. 3.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, by that similitude Christ onely sheweth the suddennes of his comming: therefore it must be prest no further, than to that purpose for the which it serueth. Secondly, our Sauiour saith plainly, that the kingdome of God commeth not with obseruation, Luk. 17. 20. either of time, or place. And therefore, when men say vnto vs, Behold here, or behold there, wee ought not to beleuee them, vers. 23. As though they would point out Christs comming with the finger, either in the East or West. Whereas Matthew therefore nameth the East and West, in the similitude of the lightening, Luke leaueth them out, saying, As the lightening shineth from one part of the heauen to the other, chap. 17. 24. lest we should thinke any great matter to be in the nomination of those parts.

Augustine saith notably: Non ab Oriente veniet, nec Occidente: quare? quia Deus index est: si in aliquo loco esset, non esset Deus: quia vero Deus index est, non hominibus illum expectare de locis: Hee will not come, either from the East, or from the West: why so? because God is iudge: if he were tyed to any place, he were not God: but because God is iudge, and not a meere man, we must not look for him from any place.

Origen also of this matter thus writeth: Non in aliquo quidem loco apparebit filius dei, cum venerit in gloria sua, in altero non apparebit, &c. The sonne of God shall not appeare in one place when he commeth in his glorie, and not in another: but as the lightning comming forth of the East, because it filleth all places, appeareth in the West; so when Christ commeth in his glorie, hee shall appeare euery where, he shall be euery where in all mens sight, and they euery where in his sight: tract. 35. in Matth.

The Papists.

3. THe Sonne of man shall appeare in the day of iudgement, with the signe of the Crosse 36. Error. borne before him. Then shall the signe of the Sonne of man appeare in heauen, Matth. 24. vers. 3. that is (say they) the signe of the Crosse, Bellarm. de saul. lib. 2. cap. 28. Rhemist. in hunc locum.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, the signe of the sonne of man in the heauens, is nothing else, but his conspicuous and glorious appearing, who shall come in great glorie, as a signe in the heauens to be seene of all the world. It cannot signifie any such visible signe as they imagine: for Mar. 13. 26. Luk. 21. vers. 27. we reade thus: Then shall they see the Sonne of man. So then, the signe of the Sonne of man, is the Sonne himselfe in his glorious appearing. And so Origen expoundeth: Sicut in dispensatione crucis sole deficiente tenebrae factae sunt super omnem terram, sic et signo filij hominis apparente in caelo deficiet solis lumen: Like as in the dispensation of the crosse, the Sunne being eclipsed, darknes was ouer the face of all the earth: so the signe of the Sonne of man appearing, the Sunnes light shall faile; tract. 30. in Matth. It is the glorie of the Sonne himselfe, and not of any other signe, which shall obscure the Sunne light. Secondly, it is great presumption, so boldly to affirme, that it shall be the signe of the crosse, having no scripture for it: Other signes we finde, that Christ hath appeared with, as the signe of the rayne-bow, Apocal. 10. 1. with a two edged sword, Apocal. 1. 16. with a booke in his hand, Apocal. 10. 2. Wee have better reason, that Christ may appeare with those signes, by the which he hath sometime shewed himselfe, than they have for the signe of the crosse.

3. It is more like, that Christ at his comming should shew the markes and prints of the nayles and speare in his bodie, than the signe of the crosse: for those were felt and seene in his bodie after his resurrection, so was not the other. But it is a loose coniecture, and a vaine turne, without any ground of scripture, that the wounds are either now in heaven to be seene in the glorious bodie of Christ, or that they shall be beheld and looked vpon in the day of iudgement. The wicked in deede shall behold him, whom they pierced: but it followeth not thereupon that hee should appeare as pierced. How is it possible, that either the bodie of Christ being perfectly glorified, should still retaine any spots or blemishes, or that they could be espied in so glorious a bodie, which with the brightnes thereof shall obscure the Sunne?

Esperians (a writer of their owne) saith, that whereas some ascribe this song to Bernard: Mater ostendit filio pectus & vbera; filius patri latus & vulnera: That in heaven Christs mother doth shew her sonne her breast and pappes; Christ sheweth his father his side and wounds, &c. that it is, contemplatio non tam ex scripturis, quam picturis deprompta, a contemplation taken not out of scripture, but out of some picture, de Christ. Mediator. c. 8.

tempore 147.

Augustine gueth this iudgement: Sic voluit resurgere Christus, sic voluit quibusdam dubitantibus exhibere in illa carne cicatrices vulneris ut sanaret vulnus incredulitatis: So it pleased Christ to arise, and to shew in his flesh vnto some that doubted, the skarres of his wounds, to heale and take away the wound of their incredulitie or vnbeleefe. This then being the onely cause, why Christ would at that time haue the printes and markes in his flesh to be seene, namely to confirme the faith of them which doubted; the cause being now ceased: for is it to be thought that there are any doubtfull persons in heaven, which may be confirmed by beholding Christs wounds? or shall vnbeleeuers finde any reliefe in the day of iudgement? the cause (I say) being remooued, wee haue no warrant to thinke, that there are any such skarres, either now to be seene in the glorious bodie of Christ, or which shall appeare in the day of iudgement. And seeing there is no ground for this opinion, the shewing forth also of the signe of the crosse in that day, is also but a wandering and a foolish conceit.

The Papists.

37. Error.

4. Such is their boldnes, that they dare assigne the very yeere, moneth, and day of Christs comming to iudgement: for they say, that Antichrist shall raigne three yeeres and an halfe, and one moneth, 1290. dayes, and counting 45. dayes after that, they shall see Christ comming in the cloudes: Blessed is hee, saith Daniel, that waiteth and cometh to the 1335. dayes, Dan. 12. 12. Bellarmin. de pontif. Rom. lib. 3. cap. 8.

The Protestants.

Epistol. 80.

Ans. 1. The prophetic of Daniel we haue already shewed, Controversie 4. quest. 9. to haue bin fulfilled before the first comming of Christ, in Antiochus that cruell tyrant & persecutor of the people of God: how he should cause the daily sacrifice to cease 1290. dayes, that is, three yeeres and seven moneths, 2. Macchab. 11. 33. and that 45. dayes after, Antiochus being dead, the Church should finde ease, 1. Macchab. 6. 16. Wherefore, seeing this prophetic hath once already had his effect, it is not necessarie to looke for any other; as Augustine saith of another prophetic of Daniel: Qua propheta si tempore primi aduentus impleta est, non cogit intelligi, quod etiam de fine seculi implebitur: Which prophetic if it hath been fulfilled in or before the first comming of Christ, it neede not be vnderstood of the latter.

2. This presumption of theirs is flat opposite and contrarie to Scripture, which saith, 7 thus the hour and day of Christs comming is not knowne to the Angels, nor to the Sonne of man, but to the Father onely. Mark. 13. 33. How then dare they presume beyond the knowledge of Angels?

I finde beside, that two writers haue aduentured very farre in this matter to set downe the time and yeeres of Christs comming: one is Cusanus among the Papists: the other is Iohn Napeir that learned gentleman of Scotland for the Protestants: the first thinketh, that the world shall end betwene the yeere 1700. and 1734. the other, that the finall consummation is like to be accomplished betwene the yeere 1688. and anno 1700.

1. Cusanus coniectures are these: 1. As Christ rose again in the yeere 34. of his age: so the Church of God shall rise at the latter day in the 34. Iubile, which make 1700. yeeres.

2. As after the first Adam in the 34. Iubile there came a consumption of sinne by water: for the flood was anno 1656 after the creation of the world; so in the 34. Iubile after the second Adam, shall there be a finall consumption of sinne by fire.

3. Dan. 12. 12. There shall be 1300. dayes, that is yeeres, from the going forth of the word, which which was the first yeere of Cyrus, who was 559. yeeres before Christ: now ioyned both these together, and wee come to the yeere after Christ 741. and so the world shall end at the yeere 1700. or before 1700.

4. He taketh another coniecture out of Philo, that it was revealed to Moses, that at his death two times of the world were passed, from Adam to Noah the first, and from Noah to Moses the second; and two more were behind, the first from Moses to Christ, which contained 1700. yeeres, the second from Christ to the end of the world of the like continuance: vid. Elij. in 2. ad Timoth. pag. 80.

Contra. Some of these coniectures are vncertaine and conclude not, some are improper, some of them false: of the first sort are the two first reasons: 1. They are grounded onely vpon humane collections, not diuine constitutions: as to estimate the age of the world and continuance thereof by Iubilees: by Sabbathes and Iubilees we may make reckoning and account of time, but precisely thereby to calculate how long the world shall endure, is an humane presumption without any diuine prescription. 2. Hereby it would follow, that the world should end before anno 1700: in the midst of the last Iubile, which is contrarie to his owne opinion: for Christ dyed at 33. yeere and an halfe: and the deluge came anno 1656. in the midst of the last Iubile.

Secondly, the third coniecture is improper, and hath beside many vncertainties: 1. The Prophet speaketh of 1335. dayes, not of 1300. onely. 2. The computation of these dayes must begin from the setting vp of the abomination of desolation, Dan. 12. 12. which was in Augustus Epiphani raigne, who was some hundred yeeres after Cyrus. 3. I see not though all the yeeres be put together, how we come to anno 1700. but onely to the yeere 741. vnlesse hee adde 1000. yeeres more, which cannot be concluded from that place of Daniel. 4. I haue shewed before that this prophetic of Daniel was once already fulfilled in Antichrist raigne, and therefore a second propheticall effect thereof is not to be expected.

Thirdly, the last coniecture is altogether vncertaine and false: for neither are there 1700. yeeres betwene Noah and Moses death, nor yet 1000. yeere: and from Moses to Christ, are not about yeeres 1400.

That learned and religious gentleman of Scotland doth ground his opinion vpon better coniectures, yet vncertaine: as first, hee allegeth the prophetic fathered vpon Elias, that the world should continue 6000. yeeres: 2000. before the Law, 2000. vnder the Law, 2000. vnder the Messiah, which dayes for the elect sake shall be shortened.

Secondly, he buildeth vpon that place of Daniel of 1335. dayes, taking so many yeeres, and beginning the account from Julian the Apostata, who would haue made an viter desolation of Christian religion, anno 365. which two numbers compounded make iust 1700.

Thirdly, he vrgeth that place, Apocal. 14. 20. how the blood ranne out of the winepresse 1600. furlongs: whereby must be vnderstood so many yeeres: and the account to begin from anno 99. when this booke was written: so that this number will bring vs to anno 1699. These with other moe coniectures, that learned gentleman hath prop. 14. in his booke vpon the Revelation: which he vrgeth not as certaine demonstrations, but as probable suppositions for his opinion: which I thinke hee propoundeth not, as necessarie to be followed, or certaine to be beleued, but as probable to be receiued, and as coniecturall further to be weighed and considered.

For otherwise the Scripture teacheth, that the very Angels knowe not the hours or day, that is, the time of Christs coming, Mark. 13. 32. how then are we able to search it out? And if Daniel confesseth his ignorance concerning the secret of times, Dan. 12. 8. I heard it but I vnderstood it not: it were great presumption for vs to seeke to comprehend that, which so great a Prophet apprehended not.

This we may know and remember, that many attempting to calculate the time of Christs coming, haue been greatly deceiued, and overtaken in their owne conceites.

Lactantius lib. 7. cap. 14. is of opinion, that the world should last so many thousand yeeres, as it was dayes in making: according to the blind tradition fathered vpon Elias. In the same error are Meibadius, Eusebius, Beda.

Gregorie the great, Homil. 1. in Euangel. thought that in his time the day of Iudgement was at hand: and that the signes of Christs coming were accomplished.

In Iustinian the Emperours time, there was a generall rumour, Mundum cum prole periturum: That the world should presently perish with her children. And while all men were in expectation hereof, a certaine Captaine of the Emperours called Mundus, which is the Latine worde for the world, being sent into Italie against the Gothes, was slaine with his children, and so that blind prediction tooke effect: xx. Procop. & Leonardi Arctini de bell. Gothor. lib. 1.

Bullinger reporteth, that certaine Anabaptists were so sure that the end of the world was at hand, that they wilfully wasted their goods, thinking they had enough for the time the world should last, and so fell into extreame pouertie: scilicet. Anabap. lib. 2. c. 6.

And of late some confidently had written of the yere 88. as though the world should then have ended. But all these haue proued themselves false prophets.

Wherefore in so great vncertainties, I thinke Augustine resolution best, who thus writeth, epist. 28. De Saluatoris reditu, qui adpositus in fine, tempore a diuinitate non audet, nec aliquem prophetarum hac de re quoniam auctorum entibus profecisse, &c. Of our Saviours returne, which is expected in the end, I dare not number the times, neither do I thinke that any of the Prophets knew the number of the yeres, but rather that to stand, which the Lord saith: It is not for you to know the times and seasons, which the father hath kept in his owne power, Act. 1.7.

In Psalm. 14.

Againe, Augustine saith, Uultis latere uolunt Deus illam diem, ut semper sit paratum cor ad expectandum, quod esse venturum sit, & quando venturum sit pfect: The Lord to great purpose would haue that day kept secret, that our heart should bee in continuall expectation of that, which it is sure, shall come, but knoweth not when it shall come. Quid ad te (saith he) quando ueniet, sic uis, quasi hodie uenturus sit, & non timidis non ueniet! What is it to thee when he cometh to live as though he should come to day, and thou shalt not be afraid when he cometh, serm. 6. & 17.

Thus haue I through the Lords gracious assistance, now at the length finished and brought to an end this long and tedious worke, which I trust shall not be so yrkome to the Christian reader, as it was wearisome and painfull to the selfe, in the collecting and compiling thereof: and yet not so painfull, but that God hath made me able and willing to endure this, and greater paines, and that with comfort, for the good of his Church. As Augustine saith: Nullo modo uero esse debent labores amantium, nam in eo quod amatur, aut non laboratur, aut ipse labor amatur: The labours of louers are not grieuous, for in that which a man loueth and desireth, either there is no labour at al, or else he loueth the very labour: de patient. cap. 22.

I excuse not, whatsoever hath fallen out of my pen in this worke, if I haue failed any where in the manner of handling: But as for the matter handled therein, I trust I haue throughout maintained the truth: in the prosecuting whereof, if sometime I chauce to misse, I say with Augustine: Nauquam errasti nisi existens quam cum in amore nimis ueritatis, & reuelatione nimis falsitatis erratur: I thinke a man can neuer more safely erre, than when he erreth in the too much loue of the truth, and the reiecting of falsehood.

cap. 17.

I haue laboured in this worke, to set downe not onely the chiefe and principall, but euen the most, and in a manner all the controversies of religion, betweene vs and the Papists, maintained this day: If any thing be missing, I say againe with Augustine, Tale esse arbitratum sum cui morum reformatione necessaria non fuisset, siue, quia aliter de qua agitur, non pertinet, siue quod tam leue esset, ut à quolibet redargui facillime posset: I thought it to be such, as vnto the which mine answer was not needfull, either because it was not pertinent to the matter in hand, or else of so small moment, that euery man might easilie answere vnto it.

August.

I haue no more to say but this: If thou findest thy selfe any thing profited or helped (good Christian Reader) by these simple labours of mine, giue God the praise, and I will praise him with thee: but one thing let me pray thee: Quisquis legis nihil reprehendas, nisi cum totum perlegeris, et quia in parte minus reprehendas: Whosoever readeth in this booke, reprehend nothing, before thou hast read the whole, and so perhaps thou wilt be more sparing in reprehending.

The Lord giue vs all grace to lone the truth, that they which knowe it, may continue and goe forward therein, as he saith, Perseuerate in eo, quod estis, proficite ad id, quod estis: Perseuere in that you are, and proceede to that, you shall be: And they which as yet know it not, may seeke for it: and we all may embrace the Counsell of the wise man, to buie the truth, but in no wise to sell it: that is, by all possible meanes to labour for it: and hauing attained thereunto, for no earthly respect, for feare or fauour to depart from it. The Lord God, Iesus Christ, Iehouah, Emmanuel, our blessed Saviour and redeemer, who is the way, the truth, and the life, giue vs of his heavenly grace, that we may walke obediently in his wayes, and constantly professe his truth, that in the end he may bring vs to eternall life. Amen.

sit omnis honor & gloria.*

AN ADDITION, OR SECOND PART OF THIS FIFT AND LAST CENTVRIE, CONSISTING OF TWO SEVERALL CONTROVERSIES: THE FIRST OF the Papal Iubile solemnized at Rome this present year, 1600.

The second of the Popes Indulgences and Iubile Pardons.

THE FIRST CONTROVERSIE OF THE Romane Iubile.

His controuersie is divided into foure parts. First, of the name and institution of the Papall Iubile. Secondly, of the errors of time, in the Popes Iubile. Thirdly, of the end and purpose thereof. Fourthly, of the ceremonies and manner used in solemnizing this Iubile.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NAME AND INSTITUTION OF THE POPES IUBILE.

The Papists.

First, concerning the derivation of the name, Bellarmino telleth vs, that this word Iubile is not Error, derived of the Hebrue Yobel, which signifieth a trumpet: but of the word Yebel, which signifieth the fruite of the earth, because in this yeare of Iubile, the earth broughe forth fruite of it owne accord without labour: Ab. 1. de Iubily. c. 1.

The Protestants.

Contra. 1. THe Hebrue word, that signifieth a horne or trumpet, hath the very same points or prickles, and the same and iust so many letters, as the word Iobel, that signifieth the Iubile: as may appeare by comparing, Leuit. 25. 10, 11, 12. with Iosua 6. 5. But the other word from whence he deriueth his Iubile, hath both more letters, and other pointes, so that the Iubile is more like to take denomination from (Iobel) that signifieth a trumpet.

Secondly, because the yeare of Iubile was proclaimed with the sound of a trumpet, Leuit. 25. 3. and therefore by the blowing of the seven trumpets by the seven Angels, Reuelat. 8. 8. some learned doe expound certaine great Iubilees of yeceres: every blowing of the trumpet containing five Iubilees, that is 25. yeares: which make in all from Christ 1786. yeares: not that the world shall last so long; for those dayes shall be shortened: so Iohn Napiere vpon the Reuelation, prop. 1. 10. Therefore it is most like that the Iubile being described, and proclaimed by the sound of a Trumpet, hath his name from thence: and though in this place, not the word Iobel, but the Hebrue Yobel be expressed to signifie a trumpet, Leuit. 25. 3. yet else where, we haue that word used for a trumpet, as I haue shewed before, Iosua 6. 5.

Thirdly, the common phrase of speech in Latine, which vseth the words, iubilare, iubilatio, for reioycing, doth shew that the Iubile is deriued from (iobel) which signifieth a trumpet, wherewith they used to reioyce: So Augustine vpon these words, Psalm. 98. 4. Iubilato Deo, Sing vnto the Lord: Gaudium vestrum exprimat iubilatio, si non potest locutio: Let your iubilation or reioycing, expresse your ioye, if your speech or locution cannot.

Fourthly, S. Hieromo also approueth this interpretation, that the word Iubile signifieth a trumpet, or cornet: de interpretat. nominum.

The Papists.

Secondly, the Pope borroweth the Iubile of the Iewes: as Clement. 6. thus alleageth in his Bull: Error, Quia antiquis quinquagesimus, in lege Mosayca, quous non vocis dominicus solenne, sed spiritus uel adim- plera; Iubileus, &c. Because the fiftith yeare in the law of Moses, which the Lord came not to loose but to fulfill was appointed for the Iubile; and because the number of fiftie in the olde testament was honoured by the giuing of the law, in the new testament, by the sending of the holy Ghost. extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. Clem. 6.

The Protestants.

Contra. 1. Who taught them to burchen the Church of God with Iewish ceremonies: as besides this of the Iubile, they take from them the sprinkling of holy-water. decr. par. 3. dist. 4. c. 127. the consecrating or hallowing of Churches, dist. 1. c. 11. Their anointing they haue from Moses, decr. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 15. c. 1. gloss. and many such other rites and ceremonies they doe begge from the Iewes: contrarie to the Apostle who calleth such, beggerly and impotent rudiments, Galat. 1. 9. Whereupon the Ebionite heretikes had their name, a pauperibus, of their beggerlines, as their owne canons witness, adding further: Hi semi Iudei sunt, qui in a Euangelium tenent, ut legem carnaliter firmam. These are halfe Iewes, which so hold the gospell, as that they carnally also oblerue the law: caus. 2. 4. qu. 3. can. 39. How much vnlike are the Papists, who in respect of the multitude of beggerly ceremonies, which they retayne may very well be called halfe Iewes, or halfe Ebionites.

2. Saint Paul saith, That Christ hath cancelled the handwriting of ordinances, &c. and fastened them to the crosse, Coloss. 2. 14. And speaking of holy daies, new moons, and sabbaths, hee saith, they were but shadows of things to come, but the substance is in Christ. The Iubile then, which was the Sabbath of seuen yeeres, seuen times seuen yeeres being counted to a Iubile, was but a shadow: Christ then came to fulfill the law, the moral by reuiving and establishing it, the ceremoniall by accomplishing and abolishing it: your owne law saith, Postquam umbra legis euauit, illuxit ueritas Euangelij: After the shadow of the law had vanished, the veritie of the Gospell hath shined forth; decr. Greg. tit. 47. lib. 3. c. 1. Innocent 3. And that the Iubile was but a shadow, Bellarmino confesseth: Iubilum Hebraeorum typus & figura Euangelij: The Iubile of the Hebrews was a type and figure of the gospell; de indulgent. lib. 1. p. 5. then it followeth that the Iubile being a shadow is vanished, and ought not to be reuiued.

3. As for the consecration of the number of fiftie by the giuing of the law, and the coming of the holy Ghost, it maketh somewhat for the obseruation of Pentecost, which is solemnized fiftie daies after Easter; but nothing at all for the Iubile which is vpon the fiftith yeare, no more then it serueth for the keeping of the fiftith weeke, or fiftith moneth.

4. If they will haue a Iubile, which is the Sabbath of seuen times seuen yeeres, they must also oblerue the yeeres of rest euery seuenth yeere, according to the prescript of Moses law. Leuit. 25. 4. And in the Iubile, the Land rested, they did reape that which did grow of it selfe. Leuit. 25. 11. If the like blessing they can shew vpon the earth in their yeere of Iubile, they should haue some warrant to keepe it: So then according to Saint *Paul*s reason; He that is circumcised (or keepeth any one part of the law) is bound to keepe the whole law, Galat. 5. 3. If they then tie themselves to celebrate the yeere of Iubile, they are bound also to other points of the law: as Hierome well saith; Si carnalem interpretationem sequamur, Iudaeis fabula acquiescendum sit, ut rursum adificetur Ierusalem, & hostia offerantur in templo. If we must follow a carnal interpretation, we must rest in Iewish fables, Ierusalem must be built againe, and sacrifices offered in the temple. Hieron. serm. 4. Marcello.

The Papists.

j. Error.

3. Clement the sixth was the first that ann. 1350. instituted the Iubile of fifty yeeres, whereas Bonifacio the eighth appointed it to be solemnized, but once in an hundred yeeres; and he celebrated the first Iubile ann. 1300. Extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1.

The Protestants.

Contra. By this it appeareth that the Popes Iubile is but a late inuention: for if the first constitution of the Iubile made by Bonifacio had taken effect, they should haue had but foure Iubilees in all: and according to the Bull of Clement the sixth, there haue yet runne but onely eight Iubilees, so that the pontificall deuise is not yet aboue 300. yeeres olde: 1. If then the Church of God was gouerned 1300. yeere without a Iubile, we must thinke it is not necessary now to be obserued: for it is not like that Christ would so long a time haue kept from his Church, such a necessarie inuention. 2. If neither the Apostles, nor holy martyrs, nor Doctors of the Church were inspired, to finde out so necessary and profitable obseruation, it was great presumption in Bonifacio and Clement to seeme to see more into the vtilitie and profit of the Church, then so many apostolike and propheticall men, that went before them? 3. Wherefore as Ieremie saith, Ne augeat uobis 10. asque for the olde way, which is the good way, and walk therein, Ierem. 6. 16. This is too new an inuention, hauing no ground in Scripture, and being but lately taken vp, to winne any credit with the people of God. 4. Augustine therefore well saith, as he is alleaged also, Dist. 12. c. 1. Omnia talia, quae neque sanctorum scripturarum auctoritatibus continentur, nec concilij episcoporum statuta inueniuntur, nec consuetudine uniuersalis ecclesiae roborata sunt, &c. sunt uel dubitatione rescanda, ex-

simis: All such things, which neither are contained in the authoritie of Scripture, nor established in the councils of Bishops, nor confirmed by the custome of the vniuersall Church, I iudge to be cut off, &c. But such is this inuention of the Jubile, neither warranted by Scripture, nor concluded in any ancient councell, nor yet practised of the vniuersall Church in time and place: for the former ages of the Church, knew it not, and many Churches to this day receiue it not, and therefore by Augustines sentence, it ought to be abrogated.

The Papists.

4. THe Popes themselves haue verie much varied since this new deuise of the Jubile was taken vp: it hath bene chaunged no lesse then fise seuerall times. 1. Boniface the eight did appoint the Jubile every hundred yeare, extran. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. 2. Clement 6. did abridge it to the 50. yeere, extran. ibid. c. 2. 3. Urban the sixt brought it to 33. yeeres, ex. Bullas. 4. Paulus 2. Sixtus the fourth limited the Jubile to 25. yeeres, extran. commun. ibid. c. 4. 5. Innocent the second did yet curtall the Jubile, and appointed it every tenth yeere. Robertus Pont. Scotus. propof. 2.

4. Error.

Contra. 1. VVE may now truly say of those patrons of superstition, and their counsels, as the Prophet saith of Pharaoh his counsellors: Errant in opere, ut spiritus in vomitu: They do erre in euery worke, as a drunken man in his vomite: Isay. 19. 14. Their restlesse and brainicke inuentions are neuer settled: and as Origen well saith: Vi errantium a via multa differentia sunt, &c. As when men erre from the ligh way, they goe into many by-paths, Matth. 27. 16. So falleth it out heere, that these swaruing from the truth, doe euery one follow his owne way, and cannot agree together. 2. It is pretie sport to see how the Popes doe curse one another for altering their predecessors decrees: first Boniface the eight, hauing erected a Jubile every 100. yeere, doth shut vp his Bull thus: Nulli hominum liceat hanc paginam nostrae constitutionis &c. infringere, si quis attentare praesumpserit indignationem omnipotentis Dei, &c. non erit se incursum: Let no man dare to infringe this Bull of our constitution, which if he presume to attempt, let him know he shall incur the indignation of Almighty God, and of Peter and Paul, &c. extran. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. Then cometh Clement the sixt, and infringeth this Constitution, and so standeth vnder the Pope his predecessors curse: and he reduceth the Jubile to 50. yeeres, imposing the very same curse and in the same words vpon the violators of his decree. ibid. c. 2. After him followeth Sixtus the fourth, who bringeth the Jubile to 25. yeeres, and so incurreth the former curse annexed to Clement the sixt his constitution, ibid. c. 4.

Thus these fellows, that would terrifie all the world with their curses, yet take them to be but scarebugges themselves. Or if they thinke the Popes curse to be any thing worth, how can they blesse others, that stand accursed themselves?

The Papists.

5. Sixtus the fourth in his Bull thus decreeth: After he had recited the constitution of his predecessor Paulus the second for the restraining of the Jubile to the 25. yeere: Quod anno domini 1474. proximi futuro, a vigilia natiuitatis domini nostri Iesu Christi, Iubilaeum celebrari deberet, &c. That in the yeare of our Lord 1474. next coming from the vigile of the birth of our Lord the Jubile should be celebrated: extran. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 4.

5. Error.

Confut. THis pope dissenteth from all his predecessors, bringing the Jubile to the 24. yeeres: for in the 1450. yeare the Jubile was kept according to the constitution of Clement the sixt, who reduced it to the 50. yeare, vnto the which adde 24. and we haue the foresaid number of 1474. Thus as Saint Paul saith: 1. Tim. 2. 7. They vnderstand not what they speake, nor whereof they affirme: So vncertaine are these Popes in these new deuises dissenting one from an other: like as Ambrose saith, Non diuisus est Christus, sed quia non (a veritate) diuidunt, ipsi se scindunt: Christ is not diuided: but they which deuide him (from the truth) doe also deuide themselves, lib. 1. de fid. c. 4.

* from the father.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE ERRORS of time in the Popes Jubile.

The Papists.

1. They begin their account of the Jubile a festo natiuitatis, from the feast of the Natiuitie, Extran. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. Bonif. 8.

6. Error.

The Protestants.

Confut. TO reckon the yeares of Lord from the natiuitie of Christ, and not from his conception. 1. is contrarie to their owne doctrine: for the Rhemists confesse, Thas straight vpon Christ descending from heauen, it was the will of Angels to worship him: vnde in 2. Hebr. scilicet. 1. Bollarum. super Christum hominem nondum natum sed conceptum spiritus sanctus descendit: Vpon the

the man Christ, not yet borne but conceived, the holy Ghost did descend: de Christ. anima. lib. 4. c. 2. If Christ then descended from heauen in his conception, was then made man, and adored of Angels, what reason is there, why the yeeres of the Lord should not be accounted from that instant? 2. It is contrarie to their owne practise: for the Popes vse to date their Bulls: Anno incarnationis, &c. the yeere of the incarnation of our Lord, Paul. 2. extran. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 3. Sixtus. 4. ibid. But Christes incarnation began not onely in his natiuitie, but from his first conception. 3. It is contrarie to the Scriptures, Heb. 1. 6. When he bringeth in his first begotten sonne into the world, hee saith, let all the Angels worships him: If Christ must be worshipped from his first coming into the world, which was in his conception, then from thence the account of time must begin, which is a part of external honor & worship due vnto him. 4. Iohn Baptist being in his mothers wombe three moneths before he was borne, Luk. 1. 56. sprang at the salutation of Mary, and so adored Christ, being but then conceived in his mothers wombe by the holie Ghost: in like manner ought we to adore the conception of Christ, and not to exclude it out of the reckoning. 5. Iob curseth the night, wherein he was conceived, that it be not ioyned to the dayes of the yeere, nor come into the count of the moneths, Iob. 3. 6. but the time of Christes conception is blessed, and therefore it ought to come into the account of the moneths. Wherefore the yeere of the Lord is rather to begin from his conception, than from his natiuitie.

7. Error.

Secondly, it is another of their errors in their account of time, that whereas the conception of Christ was three quarters of a yeere preceding his birth: yet they accounting from the Natiuitie, doe write the same yeere of the Lord, a whole quarter before vs: as this present yeere they write 1600. at the natiuitie last, & we begin the same yeere at the Annuntiation last: so that they account sooner by a yeere than they should: for it being but 1600. from the conception of Christ the 25. of March last, according to the iust computation of the Church of England: it can be but from his natiuitie 1600. at the feast of the birth of Christ next ensuing. This is a grosse & an apparant error.

8. Error.

Thirdly, the natiuitie of Christ did fall neither in a Sabbaticall yeere, nor yet in the yeere of Iubile: for it was the third yeere of the Sabbath of yeeres, and almost 20. yeeres from the yeere of Iubile, which was in the yeere of the world 3940. and Christ was borne about the yeere 3930. Seeing then Christ was not borne in a yeere of Iubile, from thence reckoning by euen fifties, this present 1600. cannot be a yeere of Iubile: See Master Broughtons Consent of Scripture of this matter, whose labours in this kinde haue been most painfull, learned and profitable.

9. Error.

Fourthly, though it should be granted, that the natiuitie of Christ was incident into a yeere of Iubile: yet they misse againe, in the obseruing the time of the yeere for Christes birth, and in taking the beginning of their Iubile: for Moses Iubile, which they take vpon them to imitate, began in the tenth day of the seauenth moneth, Leuitic. 25. 9. If they answer, that they began their Iubile from the time that Christ was borne in: the learned doe thinke, that hee was borne in the moneth answering to our September: and that for these reasons: First, it is euident, that betwene the conception of Iohn, and the conception of Christ, there were fixe moneths, Luk. 1. 26. In the sixth moneth the Angel Gabriel was sent, &c. But Iohn was conceived in the fourth moneth, which answereth to our Iune: for in that moneth Zacharie serued, being of the course of Abia, which was the eight course, 1. Chron. 24. 10. (two of those courses seruing euery moneth) which courses began at the first moneth, Nisan answering to our March, the beginning of moneths, Exod. 12. 2. Iohn then being conceived in Iune, his birth must fall out 9. moneths after about March: & so consequently our Sauour being conceived 6. moneths after Iohn, must be borne about September following.

2. Again, Christ preached three yeeres and an halfe: for hee dyed, according to Daniels propheticke, in the middelt of a propheticall weeke of yeeres, Dan. 9. 27. which is three yeeres and an halfe: and when hee began to preach, hee was iust 30. yeere old, Luk. 3. 23. from the time then of Christes birth, to the time of his death, there must bee halfe a yeere: So it doth necessarily follow, that Christ dying in the spring, must be borne in the Autumne.

3. They seeing their error, haue of late somewhat reformed their Calendar, bringing backe the feast of the Natiuitie tenne dayes from the 25. of December to the 15. day: but yet they haue misse the marke: for whereas it is found that the course of yeeres is altered from the ancient Iulian Calendar, by reason that for euery 130. yeeres a day is lost, in respect of certaine minutes and seconds encreasing euery yeere, beside the 6.00 houres, which are recompensed euery leape yeere; one Mossius Lilius, ann. 82. in Gregorie the 13. his time, was authorized to reforme the Calendar: but being limited by the Papisticall Clergie not to goe beyond the Nicen Synode, he was forced there to begin, which was from anno 328. and from thence counting a day for 130. yeeres, hee brought backe the Calendar onely tenne dayes, whereas it was slipt thirteene dayes from the time of Iulius Caesar, who liued about 45. yeeres before Christ. Thus yet are they in error concerning the iust computation of time.

4. It will be here objected, that though the Church of Rome hath not yet perfectly reformed their Calendar, yet they come neerer to the ancient Iulian computation, than the Church of England,

England, that hath admitted yet no reformation of the Calendar. I will here first, concerning the celebration of the natiuitie of Christ, to wit it is no great matter, though wee live not the very same season wherein hee was borne: for his birth day may bee as thankfully celebrated, as it is now kept, as if the very point of time were exactly calculated: wee doe not so much respect the time, as the mysterie remembered therein: But to them it is very materially observed the very precise time, because they begin their Iubile from thence; wherein, as I haue shewed they doe greatly misse. Secondly, yet we are not against a reformation of the Calendar, if it be soe desired good Christian Princes, which may much better be performed, than they haue done it: who by altering and chaunging the ancient Festiuals, and Faire and Market dayes, making them to some other dayes sooner, haue brought a great confusion and disturbance into many common weales. More peaceable and safe way is found out, that if for the space of 56. yeeres following, there should be no leape yeere at all, wherein a day is added more, by this means foureteene dayes being cut off, for every leape yeere one: by this means the computation would be restored to the ancient reckoning of the Julian Calendar: Robertus Pons. propos. 5.

5. It will be further objected concerning the season of Christs birth, that the fathers held, that he was borne when the dayes began to encrease, and therefore not in the Autumne, when they are still in decreasing: as Augustine seemeth so to allude in these words of Iohn Baptist: Quia portus creparet, &c. He must encrease, but I must decrease, Ioh. 3. 30. Illud autem scitis quod in hunc mundum effere incipient, &c. He was borne, when the daies were lessened, Christ, when they were encreasing, Ioh. 8. 3. question. qu. 58.

Ans. 1. Any man may see that this collection is rather wittie than waightie, rather than pious: as in the same place the author alleaged (whose euer it was) alludeth farther thus: Ioh. decretauit, quia capite minoratur, because he was cut shorter by the head: Christ encreased, quia in cruce tollitur, because he was lift vp to the crosse, and so made higher.

2. We may well thinke, that in Augustines time, which was about 400. yeere after Christ, they might well be ignorant of the time of Christs birth, feeling almost 100. yeere before the Nicene Synode, and long before that, there was such strife about the celebration of the Pasch, some affirming that the Apostles kept it one way, some another: the East Church preceeding a tradition from Saint Iohn, to hold the Pasch the 14. day of the first moneth: the West following a direction from Saint Peter, to solemnize it the first Lordes day after the first Moone following the Equinoxiall.

3. Neither are all the fathers of this minde, that Christ was borne in the dayes encreasing by the ordinarie course of the Sunne: Saint Ambrose hath this supposition: Ex eo factum est, ut de decretauerit, &c. quia sol prater consuetudinem in his festiuitatibus matutinus illuxit: Hence it was that the night was lessened, because the Sunne, beside his usuall course and custome, did shine in the morning, because of this festiual: for when Iesus his prayer the Sunne stood still in the day, cur non ad Iesum natum in festiuitatibus promoueret a nocte: much more because of Christs natiuitie, and he tooke goe forward from the night, serm. 16. That the day then encreased, and the night decreased, when Christ was borne, Ambrose thinketh it was extraordinary, beside the usuall course of the yeere at that time.

Firstly, seeing it is euident, that Christ dyed in a yeere of Iubile, it being the 28. year in number, as is well obserued in that learned Comment of Scripture. And the Prophet Dauid beweecheth that all the Sabbaticall yeeres determined at the death of Christ, Psalm. 9. 27. in whom the true Iubile was accomplished, well called by the Septuagint, Diuitis de diebus the yeere of remission, Leuitic. 25. 8. This appeareth then to be another great error in the Romane Iubile, because they doe count from the yeere of Christs natiuitie, which was no yeere of Iubile, and not from the yeere of his death, which was the true Iubile indeede, and concurring with Moses Iubile: So the Prophet Isaiah, touching the phiesying of Christ, Isa. 49. 8. In an acceptabile time haui I heard him, and in readiness of Iudgement I heard thee: This acceptabile time is the same which the Septuagint translate Diuitis the yeere of remission, Leuitic. 25. 8. which was the yeere of Iubile.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE END AND purpose of the Papall Iubile.

Concerning the intent, scope and end of this Popish deuise, we haue seene beate blasphe- mous: secondly, sacrilegious: thirdly, superfluous: fourthly, inhumane: may be collected from the words of the Pope.

First, their blasphemie appeareth in this, that the Pope taketh vpon him to graue full remission of all sins to them, that visite Rome in the yeere of Iubile personally: for there are the words of Clement. 6. his Bull: Qui basilicas Apostolorum, &c. personaliter visitarem, seu ipsas non possit fessi fuerint, suorum omnium plenissimam obtinerent veniam peccatorum: They which personally visite the the Apostles Churches Peter and Paul at Rome, if they be truly penitent, and confessed, should obtaine most full remission of all their finnes: Extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 6.

Contra. 1. The Protestants. Thus they blasphemously ascribe full remission of sins to the visiting of Rome, which is but a superstitious devise of their owne, whereas the scripture saith, 1. Ioh. 1. 7. The blood of Iesus Christ purgeth vs from all sinne: But the blood or bodie of Paul or Peter, are not the blood of Christ, neither to visite Rome in person, is not the blood of Christ: therefore it is blasphemie contrary to the Scripture to attribute remission of finnes, to any other thing, than to the blood of Christ.

2. But they imagine, that this helpeth the matter, because this clause is inserted, if they be truly penitent &c.

Ans. 1. If then it be repentance that giueth remission of finnes, what neede they personally visite Rome? a man may repent as well at home, as at Rome, nay much better: for their licentious life there and euill example will hinder repentance rather, than prouoke vnto it. 2. True repentance they require not, but popish penance, which they make a satisfaction for sinne, which shall neuer finde remission of sinne. 3. But if they had, or prescribed true repentance indeede, yet is it not a cause of forgiveness of sinne, but a consequence onely thereof, and assurance of it to our owne soules, and a manifestation that wee are cleere before God: As Saint Paul saith, hauing described their true repentance and godly sorrow, their care, feare, desire, punishment, &c. in omnibus vobis exhibuissis puris, &c. In all things ye haue shewed your selues pure in this matter. Their outward repentance, did shew the inward cleering of their conscience by faith before God.

3. Lastly Saint Ambrose saith vpon these words of the Apostle, Rom. 3. 24. Te are iustificati gratis: Quia nihil operantes, neque videredentes, sola fide iustificati sunt dono dei: Because they working nothing, nor rendering the like, are iustified by onely faith through the gift of God, in 3. cap. ad Roman. If by neither working, nor rendering any thing, &c. then not by visiting Rome, or going to celebrate the yeere of Iubile shall a man finde remission of finnes, but by faith onely.

The Popish.

18. Error.

Secondly, the popish Iubile is instituted to the honour of Peter and Paul: as it is extant in the Bull of Boniface 8. His beatissimi Petrus & Paulus amplius honorantur: That the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul be more honoured, Extrau. tit. 9. c. 1. And in the Bull of Clement 6. ibide. 2. Propter rami memoria crebrius recolenda, & reuerentia a cunctis Christi fidelibus eius deuotius adhibenda: For the more often celebrating of their memorie, and the more deuotion of all the faithfull of Christ to be giuen vnto them.

The Protestants.

Contra. First, this is great sacrilege, to giue that honour to the Apostles, who are but Christs seruants, which is due vnto the Lord and master himselfe: Isai. 42. 8. The Lord saith, My glorie will I not giue to another: The same is the desire also of the Saints, not vnto vs, not vnto vs Lord, but vnto thy name, thus the praise Psal. 115. 1.

2. The Iubile was at the first institution consecrated onely as holy vnto God: for as the seuenth Sabbaticall yeere was holy vnto God, and is called the Lords Sabbath, Leuit. 25. 4. so seauen times seauen yeere, which was the yeere of Iubile, was holy to God, Leuit. 25. 12. It shall be holy to you: that is, in respect of your vie, but holy to the honour of God. It is sacrilege then to robbe God of his honour, and to consecrate a Iubile vnto men.

3. Saint Hierome saith: Non dico martyrum reliquias sed ne solem quidem aut lunam, non angelos, archangelos, non Seraphim, Cherubim, & omne nomen, quod nominatur in presenti seculo & futuro, colimus, & adoramus, ne seruamus creaturam potius quam creatori, qui est benedictus in secula: We doe not onely not worship and adore the reliques of Martyrs, but not the Sunne or Moone, not Angels, Archangels, Seraphim, Cherubim, or any name named in this world or to the world to come, lest we should serue the creature rather than the creator. And againe, Quis est insanum caput aliquando martyres adorauit, quis hominem putauit deum? Whose mad braine euer adored the Martyrs, or tooke man to be God? ad Riparium aduers. Vigilantium. Wherefore by Hieromes sentence all reuerence and diuine adoration is to be giuen onely to the creator, the creature hath no part therein.

4. But what kinde of honour is due vnto Saints, is very well expressed, Synod. Moguntin. c. 45. Sancti qui vita huius cursum beato fine clausuerunt, &c. non eo qui vero deo debetur, sed eo societatis & dilectionis causa in hoc vna sancti communia nobis colimus: The Saints, which haue happily ended this life, may be worshipped of vs, not with that worship which is only due vnto God, but by that worship of fellowship and loue, by the which holy men may be worshipped of vs in this life, &c. But Saint Peter and Saint Paul, while they liued, would haue been ashamed to haue had Temples, dayes, Iubile yeeres to be consecrate to their name and memorie: Ergo, this honour is not due vnto them, now they are dead.

The Popists.

Thirldy, these are the words of the Bull of Sixtus 4. Verum quia postmodum, tam nos, quam idem Paulus predecessor noster, animarum salutis fidelium intenti, &c. deuorum personarum pulsati precibus diuersas indulgentias & peccatorum remissiones plenarias nonnullis ecclesijs, monasterijs & pijs locis diuinitus concessidas: Because as well we, as our predecessor Paulus, being intent vpon the saluation of mens soules, moued thereunto by the prayers of deuoute persons, haue thought good to graunt indulgences, and plenarie remissions of sinnes to certaine Churches, Monasteries, and godly places: Extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 4.

The Protestants.

Confus. First, hence I inferre, that the Papall institution of Iubile is superfluous, because the Pope can giue plenarie remission and full indulgence without a yeere of Iubile, & to other places than Rome. Secondly, if he can do it, & wil not, he is an enemy to the saluation of mens soules; for as it is in the Bull alleaged before: hauing an intent to the saluation of mens soules, hee graunted plenarie indulgences to diuers places: then to denie to giue such indulgences is to neglect and hinder the saluation of mens soules. Thirdly, it was appointed by the law of Moses, that land, which was sold and could not be redeemed, should come out in the yeere of Iubile, Leuit. 25. 28. that bond seruants should be set free in the yeere of Iubile; ibid. vers. 40. If this plenarie freedome and full restitution could haue been obtained before, then the yeere of Iubile had been needlesse: by the same reason the Popes Iubile is superfluous, seeing without it, plenarie indulgence, if he list, may be had. Fourthly, therefore Saint Hierome saith well: Non audeo dei omnipotentiam in angusto fine concludere & coarctare paruo terra loco, quem non capit caluar; singulis quique credentium non locorum diuersitatibus, sed merito fidei ponderatur: I dare not shut vp Gods omnipotencie in a small room, or include him in a little place, whom heauen cannot receive: euery beleeuers, not by diuersitie of place, but excellencie of faith is to bee measured, epist. ad Paulinum. It is not then necessarie to visite Rome in the yeere of Iubile, if Christ be present euery where by faith to true beleeuers.

The Popists.

Fourthly, this Papall indiction and promulgation of the Iubile is iniurious: for in the Bull of Indulgence, the libertie of the Iubile is graunted to those onely, which doe either personally visite the Apostles Churches in Rome, or are impediti in itinere, hindered in their iourney, or qui in via vel in urbe decesserint, which are dead in the way, or in the citie: Clarius 6. Extrau. ubi supra.

The Protestants.

Confus. First, if none be provided for in the Bull of Iubile but they that came thither, or would come, and are hindered, or dye in their iourney; what shall become of those that neither come thither, nor yet purpose it, will ye make them castawayes? Alacke then for vs poore soules of England, what shall we doe? Is the holie father so mercilesse, that hee will send vs all to Purgatorie, because we will not come to Rome to haue pardon picked, I would say purged? Secondly, if plenarie indulgence be onely had in the yeere of Iubile, in what case are they that dye before the Iubile commeth? doe they dye in their sinnes? how is not then this constitution most iniurious to many poore soules, that neuer offended the Pope holie father? Thirdly, but Saint Peter (the Popes master, though he be an vntoward scholler, that will follow his master neuer a whit) doth put vs in better comfort, that in euery nation, he that feares God and worketh righteousness, is accepted with God, Act. 10. 35. whether he were at Rome, or not, whether he liue to the yeere of Iubile or not. Fourthly, Saint Hierome also saith: Neguequam fidei sine deo pater quia Hieronymus non vidistis nos idcirco multos ex illis, quod huius loci habitatores fuerint: Thinke not that any thing is wanting to your faith, that you haue not seene Ierusalem, or that we are any thing better, because we are there, epist. ad Paulin. I thinke Rome is no more prouided for than Ierusalem: mans faith may be sufficient to saue him, though he haue seene neither, nor yet desired to see or visite them.

The Popists.

Fifthly, it is also euident, that the popist institution of the Iubile was rather for sake of gluer, than of soules; that the end thereof is rather courtois, than religious; of gratiam more than godlines.

The Protestants.

First, 1. To what end else was this Iubile brought from 100. yeeres to 100. from 100. to 100. from 100. to 100. as I haue before shewed, but onely because they found the Iubile profitable, and sought their owne gain? 2. What else moued Sixtus 4. to deuise diuers graunts of plenarie indulgence, but as it is expressed in the Bull, Ne popularium amensuram ad ecclesias huius diuitiarum ueniarum aut ipsius anni Iubilaei celebritas minui, vel intermitteri possit, &c. Least the concourse of people to the said Churches might be hindered, or the celebritie of the Iubile yeere empayed or intermitted, &c. and by this meanes their gaine should decrease, and their aduantage be diminished: for that is the cause in deede, if they would speake out, and not dissemble the matter. 3. When as Clarius

the 6. first reduced the Iubile to fiftie yeeres, anno 1350. there were numbred every day of straungers going and comming to Rome siue thousand, and a thousand poore people wayting daily at the Popes pallace for their pardons: Can it be thought otherwise but this was very beneficiall to the Pope? Calixtus the 3. is found to haue left an hundred and fiftene thousand ducates to his successor, that hee had scraped together by Pardons and Indulgences, ex Balas &c. Let all men now iudge, what maketh the Pope so earnest in maintaining his Iubile. 4. I conclude then with Hierome, whose saying may very fitly be applied to the Romane Clergie: Nunc sub religionis titulo exercentur iniusta compendia, & honor nominis Christiani fraudem magis facit, quam patiuntur: plenis sacculis mirimur ditites, qui quasi pauperes vicimus: Now vnder pretence of religion vniust gaine is exacted, and the honor of Christs name doth offer deceit rather, than suffer it, and many dye with full coffers, that while they liued made profession of pouertie, Hier. ad Rusticum.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE MANNER of solemnizing the Popish Iubile.

IN this last and fourth part I doe obserue these particular errors: that the manner it selfe obserued in the Romane Iubile, is first superstitious: secondly, idolatrous: thirdly, ambitious: fourthly, scandalous: fifthly, ridiculous.

The Papists.

16. Error.

First, their superstition herein appeareth, in that they enioyne men in the yeere of Iubile to come onely to Rome to visite the Churches of Peter and Paul, and of Saint Mary the greater, and the Laterane Church, which Constantine did erect to the honor of our Sauour, being baptized by Siluester, and so healed of his leprosie: which Siluester also did consecrate with a new kinde of Chrisme: Clement 6. Extrav. vbi supra.

The Protestants.

Confutas. First, Pope Clement by his leaue coucheth here three great vntruths together: first, that Constantine was baptized by Siluester: secondly, at Rome: thirdly, in the beginning of his Empire, while Siluester was yet liuing: whereas hee was baptized first by Eusebius: secondly, at Nicomedia: thirdly, in the 31. yeere of his raigne, Siluester being dead long before: Euseb. lib. 4. de vis. Constant. Rustin. lib. 2. c. 11.

Secondly, that Siluester did nouo Chrismationis genere, &c. with a new kinde of Chrisme dedicate the Laterane Church, it also sauoureth. 1. It could not be a new kind of Chrisme, seeing your forged Fabian, epist. 2. before this maketh mention of Chrisme, and telleth vs, (if wee will credit him vpon his word) that Iesus postquam cenauit, &c. discipulos docuit chrisma conficere, That Christ after he had supped, taught his Apostles to make Chrisme. 2. There was no such Chrisme knowne in Siluesters time, nor long after: for Ambrose vpon these words, 2. Cor. 1. 19. God hath annointed vs, doth thus interpret: Vixit nos deus, id est dedit regiam honorificentiam, sicut dicit Petrus: God hath annointed vs, that is, giuen vs a kingly honor, as Peter saith, &c. He vnderstandeth a spirituall annointing: if he had knowne any other kinde of Chrisme or annointing, he had occasion here offered to speake of it.

Thirdly, Rome is no more priuiledged than Ierusalem, nor Italy than Iudea: but of these Christ saith, Ioh. 4. 21. that the true worshippers of God shall neither worship him as Ierusalem, nor in that mountain, &c. If it be not necessarie to goe to Ierusalem to worship, neither is it to visite Rome. And Moses saith, Deut. 30. 13. Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, who shall goe over the sea for vs to bring it to vs? We neede not then goe ouer the sea to Rome to seeke Christ.

Fourthly, Hierome well saith: Non expetenda est ciuitas, non qua occidit prophetas, & Christi sanguinem fudit, sed quam mater sanctorum Apostolorum clamitat: That citie is to bee desired, not which killed the Prophets, and shed Christs blood, but which the Apostle calleth the mother of the faithfull: epist. ad Paulon. But Rome as well as Ierusalem hath killed the Prophets and Apostles. And againe, Hierome in the same place to the same purpose allegeth these Scriptures: The spirit bloweth where it listeth, Ioh. 3. 8. The earth is the Lords, and the fulnes thereof, Psal. 24. 1. Desit tantum notus esse in Iudea deus, in omnem terram exiuit sonus Apostolorum: God hath ceased onely to be knowne in Iudea, the sound of the Apostles is gone forth into all lands. Lastly, concerning the citie of Rome, Hierome doubteth not in his time to call it Babylon: Gaudio cum in Babylone inueniatur Daniel, &c. I am glad that in Babylon is found Daniel, Ananias, Azarias, Misael, tom. 4. epist. ad Principiam. Wherefore seeing the Lord biddeth vs come forth of Babylon, Reuelat. 18. 4. what reason haue Christians to ascend to worship in Babylon?

The Papists.

Secondly, their idolatrie is manifest, where the Bull maketh mention of the image of Christ in the Church of Laterane, qua toti populo deuotius veneranda, which is deuoutly of all the people to be worshipped: Clement 6. Extrav. as before.

The

The Protestants.

Confutat. First, it is not safe nor lawfull to haue the image of Christ, as may appeare by these reasons, first the seventh councell of Constantinople thus reasoned vpon these words of Christ, this doe in remembrance of me: Ecce vultus eius: illius corporis imaginem totam, panis substantiam: Behold the whole image of that quickening bodie, the substance of bread: ex synod. Nicen. 2. action. 6. tom. 3.

2. Epiphanius comming into a Church at Anablatha, and seeing the picture of Christ hanging in a cloth thus reporteth: Cum hoc vidissem in ecclesia Christi contra auctoritatem scripturarum, hominis pendere imaginem, seci illud When I saw in the Church of Christ against the authoritie of scriptures a mans picture hanging, I cut it in peeces, and aduised rather to wrap a dead corse in it: Epist. ad Ioann. Hierosolym. And he addeth further: Præcipias in ecclesia Christi huiusmodi vela, quæ contra religionem nostram veniunt, non appendi Command that such painted clothes, which are against our religion, be not hanged vpon.

3. Saint Ambrose saith: In ecclesia vnam imaginem noui, hoc est, imaginem Dei inuisibilis, &c. In the Church I know one onely image, that is, the image of God inuisible, of the which the Lord said, Let vs make man according to our image Gen. 1. 26. that image whereof it is written: Christ is the ingrauen image of his person: Hebr. 1. 3. orat. in Auxent. Then no visible image of God or Christ is to be retained.

Secondly, if it be not lawfull to haue the image of Christ, much more vnlawfull is it to worship or adore it: 1. it is contrarie to the second commandment to make the likenes or image of any thing to fall downe and worship it. 2. The Angell, who is to be preferred before a dead image, would not suffer Iohn to worship him; but bid him worship God. Reuel. 22. 9. 3. We haue the decree of a generall councell against the adoration of images, Constantinop. 7. ex Nicen. 2. action. 8. tom. 6. Qui imaginem ab hoc die sibi ausus fuerit parare, vel adorare in ecclesia, &c. He that from henceforth dare prepare to himselfe or adore an image in the Church, if a Cleargie man, let him be depozed; if a lay man, let him be accursed. See mote of both these questions. contro. 9. qu. 5. artic. 2. 3.

3. THis deuise of the Popes Iubile fauoureth of ambition; in that he arrogateh this power in proclaiming the Iubile, and dispensing indulgences as proper to himselfe: for this is their stile: Sintuentes de fratrum consilio & apostolica plenitudine potestatis, &c. Ordaining by the aduise of our brethren (the Cardinals) and the fulnes of our Apostolike power; And againe: Quoniam quidem thesaurum per Petrum cæli clauis gerimus eiusque successores in terris vicarios commisit, &c. Which treasure of the Church, Christ hath committed to be dispensed by Peter the key-bearer of heauen, and his successors his vicars in earth: Clement. 6. extran. vbi supra.

The Protestants.

Confutat. 1. The Scripture saith, that Christ onely hath the key of David, which openeth, and no man shutteth, Apoc. 3. 7. The administration & dispensation of the keyes is no more committed to Peter, then to the rest: for Saint Paul saith, that the Church is built vpon the foundation of the Apostles, Ephes. 2. 20. None are excepted: whereupon Saint Hierome saith, Ecclesia ex aquo fundatur super omnes Apostolos: The Church is equally founded vpon all the Apostles, aduers. Iovinian. lib. 1.

2. Neither Saint Peter, nor yet the Pope need to be Christs vicar, for he hath promised himselfe to be with vs to the ende of the world, Matth. 28. 20. And therefore by Saint Paul, our Saviour is compared to the head, by whom all the body is coupled together. Ephes. 4. 16. That as the head needeth no vicariall substitute in the bodie, no more doth Christ in his Church.

3. Neither can the Pope chalenge to be Saint Peters successor, vnlesse he succeeded him in life and doctrine: as Saint Ambrose: Non habent Petri hereditatem, qui fidem Petri non habent: They haue not Peters inheritance; that haue not Peters faith.

4. Howsoeuer it is, the Bishop of Rome hath no more authoritie then other Bishops haue, as Saint Hierome saith: Vbiunque fueris episcopus, sine Eugubij, sine Constantinopoli, sine Alexandria, et in eisdem meritis, eiusdem est sacerdotij, &c. potentia dimitiarum & paupertatis humilitas vel inferioris, vel sublimioris episcopij non facit: Caterum omnes Apostolorum successores sunt, &c. quid mihi proferis vniui vrbis consuetudinem, &c. Wherefoeuer a Bishop is, whether at Eugubium, at Constantinople, or Alexandria, he is of the same worthines, of the same priesthood: the power of riches, and basenes of povertie make not an higher or inferior Bishop: but they are all the successors of the Apostles, &c. what doe you alleage the custome of one Citie? ad Euagr. If then a Iubile were to be celebrated among Christians, the Bishop of Rome hath no more power to prescribe the same, then other Bishops haue in their diocesse: it is but a trick of his ambitious humor, thus to perke aboue other his fellow Bishops.

4. THe popish institution of the Jubile is also scandalous to the Jewes, and is a cause to harden and confirme them in their blindness: 1. for when will they learne to know Christ, and acknowledge the Messias to be come, when they see their owne ceremonious obseruations yet to be in force, and the Jubile, which was a type of the true Jubile and yeare of remission in Christ, to be so ceremoniously obserued?

2. Saint Ambrose writeth a vehement Epistle to Theodosius, dissuading him from repaying a Jewish synagogue, which was burnt, and amongst other excellent perswasions he thus saith, Quomodo poterit nos Christus innare, qui pro Iudais aduersus Christum militamus? How can we thinke, that Christ should helpe vs, which doe warre with the Jewes against Christ? epistol. 29. And what is this else, but to fight for the Jewes against Christ, in seeking to nourish their obstinacie by retaying and reuiuing of their ceremonies?

3. Saint Paul saith, 1. Cor. 10. 32. See that you give no offence to the Iewes: Origen also saith; Qui scandalis conscius est animam debet pro anima eius, quem scandalizauit: He that is guiltie of offence, shall giue his soule for his, whom he offended. Hom. 10. in Exod. Looke to it then ye Romanists, that by your superstitious rites doe not onely offend the people of God, but doe obdurate the hard hearted Jewes; how ye will make answer for this your doing before the tribunall of Christ.

20. Error.

Lastly the manner of their Jubile pompe, and ostentation is ridiculous: as may appeare by these particulars.

1. The Pope going vpon the Natiuitie euen, to the Chappell of the Apostolicall pallace, fallth downe vpon his knees before the sacrament, powring incense vpon it.

2. Certaine waxe candels, are lighted, and giuen to the Pope and Cardinals weighing each three pound a peece, with the which they go in proceffion.

3. Then the Pope from thence is caried in his chaire vpon mens shoulders to Saint Peters gate, where he goeth vp into a higher seat.

4. The Pope striketh three blowes vpon the gate with a golden hammer.

5. Then he pronounceth these verses: Open vnto me the gates of iustice, &c. Lord I will goe into thy house, &c.

6. The Church gate being walled vp, then the masons with tooles breake it downe, and speedily all the people as in the twinkling of an eie, moued with deuotion do carry away all the rubbish and mortar.

7. Then the Pope saith this versicle: This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioyce and be glad in it, &c.

8. Then the Pope prayeth thus: Lord, who by thy seruant Moses didst appoint for thy people of Israell the yeare of Jubile and remission of sinnes, grant to vs thy grace, &c. happily to begin this yeare of Jubile, &c.

9. Then the Pope entring by the gate of the Church, is borne in his chaire by the officers to the high altar in Saint Peters Church.

10. Then he descendeth, and prayeth before the altar; then he ascendeth into an other seate higher and more eleuated: ex lib. ceremoniar. ann. Iubilat. &c.

1. Confutat. 1. Where hath the Pope learned to worship a wafer cake or a peece of bakers bread? for if he thinke it is the bodie of Christ, he maketh Saint Peter a liar, who saith, Whom the heauens must containe, untill the time that all things be restored. Act. 3. 21. 2. Christ, wherefoeuer, is in his humanitie to be worshipped of Angels, Hebr. 1. 6. Let all the Angels of God worship him: If you can shew vs, that euer Angels worshipped the bread in the sacrament, we are satisfied. 3. As Christ saith, Mark. 14. 9. Me you shall not haue alwaies, that is thus to anoint with oyle, as this woman now doth: no more haue we now the bodie of Christ to powre incense vpon it.

2. 1. Candles are made to giue light in the darknes of the night, not to be set vp in the day. Prou. 31. 18. Her candle is not put out by night. 2. As the ciuile vse of candles and lights in houses, so was the religious vse in the tabernacle: the lamps serued for the night. 1. Sam. 3. 3. For the light of God went out, that is toward the morning.

3. The Prophet Dauid saith, Psal. 5. 7. I will come into thine house in the multitude of thy mercies, and in thy feare worship toward thy holy temple: How much vnlike is the Pope to this kingly prophet: he commeth to Gods house in feare and humilitie, the Pope is caried vpon mens shoulders: Dauid daunceth before the Arke going on foote, 2. Sam. 6. 16. the Pope diddaieth to goe on foote, or to ride on horse, but maketh men his vasailes, to take him vpon their backs.

4. What meaneth this knocking thrice vpon the gate? 1. if it be but the gate of Saint Peters Church, the Clarke or Sexton hath the keyes, which are at the Popes commaundement, he need not knocke so often. Secondly, if it represent the gate of Paradise, he hath the keyes himselfe, and and may enter without knocking. 3. Or if the Angels keepe Paradise gatt, as they did the terrestriall Paradise with a fiery sword; the Pope need not knocke as a suter, seeing he taketh vpon him to be a commaunder of Angels: as Clement the sixt in his Bull, saith thus: mandamus Angelis, &c. we commaund the Angels, &c.

5. First, if they be the gates of iustice, which you would haue opened, they are for the iust and righteous to enter into: I doubt then that the Pope with his Cardinals, and many of his retinue must stand by, that suffer such iniustice and vncleannes to be committed vnder their noses, being accessarie vnto it themselves, in spilling the blood of many innocent soules, robbing of mens purses with their Iubile illusions, and suffering the Citie to abound with adulterie and sodomitrie. 2. How can he say, I will come into thy house, when it is Saint Peters Church, and consecrated to his honour: but God will haue no partner in his house. 3. And doe ye thinke that the gates of Gods house are open onely at Rome, and is the scala celi there onely pitched, to climbe vp to heaven by?

6. If Paradise gate be but mured vp with a masons wall, what need the Pope be sent for to make a way with his Iubile hammer: a mason with his tooles may suffice to enter.

7. And it is false that the Lord made that day or yeare of Iubile, it was Boniface the eight, not God, nor yet a good man, who first constituted the Iubile euery hundred yeere after the example of the Romane heathenish plaies, that were celebrated euery hundred yeare: of this Pope it is said, he entered like a fox, raigned like a lion, died like a dog.

8. Moses indeed by Gods commaundement erected a Iubile for the Iewes: if the Pope will also be a Iubile maker for Christians, let him shew his warrant, as Moses could: and if you imitate Moses Iubile of fiftie yeeres, why doth Pope Clement the eight, in his late Bull commend the hundred yeere of Iubile, which was no constitution of Moses?

9. And must the Pope be borne on mens shoulders in the Church, doth he enter in pride by the gate of humilitie: and vniustly making mens shoulders as asses backs, who are his brethren, to come in by the gate of iustice?

10. And can he not be contented to be higher then men, riding vpon their shoulders, but hee must also be higher then God sitting aboue his altar: what intollerable pride is this? the Angels, that would sit in Gods throne were cast down; and this prince of pride, that will sit higher then his maker aboue the altar, must looke for a downe fall.

It is well noted by Gregorie vpon these words of the Lord spoken to Ezech. 2. 1. Stand vpon thy feete: I stans prophet a visionem spiritualem vidit: The prophet standing doth see the spirituall vision. hom. 9. in Ezech. And the prophet Danid saith, Psal. 25. 9. The humble will he teach his way: therefore it is not like that God will reueale his secrets to the Pope sitting in the chaire of pride.

Thus we see, with what ridiculous toyes and superstitious ceremonies the Pope beginneth, and endeth his yeere of Iubile; so that as Augustine well saith, as he is also cited in their owne decrees, dist. 12. c. 12. Tolerabilior est conditio Iudeorum, qui licet tempus libertatis non agnouerint, legalib. tamen sacramentis, non humanis presumptionibus subijciuntur: So that the condition of the Iewes is more tolerable, who although they knew not the time of libertie, yet are subiect to legall sacraments, not humane presumptions.

And thus much of the first controuerfie of the Romane Iubile, and the seuerall partes thereof.

THE SECOND CONTRVERSIE OF INDVLGENCES AND Iubile PARDONS.

His controuerfie is deuided into eyght seuerall parts. First, of the name of Indulgence. Secondly, whether there bee any Indulgences, and of the Spirituall treasure of the Church. Thirdly, what Indulgence is. Fourthly, of the diuerse kindes of Indulgences. Fifthly, of the fruite and vtilitie of Indulgences. Sixthly, to whom the power of graunting Indulgences belongeth. Seuenthly, of the disposition of them that must receiue Indulgences. Eighthly, whether Indulgences doe any way profite the dead.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NAME OF Indulgence.

The Papists.

11. Error.

Bellarmino taketh this word Indulgence to signifie remissionem puniarum, qua remanent in eade post remissionem culpae: The remission of the punishments, which remaine to be satisfied for, after the remission of the faults, lib. 1. de Indulg. c. 1. And whereas he produceth two significations of this word: that first it betokeneth remission, Mat. 6. 61. 1. Prædicare captiuis indulgentiam: To preach indulgence to the Captiues. Secondly, it signifieth facilitie, 1. Cor. 7. 6. This I speak by way of Indulgence or concession, &c. Of these two significations, they make one, compounding them together: and so take Indulgence for a remission of the punishment onely of fauour, Bellarmin. ibidem.

The Protestants.

First the place alleaged out of Esay is directly against them, for S. Luke interpreting that place, Luk. 4. 18. readeth for Indulgence, quæ, remission of sinnes, not of the punishment onely: so then Indulgence properly signifieth remission of sinnes.

Secondly, the place alleaged out of S. Paul is impertinent: for there Indulgence is taken for concession: as Peter Lombard very well sheweth that Indulgence is taken three waies, for remission, permission, concession lib. 4. dist. 16. litar. d. and he vnderstandeth S. Paul to speake here of concession: but it is very improper to take Indulgence for concession, licence or a graunt, when we speake of sinnes and the paine due vnto them, which both are pardoned, not by concession, but by remission.

Thirdly, the Fathers so vnderstand Indulgence for the remission of the sinne it selfe, as Augustine: Sæterni dicis, quando me correxero, dat Deus Indulgentiam, &c. Thou saiest well, if I doe amend my selfe, God will giue me Indulgence, Serm. 16. in Matth. And againe, Vt ad peccatorum mercedem Indulgentiam peruenire, &c. That we may be meete to come or attaine to the Indulgence of our sinnes: Serm. de tempor. 2. 10.

Fourthly, sometime Indulgence is otherwise taken, but then it signifieth a concession of reward, not a remission of punishment, as Ambrose taketh it: Hora vndecima intramissas in vineam totius diei operarij: diuina indulgentia exaquant: The diuine Indulgence did make them, which were sent into the vineyard at the eleuenth houre, equall to them, which laboured all day.

Fifthly, the Ciuill lawe, which he wresteth to the contrarie, so taketh this word Indulgence, for a whole remission of punishment and fault committed against the lawe: the lawe maketh two kindes of Indulgences: there is Indulgentia generalis vel simplex, a generall or simple Indulgence; and indulgentia specialis, a speciall indulgence: the simple or generall indulgence did not remit all the punishment: as Cod. lib. 9. tit. 51. leg. 2. Antonin. Non ideo quod indulgentia mea pena metalli liberatus esset, etiam bonorum restitutionem impetravit: Because by my Indulgence he is freed from the mettall mines, he hath not therefore obtained restitution to his goods. But the speciall indulgence remitted both the penaltie and the infamie, ibid. leg. 10. Diocles. And leg. 4. Alexander. Ex indulgentia reuersus non tenetur creditoribus: He that is returned from exile by indulgence, is not bound to his creditors: And Leg. 1. Antonin. This speciall indulgence was in integrum restitutio: a restitution to the whole: Vt scias quid sit in integrum restituere: bonoribus & ordini tuo & omnibus ceteris restituere: That you may know, what it is to restore wholly: I restore thee to thy order, to thy honour, and all the rest: this then is the sentence of the lawe: Sententia feneritas cum ceteris damnis transigere videtur: The seueritie of the sentence doth passe together with all other dammages and inconueniences, Cod. lib. 2. tit. 12. leg. 4. Sever. That is, where the penalty of the sentence was remitted, there all other inconueniences as the infamie, dishonour, transgression, offence, were released, which were sequels of the sentence: ex quo pena remissa, & sequela pena, qua est infamia: The penaltie being remitted, the sequel thereof, which is the infamie, is pardoned: so saith the lawe, Cod. lib. 2. tit. 12. leg. 3. in gloss.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THERE BE any Indulgence in the Church.

This part hath two questions. First, of the spirituall treasure of the Church. Secondly, of the power in distributing the same.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE SPIRITVALL treasure of the Church: which is diuided into foure propositions.

THE FIRST PROPOSITION, WHETHER GOOD
workes be meritorious and satisfactorie.

The Papists.

THis proposition is affirmed by Bellarmine, that there is a double price in good workes, namely 21. Error.
of merite and satisfaction, the first procureth the reward, the second redemeth the punishment.

First, good workes are satisfactorie. 1. Almes, Tobie 4. 10. Almes deliver from death, Ecclesiasticus 3. 33. As water quenbeth fire, so almes take away finnes. 2. Fasting is satisfactorie, as appeareth by the example of the Ninivites. 3. Prayer doth satisfie for sinne, as Matth. 6. 12. We pray for forgiveness of finnes: and by this petition satisfie for our veniall finnes.

Secondly, the same good workes likewise are meritorious. 1. Almes, Matth. 25. 34. Inherit the kingdom prepared for you, for when I was hungrie, ye gave me meate. 2. Fasting doth merite, Matth. 6. ver. 8. Your father, which seeth in secret, will reward you openly. 3. So likewise God is said, ver. 6. To reward prayer openly.

The Protestants.

Confusar. First, the places alleaged proue no satisfaction in our workes. 1. You must bring better Scripture then Tobie or Ecclesiasticus (which are not Canonically) to confirme a poynt of faith: and yet we denie not but almes may be said to deliver, not as causes of our deliuerance, but as lively signes of our faith, whereby we are deliuered, as Psalm. 41. Blessed is he that indgeth wisdome of the poore, the Lord shall deliver him: a man is first made blessed by the not imputation of his finnes by faith, Psalm. 32. 1. This blessednes is testified by his charitie, and rewarded of God in mercie by deliuerance.

2. The Ninivites fasting satisfied not for their sinne, but onely testified their repentance, Ionas 3. 10. God saw their workes, that they turned from their euill waies: which repentance God accepted in mercie: otherwise how could the Ninivites being idolaters and ignorant of God, merite or satisfie.

3. The Lords prayer ouerthroweth satisfaction: for we conclude, for thine is the glorie: we take not the glorie to our selues, but ascribe all to God: forgiveness of the debt is of mercie: where then there is remission of grace, there can be no satisfaction of worthines.

Secondly, prayer, almes, fasting, are rewarded we graunt, but not for the worthines of the worke, but thorough the gracious acceptance of God. First, the kingdom is prepared from the foundations of the world, Matth. 25. 34. How then can it be merited? Secondly, When we haue done all that we are commaunded, we must say we are vnprofitable seruants, Luke 17. 10. Thirdly, Saint Ambrose saith, Nulla posse tam praeclara opera existere, quibus hoc, quod gratis tribuitur, per retributionis iudicium retribuatur: There can be no such excellent workes, to the which, that which is freely giuen, is rendered by the right of retribution. But of this question of the merite and satisfaction of good workes, we haue treated before in the controuersie of good workes, that it were needlesse and superfluous now to handle the same matter againe.

workes, as they are satisfactorie, may be applied vnto others.

The Papists.

Bellarmine alleageth Scripture to proue that good workes as they are meritorious, cannot be communicated to others, which we willingly graunt, for a man cannot merite for himselfe, much lesse for others: but to confirme this proposition, that one may satisfie for another, he alleageth no Scripture at all, lib. 1. de Indulgen. c. 2. propof. 2.

The Protestants.

THe contrarie is most euident out of Scripture, that all which a man can doe is little enough, yea and too little for himselfe, much lesse can he satisfie for another.

Matth. 25. 9. The wise Virgins make this answer to the foolish, We feare there will not be enough for vs and you: whereupon Augustine thus writeth: Unusquisque pro se rationem reddet, nec alieno testimonio quicquam adiunatur apud Deum, cui secretum cordis apparent, et vix sibi quisque sufficit, cui testimonium perhibeat conscientia sua: Every man shall giue account for himselfe: neither is a man helped by anothers testimonie before God, to whom the secrets of the heart are euident: every man scarce sufficeth for himselfe, to whom his owne conscience doth beare witnesse: serm. 22. in Matth.

The second controuersie: The passions of the Saints belong not

But if the other words, that follow, be objected: Go to them rather that sell, and buy for your selues, Matth. 23. 9. Origen shall make answer, who vnderstandeth by those that sell, the Doctors and teachers of the Church: Non omnium habentium oleum, est etiam dare ex eo alijs, &c. It is not the part of all that haue oyle to giue to others, but it belongeth onely to them, which are appointed to sell it: Congregauit aliquis doctrinam, qua ei sufficit ad bene viuendum, non tamen, ut doctor fieri possit: One hath gathered doctrine, which may be sufficient for himselfe to liue well, but not to be a doctor or teacher to others: Traet. 32. in Matth.

THE THIRD PROPOSITION, OF THE SPIRITUAL TREASURE OF THE CHURCH.

The Papiſts.

IT is affirmed that there is an infinite treasure of the satisfactions purchased by the passion of Christ extant in the Church, as it is written Act. 20. 28. which hee hath purchased with his owne blood. Secondly, whereas Christ dyed for all, as Saint Iohn saith, 1. Ioh. 2. 2. Hee is the reconciliation for the finnes of the whole world: and yet the price of Christs blood hath not been applied to all, the most part of men being subiect to condemnation: there remaineth then a great deal of the price of Christs death yet to be applied, Bellarmin. c. 2. prop. 3.

The Protestants.

FIRST, we acknowledge that the price or vertue of Christs blood is infinite, and remaineth in his Church, as a rich treasure, that can neuer be spent; as a fountaine, that can neuer be dried vp; as precious balme, that healeth alwaies effectually: and therefore the Apostle calleth it, the riches of his glorious inheritance; and the exceeding greatnes of his power toward vs, which beleeue, Ephes. 1. 18. And as one saith: Effusio iusti sanguinis Christi tam diuine fuit ad precium, ut si vniuersas captiuorum in redemptorem suum crederet, nullum diaboli vincula retinerent: The effusion of Christs righteous blood is so rich in price, that if all the captiues did beleeue in their redeemer, the diuels bands could hold none: ex epist. Gay.

Secondly, but it is vntrue that Christ dyed vniuersally for the whole world, in his sense, that is, for all men whatsoever: for Christ vouchsafeth not to pray for the world, Ioh. 17. 9. I pray not for the world, but for those which thou hast giuen me: much lesse then dyed hee for the world. The Apostle then by the world vnderstandeth the whole companie of the people of God, for whom Christ dyed: As Saint Ambrose well noteth: Habet populus dei plenitudinem suam, &c. & in electis, &c. specialis quaedam confectur vniuersitas, ut de toto mundo totus mundus liberatus, &c. The people of God then hath a certaine fulnes, and there is a speciall kinde of vniuersalitie in the elect, so that the whole world seemeth to be deliuered out of the whole world: lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. c. 3.

Thirdly, it is also vntrue that any, for whom Christ dyed, are subiect to condemnation, or that the price of his blood can be applied to any, that are not ordained vnto life: Christ prayeth thus, Ioh. 17. 24. I will that they whom thou hast giuen me, be with me where I am: Christ prayeth, that all, which are giuen him, for whom hee dyed, should come to euerlasting glorie: but Christs prayer was alwaies effectually: as he himselfe saith, Ioh. 11. 42. Thou hast said me alwaies. Saint Ambrose also saith: Christus mortem vincens omnibus, qui sunt ex eius corpore, vitam acquisiuit: Christ ouercomming death, hath purchased or obtained life to all, that are of his bodie, in 1. Cor. 15. All then, that are of his bodie, haue surely life, and cannot perish, nor be condemned.

THE FOVRTH PROPOSITION, WHETHER THE PASSIONS AND SATISFACTIONS OF THE SAINTS BELONG TO THIS TREASURE OF THE CHURCH.

The Papiſts.

TO this treasure of the Church belong the passions of the blessed Virgin Mary, and of all other Saints, who suffered more than their finnes required, Bellarmin. lib. 1. de indulgent. cap. 2. propof. 4. And in the Bull of Clement. 6. it thus standeth: Ad cuius thesauri cumulum beata dei genitricis, & omnium iustorum merita adminiculum præstare noscuntur: To the heape of which treasure doe adde helpe, the merits of the mother of our Lord and of all Saints: Extran. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 2.

Argum. 1. Mary had neither actuall nor originall sin to suffer for, and therefore her sufferings are communicable to others.

2. Iohn also was of a most innocent life, and was subiect scarce to the least finnes, and therefore he had no neede of his fasting, austere life, imprisonment, death, to satisfie for himselfe.

3. Likewise the Prophets sufferings were beyond their finnes: as Iob complaineth chap. 6. 1.

I would

I would that my finnes, whereby I have deserved wrath, and the calamities which I suffer, were laid in a balance; as the sand of the sea this would appeare more heauie.

4. Saint Pauls sufferings were many and great: as he doth reckon them vp, 2. Cor. 11. 26. yet he had no neede of them himselfe: for he saith, I know nothing by my selfe, 1. Cor. 4. 4.

5. The martyrdome of the Saints is able to redeeme great offences: as Christ saith, Matt. 10. vers. 32. Who soeuer confesseth me before men, him will I confesse before my father in heauen: But many of the Martyrs had small offences at the time of their martyrdome, and therefore there remaineth abundance of satisfaction for others: Beilarm. lib. 1. de indulg. c. 2. prop. 4.

Ans. First, 1. It is blasphemie to say, that any man doth or hath suffered more, than his finnes require: for this were to accuse God of iniustice, to lay vpon any man that which he hath not deserved. But the Prophet saith otherwise, Psalm. 130. 3. Lord if thou straightly markest iniquities, who shall abide it? God layeth vpon no man so much as hee hath deserved: much lesse doth any suffer more. 2. As for the Virgin Mary, she acknowledgeth Christ her Saviour, Luk. 1. 47. My spirit reioyceth in God my Saviour, and so consequently confesseth her selfe a sinner: for he is therefore called Iesus, a Saviour, because he shall save the people from their finnes, Matth. 1. 21. 3. Saint Ambrose accordingly saith: Non mirum si dominus redempturus mundum diuinam operationem suam inchoauit a matre, ut per quam salus omnibus parabatur, eadem prima fructum salutis hauriret ex ignore: No marueile, if the Lord being to redeeme the world, did begin his diuine worke in his mother, that she, through whom saluation was in preparing for al, should first receiue the benefit of saluation from her pledge or birth, lib. 2. in 1. Luc. If she receiued the benefit of saluation, what elle was she saved from, than her finnes?

Secondly, concerning Iohn Baptist, 1. wee confesse he was an holie man, and endued with great grace, yet not without his finnes and corruptions: and therefore confesseth, that he had need to be baptized of Christ, Matth. 3. 14. which was to remission of finnes. 2. His afflictions were not laid vpon him as punishments for sinne, but as Gods louing corrections to exercise his faith, and prepare him for his kingdome: As the Prophet Dauid saith, Psal. 119. 67. Before I was afflicted I went astray. Afflictions then to the righteous are not instructions for their sinne, but admonitions to encrease their vertue. 3. Of Iohn and of all other it is truly said, as Hierome reciteth the Apostles words: Deus conclusit omnes sub peccato, &c. God hath shut all vnder vnbeleefe, to haue mercie of all, absque hoc qui peccatum non facit: he onely excepted, that did no sinne.

Thirdly, 1. Iob doth confesse himselfe a great sinner, that he could not answer God one thing of a thousand, Iob. 9. 3. and he confesseth with Dauid, that God had afflicted him in his youth, Psal. 119. 75. for thus he saith, Iob. 13. 26. Thou makest me to possesse the iniquities of my youth.

2. Concerning that place, Iob. 6. 2, 3. The Latine text doth translate most corruptly. 1. There is no mention at all made of finnes, but the Hebrue word there vsed, signifieth wrath and indignation, which the 70. well expresse (qz). 2. Where the Latine readeth, hec grauior esset, this would be heauier, as though it were referred onely to his calamitie waighed against sinne, the Septuagint well expresse the sense of the Hebrue (though the singular number be vsed) haptiqz, grauiora sunt, are heauier, in the plurall. 3. The Latine saith, quasi arena, as the sand: so is not the Hebrue, ut mecum: which signifieth pro arena, in respect of the sand, or tho the sand: as the Septuagint readeth: so that this is the meaning, if his griefe and vexation were put into a balance, and weighed with the sand, they would be found heauier then it: for who can endure this lense, that his afflictions in respect of his sinne were as a light thing to the sand?

Fourthly, 1. Saint Paul doth frankly confesse of himselfe, 1. Tim. 1. 15. Christ came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chiefe: If he acknowledge himselfe a sinner; what reason hath any man to extenuate it: 2. He knew nothing by himselfe, that is in respect of the faithfull discharging of his calling, whereof he spake before: his conscience therein did not accuse him, yet he saith, he was not thereby iustified, 1. Cor. 4. 3. Much lesse then is Saint Paul able to iustifie an other. 3. He saith, Philipp. 3. 9. That I may be found in him not hauing mine owne righteousness: If Saint Paul disclaimeth his owne righteousness, how can it be a satisfaction for vs.

Fifthly, 1. The martyrdome of the Saints was profitable to themselves, God crowning their patience with immortalitie, through Christ: but they are not auailable to vs, but onely for example: so Saint Paul saith, 1. Cor. 1. 13. was Paul crucified for you? Saint Ambrose saith well: Pendebat in cruce filius, &c. While her sonne hanged vpon the crosse, Mary offered her selfe to the persecutors, Si forte sua morte publico muneri aliquid adderetur, sed Christi passio adiutore non eguit: If so she by her death might adde any thing to the publike benefit; but Christs passion needed no helper: insinuat. virg. c. 5. If the sufferings of Mary could adde nothing to Christs passion, much lesse the affliction of others.

The Protestants.

THAYE sufferings of the Saints must be added to Christs satisfactions to make vp the treasure of the Church: we iudge it a most horrible blasphemie, which hath disliked some of of the Papists themselves: as Durand. in 4. Dist. 20. qu. 3. whose argumentes I will propound.

1. Argum. 1. The satisfaction of Christ is of infinite vertue, and therefore there is no need, that the satisfactions of the Saints should be ioyned vnto them.
2. The Saints are already abundantly rewarded, and farre about their desert, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 8. 18. Tecum that the afflictions of this present time are not worthe of the glorie, which shall be revealed: wherefore the Saints sufferings being so fully already recompensed, cannot helpe toward the expiation of the sinnes of others.
3. The Saints neither did, nor suffered any thing, which they were not bound in duty to do and suffer: as appeareth, Luc. 17. 10. We are vnprofitable seruants, we did that which was our dutie to doe: and Matth. 25. 9. the wise virgins say: Least there will not be enough for you and vs: Ergo, the Saints haue nothing to communicate to others.
4. If by the Saints sufferings our sins could be expiated or redeemed, then might they be counted our redeemers; but the Scripture onely acknowledgeth Christ our redeemer, 1. Cor. 1. 30. Christ is made our righteousness, sanctification, redemption.

1. Ans. 1. The Saints passions are ioyned vnto Christs sufferings, not because these are not sufficient, but for that it is glorious vnto Christ, that the Saints sufferings should not be in vaine, seeing they receiue all their efficacy from Christ.

2. The Saints sufferings as they are meritorious, are already abundantly rewarded; but as they are satisfactorie, they should be in vaine, vnlesse they were employed, in the expiation of other mens sinnes, seeing the Saintes needed not so great laboures and sufferings for themselves.

3. Euen the obedience of the law, to the which the Saints are bound, is meritorious and satisfactorie: the virgins speake not of satisfaction, but of the oyle of grace and charity, which euerie one keepeth to himselfe, and cannot powreforth vpon another.

4. Properly & simply Christ is our redeemer, because he redeemeth vs from our captiuitie, but as a redeemer is largely taken for one that redeemeth from a final debt, so the saints may be said to be our redeemers: if Nabuchadnezzar be aduised by Daniel to redeeme his sinnes by righteousness, much more the Saints may be said to redeeme our sins by their passions: and Saint Paul saith, 1. Cor. 9. 22. I am made all things to all men, to saue some: why might he not be as well said to Redeeme them, as to saue them? seeing the name of Sauour is as proper to Christ, as the name of Redeemer. Beilerm. lib. 1. de indulgent c. 4.

1. Contra. 1. The passions of the Saints are not in vaine, though they be not ioyned to Christs, as satisfactorie: as Saint Paul sheweth, 1. Cor. 15. 58. Forasmuch as ye know, that your labour is not in vaine in the Lord: that is, in respect of the resurrection of the iust, when all their labours and traouailes shall be recompensed. 2. It is inglorious for Christ to haue any ioyned vnto him as a helper: as the Prophet sheweth, Isay. 63. 5. I looked, and there was none to helpe, therefore mine arme helped me. 3. Though the Saints receiue all their power and grace from Christ, yet they receiue no such power, whereby to satisfie for others: for the Lord by the Prophet saith, Isay. 48. 11. I will not giue my glory to another.

2. 1. If the Saints sufferings are rewarded, as they are meritorious; much more as they are satisfactorie: for it is more to deserue a reward, then to satisfie for a punishment: but the truth is, that the sufferings of the Saints, do neither merit nor yet satisfie the wrath of God, but yet their labors through Christ are abundantly recompensed: Iacob confesseth, He was not worthe of the least of Gods (temporall) mercies. Gen. 32. 10. how much lesse are the Saints worthy of eternall. 2. Their labours are not in vaine, though thereby they neither satisfie for themselves nor others: for thereby their faith is exercised, and they learne obedience, Psal. 119. 71. It is good for me, that I haue bene afflicted, that I may learne thy statutes. 3. And whereas he saith the Saints need not so many sufferings for themselves, it is blasphemy: for Iob for all his vnspokeable affliction confesseth, he did not answere God one thing of a thousand: Iob. 9. 3. Quis amplius grunniet dicens, nimium laboramus, nimium tetuimus, nimium vigilamus, cum nec millesima, imo nec minima parti debitorum suorum valeat respondere: Who dare complaine from henceforth, and say, we labour too much, fast too much, watch too much, when he cannot answere the thousandth, nay not the least part of his debt. ser. de quadrupl. debitis. Bernard.

3. First, it is contrarie to reason and Scripture, that a man should merite by doing his dutie: our Sauour saith, Luke 17. 9. Doth he thanke that seruant, because he did that, which was commanded him? I trow not: if it be not thanke worthe, how is it meritorious or satisfactorie? Secondly, if the oyle of charitie cannot be communicated, then not the price of good workes, which proceede from charitie, being the fruits thereof: for no workes are good without charitie, as the Apostle sheweth, 1. Cor. 13. 3. then cannot a man lend the price of his workes, but he must also lend his charitie, which maketh them precious. Thirdly, the virgins speake of their iustice or righteousness, which they holde to be little enough for themselves: and so Bernard expoundeth, vpon these words, Marth.

Matth.25.8. Give vs of your oyle: Simile petatio; vix infans saluabitur, vix sanctis iusticia sua oleum sufficit ad salutem, quanto minus & sibi & proximis: A foolish petition, the righteous shall scarce be saued, the oyle of their owne righteousnesse hardly sufficeth the Saints to saluation, how much lesse themselves and their neighbours: Noe, Daniel, Iob, shall not deliuer Monne or daughter, Ezech. 14.18. but like as the soule, that sinneth, shall die, Ezech. 18.20. Sic anima qua iusticiam fecerit, sola saluabitur: So that soule that doth righteousnesse, onely shall bee saued, Bernard. serm. de virgin.

First, Christ hath left neither great nor small debt vnanswered or vn timer for, 1. Iohn 1.7. The blood of Iesus cleanseth vs from all sinne: and therefore the Saints cannot be said to redeeme vs, no not from the least debt. Secondly, you translate corruptly, Daniel biddeth him, not redeeme, but breake off his sinnes by righteousness: And so man when he beginneth to doe well, leaueth to doe euill, and by well doing breaketh off, or stoppeth the course of the sinne. Thirdly, Paul saueth, not as Christ saueth: he as the author, Paul as the minister of reconciliation, 1. Cor. 5.18. but there can be no redemption without paying of a raunsome, 1. Cor. 6.20. Ye are bought for a price: This price because no man could pay but Christ, no man can be said to redeeme but Christ, as the Apostle saith: Christ is made vnto vs our righteousness, sanctification, redemption, 1. Cor. 1.30. as no man else can be said to be our righteousness, sanctification, so neither our redemption.

Peter Lombard also sheweth, how Christ proprie dicitur redemptor: is properly called the redeemer, in respect of the Father and Sonne, who are called also Redeemers, but not so properly, lib. 3. dist. 19. iter. 2. Whereby he insinuateth, that no creature either properly, or improperly can be called a Redeemer.

Here should haue followed other arguments, of Master Luther and Master Caluine, with others vsed by them, and objected in their time against the Popes Indulgences, with a confutation of Bellarmines answer vnto the said arguments: But so it was, that the Printer calling earnestly for an ende of this worke, and fearing least it might growe to a further charge, then he expected, and hauing my selfe no great leasure, not about the space of seuen dayes, to ranne ouer Bellarmines first booke of Indulgences, I was constrained altogether to leaue the second booke vn timer: trusting, that some other better able, may supplie my want herein, or that I may hereafter, if it please God, and it shall be thought necessarie, finish that, which now is omitted.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE POWER OF distributing the spirituall treasure and Indulgence of the Church.

THE FIRST PROPOSITION, WHETHER THE satisfactions of the Saints may be communicated to others.

The Papists:

That the sufferings and satisfactions of the Saints may be applied to others, thus they labour to proue it: 16. Errors.

First, by that article of the Creede, I beleue the communion of Saints: therefore their satisfactions are communicable.

Secondly, Saint Paul saith, 1. Corinth. 12.15. I will most gladly bestow and be bestowed for your soules.

Thirdly, Coloss. 1.24. Now reioyce in my sufferings for you, and fulfill the rest of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his bodie sake, which is the Church: Saint Paul did communicate his sufferings and satisfactions to the faithfull: Bellarmin. lib. 1. de indult. c. 3. propos. 1. Rhemist. in hanc locum.

The Protestants:

First, 1. the argument followeth not, there is a communion of Saints: Ergo, satisfactions are communicable: the communion is in things communicable, but satisfactions they cannot communicate, because they haue them not. 2. If they had satisfactions and merites, yet they could no more applie them vnto others, than they doe their faith, which is proper to euery man: Rom. 1.17. The iust shall liue by faith. 3. This communion consisteth in the mutuall helpe and assistance of one another, as by prayer, Rom. 1.9. Without ceasing I make mention of you: By mutuall comfort, 1. Thess. 4.18. Comfort one another: By exhortation, 1. Thess. 5.11. Exhorts one another: By teaching, 2. Pet. 1.13. I thinke it meete to stirre you up by greeting you in remembrance. 4. So Origen saith: Ceteri precibus peccata, hic solus potestate dimittit: Others (namely the Apostles, of whom he speaketh) remit sins by their prayers, Christ by his power, Item 2.4 in Nume. Christ onely then hath power to satisfie.

Secondly, how Saint Paul would be bestowed, he sheweth Philip. 2.17. he would be offered up for the seruice, i. i. of their faith: His death then serued not for satisfaction, but for confirmation of of their faith. As Saint Ambrose saith: Christi passio nobis sufficit ad salutem; Petri, Pauli continit ad exemplum: Christ's passion sufficeth to saluation: Peter and Paul's passion serue for example and confirmation, serm. 86.

Thirdly, 1. Saint Paul expoundeth himselfe in the next verse, how he suffereth for the Churches sake, Coloss. 1. 25. Whereof I am a minister according to the dispensation of God, which is given me to youward, to fulfill the word of God: He did not then satisfie for others by his sufferings, but thereby minister to their faith: that by his patience and example of suffering, the worde of God might be fulfilled, that is, generally received, and freely confessed of the brethren: as he himselfe again saith, Philip. 1. 13. My bands in Christ are famous throughout all the indgements hall, and in all other places; in so much that many of the brethren in the Lords are holdened through my bands; and dare more frankly speake the word.

2. Saint Augustine thus interpreteth: Non dixit pressuratum meum, sed Christi, quia membrum erat Christi, et in persecutionibus suis, quales Christum in toto suo corpore pati oportebat, etiam ipse pressuratum pro sua portione adimplebat: He saith not my afflictions, but Christ's, because he was a member of Christ, and in his persecutions, which Christ was to suffer in his whole bodie, he also fulfilled his afflictions for his part: Tract. in Ioann. 108. Saint Paul then did but for his part suffer as a member of Christ, as all other his members must for their parts.

3. So Augustine againe saith elsewhere, writing vpon this text: Si in membris Christi es, quicquid pateris ab eis, qui non sunt in membris Christi, decerni passionibus Christi: ideo additur, quia decerni mensuram impleas, non superfundens: tantum ergo pateris, quantum inferendum erat, vniuersa passioni Christi, qui passus est in capite, et patitur in membris, &c. If thou art a member of Christ, whatsoeuer thou sufferest of those that are not his members, was wanting to the sufferings of Christ: therefore it is added (which are wanting) filling the measure, not overflowing: therefore thou suffrest so much, as was to be laid vpon the whole passion of Christ, who then suffered in the head, and now in the members, in Psal. 60: Saint Paul then did suffer for his part, as all other members must for their parts: and the measure of affliction is but filled vp, it overfloweth not by their sufferings: Ergo, no mans sufferings doe abound or overflow to satisfie for another.

THE SECOND PROPOSITION, WHETHER THE pastors of the Church haue power to dispense the satisfactions and sufferings of the Saints, and to graunt indulgences.

The Papists.

16. Error.

That this power is committed to the pastors of the Church, to dispense this spirituall treasure, and thereby to absolve from all sinnes, and the punishment of sinnes, to dispense with othes, vows, lawes, if there be reasonable cause: thus they would proue it.

First, Christ saith to his Apostles and their successors, whose sins ye remit, they are remitted, Ioh. 20. vers. 23. and to Peter, Feede my sheepe, Ioh. 21. 15. Here the supream throne of Ecclesiasticall power is giuen to Peter. Likewise, Matth. 18. 18. Whatsoeuer ye binde in earth, shall be bound in heauen.

Secondly, Saint Paul executeth this power, 2. Cor. 2. 10. To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also: for verily if I forgave any thing to whom I forgave it, for your sakes forgave I it in the sight of Christ. Here Saint Paul forgiveth vnto the incestuous person, that, which remained of his penance.

This hath been the continuall practise of the Church to remit the punishment to offenders: and to this purpose Tertullian and Cyprian are alleaged, with diuers Councils, and constitutions of the Bishops of Rome: Belarm. lib. 1. de indulg. c. 3. prop. 2.

The Protestants.

First, 1. our Saviour speaketh of remission of sinnes, what is this to their indulgences, which serue to releafe the punishment onely, as they say? and the Apostles did remitte sinnes not by their owne power, but as ministers and dispensers in Christ's name: Act. 3. 12. S. Peter denieth, that by his owne power he had made the lame man goe: much lesse by his owne power could he heale the soule.

2. First, feeding the flocks, is not dispensing with them, or exercising iudicial power over them, but preaching the worde: so doth Saint Paul expound it, Act. 20. 28. and Saint Peter, 1. Pet. 5. 3. Feede the flocks of God: but the Pope vseth not to preach, therefore he feedeth not. Again, this feeding is not proper onely to Peter, but common to all other pastors, as he himselfe sheweth writing to his fellow pastors, 1. Pet. 5. 3.

3. First, our Saviour saying, Whatsoeuer ye binde, speaketh of binding and loosing of sinnes, and not the punishment onely: as this place is expounded by that, Ioh. 20. 23. Whose sinnes ye remitte. Again, he speaketh to all the Apostles: wherefore they all, and their successors, and not Peter onely haue this power. Further, this power must be executed in Christ's name, vers. 20. Indulgences then in the name of Saints haue no place here.

Secondly,

Secondly, 1. Saint Paul did not enioyne the incestuous person penance to satisfie God for his sinne, but he was deliuered to Satan, that his spirit might be saved, &c. 1. Cor. 5. 13. that hee might be brought to effectuall sorrow for his offence: which was accordingly effected. 2. Another end of his separation, was for the example of others, and that the Church might be satisfied, whom he had offended: and therefore the Apostle writeth to the whole Church, that they would forgive him, 2. Cor. 2. 7. and hold themselves satisfied with his sufficient sorrow. 3. The Apostle then remitteth not any punishment to the young man due vnto Gods iustice, but releaseth him of the censure of excommunication, after he did see him sufficiently to haue sorrowed. And this power wee denie not but the Church hath, to reconcile those againe to the congregation, and to remit the censure of the Church, when the partie hath testified his effectuall sorrow, and satisfied the congregation. Thus Augustine saith: Recte constituntur ab his qui ecclesia praesunt tempora penitentiae, ut satisfiat etiam ecclesiae: Certaine times of penance are appointed by the gouernours of the Church, that the Church may be satisfied, &c. 1. de penitent. c. 84. Satisfaction then is made not to God, but to the Church, and the releasing thereof, as a remitting not of the punishment of sin before God, but of the censure imposed by the Church.

Thirdly, after this manner we denie not but the Church vsed in Tertullian and *Cyprian*s time to reconcile offenders to the peace of the Church, and many times at the instance and request of Martyrs, to remit vnto them some part of ecclesiasticall censure: but this maketh nothing for the applying or communicating of other mens satisfactions. Augustine saith, as he is cited, dist. 1. de penitent. c. 84. In actione penitentiae, ubi tale crimen commissum est, ut qui commisit a Christi corpore separatur, non tam consideranda est mensura temporis, quam doloris: In the action of penance, where such a sinne is committed, that hee which committed it, must be separated from the bodie of Christ, the measure of time must not be so much considered, as of griefe, &c. So then the ancient indulgence of Christ was this, when the Church seeing the vnfaired sorrow of the penitent persons, in Christian compassion, lest they should be swallowed up of too much griefe, as the Apostle saith, 2. Cor. 2. 7. did mitigate the rigor of the sentence of the Church, and release them of their penance. This decreete and Christian lenitie ought still to be retained in the Church, as Ambrose well saith: Quem admodum se tibi curandum praebere, qui se contemptui, non compassioni medico suo putes futurum: non sunt pro Christi discipulis habendi, qui cum ipsi quaerunt domini misericordiam, alij eam denegant: How should a man commit himselfe to be cured, when he seeth contempt rather than compassion to be in the Plurition? they are not to be counted for the disciples of Christ, that seeking mercie themselves, denie it vnto others: de penitent. lib. 1. 1.

THE THIRD PROPOSITION, OF THE ANTI-quitie and originall of Iubile pardons and indulgences.

The Papists.

IT is affirmed by them, that whereas the beginning, authors, time and place of other heresies may be assigned, yet it cannot be shewed when Indulgences and Pardons were brought in; and therefore it is most like, that they tooke beginning from the Apostles time, Bellarmin. lib. 1. de indulg. c. 3.

The Protestants.

Confut. First, the proposition is not true, that all heresies may be assigned to their seuerall authors: as Bernard thus witnesseth of the Heretikes called Apostolici: Quare ab illis sectae auctorem neminem dabunt: Aske of them the author of their sect, they can shew none, &c. the Manichees had Manes, the Sabellians Sabellius, the Arrians Arrius, beginners of their sect, &c. but these can shew none: Cantic. ser. 66.

Secondly, it followeth not, the author of generall and plenarie Indulgences, grounded vpon the ouerflowing satisfactions of the Church cannot bee produced: Ergo, they came from Christ and his Apostles. Bernard sheweth that this is no good consequent: I speaking of the foresaid heretikes, Apostolici, and in the same place: Non est ab homine illorum heresis, absque tamen ut per reuelationem Iesu Christi, sed magis per immisionem & fraudem demoniorum: Their heresie is not from man, yet God forbid it should be by reuelation of Iesus Christ, but rather by the deceit and illusion of the diuell.

Thirdly, we can produce and demonstrate the author of their Iubile pardons, which was Boniface the 8. anno 1300. the first institutor of the popish Iubile: Wee denie not, but that before this time in the declining ages of the Church, Indulgences were abused, and that anno 1170. or thereabout, exception was taken against them by the Waldenses: but at the time aforesaid, anno. 1300. when Antichrist came to his height, the most blasphemous Indulgences, and Iubile pardons came in together with the Iubile, which then was reuiued by Boniface 8.

THE FOURTH PROPOSITION.

The Papists.

28. Error. 1 Bellarmino here telleth vs, that the Prelates of the Church may dispense Christs sufferings both by the Sacraments, and by their Indulgences; yet the satisfactions and sufferings of the Saints cannot be applied, but by indulgences: The reason is, because their satisfactions serue onely for the release of the punishment, not for the remitting of the sinne: but in the Sacraments, the punishment is not remitted without the sinne, Bellarmino lib. 1. c. 3. propos. 3.

The Protestants.

- 1 Confut. First, it is vnttrue that the Sacraments doe giue and applie the grace of remission by Christs sufferings: they are scales of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4. 11. it is the proprietie onely of faith to apprehend Christ, and to applie his merits: which faith is confirmed and encreased by the Sacraments. Wee doe in the Sacraments shew forth the death of Christ, 1. Cor. 11. 26. as Ambrose saith, Eucharistia mysterium memoria redemptionis est: The mystrie of the Eucharist is the memorie of the redemption, in 1. Cor. 11. Faith by this memorie being renewed and reuiued, applieth Christ: without faith the Sacraments profit not: the Apostle biddeth to examine themselves, and so eate of the bread, 1. Corinth. 11. 28. which examination is to trie their faith, 1. Corinth. 13. 5. Ambrose saith, Quid proficiunt Iudei, quod sanguine agni domos & postes illinunt? quoniam ligna, aut saxa prodesse non possunt: What doth it profit the Iewes, that they annoynt their houses and posts with the blood of the Lambe? what can wood or stones profit them? serm. 12. Psal. 119. No more doth water, bread or wine profit without faith.
- 2 Secondly, if in the Sacraments, as namely in Baptisme, remittitur omnis pena sine temporalis, sine aeterna, all punishment of sinne is remitted, both temporall and eternall, as Bellarmino confesseth, the application of the satisfactions of Saints is superfluous to release the temporall punishment, seeing it is done already: And that the efficacie of Baptisme extendeth to the washing away of all sinnes both preceeding and following; Saint Paul sheweth, laying, that wee are saved by the washing of the new birth, and the renewing of the bolis Ghost, Tit. 3. 5. If wee haue then perfect saluation in Baptisme, what can bee added more? So Saint Hierome: Si baptizmus nouum hominem facit, & ex toto nouum creat, nihilque in eo veteris hominis reueratur, non potest nouo imputari, quod in veteri quondam fuit: If Baptisme make a man wholly new, that nothing of the old man remaine, that cannot be imputed to the new man, which was sometime in the old; Hierom. Ocean. tom. 3.
- 3 Thirdly, neither doth there remaine any punishment before God to be satisfied for, the sinne being once remitted: but we being released of our sins, are also exempted from the punishment: as Christ said to the man sicke of the palsey, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee, Mark. 2. 5. signifying, that together with his sinne, his sicknes, as it was a punishment thereof, was also looted. The sorowes and griefes that still hang vpon vs doe remaine, as Augustine saith, Vel ad demonstrationem debita miserie, vel ad emendationem labilis vite, vel ad exercitationem necessaria patientia: Either for a demonstration of our deserued miserie, the emendation of our fraile life, or the exercitation of our necessarie patience: Tract. 124. in Ioann. Wherefore the satisfactions of the Saints applicable by Indulgences, are superfluous, seeing there remaineth after remission of sinnes obtained, no punishment before God to be satisfied for.

THE THIRD PART, WHAT Indulgence is.

THis part is diuided into foure questions: First, whether the Indulgence of the Church be a spirituall solution, or a iudiciarie absolution. Secondly, whether it be a release, de penitentis iniunctis vel iniungendis, of penance already enioyned or to be enioyned. Thirdly, whether it be a remission of the fault, or of the punishment onely. Fourthly, whether by indulgence the punishment due vnto sinne be remitted before God.

THE FIRST QUESTION, WHETHER THE INDULGENCE OF THE CHURCH BE A SPIRITUALL SOLUTION ONLY, OR A IUDICIARIE ABSOLUTION.

The Papists.

THis question though it be chiefly controuerted among the popish writers themselves, yet I will briefly shew which part cometh neerest the truth. Some of them thinke, that the Indulgence of the Church is onely an application of the treasure of the Church, without any iudiciarie authoritie, and so a solution only: see Durand. in 4. distict. 20. qu. 3. Paludan. ibid. qu. 4. cum alijs.

Others

Others thinke Indulgence to be nothing else, but iudiciarie absolutionem, a iudiciarie absolution, Franciscus Maironis 4. sent. dist. 19. qu. 2. which seemeth to be the truer opinion; as I will shew after-ward. Billarmine he confoundeth both these opinions, and maketh Indulgence not onely a iudiciarie absolution; but a spirituall solution. 3. 2. 10. 2. 1. Error.

Argum. His best argument is, because Indulgence may be graunted to the dead, out of whom no iudiciarie power can be exercised.

Ausw. 1. It is well that these popish Diuines, somewhat better aduised than their forefathers, doe exempt the dead from their iudiciarie Confitories: yet the elder Papists haue not bin aſſumed to proceed iudicially against the dead: to cite them by proceſſe, call them by name in court, and for not appearing to proceede against them as contumacious, to produce witnesses against them, and to condemne and burne them being dead. Thus was Richard Hun serued being dead, condemned and burnt in Smithfield: see his storie Fox pag. 8c 81. And in like manner were Sincer and Paulus Phagius proceeded against in Cambridge before the Cardinals visitors there: see likewise the storie Fox pag. 1961.

2. Billarmine hath vsed a very sillie argument: for the dead can neither be absolved nor condemned by the sentence of the living: God hath disposed of them; and euery one receiueth his finall sentence at his death: as a man dieth, so he lieth, and so he riseth: As Augustine well saith: Vnusquisque cum causa sua dormit, cum causa sua surgit: Euery man sleepeth or dieth with his cause, and with the same riseth againe. So that in this case wee may applie the Apostles speech, Rom. 14. vers. 4. Who art thou that condemnest another mans seruant? I be standeth, or falleth to his owne master. The dead are at Gods disposition, and are no more seruants or at the commaund of the living: This place of the Apostle is so applied by Anastasi. decret. 2.

The Protestants.

WE acknowledge a spirituall solution of sinne in the Church of God, which is dispensed by the ministerie of the word, and applicable to all them, which by faith are capable of it: but the Indulgence of the Church, which they make a releafe onely of temporall punishment, is onely a iudiciarie absolution in the outward face of the Church.

Argum. Such was that indulgence, pardon and forgiveness graunted by Saint Paul to the penitent young man, 2. Cor. 2. 10. To whom you forgane anything, I forgive also: This was nothing else but a releasing of the offender from the sentence of excommunication, after hee had sufficiently sorrowed. The spirituall solution, and forgiveness of sinnes, which followed his repentance, he receiued at Christs hands: but the outward censure was releafed by the iudiciarie power of the Church.

Franciscus Mairon. one of their owne Doctors, cited before, is of this opinion, that the Indulgence of the Church is but a Iudiciarie absolution.

Argum. 2. It further appeareth thus: no ecclesiasticall Iudge, no not the Pope, can be partaker of that Indulgence, which he graunteth to another. Of this opinion are some of the Papists, Archidiacon. in cap. de indulg. in c. 6. and the reason is, because no man can absolve himselfe: wherefore the Indulgence is onely an absolution: for as concerning the spirituall solution of sinnes, he is as well partaker of it, that ministrech it, as he to whom it is ministred. And Billarmine here greatly bestirring himselfe to shew how the Pope may receiue absolution, resolueth thus: that he vseth absolution to another, but himselfe is benefited onely by the spirituall solution. But the Pope can applie no Indulgence to himselfe: Ergo, it is an absolution iudiciarie, Billarm. cap. 6. respons. ad obiect. 7.

The same is proued out of their owne law: Decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 38 c. 4. Alexand. 3. An non sine iudice ligari nullus valeat, vel absolui: No man can bee loosed or absolved but of his owne iudge: Ergo, Indulgence onely respecteth the ecclesiasticall iurisdiction, and iudiciarie power of the Church: for otherwise the spirituall solution of sinne may be ministred by another, than the proper pastor, in the preaching of the word, and applying of other spirituall comforts.

THE SECOND QUESTION, WHETHER INDULGENCE be for penance enioyned, or to be enioyned.

WHen Indulgence is graunted, it must be vnderstood that all kinde of penance is pardoned, both that which is already enioyned or inflicted, or may be enioyned afterward: arguments he hath none of account, nor yet good reason for this assertion, lib. 1. de Indulg. cap. 7. conclus. 6. 1. Error.

The Protestants.

It is a most absurd and grosse thing, that Indulgence should not onely dispense, with the penance already inflicted by the sentence of the Church, but to giue licence for that which may afterward be incurred: for what is this else but to giue men libertie from sinne, being now exempted from the censur of the Church?

Argum. Saint Paul doth not so, but onely forgioeth the young man and releaseth that censure which he was then vnder for his sinne past, 2. Cor. 2. 6. It was sufficient for the same man, that he was rebuked of many: he speaketh of the rebuke and censure already past, he deliuereth him not from any sentence of the Church, which he might incur afterward.

Obi. As to this purpose saith notably: Andam sub celo non legitur, quod eorum uoce depremitur, datu nobis remissionem delictorum nostris erroribus doremus: nescio inter quæ mundi prodigia hoc possit admitti: remitti culpa de præterito potest, correctione sine dubio subsequente: nam si deinceps finitur mansura peruersitas, non est benignitas remissionis, sed conseruatio assensio: It was neuer heard vnder heauen, as they say giue vs pardon, while we notwithstanding continue in error: I cannot tell among what monisters this may be accounted: the fault may be remitted for the time past, correction or amendment following: but if by this meanes their perversitie doe remaine, it is not a benignitie in the remitter, but a conspiracie in the consenter: Gelas. epist. ad Faustinos: Thus then the remission of punishment to come, is a further instigation vnto sinne.

THE THIRD QUESTION, WHETHER AN

Indulgence be a remission of the fault, or punishment.

The Papists.

Bellarmino alleageth to this purpose certaine distinctions, there is a double guilt, eyther of the sinne, or punishment: the punishment is either naturall, as death, sickness; or personall, as was the plague sent vpon the people in Dauids time: and it is either in the internal court of the conscience; or the external court of the Church: the internal is of two sorts, either to satisfie God, or the Church.

33. Error.

Then he setteth downe this position, that by the Indulgence of the Church we are not deliuered from the guilt of any sinne, veniall or mortall, but of the punishment onely.

The Protestants.

First, I note certaine absurdities and contradictions in the foresaid distinctions, 1. Whereas he maketh the plague in Dauids time to be a personall punishment, and he thinketh that Indulgences may take away personall punishments, I aske whether the Popes Iubile-Pardons and indulgences can preuent, or turne aside the pestilence: If they were of such force, I thinke the Pope would not suffer the plague so often to visite Rome. 2. He maketh the satisfaction of the Church to belong to the internal court, whereas the court of the Church is externall.

Secondly, we say that the spirituall indulgence of Christ in the Church, being applied and apprehended by faith doth deliuer vs both from the sinne and paine: but the ecclesiasticall indulgence doth onely release the external punishment not before God, but before men.

Thirdly, this position of Bellarmino is contrarie to the Popes Iubile-pardons, which go vnder this name: Bonifacii 8. Non solum plenam & largiorem, sed plenissimam concedimus remissionem omnium peccatorum: extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. We grant not onely full, and larger, but most full remission of all their sins: so likewise Clement 6. in his Bull: Suorum omnium obtinerent plenissimam remissionem peccatorum: That they should obtaine most full pardon of all their sins: Sixtus the fourth also doth call them; indulgentias & remissiones peccatorum, indulgences and remissions of finnes.

Bellarmino answereth, 3. That whereas sometime mention is made in the letters of absolution, a pena & culpa, from the punishment and the fault, it is so said, because ordinarily absolution is ioyned with confession, whereby the fault is pardoned: 2. By pardon or remission of finnes we must vnderstand the punishment. c. 7. propos. 1.

Contra. 1. But your indulgences are properly granted, you say, without a Sacrament: as Bellarmino defineth it, Indulgentia est absolutio, &c. extra sacramentum data: Indulgence is absolution giuen without a Sacrament. c. 8. in fine: Then cannot an indulgence take away the fault, which is onely released in the Sacraments: that clause therefore, a pena & culpa, in their indulgences is contrarie to their owne doctrine.

2. Neither by plenarie remission of sins can the punishment in any sense be vnderstood, 1. It is called plenissima, a most full pardon, omnium peccatorum, of all finnes: if most full, and of all, how are the sins themselves excluded? 2. I pray you how doe you vnderstand your belife: credo remissionem peccatorum, I beleue the remission of finnes: doe ye beleue the punishment onely remitted, and not the sinne: vnlesse your Bull beleueth otherwise then the Creed, as it doth indeed, and bringeth in a new faith. 3. Bonifacius in his Bull maketh this preface: Quia iuxta officij nostri debitum, salutem appetimus singulorum: Because according to our bounden dutie, we seek the saluation of all: but to saluation, not the releasing only of the paine, but the remitting of the debt belongeth.

Fourthly, that the satisfactions of Christ applied (for satisfactions of Saints applicable, we acknowledge none) doe deliuer a pena & culpa, both from the sinne and the punishment, it is euident.

uident out of Scripture, Iohn. 13. 10. He that is washed by Christ, est mundus totus, is cleane eu-rie whit: there remaineth then nothing to be washed away: And they themselues confesse, that baptisme doth wash away both the sinne and punishment; likewise the Apostle, Hebr. 7. 25. He is able perfectly to saue them, that come vnto God. If Christ then do saue vs perfectly, then both from sinne and the penaltie.

Peter Lombard confesseth as much: Per ipsius penam, quam in cruce tulit, omnis pena temporalis, qua pro peccato conuersis debetur in baptismo penitus relaxatur, ut nulla à baptismo exigatur, Ec. By Christs paine, which he suffered vpon the crosse, all temporall paine, which is due for sin to them, which are conuerted, is altogether released in baptisme, that none at all is exacted of him that is baptized. lib. 3. dist. 19. iter. d. If then there remaine no punishment after baptisme, your indulgences are nothing worth.

I will conclude with Saint Ambrose: who speaking of the gathering of Maana, Exod. 16. 18.
He that had gathered much, had nothing ouer, and he that had gathered little, had no lack: Hoc plenius de sanguine Christi intelligitur. Ec. Esi parum sumas, et si plurimum haurias eadem perfecta est omnibus mensura redemptionis: This is more fully vnderstoode of the blood of Christ, though you take little or draw much, there is the same perfect measure of redemption to all, Epist. 1. Wherefore if by Indulgences, neuer so little of Christs blood be applied, the redemption is perfect, both from the sinne and penaltie, for otherwise it should not be perfect.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION, WHETHER THE INDVL- gences of the Church, deliuer from the punishment of sinne, not onely before the Church, but before God.

The Popists.

It is so affirmed by Bellarmine, that by the censure of the Church imposed vpon offenders, they doe not onely satisfie the Church, but God also, and so consequently the Indulgence of the Church doth let them free from the guilt of the punishment of sinne, both before God and men. 34 Error.

Argum. 1. Matth. 18. 18. Whatsoeuer ye loose in earth, shall be loosed in Heauen: if it be loosed in heauen, then before God.

2. Penance voluntarie assumed, or priuately enioyned, cannot be for example sake to sa-tisfie men, therefore thereby God is satisfied: as Psalm. 6. 6. I water my couch every night with teares.

3. Tertullian saith: Qui per delictorum penitentiam instituerat domino satisfacere: Which had purposed to satisfie God by the penance of his sinnes: lib. de penitent. Cyprian also is alleged:
Domini nostra satisfactio placendi: God is to be pleased with our satisfaction. Likewise Augustine: De iis, qui facta sunt, satisfas. De operum penitentia dolorem: God must be satisfied for the things that are done by the sorrowe of repentance: Ergo, God is satisfied by penitentie workes:
Bellarm. c. 7. prop. 4.

The Protestants.

Confutat. First, we graunt that the spirituall dispensation of the Church doth truely loose the penitent persons by faith in Christ, both from the sinne and punishment: but that Indulgence which onely releaseth the punishment, is but a relaxation before the Church, therefore this place, which is vnderstoode of loosing and binding of sinnes, is vnproperly alleaged for the release of the punishment onely.

Secondly, 1. Voluntarie and priuate repentance, though it be not to the eye of the world, to satisfie men: yet it is profitable more effectually to humble their owne soule: as Augustine saith speaking of prayer, which may be applied also to outward sorrowe for sinne: Gestus corporis, ut flectio genuum, extensio manuum seipsum magis homo excitat adorandum, illisque rursus visibilis sa- tis immobilitas animi affectus augetur: By the gesture of the bodie, as the bowing of the knees, the spreading of the hands, a man doth stirre vp himselfe to prayer: and these things being visiblie done, the inuisible affection of the soule is encreased: de cur. mortuor. lib. 5. 2. It followeth not then in priuate repentance, man is not satisfied: Ergo, God is satisfied: for there is another satisfaction beside, when a man by sufficient sorrowe and punishment, as it were taken of himselfe, doth satisfie his owne soule: and beside priuate repentance, though it preuaile not to satisfaction, yet it is available to effectually contrition, and vntained conuertion.

Thirdly, concerning the testimonie of the Fathers. First, we deny not but some of them doe use that phrase of speech, to satisfie God by repentance: but not in the popish sense, to satisfie Gods iustice, for Tertullian speaketh of satisfying for sinne: yet the Popists themselues holde no satisfaction in penance for sinne, but for the punishment onely. Secondly, God then is said to be satisfied, that is pleased with the worke of repentance: as the Apostle saith, Hebr. 13. 17. Wib such sa- crifice

erisq; God is pleased or delighted; his iustice is not satisfied, but his will pleased in Christ, when he seeth his pleasure obeyed by our repentance; So Bernard vnderstandeth satisfaction. Condigna satisfactio est male facta corrigere, & corrigenda non reiterare: It is condigne satisfaction, to correct euill deeds, and not to iterate or do them againe, propterea de inter. dom. But this is no satisfaction to Gods iustice for a man to turne from his euill wayes, otherwise then as God through Christ is well pleased therewith. Thirdly, there are then foure kinds of satisfactions; the first is to Gods; the second to the Church publicly; the third to men whom we haue offended privately; the fourth to a mans owne soule: the first by vs can be no way performed: for as Job saith, 9. 3. Wee cannot answere God one thing of a thousand: Vix millefima pars debitorum qui valeat respondere: a man can scarce answere the thousandth part of his debt to God: Bernard, de quadrupl. deb. This satisfaction to Gods iustice we must wholly remit vnto Christ. The other three satisfactions are in mans power: first, to satisfie the Church, 2. Cor. 2. 6. It is sufficient for the same man, that he was rebuked of many: Arauscan. concil. de heret. & Gratian. The ancient forme of excommunication was this: Anathematice Dei & indicio sancti spiritus e gremio sancta matris Ecclesia eliminamus, quousque resipiscant & Ecclesia satisfacti &c. By the authoritie of God and his holy spirite, we cast them out of the bosome of the Church, vntill they repent, and satisfie the Church. Secondly, our brother whome we haue offended, must be satisfied; as Zachens restoreth foure foulds, that which he had wrongfully gotten, Luke 19. 8. Augustine also saith: Peccasti in fratrem, fac facti & sanatus es: Hast thou offended against thy brother, satisfie him, and thou art healed: Serm. 16. in Matth. Thirdly, by godly repentance a man doth satisfie his owne soule, and cleare his conscience by punishing of himselfe; as 2. Cor. 7. 11. this godly sorrow, what great care hath it wrought in you, &c. what punishment, &c. you haue shewed your felues in all thing: that you are pure in this matter. To this purpose S. Augustine, Quid aliud est ieiunium, quam debita membrorum satisfactio? membra enim satisfacere debent propter peccata, qua commiserunt; unde si quis in gula peccauerit, satisfaciatur ieiunio, si in oculo claudatur: What else is fasting, but a due satisfaction of the members? for the members must satisfie for the sinne they haue committed: if a man haue sinned in gluttonie, let him make satisfaction by fasting; if in his eye, let him keepe it shut: Ad fratres in erem. serm. 24. All these kinds of satisfactions we admit, but Gods iustice cannot be satisfied by vs: Christ onely hath satisfied God for vs, both for sinne and punishment, and appeased his wrath, and slaine hatred by his crosse, and reconciled vs to God, Ephel. 2. 16. Augustine well saith (to conclude this poynt) Fateor, quia peccavi & conscientia mea meretur damnationem, & penitentia mea non sufficit ad satisfactionem; sed ceterum est, quod misericordia tua superat omnem offensionem: I confesse I haue sinned, and my conscience deserueth damnation, but my repentance sufficeth not for satisfaction; but it is certaine, that thy mercie exceedeth all transgression: Tom. 9. meditat. c. 39.

Lastly, we haue one of their owne side against them: Petrus Paludanus, who affirmeth, that veniall finnes and not the punishment onely are releafed by Indulgences: In 4. dist. 20. qu. 4.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE DIVERS kinds of Indulgences.

The Papists.

35. Error.

Bellarmino rehearseth fise kinds of Indulgences, and he iustificth them all: 1. There is an Indulgence of fortie dayes, which is a release of the penance which was to be done fortie dayes.

36. Error.

2. There is an Indulgence of the third or fourth part of their finnes, that is, of the punishment due for so much of their finnes.

37. Error.

3. An Indulgence plenarie was from the whole punishment: and sometime Indulgences are graunted for ten or twentie thousand yeares: for euery mortall sinne deserueth a penance of three or seuen yeares: then so many blasphemies and other finnes, as are by some committed euery moment, deserue many thousand yeares penance: which notwithstanding by the sharpnes of Purgatorie paine, may be satisfied for in three or foure hundred yeares.

38. Error.

4. Indulgences are graunted to some in their life time, to some in the poynt of death.

39. Error.

5. Some are temporary, for a time, as limited to dayes or yeares, some are perpetual, which are tied to places, Churches, altars, or to things moueable, as to rosaries, holy grains, &c. All these kinds of Indulgences Bellarmino holdeth to be good and godly: but for this we must take his word, for Scriptures or good reasons he hath none.

The Protestants.

First, 1. if your Indulgences doe releafe the punishment due to Gods iustice, what great presumption is it for you, to limite God to fortie dayes, that the punishment of the offender should for that time be suspended: this was the sinne of Israel, Plalm. 88. 11. Curis scripserunt Deum Israel: They limited the God of Israel. 2. Likewise Bellarmino hath this position, that Indulgences indulgences doe not take away the paines, that are inioyned in courts ecclesiasticall: cap. 7. prop. 3. and yet here he saith, that indulgentia quadragena, this indulgence of fortie daies is a release of penance, which was to be done forty daies: which penance is inflicted by the Church. Thus he is found contrarie to himselfe. 3. I haue shewed before that the release of punishment to be inflicted, is contrarie to the Scriptures and the ancient practise of the Church: see before. err. 3. 1.

Secondly, if your indulgences doe release from punishment before God, then they should not release from the third or fourth part onely, but from the whole punishment: for where God pardoneth, he forgiveth all: he worketh perfectly, Psal. 68. 28. Finitis, O Lord, that which thou hast wrought in us: and the wise man saith: Eccles. 3. 14. I know, that whatsoever God doth, it shall be for ever, so it can no man add, and from it can none diminish. 2. Neither when the Church forgiveth, doth it pardon onely in part, but wholly; as 2. Cor. 2. 8. Confirm or ratifie your love toward him; ver. 10. I forgave in the sight of Christ, that is freely from the heart: thus was the young man fully restored to the Church, and not in part onely: likewise Philem. 15. Saint Paul writeth vnto him to receive his seruant Onesimus, who had offended him for ever; ver. 17. receive him as my selfe: that is, freely, frankly, wholly, fully. 3. But this releasing of the third or fourth part of penance is but a popish trick for their further advantage: that looke how many parts men would be released of, they should pay so many pounds more.

Thirdly, 1. Plenarie indulgence from the whole punishment of sinne, is but an encouragement to sinners, and a meanes to make them more secure: for though they sinne, yet they are free from punishment: Christ saith otherwise to the lame man, Iohn. 5. 14. Sinne no more; least a worse thing happen vnto thee: Christ releaseth him for that present of the punishment of his sinne, the lameness of his bodie, but he giueth him no getierall warrant. To this purpose Gelasius as I cited him before, and as he is alleaged, caus. 24. qu. 2. c. 2. Data venimus dummodo nos in errore durimus: pardon vs, that we may continue in error still. Secondly, they are blasphemous indulgences, that are made for twentiethousandes of yeeres: for thus they take vpon them to release eternall punishment, which is contrarie to their owne doctrine: for that punishment which is extended beyond the time of purgatorie, which shall end with the world, must needs be the euermlasting punishment of hell. 2. If then they can giue indulgence for hell punishment, they can deliuer damned soules, which is an horrible blasphemie, and contrarie to the Scripture, Luk. 26. 16. They cannot come from thence to vs: and how farre are they then from that heresie, that diuels and all in the end should be saved, which is confuted by Saint Augustine lib. 2. de ciuitate c. 17. 23. 3. It is true, that a mans sinnes may be so great and so many, as that he may be worthie not onely of twentie thousand yeeres but euermlasting punishment: as he giueth instance of such as blaspheme euery moment: but doe ye thinke such obstinate and incorrigible sinners capable of your indulgences? you are verie lauish of the treasure of the Church, to grant it to such. 4. And seeing your purgatorie paine is imagined to be so great, that one day of punishment there is answerable to many yeeres of penance in this life, how can three or foure hundred yeeres paines in purgatorie satisfie for twentie thousand? and miserable comforters are ye, to appoint men so many hundred yeeres punishment in purgatorie: it is nothing else but to feare them, that they may giue the more money not to come there. 5. But though Bellarmine be not ashamed of these blasphemous indulgences for twentie thousand yeeres, who taketh vpon him euerywhere to defend the most grossest points in poperie: yet some of the learned Papists are more modest, who thinke that such indulgences are neuer granted by the Pope, but deuised of the pardoners for their gaine: Gerson in tract. de absolut. sacrament. Dominic. 4. Soter in 4. distinct. 21. qu. 2. artic. 1. and so Bellarmino himselfe alleageth.

Fourthly, 1. I pray you from what punishment doe you release men at the point of death? seeing there remaineth none but in hel, fro the which (say you) you release not: for your purgatory fire is but a popish scarbugge to feare those with, that belecue your lies: seeing the theefe, that had so many sinnes to be purged of, and made no satisfaction for them, went straight from the crosse to Paradise, which I thinke you will not say was in purgatorie. 2. A man vpon his death-bed being truly contrite, may be comforted with the declaration of the forgiveness of his sinne in Christ, as it is in Ioh. 3. 2. His soule draweth neere to the grave, and his life to the buriers: if there be a messenger with him, to declare vnto man his righteousness: but punishment there remaineth none to be released to him, that dieth in the faith of Christ. 3. Vile we count it a punishment for the bodie to lie in the grave: but from this not your indulgence, but Christs omnipotence shall free vs at the latter day, as your master saith: A temporali poena non poenam liberabit in futuro: caput diuissimam mori inimica destruetur, adhuc enim expectamus redemptionem corporis: From temporall paine he shall fully free vs hereafter, when as the last enemy death shall be destroyed, for we yet looke for the redemption of our bodies, lib. 3. distinct. 19. lit. c.

Fifthly, it is most grosse and absurd, to limit the power of indulgences to altars, Churches, or any other thing without life and sense. 1. The Pharises were not so blinde, for they held this as a principle, that none can forgive sinnes but God, Mark. 3. 7. What then doe ye else, but make stones and walles as Gods to forgive sinnes? 2. The Prophet Haggie sheweth that a mans garment touch*ing holy flesh is not holy*, Hag. 2. 23. your altar stones haue no greater vertue, then the holy flesh of the sacrifices, nor yet so much, because that was of Gods institution, the others of your owne in-uention; how can they then make holy those that touch them? 3. We may say then as Ambrose of the postes and stones of the Iewes houses, which they striked with the blood of the Lamber: Quid ligna & saxa prodesse possunt? What can wood or stones profit. Serm. 12 in Psal. 119.

Sixtly, to conclude then: we may finde that in the ancient former times, there were diuers kinde of penance enioyned for yeeres more or lesse according to the qualitie of the offence: As players at dice had one yeeres penance appointed. Eliberin. 79. They which were present at the pagans feastes, two yeeres. ibid. can. 55. They which, though constrained, did eate in idoll temples, foure yeeres. Ancyran. c. 5. They which obserued diuinations, siue yeeres. concil. Ancyran. can. 23. They which were threatened and so sacrificed, did penance six yeeres. ibid. c. 6. They which did twice sacrifice to idolls, seuen yeeres. Ancyran. can. 8. They which perswaded others to sacrifice, tenne yeeres. ibid. can. 9. They which lay with brute beastes, twentie yeeres. Ancyran. can. 16.

We also confesse that this power was left to the gouernors of the Church, to shorten these times of penance according to the contrition of the offender: as it was thus decreed. Nicen. 1. can. 11. Quicumque cum omni timore & lachrymis conuersationem suam non uerbis solum, sed opere demonstrant, licebit episcopo humanitus circa eos aliquid statuere: Whosoever with feare and teares doe not onely in word, but in deed shew their conuersation, it shal be lawfull for the Bishop to shew them fauour, &c. But these were relaxations of penance inflicted by the Church, no indulgences of punishment not enioyned by the Church before God.

THE FIET PART, TO WHOM INDVLGEN-

ces are profitable

The Papists.

40. Error.

They hold that indulgences are profitable to all whosoever, not onely to notorious and public offenders, but euen to those that are tending to perfection: his reason is this: because it is profitable to all to be deliuered from those things, which hinder them from eternall life; but such is the temporall paine of purgatorie, which keepeth them backe a while, that they cannot go to heauen. Bellarmin. cap. 19.

Ans. 1. We grant that all men though neuer so perfect haue need of Christs indulgence in the remission of their sinnes, for there is none that sinneth not: as Saint Iohn saith, 1. 1. 10. He that saith he sinneth not, is a liar. 2. But as for the externall indulgences of the Church (for other indulgence from the punishment onely we acknowledge none) they belong not to the innocent and vertuous liuers, but to offenders that must be restrained by the censures of the Church: for as the Apostolic saith, lex non est posita iustis: the law is not giuen to a righteous man, 1. Tim. 1. 10. 3. Doth your purgatorie paine then hinder mens going to heauen? it is a shame for you then to driue so many soules thither, if you can keepe them from thence by your plenarie indulgences. 4. If purgatorie were such a place as you imagine it, where men are purged from their sinnes, and so made fitter to go to heauen, it is no hindrance but a furtherance to them: like as the fire doth no hurt to the gold that is purified by it: as Iob saith, exibo ut aurum, I shall come forth like golde. Iob. 23. 10. 5. And they which are perfect, in your owne doctrine shall not goe to purgatorie, but straight to heauen: as Paul presently vpon his dissolution knew he should be with Christ, Phil. 1. 23. And it is an approued saying among you: In iuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: He doth iniure to a martyr that prayeth for him, that is, supposing him to be in purgatorie, for they only of the dead are to be praised for in your sense: if all then need not feare purgatorie, then indulgences are not profitable to all.

The Protestants.

That indulgences of the Church are not profitable to the iust and righteous, it is thus proued.

Argum. 1. It profiteth not to be deliuered from that which worketh vnto a mans saluation: but the afflictions and punishment of this life are such, as the Prophet saith, Psal. 119. 71. It is good for me that I haue bene afflicted, and the Apostolic saith, 1. Pet. 1. 23. Christ suffered for vs, leauing for vs an example that we should follow his steps: Ergo, from such temporall afflictions, indulgences are not to be sought.

2. It is better for a man to liue by himselfe and his owne faith, then to seeke satisfaction by another: but the iust liueth by his faith, Rom. 1. 17. Ergo, he needeth not another mans satisfaction.

Answer. First, such afflictions as further their saluation, are not to be shunned; but such as withhold from entering into heauen, as is the temporall paine of Purgatorie.

Secondly, as it is better for a man to goe vpon both legges, than one: so to relie vpon other mens satisfactions as well as his owne, is a safer and more sure way: Beilarm. cap. 10. respo. ad 1. & 3. abbat.

Contra. First, if you graunt all temporall paines profitable, but onely the supposed torments of Purgatorie, then are no paines or punishments at all left, to be releafed by your Indulgences: for your purgatorie fire hath been long agoe quenched by the water of life flowing from the Scriptures: 1. Christ bath by himselfe purged our finnes. Hebr. 1. 3. wee doe not purge them our selues. 2. The Scripture acknowledgeth but two places after this life, heauen or hell: Rom. 2. 9. Tribulation and anguish shall be vpon the soule of every one that doth evil: but to them that are true, glory and honour. So saith Saint Augustine: Quia non in ira regnum, necessario remanet in inferno: He that edreth not into the kingdome, remaineth in hell, serm. 2. 13. That state wherein a man dyeth can not be altered, 2. Cor. 5. 10. Every man shall receiue according to the things done in the body: Augustine also saith: Mors deteriorum status non efficit, sed qualem in singulari numero, patitur indicio faturo referuat: Death maketh not a mans state worse, but as it findeth euery one, so it referueth them to the iudgement to come, &c. But concerning the vanitie of this deuice of Purgatorie, I haue treated before at large, Contra. 9. qu. 1. par. 2. 22. If Purgatorie be such a place, as they imagine, which serueth to purge away the reliques of sinne, it is no hindrance but a furtherance: like as the rodde of correction is profitable to the childe, and doth deliuer his soule from hell, Prou. 23. 14. 15. If Purgatorie be a let because it stayeth the soule a while from heauen: by the same reason also all the afflictions of this life are lets: for as the Apostle saith, While we are in the body, we are absent from the Lord, 2. Cor. 5. 6.

Secondly, 1. the similitude which he vseth is not fully or properly applied, which rather may be turned thus: that as it is better for a man to go vpon two legges, than to leane vpon anothers staffe; and if he can goe vpright of himselfe, to lay hold of anothers is but an hindrance: so in the matter of saluation it is better to trust to a mans owne faith. 2. So the Scripture saith, Rom. 14. 7. The iust shall liue by faith, that is, euery one by his owne faith. As, The soule that sinners shall dye: Ezech. 18. 20. No man shall beare anothers punishment: so no mans faith can profit another: Qui per vos peccasti per vos et absoluitur: They that sin by themselves, must repent by themselves. Can. 3. 3. dist. 1. 1. 88.

THE SIXTH PART, TO WHOM THE POWER to graunt Indulgences belongeth.

First, the power of graunting Indulgences doth rest onely in the Pope, as the successor of Peter, to whom Christ said, Whatsoever you loose on earth, shall be loosed in heauen. Matth. 16. 19.

Secondly, plenary Indulgences can onely bee graunted by the Pope, neither by Cardinals, whose indulgences excede not an hundred dayes, neither by Bishops or Metropolitans, who can graunt indulgences but for one yere in the dedication of Churches; and for fiftie dayes at other times: nor yet by generall Councils.

Thirdly, Bishops receive this power to giue indulgences not immediately from God, but from the Pope, from whom also they receive their iurisdiction: and this is an argument thereof, because the Pope may make voyde indulgences graunted by Bishops: but so can he not Orders or Sacraments ministred by them.

Fourthly, Parish pastors haue no power to giue indulgences, but by commission from the Pope, or their Bishop: because they are the princes of the people of God, to whom it belongeth to distribute the common goods of the Church.

Fifthly, the power of order is not necessarie to giue indulgences, but the power of iurisdiction onely, and therefore the Pope or Bishop may graunt indulgences, though they bee not in Orders.

Sixthly, neither is this power of indulgences lost by any deadly sin: Beilarm. lib. de Indulg. c. 11.

First, the keyes of the Church to binde or loose, open or shut, were no more committed to Peter, than vnto the rest of the Apostles: as Saint Hierome well noteth: Contra Iovinian. regis calorum addepiunt, Cetero aquo super eos ecclesie firmitudo subleuatur. All the Apostles receiue the keyes of the kingdome, and the strength of the Church equally is founded vpon them all, 1. adu. Iovinian. For as in this place the words seeme to be spoken to Peter, though for, and in the name of the rest: so elsewhere the commission is graunted generally to all, Matth. 18. 18. Whatsoever you binde on earth, &c. And 1. Joh. 2. 23. Whose finnes you remitt, they are remitted.

Secondly,

Secondly, 1. plenarie Indulgences neither Pope, Cardinall, nor Bishop haue power to graunt, but they are referred onely to Christ: 1. Iohn. 1. 7. The blood of Christ (onely purgeth) from all sin.
 2. In the administration of the Church-keyes, the Pope hath no preeminence before other Bishops, but they haue the same power in their diocesse, which he hath in his: as Saint Peter disdaineth not to call the rest of the pastors Elders, and himselfe a fellow Elder, 1. Pet. 5. 1. and he exhorteth them to feede the flocke: not taking this office of feeding wholly to himselfe. 3. Yet though Peter bee proued to haue had a superioritie, it is not straighte deuied to the Pope, who is not his true successor: Saint Ambrose saith: Omnes Christiani non solum cum susceperit beatus Petrus, sed et nobiscum eum suscepit, et cum illo eum suscepimus omnes: The sheepe of Christ blessed Peter did not then onely receiue, but he tooke them together with vs, and wee with him: de dignis sacerdot. c. 2.
 4. As for that distinction of plenarie Indulgences for fortie, an hundred dayes, for a yeere, it is but a Romish deuice, and of no antiquitie, for the Popes aduantage, and as a stepp to lift vp the Pope into his chaire of pride, that in euery case still a prerogatiue may be referred to him. 5. The office and calling of Cardinals is one of the Popes creatures, and what priuiledge they haue, wee do not greatly force: it is grounded rather vpon custome, than any law, as Bellarmine confesseth cap. 11. we hold both the calling of them, with all their immunities to be Antichristian, as I haue shewed before, Contr. 3. qu. 3. pars. 3. 6. Concerning generall Councells, that they haue authoritie above the Pope, I haue likewise proued before, Contr. 3. qu. 7. whither I referre the reader: And that Councells may also giue plenarie Indulgences as well as the Pope, it appeareth both by their practise: for so did the Councell of Basill, wherein Placitum alloweth the act of the Councell, a great popish Doctor, though Bellarmine call it a schismaticall Councell: And beside of this iudgement are Felonus ser. de indulg. num. 28. Dominic. a Soto, Nauartus, with others cited by Bellar. cap. 11.

Thirdly, Bishops and pastors receiue their calling from God, and not from the Pope: Act. 20. verf. 28. Spiritus sanctus constituit vos Episcopos, &c. The holie Spirit hath made you Bishops. Cyprian: Christus dicit ad Apostolos, ac per hoc ad omnes praepositos, qui Apostolorum vicaria ordinatione succedunt: Christ saith to the Apostles, and to all gouernours of the Church, which succede the Apostles as their Vicars, lib. 4. epist. 9. Hieron. Omnes episcopi Apostolorum successores: All Bishops are the Apostles successors, Enagrio. Their authoritie then is not deuied to them from the Pope: 2. neither can the Pope infringe or make void the acts of other Bishops by right, but therein he is an vsurper: As Cyprian saith: Nec quisquam episcopum se esse episcoporum constituit, aut tyrannidis terrore ad obsequium necessitatem collegas suos adigit, &c. None of vs must make himselfe a Bishop of Bishops, or with tyrannicall feare compell his colleagues to obey, &c. in concil. Carthag.

Fourthly, 1. that Bishops are princes of the Lords people, is contrarie to the Apostle, 1. Peter 5. 3. Not as though ye were Lords ouer Gods heritage. Saint Hierome saith: Patres se sciunt esse, non dominos: Let them know themselves to be fathers, not Lords, Hieron. ad Theophil. 2. All pastors, to whom the preaching of the word is committed, by the same word haue authoritie to binde and loose: that which our Sauiour spake to his Apostles, Ioh. 20. 23. Whose finnes ye remittis &c. is vnderstood of all pastors: and the Rhemists confesse in their annotations vpon this place, that this speciall facultie of the Priesthood consisting in remitting of sinne, is here bestowed vpon them. Saint Paul sheweth, that all pastors and teachers are giuen, for the gathering together of the Saints, the works of the ministrie, the edification of the bodie of Christ, Ephes. 4. 12. But these duties cannot be performed without the power of binding and loosing. Hierome saith, Quid facit excepta ordinatione episcopus, quid non facit presbyter? What doth a Bishop, beside ordination, which a presbyter doth not? Hieron. Eueg. Origen saith: Episcopis et presbyteris credita sunt cathedra: The chaire of the Church is committed to Bishops and Priests, tract. 15. in Matth. Your owne decrees witness: Qui vult abstinere quae sunt sacra deum sciens et ligare, et soluere: Hee that will confesse, let him seeke a priest, that knoweth how to binde and loose, Ans. 33. dist. 1. c. 88. Lastly, some of your owne Doctors doe affirme, that euery priest that heareth confessions, hath authoritie to absolue and graunt Indulgences: Angilus in summa verb. indulgent. num. 5. Bartholom. Fumus. in summa verb. indulgent. num. 2. And thus much Bellarmine acknowledgeth.

Fifthly, 1. that the power of Indulgence may be dispensed by any which are not entred into the Orders of the Church, nor admitted to the ministrie of the word, it is contrarie to the Scriptures: for Christ speaketh to his Apostles, whom hee had chosen and appointed to that office before, March. 10. 1. Whoseuer ye binde on earth, &c. And Iohn. 20. 22. hee first doth breath vpon them the holie Ghost, and saith Whose finnes ye remittis, &c. Saint Ambrose saith, Verbum dei dimittit peccata, &c. The word of God forgiveth sinnes, qui soluendi in non habes ligandi non habes, &c. in hac solis permittum est sacerdotibus: They that haue not power to loose, haue not power to binde, &c. this power is onely permitted to priests, lib. 2. de Cain et Abel. cap. 4. Therefore he must be a priest, and a minister of the word, which hath power to binde or loose. Yea, the Rhemists confesse, that to remittis remitt sinnes is a speciall facultie of the priesthood, as I alleaged before: wherefore none can execute this power that is not in orders.

Sixty, 1. this last assertion is contrarie to the Scripture, for he that hath a beam in his own eye cannot see clearly to cast out the mote out of his brother's eye: Matt. 7. 5. for how can a man indifferently of another mans sinne, that doth not iudge it in himselfe? 2. Origen saith: Qui se habet suorum peccatorum constringitur, frustra vel ligat, vel soluat: He that is tyed with the cordes of his owne finnes, bindeth or looseth in vaine: tract in Matth. 1. 3. Nicholau 1. one of their Popes, Epist. ad Michaelom, thus saith: Qui ligati sunt ligati, & qui ipsi mortui sunt alios mortificare non possunt: They that are bound themselves cannot binde others, and they which are dead themselves, cannot mortifie or giue ouer others to death, &c. And to the same purpose he alleageth his predecessor, Celestinus: Non indicamus eum remotum, quia non poterat quinquam eum remouere sententia, quise iam prae buerat ipse remouendum: We doe not iudge him as remooued, because his sentence coulde not remoue any, who did shew himselfe worthie to be remooued, &c. He then that is in any damnable sinne, and is worthie to be cast out himselfe, hath no power to cast out others.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, WHETHER Indulgences may be granted without great and weightie cause.

The Papists.

Where as the popish diuines are diuided about this question, some affirming that so the cause be lawfull and honest, not euill, vaine or worldly, but belonging to Gods glory, though it be not otherwise a matter of great weight, indulgences may be granted: as when the Pope vpon Easter day giueth plenarie indulgence to the people that stand about the gate of Saint Peters Church; which seemeth to be but a small matter: see Thomas. 4. d. 20. q. 1. ar. 3. q. 2. Durand. 2. tit. 2. c. 1. and others by Bellarmine produced: others do thinke, that the cause must not onely be honest and godly, but proportionable in greatnes to the indulgence granted: see Bonaninus. Richard. Ioan. Gerson. Adrianus Papa, with others rehearsed by Bellarmine: to the latter opinion he seemeth to incline, giuing notwithstanding such cauteles, as that he alloweth indulgences granted for the smallest matters: as first the cause, which is light in it selfe may tend to a great end, as the standing of the people before Saint Peters Church gate, is a meane to testifie their faith of the head of the Church, to the honour of the Apostolike See: secondly, it is not for the smallest of iudges which are great and weightie causes: they may be great, which seeme but small to them: Bellarm. de indulgent. lib. 1. c. 12.

The Protestants.

First, who seeth not how this captious and quaint distinguisher by his quirkes and subtilties goeth about to maintaine all the ridiculous & rash indulgences, which are granted by the Popes? for if standing at Saint Peters Church doore, and looking vpon it, be a matter of so great weight, to deserue a plenarie indulgence, you shall neuer want weightie causes for your pardons: and to barre the people (whom you call the Popes subiects) from estimating or valuing the greatnesse or finalnesse of causes, you doe but make a waye, to doe what you list with your pardons.

Secondly, whereas then you require these conditions in giuing of pardons, they must not be granted, first, for euill works: secondly, for worldly matters: thirdly, but such as tend to the honour of God: fourthly, and are not light or vaine, but of some weight and importance. It is euident that the Popes pardons haue offended against all these rules: first, for tie daies pardon was proclaimed vnder Longland Bilhoppe of Lincolne to as many as brought a fagot to burne the poore seruantes of Christ, which was an euill and vncharitable worke: Fox. p. 983.

2. Full remission of sinnes was granted to as many as did assist Spenser Bishop of Norwich to fight for Poope Urbane the sixt, against the Antipope Clement: p. 446. which was but a creere worldly and temporall matter.

3. Sixtus the fourth granted great indulgences to those that did celebrate the feast of the conception of the virgin Mary, adding this clause to the Ave Marie: Haile Mary full of grace, &c. and blessed is Anna thy mother, of whom thy virginity flesh hath proceeded without spot of originall sinne. Fox. p. 805. this cause was not to the honour, but to the dishonour of Christ; whose onely conception was without sinne: as is before shewed, contr. 9. qu. 9. part. 1.

4. When as the Friar Telesinus went about with the Popes pardons, offering for ten shillings, that who so would, should deliuer one foule out of purgatorie. ex Christian. Mas. lib. 10. This was no weightie or great cause, being but a matter of ten shillings.

Thirdly, the Popes friends then should giue him counsell to be more sparing and not so lauish of the Church treasure: Eugenius the fourth being requested to ioine with the council of

Basil

Basil to graunt generall Indulgences for the reducing of the Greeke Church, answered, No clauis ecclesia contemneretur, velle se maturius incedere: That hee would take pause in the matter, least the keyes of the Church should be contemned, epist. synodal. 8. If the Pope would be aduised in so great a matter, it is intolerable rashnes to lash out with his Indulgences, where no such cause is.

Fourthly, Saint Paul would not graunt pardon or indulgence lightly to the young man, but after he perceiued his sorrow and heauines to be so great, that he was like to be swallowed up of it, if he were not comforted, 2. Cor. 2. 7.

Saint Cyprian saith, as he is cited in the Decrees, diff. 50. c. 27. Satis est temerarius, qui remissionem peccatorum cunctis se dare posse confidit: He is very rash, that thinketh he can giue remission of sinnes to all, &c. as the Pope doth, when hee giueth plenarie Indulgence to whole multitudes together.

THE SEVENTH PART, OF THE DISPOSITION required to be in them that receiue Indulgences.

The Papists.

48. Error. 1 First, Indulgences may be graunted to a sinner, and for such workes as are done while hee is in the state of sinne, as if a sinfull man doe contribute toward the recouering of Ierusalem: Belarm. cap. 13.
49. Error. 2 Secondly, yet a man cannot perceiue the fruite of such indulgences, vnlesse hee be in the state of grace, Belarm. lib. 1. c. 13. quest. 1.
50. Error. 3 Thirdly, if the good worke enioyned to be done be accompanied or ioyned with veniall sinne, it hinders the fruite of indulgence, Belarm. ibid.
51. Error. 4 Fourthly, hee that will receiue benefite by these indulgences, must confesse and be truly penitent.
52. Error. 5 Fifthly, he cannot enioy the indulgence, that doth not performe all the workes that are enioyned, ibid. qn. 4.
53. Error. 6 Sixthly, Indulgences may be profitable to those that will not, though they can, satisfie for themselves, but doe rest in the satisfaction of others, ibid. qn. 5.

The Protestants.

- 1 First, 1. the Apostle saith, without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. 6. how dare ye then graunt indulgence, or remission to them which are yet in their sinnes, and not reconciled to God? 2. This is also contrarie to their owne doctrine: for they say, an indulgence is a release of the punishment of sinne, which remaineth after the fault it selfe is remitted: but now it is affirmed, that indulgence may be graunted to them which are yet in their sinnes. 3. It is contrarie to their owne law: Peccati venia non datur nisi correpto: The pardon of sinnes must be graunted to none, but to them that are amended, sext. decretal. regularius. 5.
- 2 Secondly, as we willingly graunt, that a man being not in the state of grace, cannot be partaker of the true indulgence and remission of sinnes: for as the Apostle saith, Ephes. 2. 8. By grace are ye saved through faith: so this position is flatly opposite to the popish error of indulgences: for if a man be in the state of grace before the indulgence be graunted, which they say is but a release of the punishment, then is their indulgence altogether superfluous: for to a man being in the state of grace, there remaineth neither sinne nor punishment of sin: Rom. 5. 1. Being iustified by faith, we are at peace with God: vers. 9. Being iustified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. If wee are then presently vpon our iustification at peace with God, and deliuered from his wrath, then there remaineth no punishment of sinne: for God doth not punish for sinne but in wrath. Saine Ambrose saith, Qui fidem habet, habet regnum caelorum: He that hath faith, hath the kingdome of heauen, in Luc. 13. And he that is in the state of grace hath faith, he hath then alreadie the kingdome of heauen, and so your Indulgences come too late.
- 3 Thirdly, 1. If euery veniall, that is small offence, should hinder the true indulgence and remission of sinnes, then it were impossible for any man to attaine vnto it: for our best workes are blemished; as the Prophet saith, Isai. 64. 6. All our righteousnesses is as a stained cloath. And Origen verie well noteth vpon these words of our Sauour, Luk. 17. 10. When you haue done all, say, you are vnprofitable seruants: Nec enim si verè bona essent, qua facimus, scriptum esset, ut facientes ea dicamus inuiles seruos, &c. For if they were truly good things which wee doe, it should not be written, that doing such things, wee should say wee are vnprofitable seruants: in comparison of other mens workes they are called good, sed quantum ad veritatem bonum nostrum non est bonum: But in respect of the veritie it selfe, our good workes are not good, Trait. 8. in Matth. 2. And concerning your owne indulgences, think you, that when vnder Clement 6. in the Iubile celebrated ann. 1350. there were numbred 500. euery day going and comming to Rome, and an hundred thousand wayting wayting at the Popes gates for pardons, that none of these had any veniall faults? 3. And are your Iubile pardons of so small force, that whereas they can release Purgatorie paines for many thousand yeeres, they cannot remoue one poore veniall sinne? If this doctrine were generally knowne to your friends and welwillers, I think your Iubile pardons would not finde many chapmen to buy them.

Fourthly, 1. If your Indulgences profit not, vnlesse they bee truly penitent and confesse their sinnes which doe receiue them, what neede the poore people take so long iourneyes to come to Rome for pardons? for if they be truly contrite, they shall finde forgiveness at home: yea, if they examine their hearts vpon their beds, and tremble, Psal. 4. 4. it shall be a good sacrifice to God: A broken and a contrite heart God will not despise, Psal. 51. 17. To whom will I look, saith the Lord: to him that is poore and of a contrite spirit, Isai. 66. 2. Wherefoeuer a man repenteth, and whenfoeuer, hee shall finde remission. Ambrose saith: Iob in stercore sedens, omnia, quae amiserat, recuperauit: Iob sitting vpon the dunghill, recouered al he lost, de paup. lib. 1. c. 1. No place can be so meane, or bale, where true repentance is not accepted of God.

2. But how standeth this with your doctrine of Indulgences, to require repentance and confession, whereby we obtaine remission of sinnes, and not of the punishment onely? and you say indulgence releaseth onely the punishment remayning after remission: but now your Indulgences are proclaimed, before remission of sinnes by repentance and confession: for in the Bull of Indulgences this clause is inserted: Penitentibus & vere confessis, vel qui veri poenitentibus & confitentur: The Indulgence is graunted to them that are truly penitent and confessed, or which shall be truly penitent, and confesse, Bonif. 8. extran. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. And thus they are promised a release of the punishment, before they haue repented of the sinne.

3. It is an hard matter, for your poore suppliants, by this meanes to finde repentance: for your yeere of Iubile maketh them secure, and many doe sin willingly in hope of forgiveness then. But this is no true repentance, to sinne that grace may more abound, and to doe euill, that good may come of it, Rom. 3. 8. Of such Saint Ambrose saith: Alij proposita spe agenda poenitentia, licentiam sibi peccandi propagatam putant: Some vpon hope of penance propounded or published, doe thinke their libertie of sinning enlarged, lib. 2. de poenitent. c. 9. And it is *Bellarmine*s owne position, that if a man in hope of the yeere of Iubile doe willingly fall into sinne, he may notwithstanding be absolved, lib. 1. de Indulg. c. 10. p. 60.

Fiftly, it is an hard condition, that a man cannot enioy a Popes pardon, vnlesse he performe all workes that are iniointed: First, pardon with God is more easily obtained: for he requireth of vs no such painfull workes, but onely to cease to doe euill, and to learne to doe well, Isai. 1. 16. Secondly, he requireth not of vs to goe ouer the sea in pilgrimage, to Ierusalem, to Rome, or to any other place: Deuter. 30. 13. Neither is it beyond the seas, that thou shouldest say, who shall goe ouer the sea for vs, to bring it vs? Thirdly, Saint Ambrose saith of *Dauid*s repentance: Dauid exclamauit, peccavi, & non audivit, Domine abistiis peccatum; quantum valent tres syllaba: tres enim syllaba sunt, peccavi, sed in istis tribus syllabis flamma sacrificij cordis eius ad caelum ascendit: Dauid cried out, I haue sinned, and straight he heard, God hath taken away thy sinne: see how much three syllables auaille: I haue sinned, are but three syllables, yet in these three syllables the flaming sacrifice of his heart ascended: exhortat. ad poenitent. Here are all the workes required of Dauid, with a sorrowfull heart to pronounce three syllables. Fourthly, Augustine also saith: Nunquam spernit poenitentiam, si ei sincerè & simpliciter offeratur, etiamsi quis expleat non poterit omnium satisfaciendi ordinem: He neuer despiseth repentance, if it be sincerely and simply offered him, although a man doe not fulfill all the order of satisfaction, de tempor. serm. 181. c. 16. God then forgiveth, though a man cannot fulfill all that is enioyned: but the Pope will not pardon, vnlesse the whole satisfaction enioyned bee performed.

Sixtly, against the last proposition Cardinall Caietan reasoneth thus: That Indulgences can not profit them, that haue not a purpose to satisfie for themselves.

1. Because such are vnworthie of indulgence, but the Church intendeth not to bestow Indulgences vpon the vnworthie.

2. It is not fit for a man to aske of his friend to satisfie for him, if hee be able himselfe to doe it.

3. In a well constituted common-wealth, the common treasure must not be employed to pay their debts, that are able themselves, &c.

4. Indulgences are graunted to such as are truly penitent; but they are not that refuse to bring forth fruits of repentance: scilicet Caietan. tract. 1. de suscipientib. indulg. c. 1.

Ans. 1. Bellarmino answereth, that such bee not vnworthie, but non digni, not worthie onely.

2. A man may craue his friends satisfaction in such a case of fauour, because his friend hath no neede himselfe.

3. There may be cause, when it is fit their debts should be payd of the common treasure, that are able to discharge them of their owne.

4. They are truly penitent, that haue a purpose to satisfie themselves, if others did not satisfie for them, Bellarmin c. 13.

1 Contra. 1. This is a very nice distinction, to make a difference between indignum, vnworthie, and non dignum, not worthie: the Scripture vseth them both indifferently: as Heb. 11. 16. Of whom the world was not worthy: was not the world vnworthie of them also? So Matth. 22. 8. They which were bidden were not worthy: were they not also vnworthie? And so the Apostle saith, Act. 13. 46. You iudge your selues vnworthy of euermlasting life: so to bee vnworthie, and not worthy, are all one.

2. The spirituall treasure of the Church is not bestowed vpon any, but such as are thought worthy, 2. Thess. 1. 11. That our God may make you worthy of his calling: therefore it is not to be giuen to those that are not worthy.

3 Secondly, 1. If it bee no fault for a man to borrow of his neighbour when hee hath enough himselfe, why did Dauid iudge him worthie of death, that hauing many sheepe of his owne, fetcht his poore neighbours sheepe to entertaine his friend with? 2. Sam. 12. 4, 5. 2. One friend vseth not to lend to another, but when he needeth, as it is in the Parable, Luk. 11. 6. One cometh to his friend at midnight, and saith, Lend me three loaves, for a friend of mine is come out of the way vnto me, and I haue nothing to set before him: verf. 8. Though he would not arise and giue him, because he is his friend, yet because of his importunitie, he would rise and giue him as many as he needed. Here we see that one friend is not to trouble another, but when he hath neede. 3. In spirituall things a man hath neede of all himselfe, Matth. 23. 9. Left there be not enough for vs and you.

3 Thirdly, Saint Paul commaundeth the contrarie, that where there is sufficient beside, none should be at the common charge, 1. Tim. 5. 16. If any faithfull man or woman haue widowers, let them minister vnto them, and let not the Church be charged: and this reason is giuen, that there may be sufficient for widowers indeede: that is, for them which haue no maintenance of their owne. So then, if the commonwealth should spend their treasure vpon them that are able of themselves, the poore should want it.

4 Fourthly, 1. the Scripture saith, Hane salt in your selues, Mark. 9. 50. Every man must be seasoned in himselfe, and not looke to be seasoned by another. 2. And Iohn Baptist sheweth who they are that bring forth fruits worthie of repentance by the example of a tree, Matth. 3. 10. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe and cast into the fire. It excuseth not a barren tree, to haue another tree that is fruitfull to grow by it: so neither can one man be saued by anothers workes. 3. Ambrose therefore saith: Ablue igitur te lacrymis tuis, si tu ipse te fleueris, alius te non flebit: nam si Saul deflesset peccata sua, Samuel eum non fleuisset: Therefore wash thy selfe with thine owne teares, if thou weepe for thy selfe, another shall not neede to weepe for thee: for if Saul had wept for his sinne, Samuel would not haue wept for him: lib. 5. in Luc. Like as then Samuels teares did not profit Saul, because he lamented not for himselfe, so neither can other mens workes helpe them that doe not worke for themselves. Wherefore Caietane doth here come somewhat neere the marke, and Bellarmino hath mist the cushion.

THE EIGHT PART, WHETHER INDVLGENCES doe profit the dead: This part is diuided into five questions.

THE FIRST QUESTION, WHETHER THE dead haue any benefit by the Indulgences of the Church.

The Papists.

54. Error.

Bellarmino proueth the question thus:

Argum. 1. The prayers of the liuing and other workes by way of impetration profit the dead: Ergo, the same workes, as prayer, fasting, being also satisfactorie, doe also benefit them by way of satisfaction.

2. The faithfull departed make one bodie, and one Church with the faithfull liuing: therefore the satisfactions of the liuing may be applied to the dead.

3. And if priuate men may applie their satisfactions to the rest of the members being dead, much more may they applie vnto them the satisfactions of Christ, and of the Saints: Bellarmin. cap. 14. qm. 1.

The Protestants.

1 Confut. 1. First, the argument followeth not, we may pray for the dead: Ergo, we may also satisfie for them: for we grant that we may one pray for another while we liue, but wee can not satisfie one for another, because supplication is of mercie: but satisfaction is of desert. Secondly, condly, neither is it true that the prayers of the living do profit the dead: request or intercession availeth not after sentence, guilt, and iudgement past; which in the finall end and departure in this life: for after she gave forth, there is no turning. Math. 26. and your Canons say, Morsuorum causa Deo referenda est: The cause of the dead must be referred to God. roof 24. qu. 2. c. 1. Leo.

Secondly, First the Apostles faith; Of whom it would thereto testify in heaven and in earth; we acknowledge a glorious part of the family of the Church to be in heaven; but of any part thereof to be in purgatorie we read not: 2. If this be a good reason, the soules in purgatorie are our fellow members: Ergo, wee may satisfie for them; it will follow as well, that they may satisfie for us, because we are their members also; and much rather, because the torments of purgatorie being so exceeding painfull, they are so much the more able to satisfie. It is not a sufficient warrant to pray for the dead, because they are members; for then we should pray also for the spirits of the just that are in heaven; but our prayer must be in faith, Jam. 5. 15. the prayer of faith: We must have a particular knowledge of their state, for whom we pray, and an assurance that our prayers shall be heard; but concerning prayer for the dead, we can have neither knowledge of their state, neyther have we any such warrant out of the word that our prayers are heard.

Thirdly, 1. It followeth not, a man may dispense his own goods, Eng. another may doe it for him: the Saints satisfactions are (as the Rhemists say, innot. in Coloss. 3. verſ. 24.) applicable by the Sufferers ſpeciall intention: Eng. a man hath more right to diſpoſe of his owne, then the Pope hath, 2. No man can ſatisfie for himſelf as all, & we denie abſolutely that there are any ſuch ſatisfactions applicable privately or publickly to the liuing or to the dead: ſome of our reaſons are theſe.

Argum. 1. The Prophet saith, Psal. 49. A man can by no means redeem his brother, he cannot give his ransom: God must deliver soules out of purgatorie, and to satisfie for them, is to redeeme them: Ergo, by satisfactions soules cannot be helped out of purgatorie, if there were any.

No man can satisfie for himselfe, much lesse for any other; for when a man hath done all, he is but an vnprofitable seruant, Luk. 17. 10. if he be an vnprofitable seruant for himselfe, he cannot be profitable for another.

13. David ceaseth to pray for his childe, when it was dead: though he were out of hope of life for it in this world, yet he might haue prayed, and fasted, and sarified for the soule of his childe being departed, if so be any such courte to be taken for the dead, were acceptable to God: But for David doth not, but traileth this: 2. Sam. 12. 23. Now being dead, wherefore should I fast? Hee seeth no reason why he should fast or vse any other satisfaction for the dead.

174. Saint Ambrose saith directly: Nihil profum flagella post mortem, dicitur David, dum esset in afflictu corporis vult, in flagella se preparavit, ut cum Dominum recipere castigatum: Stripes, prohee not after death, and therefore David, while he was in the life of this bodie, prepared himselfe for stripes, that the Lord might receive him now, breadie chastised and corrected.

fas non est aliud decernere prater id, in quo enim dies supremus inuenit: Of him that is now appointed to the definite iudgement, it is not lawfull for vs otherwise to discern and iudge, then as this last day found him, &c. How then can any man thinke to alter the state of the dead, by satisfaction or indulgences whatsoeuer?

But can The words of the Popes Bull of indulgences are these: Propter paucitatem et confusum plenitudinem conversionum, veniam peccatorum. We grant plenary forgiveness of sinnes to such that are truly penitent and confessed; but in purgatorie there is no repentance, which must be done in the bodie, when they may bring forth fruites of repentance; neither is there any Priest there to be confessed unto. For the benefite of indulgences cannot extend to them.

We have testimony here of some of our adversaries: these are of opinion, that indulgences do not profit the dead: Quod si in summo lib. 5. de remission. Num. 9. Gabriel sp. in dec. miss. Nov. Mater. in 4. dist. 20. q. 1.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE MANNER HOW INDULGENCES ARE APPLIED TO THE DEAD.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE MAN

ner how Indulgences are applied to the dead.

[illegible]

First, some of them affirme, that the Pope may iudicially abfolue the foules in purgatorie, and that they doe belong vnto his iurisdiction, and fo he may extend his indulgences vnto them as vnto the liuing: Michael Medina difput. 7. de indulgent. c. 34. Bellarmine with other Papallists like this opinion, who denie not, but that the Pope may apply indulgences to the dead, but not iudicially, or as exercising any iurisdiction over them. Bellar. c. 14. quæ.

36. Error. Secondly, Ballarmin affirmeth, that indulgences are profitable to the dead, per modum suffragij, after the manner of the suffrage of the Church, that is the suffrage or prayer of the Church doe helpe by way of merite, impetration, satisfaction; so indulgences are granted to the dead, as they are satisfactorie, and so per modum suffragij satisfactorij: after the manner of a suffrage as it is satisfactorie. Ibid. qn. 3.
57. Error. Thirdly, some of them thinke, that indulgences doe profit the dead, ex condignitate, of condignitie and worthines: Dominicus à Soto in 2. dist. 32. qn. 2. art. 3. Nunderr de indulg. vob. 22. vnum. 10. Other of them rather thinke, that indulgences are not auailable for the dead, otherwise then by the merite of God, and so of congruitate, rather then of condignitate, so Casimirus, Petrus à Soto, Cordubens. to whom Ballarmin subscribeth: their reason is, because one living cannot satisfie for another of condignitie, much lesse for the dead. Ballarmin. s. 14. qn. 4.
58. Error. Fourthly, to apply indulgences to the dead, there is required a supreme and high authoritie, and therefore Bishops and other inferior prelates cannot apply indulgences to the dead, but onely the Pope. Ibid. qn. 5.
59. Error. Fifthly, the Pope cannot deliuer at his pleasure soules out of purgatorie; but there must be some particular iust cause belonging to the glorie of God, and the profit of the Church, &c. a generall cause is not sufficient, for then Christ himselfe should haue deliuered all the soules already out of purgatorie. Ballarmin. ibid. qn. 6.
60. Error. Sixthly, indulgences directly belong to the living, indirectly to the dead, no otherwise, then as the living doe performe the workes enioyned for the dead. Ballarmin. ibid.
61. Error. Seventhly, indulgences doe not profite the dead in common, otherwise then as they reioyce one for anothers good, but onely those soules are deliuered thereby, to whom they are particularly intended. Ballarmin. s. 14. qn. 6.
62. Error. Eightly, the Pope may release vnto a man liuing by indulgence, the paine of purgatorie, which otherwise he were subiect vnto. c. 6. ruff. ad abol. 1.
63. Error. Ninthly, concerning the greatnes of the paine of purgatorie, Ballarmin thinketh, that though it be greater then all the paines of this life, yet the voluntarie punishment of this life is more effectuall for the expiation of sinne, then the more grieuous paine of purgatorie: because this is a time of mercy, that of iustice: others doe thinke contrarie, that one day of paine in purgatorie is more auailable then many yeares of most seuerie penance in this life. Dominicus à Soto in 4. dist. 32. qn. 2. art. 1. Ballarmin. s. 19.
- The Protestants.*
1. First, the Pope hath no power to extend his indulgences ariue way at all to the dead, either judicially by way of absolution, or in iudicio by way of dispensation: for the Scripture is euident, whosoever you binde in earth shall be bound in heauen, Matth. 18. 18. Calasius vrgeth these words, super terram, vpon the earth: in die huiusmodi dispensationis non dicitur absoluit, he nowhere saith, that a man dying being bound, can afterwaie be absolved. Calasius. s. 14. qn. 3. art. 1. And whereas Ballarmin telleth vs, that this is spoken onely of subiectall absolution: the words are generall of all binding and loosing, that it must be done vpon earth, and therefore cannot be extended to them, which are dead.
2. Yet contrarie to this doctrine of Ballarmin, the Pope taketh vpon him as a iudge to absolve and condemne the dead. 1. Because he doth excommunicate the dead; which although Ballarmin saith is nothing else but a declaration of that sentence, which should haue bene pronounced, while they liued: yet it is euident by their owne law, that indulgentia non proficit non subditis, that indulgences, absolutions (and so consequently, ligations, excommunications) doe not profite (and so likewise disprofite or preiudice) them that are no subiects. de Greg. lib. 3. c. 18. s. 8. c. 4. Wherefore if the dead be not subiect to the Popes iurisdiction, the sentence of excommunication or absolution doth not bind or loose them. 2. It is *Ballarmin*s owne position, ex indulgentia quous, requiritur iurisdiction: that indulgences may be granted, there is required a iurisdiction. Ibid. de indulg. c. 14. qn. 3. If the Pope then had no iurisdiction ouer the dead, he can grante no indulgences vnto them. 3. One of their owne Doctors saith: Anima existeret in purgatorio, sine iurisdictione papa: Soules being in purgatorie are of the Popes iurisdiction, Iohan. Angelus. 4. And though they will not be bound to the opinion of one Doctor, yet they cannot refuse the iudgement of the Pope: Clement 6. eius sententia in Bulla, Innocentius Angelis paratiss. We commaund the Angels of Paradise, to carry the soules deliuered out of purgatorie to the glorie of Paradise, &c. If the Pope then doe commaund Angels, and so doe exercise iurisdiction ouer them, much more ouer purgatorie soules: the Pope then cannot giue indulgence, but where he hath iurisdiction: but their new Doctors ashamed of the grossenes of the elder Popists, allow the Pope no iurisdiction ouer the dead, then consequently he cannot grante them any indulgence.
2. Secondly, We deny the suffrages & the prayers of the liuing, are satisfactorie for one another, but only deprecatorie & impetratorie: for prayer receiveth all the force thereof from faith, &c.

the prayer of faith: and faith is grounded upon grace and favour: as the Apostle saith, Ephes. 2. By grace are ye saved through faith. It is something to pray and increase, another to receive. As Origen sheweth the difference: Caritas potestatem, potestas Caritas fides potestas debet. Others by prayers, Christ by his power only remitteth sin: 1. Joh. 1. 9. 10. 11. 12. If then we cannot receive by our prayers for the living, much less for the dead.

2. Some of the Popes do think, that indulgences do not profit the dead, but facile est perire man, only by the force of satisfactions or prayers. Obiact. If indulgences then are not available but by prayer, indulgences are superfluous and needless. But I have shewed before, that neither prayers profit for the dead.

3. Thirdly, If an indulgence be an application of Christs merits, it must needs be available as satisfaction of condignity for Christ, I wish, that worthy satisfaction, and done all necessary things to our redemption. Revel. 1. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. A satisfaction must be of condignity, or worthiness for how can a man satisfy for a sin, that is fully content, if he do it not sufficiently? An acceptance is not properly a satisfaction: the one is of favour, the other of debt. Rom. 4. 4. 5. For him that worketh, the wages is not reckoned by favour, but by debt. (But satisfaction is a work, therefore what is due unto it, is by debt, and is of condignity, consequently it is of favour. 3. But we affirme that neither indulgences, nor any other works of the living doe benefit the dead in all, and so neither of congruity, nor condignity. Revel. 14. 13. They that die in the Lord, their works follow them: their own works, and not any bodys else. 1. Cor. 13. 12. As yet we see by glasses, darkly, but then face to face. It is verie profitable and necessarie, that the guilt of sinnes should be loosed by the application of the Priest before the last day, that is the day of death, &c. if it be necessary before, then it cometh too late afterward.

Fourthly, 1. That the Pope hath no more jurisdiction in the Church then other Bishops in their dioceses, I have shewed before in the confutation of the 1. error: so that I need not to repeat the same here. 2. If the Pope have no jurisdiction at all over the soules in purgatorie, & so no more then any other prelate hath: he hath no more auctoritie to conferre indulgences upon them, then others. 3. All the auctoritie that Saint Peter had, was received his sheepe, when Christ said, pasce oves, feed my sheepe, John. 21. but the soules in purgatorie are not his sheepe, because they cannot be fed, as Bellarminus confesseth. 1. 4. 20. 3. therefore neither Peter, nor the Pope from Peter can challenge any prerogative more then other over the dead. 4. That prerogative which Peter had in hell, when Christ said, Hell shall not prevail against thee, March. 16. 18. was given to his faith and confession, and so is common to all faithfull: as Andreas well expoundeth: Non de auctoritate Petri, sed de fide dictum est, quia porta mortis non prevalebit, sed bonis fidei vultu infernus. Not of the faith of Peter, but of his faith it was said, the gates of hell shall not prevail, &c. his confession overcame hell.

Fifthly, first if the Pope cannot deliver all soules out of purgatorie, then is one of your great Doctors proved a liar and a false prophet: Papa f. vultu pasce oves purgatorium vultu. the Pope if he would, could evacuate and empty all purgatorie. Tobias. Angel. 2. But what particular cause I pray you doth move the Pope to deliver some soules, more then others: hath he some speciall revelation, to know the particular needs of the purgatorie soules? or is not the generall cause of Christs glorie in sending so many soules to be Angels fellows, to be preferred before the Popes particular cause, in bringing so many Angels to his port? for if they would speake plainly, this is the particular cause, that moveth the Pope, when he or his are particularly waged and feed to deliver some particular soules. 3. Wherefore this old objection against the Popes purgatorie is not yet answered: that if the Pope can deliver all soules at once, and will not, hee is uncharitable; if he would and cannot, then Saint Peters keyes doe sayle and are not available. 4. But concerning your respect of particular cause, Chrysostom the first denieth it: for hee in his Bull giveth auctoritie omnes penitus, to those, that take upon them the croffe, ut tres vel quatuor annos, post mortem to deliver out of purgatory three or foure soules, which they would, &c. this power was left to the libertie of their will, nottied to the necessitie of the cause: 5. And doe you doubt, whether Christ hath cleared purgatorie? you say, that by his descent he harrowed hell, and delivered all the Patriarches: hath he done less for beleaguers since his death, then for those which before by faith, expected his death? the Apostle saith, the shadow of Christ hath cleansed us from all sin, 1. Joh. 1. 7. What remaineth then to be cleansed in purgatorie? Saint Andreas saith, Quid liberum accipitis remissionem peccatorum, si in uno oris, quid vel a divina remissione peccatorum est: He that hath not received here the remission of sinnes, shall not be there, that is in heaven, for eternall life is the remission of sinnes: 1. Joh. 1. 2. He then that hath here received remission of sinnes, is presently in heaven, and so not in purgatorie; he that hath not, shall never come to heaven, and so is in hell.

Sixthly, wile it is straunge doctrine, that satisfactorie workers may be enjoined the living in behalfe of the dead: Bellarminus himselfe reporteth this to have been an erroneous practise of the Montanists and Marcionites, to baptize the living in the name of the dead; to the which cittation some thinke Saint Paul had relation, where he saith, 1. Cor. 15. 29. per quos baptizati sunt pro mortuis (Bellar. lib. 7. p. 1800. But if a man may pray, and fast, and give almes for the dead, why not also be baptized for them? 1. The Disciples, when Lazarus was dead, did not undertake any works for her of theirs, but onely shewed her owne works, the coates and garments which she had made. Act. 9. 39. whereof Saint Cyrill saith, Non pro defunctis suis operibus, sed ipsius operibus depre-cantes: Not making request for the dead with their rayces, but with her works; secundum de alio mos.

 And againe; Confessione fratres et singuli delictum suum, dum adhuc, qui deliquit, in seculo est, dum admitti confessio eius potest, dum satisfactio et remissio per sacerdotem facta apud dominum grata est. Con-fesse ( brethren ) every one his fault, while hee that sinned is yet in the world, while his confession may be admitted, while satisfaction and remission given by the Priest may be accepted with God, secundum de laps. Ergo, satisfaction done afterward, is not accepted.

Seventhly, 1. What reason have you to thinke, that your Limbus was emptied all at once at Christs coming; and that Purgatorie shall be but successively cleared, and one after another delivered? If some are freed, while other sit in Purgatorie, because of some particular prayers, the same reason may be alleged for the Fathers that were in Limbus, that they also might have been holpen by particular prayers. If you say Christ was not then come, and therefore hell could not be harrowed; so neither is Christ yet come to iudgement, before which time you say all Purgato-rie shall not be cleansed. 2. To see others exempted from paine, and themselves still in bondage, it can be no great joy. The Scripture saith, Luk. 13. 28. there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when they see all the Prophets in the kingdom of God, and your selves thrust out at the doores. The beholding then of other mens felicitie doth not minister joy, but encrease torment to them that are still in miserie. 3. And why are not the common prayers of the whole Church for all soules as effectuall to deliuer all, as particular prayers are of some to deliuer their friends? what letteth then but all soules should bee let loose by common prayers? vntlesse it bee this, as the truth is, then the Pope should want utterance for his lubile pardons, and soule-priests for their Masses for the dead.
 4. That all the soules of the faithfull and iust men (for as for vnbeleuers, they haue their part in the lake, Apocal. 21. 8.) are altogether in heauen, the Apostle witnesseth, Heb. 12. 22. We are now in celestiall Ierusalem, to the congregation of the first borne, &c. to the spirits of iust and perfect men.
 where are these iust men are, if not in celestiall Ierusalem? they are then all out of Purgatorie.
 Saint Cyrill saith: Ad refrigerium iusti vocantur, ad supplicium rapiuntur iniusti, datur velox transitus de iustis, per fidem parum: The iust are called to rest and refreshing, the vniust are haled to paine.
 pardon is quickly given to the beleeuing, to the perfidious paine: secundum de immortal. All men either iust, or vniust: the iust are speedily carried to heauen, the vniust to punishment. no iust men then are out of heauen, nor none vniust shall come thither. 5. If the Pope know how to deli-uer some, and not all out of Purgatorie, hee hath not Saint Peters spirit: of whom S. Ambrose thus saith: Hic est Petrus, qui respondit pro ceteris Apostolis, &c. quia nomen non solum proprium sed commune seruare, &c. This is Peter, which answered for the rest of the Apostles, and therefore is called a foundation, (or a rocke or stone) because he knew how to saue not himselfe onely, but in common: de incarnat. c. 4.

Eightly, 1. no thanks to the Pope to deliuer a man from that, which hee shall neuer taste of:
 for, there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Iesu, Rom. 8. 1. such neede neither feare hell, nor Purgatorie. 2. And is it in the Popes power to deliuer a man that he shall neuer goe to Purgatorie? how commeth it then to passe, that he cannot deliuer his owne soule from thence? for, you doe not thinke otherwise, but that some of your Popes are in Purgatorie: it were in vaine else to say so many Masses for the Pope when he is dead. The Scripture thus reasoneth, Ezech. 14.
 vers. 20. Neque Iob, Daniel, though they were in the midst of it, shall neither deliuer soules nor daughter, but onely their owne soules. A man may saue himselfe, though he saue not another: but if he saue others, not instrumentally, as one that giueth counsaile, but efficiently, as one having power, as they imagine of the Pope, he must needs also saue himselfe: he therefore that seeth the Popes soule broyling in Purgatorie, will neuer thinke he can pull others out of the fire. 3. It is not the Popes pardon, but a mans owne faith that preferueth him from condemnation: Ioh. 5. 24. He that beleeueth shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death to life. Saint Ambrose well saith: Alia crux, nihil mi-hi profuit, sola crux Christi mihi utilis est, per quam mihi mundus crucifixus est, &c. Other crosses profit me little, onely the crosse of Christ is profitable to me, whereby I am crucified to the world, and the world to me, &c. lib. 6. in Luc. Wherefore no crosses of penance, of any satisfactorie or pain-full workes, but onely faith in Christs crosse doth deliuer vs.

Ninthly, 1. Bellarmine saith truly, that repentance in this life is more effectuell to doe away sin, than penance or punishment afterward: for Augustine well saith, Ibi erit penitentia dolorum habens, sed medicinam non habens: There shall be repentance hauing griefe, but no reliefe: tem. 9. de reclus.
et ibi est compunctio.

The 2. Contr. The Popes Indulgences neither profit the living nor dead.

Thus have I briefly discovered the errors of the Popes Indulgence, and Indulgences; whereby I trust it is evident, how they delude the world with their fooleries, and seek to share men with their foolish ceremonies, and to blind them with their phantasticall devices. They that have not visited Rome this Iubile yere, neede not repent them, that they went not so farre to see nothing: they that are gone, at their returne (I trust) will remember what they have seene, and regard such dayes but as a stage play, and thinke, that they may finde a much better Iobilee at home in their countie, by the faith of the Gospell, than they could see at Rome in the Popish pompous vanitie.

Now I have now spun out (by Gods assistance) this tedious task, and found out an end of this long twisted thread: the cause which I have handled, is of Gods strength, wherewith I have translated in it, was from God; the end wherfore I have laboured in it, is to God his glorie. And as to this labour, I referre all these my labours, as the principall end; so to the indgement of the true Church of God I submit my selfe and my penne, as the meane, whereby I may attaine that chiefe end. I say no more, but with Angustinus in scriptis meis veri compendibus, existendo enim est meum; et intelligendo & amando & tuum fit & meum: siquid falsi commiseris, pro ando fuerit meum: sed iam eductus, non tuum fuerit, nec meum: If you finde that is true in my writings, it is mine in being, but in understanding, and loving the same, let it be both mine and thine: if thou convince any thing that is false, it was mine in saying, but let it be neither mine nor thine in beeing taking: lib. 3. de Trinitate gratus: But as I am not guiltie to my selfe of any error escaped, but am perswaded that I have throughout the truth defended; so I would desire the Christian reader to be advised in iudging, that which was not without advertisement written. And here againe I remember Angustines words in the same place: Sicut si loquor verum, nolo mihi esse doctum; ut si errorem, nolo sibi: illi me non docui amplius, quam catholicam fidem; esse se non. aut amplius, quam catholicam veritatem: As I would not have the reader addicted to me, so neither the corrector wedded to himselfe: let not him be more affected to me, than to the veritie; nor the other love himselfe more than the truth, &c. And so I conclude: Adrem mihi debemus: huius operis reddidisse videmus. Deo, quibus parum, et ratione est mihi ignoscant; quibus autem satis est, pro mihi stance rendered the debt of this great worke, to whom it is short or to whom it is due, let them forgive me; to whom it seemeth sufficient, let us to God give thanks together, &c. who enableth us to every good worke, to whom be praise through Iesus Christ in his Church for ever. Amen.

Soli Deo immortalī, Patri, Filio cum Spiritu sancto, sit omnis honor & gloria.

HERE FOLLOW TWO SEVERAL TABLES, THE FIRST OF THE PLACES OF THE SCRIPture handled and expounded in this treatise: the second of the particular matter tained therein.

In the first Table the first figures note the chapter, the second the verse, the third the page.

BVt here I must aduertise the Christian Reader of two things concerning this present Table:
first, that I haue not set downe the words of the texts, whereunto this Table directeth, but the chapter onely and verse: for that had been too long and tedious, and the other way I trust is as sufficient to finde out any scripture, though it bee more compendious. Secondly, I must desire the reader, that whereas the verses of the severall chapters are not digested in order for want of time, and that for the same cause one verse is quoted in diuers places, that it would please the reader, when he searcheth for any scripture, to runne over with his eye all the verses expressed vnder any chapter. Howsoever, I trust that the carefull reader shall finde himselfe much helped by this direction to finde out the places of scripture in controuersie, in the true understanding whereof consi-steth the deciding of all questions in religion.

Page. 91. Line. 33. Let this be added, that we make not the Scripture in such sort iudge in matters of faith, as though we excluded the Church: but like as the ciuill Iudge determineth controversies according to the lawe; for the Iudge is the mouth of the lawe, and the lawe is a rule and direction to the Iudge: so in matters of faith the Church iudgeth according to the word. It hath authoritie to explaine and interpret and iudge according to Scripture, but not against it: So Master Philp saith, I will be tried by the word, and such as will iudge according to the word. Fox. pag. 1808.

Page. 189. Line. 17. Our further answer is this: First, the saying of our Sauour is indefinite and conditionall: If another come, &c. but prophecies are vttered definitely, as Deuter. 18. 18. The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet like to me, &c. Christ then doth not here prophesie of any particular man. Secondly, this word another alius, doth not necessarily signifie a particular man: as 1. Cor. 3. 10. I haue laid the foundation, another hath builded thereon, but let every man take heed, &c. Here alius, another, is expounded, scilicet, every one. Thirdly, our Sauour speaketh directly to that present generation of the Iewes, when as Antichrist was not to be reuealed. Fourthly, whereas Bellarmino objecteth, that this place cannot be vnderstoode of other false prophets, because they came not in their owne name, as the others shall, but they vse the name of God: our answer is, that although the false prophets pretend the name of God, yet they come in their owne name: Ierem. 28. 21. I haue not sent these prophets, yet they ran; I haue not spoken to them, yet they prophesied: and if false prophets came not in their owne name, and Antichrist doth, then it would followe by his argument, that Antichrist is no false prophet, contrarie to the Scripture. Fifthly, see a further answer to this place, pag. 200. lin. 50.

Page. 978. lin. 37. Of Christs soule no such death can be affirmed, by the feare, doubt, horror or daunger of damnation, as it may be of ours, but onely by the feeling and fearing of Gods wrath and indignation, as is expressed. lin. 21. ibid: And still we affirme that very impropertie in any sense Christs soule is said to die, which phrase I wish rather to be forborne.

Page. 996. lin. 46. You must either graunt no agonie or astonishment at all, or continue it all the while of his prayer, as the Euangelists doe: these speeches may seeme in shew to be contrarie: but they are easily reconciled: for the agonie of Christ continued all the while of his prayer in the garden, as it may appeare by the thrice rehearfall of the same request for the passing of the cup, but yet there was some intermission of the agonie fittes, and the infirmitie, as Ambrose calleth it, as temptation of his flesh (as Damasene) had their entercourse: so it continued, but not alwayes in the same measure or degree of working, as is expounded pag. 989. resp. 2. 4. ad argum. 3.

Page. 1003. lin. 27. The meaning is this, that there is the same spiritual efficacy of Christs body and blood, yet a diuers sacramentall vse and application.

Page. 1006. lin. 17. We meane not, that the heart hath any power of it selfe to allay the ordinarie passions thereof, but onely comparatiuely in respect of the extraordinarie, which it hath lesse power of: like as the wise man saith, Pro. 16. 1. The preparations of the heart are in man, but the answer of the tongue is from the Lord, not that a man hath power to prepare his heart simpliciter, but this is rather in his hand and power then the other.

If in any other place some doubts may occurre, as I denie not, but some things may escape me, as Ambrose saith, Nescio quomodo prater imprudentia caliginem qua me circumfundit unumquodque fallunt sua scripta, & aurem praeceunt, atque ut filij deformes delectant, &c. I cannot tell how beside the cloud of darknes, which compasseth me, every man is deceiued in his owne writings, as children though deformed please the parents: I desire the godly and charitable reader, to examine euery thing according to the rule of charitie, not to write any thing to a diuers sense, then wherein it was spoken, but to interpret the words to the best meaning: for as Saint Paul saith, Lone thinketh not euil, and againe, loue beleeueth all things, it hopeth all things. 1. Cor. 13. 7. and so I conclude with that saying of Ambrose to the Christian reader: Malotuo castigatus iudicio si quid mouet, quam laudari a se, quod ab alijs reprehendatur: I had rather, if any thing moue thee, in thy iudgement to amend it, then to winke at it, that others should reprehend it: Epistol. 40.
